The waters of the Dead Sea are strongly impregnated with various minerals. The chief of the minerals which in the aggregate constitute approximately one-fourth the entire weight of its waters are potash, bromide, gypsum, and magnesium, with several others comparatively unimportant.

It is reported that the Dead Sea, nearly sixty miles long, twelve miles wide and in places 1,200 feet deep, contains more than 1,300,000,000 tons of potash alone, valued at nearly $70,000,000,000; 835,000,000 tons of bromide, valued at $250,000,000,000; while common salt, gypsum and magnesium are contained in quantities which bring the aggregate value of the mineral content to a sum variously estimated between $1,200,000,000,000 and $1,500,000,000,000. Before such figures the "wealth of the Indies," of Croesus, of the Rand, and even of the huge earnings of modern industry pale! Yet these estimates are made by experts who have gone thoroughly into the situation for the Imperial Chemical Industries, Limited, of London, the company about to receive a concession for the exploitation of these vast treasures.

The conditions of the concession provide that a large share of the profit of the industry shall go to the Palestine Government to be used for education and other needful enterprises, while at the same time potash for rehabilitating the soil of this much-farmed region will be provided at cost.

How dramatic it all seems! This most peculiar of all bodies of water, lying nearly 1,300 feet below the level of the Mediterranean Sea, into which flows daily more than 5,000,000 tons of water, yet has no outlet, all at once is found to be the worlds' richest mine, containing fabulous wealth.—Christian Science Monitor.

make a gift of the paper to some one in need. Therefore those who wish to have a part in this good work may send $1.50 for each subscription they wish to pay for. Or if there are those who do not feel able to pay for an entire subscription at that rate, but would like to have some small part in it, send whatever amount you wish and state that it is to be applied to the "Friend-in-Need Fund." We believe it will add much joy and satisfaction to those of our readers who cooperate in this kind of missionary work to realize that as they read their paper some one else is reading it in some other part of the brotherhood at their expense. Their profit in reading the Evangelist will be multiplied and the message of the paper will become their message to some unknown friend. We invite those who wish to have a share in this service to send in their contributions to the "Friend-in-Need Fund".

Our Worship Program

Daily Readings and Comments

(Keep with your Bible)

The suggestions for our worship program this week center around the various phrases and petitions which make up the prayer our Lord taught us to pray.—Matthew 6:9-13.

MONDAY

Holiness unto the Lord—v. 9, and Psalm 99. When we pray to our Father in heaven, the first step is to acknowledge his holiness. If we are sincere in thus ascribing holiness to his very name, surely we will not presume to use that name lightly, or in vain at any other time, but will ever hold it in reverence. May we say by our every word and act this day: "Hallowed be thy name!"

TUESDAY

Thy Kingdom Come—v. 10, and Rev. 4:1-11. The Kingdom of God has not yet come on earth, though its influence is already felt in many ways. The kingdom is the place where the King dwells, and where his bidding is eagerly done. May thy kingdom come today in my life, and in the lives of many others; and may our rulers strive to lead the nations to do thy will, even as it is done in heaven. And may thy kingdom soon come in its fullness on earth.

WEDNESDAY

Daily Bread—v. 11, and Deut. 8. There are many who feel that they earn their bread by their own unaided labor, seeing in it no gift from God. We are taught, however, that it is God that gives us strength and ability to do this. And let us not make the mistake of thinking only of bread for the body; Give us our Father, daily bread for our souls as well. And may we in turn offer the bread of life to those who are undernourished and starving about us.

THURSDAY

Forgiveness—v. 12, and Matt. 18:21-35. "When God forgives, he forgets," someone reminded a lady who was finding fault with another. "That might be God's way, but it isn't mine," was the heated reply! If there is anything of that spirit in our lives, how dare we pray, "Forgive US our debts as WE forgive our debtors?" God make us tender hearted, forgiving one another even as God, for Christ's sake, hath forgiven us!

FRIDAY

Lead us—v. 13a, and Psalm 23. God will not lead us into temptation, think some; yet he certainly allows us to be tempted, or rather, tested. However, if we but follow his leading through our testings, he will with the temptation provide also a way of escape, and deliver us from all evil. May we be ever ready, good Shepherd of the sheep, to follow thee whithersoever thou shalt lead; and may the day soon come when thou shalt deliver the whole creation from the power of the evil one!

SATURDAY

Kingdom, Power and Glory—v. 13b, and Psalm 63:1-8. The kingdom is controlled by the King; when the time is fulfilled he will usher in the kingdom. All power is his, though often the wrong seems to triumph over the right, and he is able and willing to do exceedingly abundantly above all that we ask or think. To him shall be glory in the church by Christ Jesus throughout all ages, world without end. Amen.

SUNDAY

Sincerity—Matt. 6:1-8. One of the gravest dangers in public prayer and worship is the falling into formalities and forgetting the content of the forms. The same danger is present, though to a less degree, even in our family worship. This was one thing that Christ mercilessly condemned and was ever warning against. May we, our Father, ever be free from it in our devotions, crying to thee out of a full heart, to be heard by thee alone. May empty formalism be blotted out from the services held this day, and may thy children cry unto thee in all sincerity, receiving in return those things which thou seest they have need of, with a sense of communion and fellowship with thee, our Father, which art in heaven.—T. ## How to Teach the Word

By James H. McConkey

It is true that our Lord did teach in parables, but that was because of the hardness of heart and unbelief of Jewish leaders who rejected him, and from whom he veiled the truth, so that it must be searched for to be had. But to his disciples and followers he taught in the method described by Mr. McConkey here. This is the method Mr. McConkey has used so effectively in his own tract writing, as the reading of anyone of these, such as "Beauty for Ashes" will indicate. (Free, from Silver Publishing Society, 1013 Bessemer Bldg., Pittsburgh). This article is a fitting companion piece to the author's article in the June issue of "Christ Life," "How to Study the Word."

"We know that Thou art a Teacher come from God" (John 3:2). YOU ARE a teacher. Your work lies in the Sunday school, the Bible Class, or in the pulpit. Do you realize there is a perfect way of teaching the Word? That there is a method which is one hundred percent efficient? That it is one which is errorless and cannot possibly be improved upon?

Then, if you would know it, turn to the teaching method of our Lord Jesus Christ. For he is the perfect Teacher. Not only does he know all truth—but he is the Truth. Not only does he know the human mind, but it was he who created it. Men said of him that he was "a teacher come from God," "Never man spake like this man" was the testimony of the people. Because he fashioned the human mind, and is himself the Truth, he must know the method of imparting truth as no other in existence. If we can search out the secret of Jesus Christ's teaching, we will master the perfect, flawless method of all teaching. Let us take one of his great messages, analyze it, and see if we can discover the perfect method of the perfect Teacher. It will be a matchless method to us, and a priceless secret when we find it is so simple that any earnest, prayerful, seeking child of God can master it and have the unspeakable joy and blessing of working it into the fabric of his daily teaching life.

For our study of the Master Teacher's method let us turn to one of his greatest and most beautiful messages. It is his warning against anxious care. It is found in the familiar passage of Matthew 6:25-34. Let us prayerfully search it if so be we may find the hidings of his power as a teacher, and, in kind, if not in degree, may appropriate its secret for ourselves.

A Masterpiece of Teaching

Therefore, I say unto you, take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink; nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on. Is not the life more than meat, and the body than raiment?

Behold the fowls of the air, for they sow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns; yet your heavenly Father feedeth them. Are ye not much better than they?

Which of you by taking thought can add one cubit unto his stature?

And why take ye thought for raiment?

consider the lilies of the field, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin.

And yet I say unto you. That even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these.

Wherefore, if God so clothe the grass of the field, which today is, and tomorrow is cast into the oven, shall he not much more clothe you, O ye of little faith.

Therefore, take no thought, saying, what shall we eat? or what shall we drink? or wherewithal shall we be clothed?

"For all these things do the Gentiles seek." For your heavenly Father knoweth ye have need of all these things.

But seek ye first the Kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you.

Take therefore no thought for the morrow; for the morrow shall take thought for the things of itself. Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof.

The most casual reading of this great passage will show that our Lord's method of teaching was a marvelously simple, three-fold method. And it is this—

State—Illustrate—Apply

First he states the great truth which he is about to teach, namely, an earnest warning against anxious care. Then his whole matchless message is made up almost in its entirety, of three wondrously simple illustrations—the fowl of the air, the cubit of stature, and the lilies of the field. Then he proceeds to searchingly apply the truth to the consciences and lives of his hearers. Let us take up in their order these striking highlights of Christ's teaching. First:

State

One of the South's greatest lawyers in the Supreme Court after the Civil War was of Jewish extraction. He was a man of brilliant parts and of the highest type of legal ability and training. One of his strongest points was this ability to state truth with great clearness and simplicity. He was one day arrayed on the opposite side of a case represented by one of the greatest jurists of the century. When he arose to begin his case he introduced it with the remark, "Your honors, I would like to make a simple statement at the opening of this case." Thereupon he proceeded to state his cause with such clarity, simplicity and logic that before he had even begun any argument in support of it one of the justices leaned over toward his neighbor on the bench and whispered, "The little Jew has almost stated B— out of court!" Such is the power and value of lucid, logical statement of truth. That mere statement clears away so much of the murk and the fog enveloping a subject that the teacher's victory is half won even before he begins.

Take, for example, a great text like John 3:16—"For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life."

Tear apart a text like this. State the separate truths it contains. Then note how rich are its contents.

God is love.

God loves the world.

Love gives.

Love gives its best.

Love gives its all.

Ours is a "whosoever Gospel."

Belief in Christ is necessary to salvation.

Men are perishing without Christ.

Faith in Christ brings everlasting life.

Take this analytic attitude toward the great texts of Scripture. State the great truths of the text as best you can phrase them. Not only will you thus clarify the truth to your hearers, but the practice of so stating truth will be a mental and spiritual discipline of the very finest type for yourself as a teacher.

The story of the walk to Emmaus has been mentioned before. It has a beautiful lesson for every would-be teacher of the Word. After the Lord had parted from the listening disciples they turned to each other with the significant words:

"Did not our hearts burn within us—while He opened to us the Scriptures?"

Here is a beautiful test for us as to when we are getting a message from our Lord through our study of the Book or from some message from one of his servants. It is this. We get the burning heart. Not the swollen head, mark you, but the Burning Heart! And when, as you are brooding over the Book, there comes to you some thought, some suggestion, some quickening vision of truth which makes your heart burn within you, that is the proof that it is He who has spoken to your soul and He who is opening to you the Scriptures. Now, however simple and humble that truth may seem to you, state it as clearly and simply as you can, and jot it down in your note book. For you are sure to find out this blessed fact. The truth, which makes your heart burn as you receive it is the truth which makes other hearts burn as you pass it on. So do not despise the seemingly small and simple things which come to you in this way. If they give you the burning heart they are your Lord's message to you. They will mean vastly more to you and to your hearers than the elaborate quotations from some learned source which you are inclined to choose in preference to your own messages. State them, store them up, cherish them. For the treasures which come to you from him in the moments of the burning heart are his choicest riches both for you and for those over whom he has made you a shepherd, however humble a one you may deem yourself to be.

The Philathea Class of the Brethren Church of Sunnyside, Washington. Mrs. C. C. Grisso has been the teacher of this class for the past two years and has found them a very interesting and loyal group of young ladies with which to work. The class has grown until it now has an enrollment of thirty and twelve of them have united with the church in the past two years, nearly all of them now being members of the Brethren Church.

Editor's Select Notes on the Sunday School Lesson

Ezra's Return to Jerusalem

(Lesson for September 1)

Scripture Lesson—Ezra 7:1 to 8:36.

Printed Text—Ezra 7:16-20; 8:21-23, 31, 32.

Devotional Reading—Psalm 63:1-8.

Golden Text—The hand of our God is upon all them that seek him, for good.—Ezra 8:22.

Introductory Note

Ezra was one of the captives born at Babylon. He was grandson (or great grandson) of Seraiah the chief priest slain at the taking of Jerusalem some 130 years before, 2 Kings 25:18-21; and therefore a descendant of Aaron. Farther back, another ancestor was Hilkiah, the high priest who in the reign of Josiah, discovered the Book of the Law in the temple. The exiles honored their religious leaders, and Ezra, belonging to a family especially distinguished, would be sure to be held in high esteem among them. Josephus, indeed, says that he was their high priest. Ezra was "a ready scribe" or instructor in the law of God. A man of deep humility, 9:10-15; of fervent zeal for God's honor, 7:10; 8:21-23; deeply grieving over sins of his people, sparing no pains to bring them back to repentance, 9:3, 6, 10. He joined the remnant at Jerusalem about 60 years after their first return, going there with a second large company (1,754 males, but there should be added women, children and servants making perhaps three or four times that number.—Gray). Unlike Nehemiah, Ezra seems to have remained at Jerusalem and exercised his priestly, civil authority for nearly 12 years. He is said to have lived to the same age as Moses, 120 years and is esteemed by the Jews as next to him for the services he rendered their religion.—Sims.

Ezra's Education

The lad had access, very likely, to Babylonian schools in which were taught arithmetic, the crude astronomy of the day, their restricted geography, history and grammar. As a Jew, he would be well grounded in a knowledge of the Hebrew law, the books of Moses. To study this he would need to know Hebrew, which had gone out of common use among the Jews, as well as the current language, Aramaic. He was also, as a Jewish boy, taught music, sacred poetry, the interpretation of the Law, and Hebrew history. It is generally held that Ezra wrote Chronicles, and the accomplishment of that great task shows how deeply he had delved into the history of his people. He was not technically a prophet, but he had the prophetic spirit and devotion. He probably began his studies at the age of thirteen. He was destined to be a scribe, and it was the rule to enter upon that office at the age of thirty. He would therefore spend seventeen years in these studies, and his history shows that they were years well spent. He was a true student of the Word of God, and so studied that he could put the Word into practice in his after life.

Note that while Ezra refused a guard of soldiers, Nehemiah, equally devoted, accepted a guard (Neh. 2:9). Both plans were right, each in his own circumstances. Ezra was a religious leader; Nehemiah, went with the king's commission as Governor of Judea, and must have such state as to impress those with whom he dealt on the way. George Muller never asked any one but the Lord himself for the money by which to build and sustain his great orphanages in England, and he never failed. On the other hand the great modern missionary societies are continually asking the churches in the name of the Lord for funds for their work, and they have been wonderfully successful.

Both had faith in God. The use of means is no mark of want of faith, often it is the sign and proof of faith.—Illustrated Quarterly.

Seeking the Way of God

Then I proclaimed a fast there. Fasting and prayer are a good preparation for any journey. At the river of Ahava, A small stream in the Northeast of Media near the district of Casiphia, v. 17. Some think it the same as Adiabai in Adiabene due east of Damascus on the Euphrates. On a tributary of this river Ezra assembled the Jews before proceeding on their long journey to Jerusalem. Some consider the name as also applying to a district in the plains of Babylon, where was a moat or canal. Afflict ourselves before God. In 1897 a logia document was found in Egypt purporting to disclose some new sayings of Christ, among which was this, about fasting: "Jesus saith except ye fast to the world ye shall in no wise find the kingdom of God." Is not Christ's system based on those spiritual principles of which fasting is the exponent? Is not self-denial, of which fasting is the symbol and grace, the corner-stone of Christianity? Is not the crucifixion of the flesh one of the aims and objects of a spiritual religion, and does not fasting mightily advance that painful but blessed end? Under the reign of Christ is not the flesh to be mortified, and is there a more efficient agent

Reports from Christian Endeavor Fields

CARLETON, NEBRASKA

We send greetings to you from our "EVERGREEN" society. We have been progressing fine and hope you have been too. Our society has an enrollment of thirty and an average attendance of from 15 to 20. The last few months (vacation time) we have been unfortunate enough to lose our President and Vice-President, but we are hoping they will soon return. During the absence of these officers the members, with the help of our pastor, Rev. W. R. Deeter, are keeping the society up and coming. Our Junior Christian Endeavor, under the leadership of Mrs. Sadie Becke, is a live bunch and they have been achieving much from their meetings. As to our goals: 1—We have made it; 2—we are sending money with this letter; 3—we have been meeting regularly and will have the 40 meetings by the required time; 4—we have held one social and are making plans for another this month; 5—we have not reached; 6—Hurrah! we went over the top with our subscriptions; 7—This letter fulfills this goal; 8—Delegates were sent to the State Convention; 9—Not yet reached but we are advancing toward it; 10—This letter should also cover same. Our officers are: President, Alma Hughes; Vice-President, Lloyd E. Deeter; Secretary, Roma Bryant; Treasurer, Rachel Coleman; Pianist, Hertha Fegesack; Chorister, Vail E. Deeter. Here's hoping every one is enjoying the meetings like we are.

ROMA BRYANT, Secretary.

NEW CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR AT TIOGA, INDIANA

The pastor of our church, feeling the need of better developing the lives of the youth of our church, has been working for some time to bring into existence a Christian Endeavor Society. From the start there has been a good interest on the part of the young people. When interest had developed to such a point as to give belief that the cause would continue if organized, a meeting was called for this purpose, and so today, the Tiosa Brethren church has a Christian Endeavor Society, which we have every reason to believe will continue to grow and serve "Christ and the church" in a very splendid way.

The following officers were elected to serve until the close of the year of 1929—

President, Willard Cook; Vice-President, Lyle Kelsey; Secretary, Mildred Palmer; Treasurer, Margaret Halterman; Song Leader, Dale Cook; Pianist, Ruth Swihart; Assistant Pianist, Ruth Cook.

Then, too, we elected Mr. Oscar Scott, our Sunday School Superintendent, to act as Honorary President.

Our first meeting as a fully organized society was held June 2nd.

News from the African Front

Yalohe, June 6th, 1929.

Dear Evangelist Readers:

May has been an exceptionally busy month in every line, including itineration. The daily classes for the teaching of Christians continue to be held in the church from 7 to 8 P. M. The maximum attendance has been fifty-one, the average attendance being forty. Some come to these classes who are unable to come from the villages during the day-time because of the stress of heavy work.

Some of the schoolboys are especially prompt at the meeting and enjoy giving their testimony.

Our hearts are saddened by the absence of Yolo who went to visit his village. We heard yesterday that he has accepted the chieftainship.

Miss Emmert and Miss Tyson left Yalohe April 30th for Bangui, itinerating and preaching both going and coming. They returned May 24th, having had great blessing en route, especially among the Ali, the tribe contiguous to Bangui who have no gospel center yet, but who understand both Banou and Sango. One of our evangelists, Bingui, is an Ali.

Yama (Paul) continues to preach the gospel faithfully at the dispensary and hospital during treatment hours, relieved occasionally by other evangelists.

We now hold preparatory services preceding the love feasts. All who desire to commune are asked to register and are encouraged to heart examination and restitution if there be known sin. Failing this exclusion from the communion service is practiced. A number were excluded from the last communion for gambling, a very common native vice, sometimes, as in this case practiced with arrows. In spite of this 108 partook of communion.

The evangelists have been laboring faithfully along the roads that are open to them. Trips commencing Thursday morning and closing on Sunday night are taken weekly by senior and junior evangelists. The senior evangelists preach daily in the villages reachable from the Station. The junior evangelists go daily to the villages at 5 P. M.

Six classes are held weekly for the spiritual teaching of evangelists in training. They also attend the adult evening classes conducted by Miss Emmert, and evening classes in the church on alternate evenings.

All through the month we have had heavy rains, and everybody is busy at gardening now. The natives take pride in their gardens, which, however, do not appear to be a special work of art, it being almost impossible to find a straight row or symmetrical garden bed. A few peanuts, or a few squash-vines may be surrounded by bean stalks or okra plants. Tomato and onion seeds are carefully guarded by the native, next his house. Mosquitoes are troublesome, especially during the evening services at the church. Never have we known such heavy rains as at this season.

The Yalohe school boys had vacation during Miss Emmert's absence from the station during the month of May. They were all glad for their beloved teacher's return. A number of them had the privilege of accompanying their teacher. They report a happy vacation. Permission has been granted by the Governor of Oubangui-Chari to conduct adult evening classes for the benefit of those working for the Mission in various capacities.

After five years some of the missionaries are about to move into the first permanent house on Yalohe Station.

The younger ladies of the station, in addition to their countless other activities, have been very busy making curtains for windows and communicating doors. The kitchen for this first permanent house is nearing completion. Men in the Oubangui-Chari Mission have always been in the minority. All the heavy industrial work, however, falls to them. There is only one man at each of our stations. In addition to his many other duties and responsibilities, and despite the long delay caused by the war, the one brick house is now ready for occupancy. We are grateful to Mr. Foster for this service.

The month of May was an exceptionally busy one in the hospital. 2472 patients were treated, Yalohe's record so far, we believe, for the daily dispensary. Every bed in the hospital was occupied, until an exodus took place May seventeenth, since which the hospital has been refilling, but more slowly.

One death occurred in the hospital during the month, the result of poisoning. We are usually able to save these cases when brought early. This case was found and rescued by our evangelists, who brought her to the hospital in an extremely critical condition, but, alas, only to die. It was a comfort to know that she was an earnest Christian and gave an unshadowed testimony to the very end. The funeral was held in the Yalohe chapel. The sermon was preached in the Banou language from Revelations 3:20-21.

Miss Tyson found one of our Bellevue Christians, employed in the capacity of government porter, very ill upon the path. She forwarded him to me at the hospital, but alas! the hammock arrived empty, the patient having died upon the path! What a comfort that concerning these and many others we sorrow not as those who have no hope.

Luke is our faithful medical attendant. One day he himself treated 65 patients, and during the month of May seldom treated less than fifty daily. He is thorough, painstaking, and reliable. Yet he can neither read nor write! Few indeed are the diplomaed physicians whose reward in heaven will exceed his—for service rendered in French Equatorial Africa, at least!

The young doctor who accompanied the Governor-general on his visit here in January died recently at Bouar. We are glad that we were enabled to give a clear testimony in his presence for our Lord Jesus.

The missionaries at Yalohe were recently favored with a visit from M. Bouquet, "Chef de la Subdivision at Boali. He took dinner with us, and we enjoyed his witty conversation and brilliant repartee. Various items of business were amicably arranged.

During the absence of Misses Emmert and Tyson, I was a guest at the hospitable home of Mr. and Mrs. Foster. Their 23rd wedding anniversary was celebrated on May fourteenth. It was a pleasure to entertain them on this anniversary occasion. We wish for them years of continued service and blessing. On June 11th they will leave for a brief visit to Bellevue, attending the conference at Bassai July 8th to 18th.

Monsieur Romeuf, a friend of the Mission since Carnot days, paid us a flying visit on Tuesday, June 5th.

On June fourth, the sixth anniversary of my husband's death, I completed "Undaunted Hope," or the "Life of James Gribble and Contemporary History of the Oubangui-Chari Mission." The book contains 22 chapters and 426 manuscript pages. It was written in six months as far as the final composition is concerned, although much time had previously been intermittently spent in preparation of materials. Miss Tyson is typing the manuscripts. Miss Emmert will give them safe conduct to Professor McClain into whose hands they are to be consigned. Marguerite helped greatly in arranging the material while with me two years ago in France. The various appendices are still to be written, the index prepared, and the arrangement of pictures decided upon. The manuscripts must be proofed after typing, etc.

We are very grateful to Miss Tyson for undertaking the heavy task of typing. She is now working upon the seventeenth chapter.

Recent news from Bassai tells of special meetings which are being held daily at 6 A. M., for one month. The men meet in the church, and the women and children on the verandas of the houses. 200 are in regular attendance. In addition many attend occasionally.

Concerning Bozoum, Miss Myers writes: "We are praying that Yolo will return to Bozoum. The people there love him and desire his return." Bozoum is a big charge and calls for a native leader, strong in the faith, tactful with opposing factions, firm in discipline, and able to witness a good confession before many witnesses. The various chapels are being visited, Mrs. Jobson having visited Lokani May twelfth, and Miss Myers Balou, May twelfth and twenty-sixth.

Mr. Jobson spent the first nine days of May itinerating. He visited the Hoso chapel, the government porter, Paoua, and passed through the Larre tribe, recently revolted. (The Larre understand the Karre language). Mr. Jobson refused the military escort offered him by the administrator, and reached the borders of the Kaba tribe, returning in safety. Two Kaba school children accompanied him but were not strong enough to reach their village. Mr. Jobson found the Kaba chiefs wearing Mohammedan robes. He does not believe that they have as yet succumbed to Islam, but that we are already on the border line. We surely need more workers in order to possess Bangui, the Ali, the Laka, the Kaba, the Housa, etc., for the Lord Jesus.

The school children are attending the special meetings, their Bible classes having been discontinued for the time being. During Mr. Jobson's absence, daily Bible classes were conducted for the advanced division as usual. They had no other classes, but worked in the gardens, Mrs. Jobson teaching the beginners. Two new pupils have been enrolled at the Bassai school. School was being continued daily throughout the special meetings Mr. Jobson taught daily forenoons. Either Mr. or Mrs. Jobson look after the afternoon sessions.

But little industrial work has been possible during the meetings. Logs are being brought in for sawyers, gardening is continued, grounds are being beautified, and hospital repairs are pending awaiting the shipping of lumber. There were but five patients in the Bassai hospital during the month of May, although the number of daily dispensary patients was unusually large.

The Karre dictionary is being revised and new words added. Translation continues in spite of additional time required for special meetings.

At Bellevue Mr. and Mrs. Kennedy are extremely busy. Industrial and preaching activities continue, although there is no regular dispensary and of course no school as yet. Considerable village visitation work is done. Mrs. Kennedy usually being accompanied by a group of native Christians, either women or boys.

One woman, the wife of Gakouton, is being especially blessed as a leader among others. She is always ready to lend in prayer or song, or to act as interpreter if need arises. She knows many languages.

We continue to ask your prayers for increased and renewed blessings in every department of the work.

FLORENCE N. GRIBBLE.

Report

I recently received the following annuities for the college. The largest annuity received was a few weeks ago from an aged couple for $16,000.00. These people are faithful members of the church who have no children and desire the cause of Christ to be benefited by what they have after death. They realize the uncertainty of wills and wanted to make their gift sure. One-half of this amount goes to the College and the other half to the Old Folks' Home.

Another husband and wife who previously had taken an annuity from the college, took another thousand.

On my recent trip to Indiana, a doctor and his wife who have no dependents took an annuity for $2,000.00. While I was at Lake Shipshewana I received a letter from another family that had previously taken one of our bonds, requesting to take $200.00 more.

The college receives from investing this money 6%, and it pays to those holding bonds on the basis of their age, from 4 to 8 percent. While we do not have any actual income from these bonds during the life of the giver yet in time the college will be the sole beneficiary.

Why not make an investment gift to Ashland College?

The Problem Solved

Many people would like to make a worth while gift, who feel that they need the income from their money for old age. Ashland College makes both possible, so that the gift can be made and at the same time

ASHLAND MEMORIAL ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

THE BRETHREN CHURCH HAS LOST MILLIONS OF DOLLARS

This is a big statement to make, but nevertheless it is true. You ask, How?

I answer, through the membership of the church being unfaithful in their stewardship, by not considering the Cause through the distribution of their property after death.

I can understand people who have children, that feel what they have after death they want distributed among their children, and this is right, unless they have large possessions, and if so, at least a tithe should be given to the Cause.

I have in mind those that have no children, or dependents, that leave their estates to be quarreled over by their kin, often ending in legal battles, the courts and lawyers getting the lion's share. I honestly believe that millions of dollars in the last 50 years that could have been used in the building of churches, establishing missions at home and in foreign fields, have made our college, publishing house and old folks' home strong and independent institutions, have literally been thrown away and wasted to the church and have been of no real benefit to anyone. This is a tragedy that Christ must look upon in sorrow, and besides I am wondering what account will be given to God for such stewardship; For "it is required that a steward be found faithful."

I believe our possessions under God are a solemn and sacred trust and should be so regarded, so handled and disposed of as to meet his approval.

Is it not time our eyes were opened and that we, now living should not be guilty of the mistakes made in the past? I know of many of our people are taking these things seriously and are making provisions, so that the interests of the church shall be benefited by what they have after death.

In the last few years the general institutions of the church have made provisions whereby members can make their gifts while living and at the same time have the use of their money until death. This arrangement has been made on account of the uncertainty of wills and the crooked things done to deprive the church of the money left. I could fill this issue of The Evangelist in telling of individual cases where wills were made favorable to the church, from which the church never received a dollar on account of sustained contests and crooked handling of funds left.

The college will issue annuity bonds that pay a semi-annual interest for any amount from $200.00 up. The income from these bonds will be as large if not larger than can be secured from any other safe investment. This is no real sacrifice to the giver, as they have the use of their money as long as they live and have the satisfaction of knowing the gift has been made and will not be wasted in legal handling or dishonest juggling. Many of our people are taking advantage of this opportunity and I feel the giver be protected for life in receiving an annual income while living.

How this is Done

The College will issue an annuity bond for the amount of money given, which guarantees an annual income during the lifetime of the giver, or where husband and wife desire, a joint bond will be issued in protecting both during their life time. These bonds pay a semi-annual income during the life of the giver, equal to if not larger than any made safe by interest bearing securities.

The Rate of Income

The following is the rate of interest paid on these bonds:

Age	Rate
30-34 years pays.....	.3 per cent
35-39 years pays.....	.3½ per cent
40-44 years pays.....	.4 per cent
45-49 years pays.....	.4½ per cent
50-54 years pays.....	.5 per cent
55-59 years pays.....	.5½ per cent
60-64 years pays.....	.6 per cent
65-69 years pays.....	.6½ per cent
70-74 years pays.....	.7 per cent
75-79 years pays.....	.7½ per cent
80-84 years pays.....	.8 per cent

These bonds are exempt from taxation. The banks pay about 4% and mortgage loans bring about 6%, after the taxes are deducted on these incomes they will only net you about 3%. Why not put your money to good use and receive the benefit of a larger income during your life?

Backed by Safe and Dependable Security

These investments are absolutely safe and secure. The $500,000.00 in permanent endowment, the College buildings and ground and back of all this the church. There is no chance of losing as there is in stocks and ordinary bonds.

How About Stewardship

"Whose shall these things be?" was the question Jesus raised in discussing the death of a rich man, whose plans were only for this life. God holds us accountable for the use we make of our money while living and also the disposal we make when we are through with it here in this world. When we face our God, what account are we going to give of our stewardship here on earth? Why not have the satisfaction and joy of giving while living and to know that your money will be used to extend the Kingdom of God, instead of the uncertainty of wills and litigation of courts.

A PERSONAL LETTER FROM LANARK

(A personal letter from Brother Harold D. Fry, pastor of the church at Lanark, Illinois, contains some items of general interest which we are taking the liberty of sharing with the Evangelist family.—Editor.)

You will rejoice with me that on July 21 we baptized four, and on the following Sunday, ten more, thirteen of these coming by confession of faith, pastorally solicited. The Lord can bless evangelism, the evangelism of the Word, despite the poor channel through which he must work, and in spite of the difficulties Satan lays in the way. We praise him for these additions. Three of them were adults.

We are leaving on our vacation about the 14th, enroute to Southern Illinois, then on to Southern California the next week, to a long anticipated visit with my parents, and "home."

Lanark church is undergoing an internal transformation, the decorators being busy. Hence, our Sunday school will be conducted in the high school gym on the dates of August 18 and 25. Brother C. C. Grisso has been called and will take up his pastorate here September 1. The Lord bless him and use him.

The W. M. S. enjoyed their last meeting out in the park, thank offerings being brought in, new officers installed, and fitting words of appreciation spoken in behalf of the former president, Miss Garber, who also is California-bound, and for Mrs. Fry. Brother Boyd Zuck and family will join the writer's family in St. Louis for the journey westward via De Soto and Whippet. Lanark church suffers much in the going of the Zuck family and of Alice Garber. A congregational farewell was tendered the departing members and pastor and family on the 6th.

The Sisterhood, Junior and Senior, held their joint meeting last week, presenting mite boxes and bidding godspeed to those leaving. Mrs. Fry has been Senior patroness, to which responsibility Mrs. Louise Garber succeeds. Mrs. Geneva Tallman is the new patroness of the Junior girls; and these two are ably assisted by two other fine young women.

Fraternally,
HAROLD D. FRY.

18TH ANNUAL BRETHREN CONFERENCE OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

July 12-21, Long Beach, California

Friday, July 19—Morning Session

10:00—Opening Song and Devotions, led by H. E. Capron.

10:15—Address, "The Brethren Work in the Kentucky Mountains." Rev. Mark D. Early, Kentucky.

Rev. Mark D. Early who, with his wife, have been our missionaries in Kentucky for the past two years, spoke on the work our church is endeavoring to do among the mountains of Kentucky. He said that there are three million people in the mountains in the east and in these mountains we find the purest American blood in our country. They are using the same language as was used 250-300 years ago. This is because they have not come in contact with the outside world. They have acquired a mastery over the forces of nature to derive an existence. One neighbor does not call upon another for help, each man works his own ground. Hospitality is most prevalent among these people. "Kentucky for Progress" is on all auto license plates showing that Kentucky is coming to the front in many ways. The Appalachian Way, soon to be completed, will shorten the distance between Chicago and Florida 250 miles. This Way goes through the mountain regions of Kentucky, passing by our school. Troublesome Creek, upon which our mission is situated, is so-called because of the heavy floods which rise 25 feet in 34 hours. Also because of the many killings along its borders. Breathitt County, in which our mission is located, is known as "Bloody County." Hatred, revenge and bootleg among certain classes in these mountains is the curse of the land. Education and Christianity is greatly changing these conditions. They are raising the standards of citizenship. Fifty per cent of the moral and spiritual uplift is due to the influence of Riverside Institute, this being the testimony of prominent business men of Jackson. The teaching of the Bible is paramount in Riverside. Ninety-five percent of all children who attend our school receive Christ during the year.

Brother Early urged us to back up this work to the fullest degree in view of the opportunity that is ours among these needy people.

11:00—Special musical number supplied by Second church of Los Angeles.

11:15—Address, "Victory Over the Poe." Dr. John C. Page.

Dr. Page's last address to our Conference on the subject "Victory Over the Poe" showed clearly from the teachings of Ephesians, the 6th chapter, how the Christian could overcome Satan. This book, said Dr. Page, deals more with the warfare of the Christian than any other book of the Bible, with the exception of possibly Revelation. The conquest of Joshua as related in the 5th chapter of the book of Joshua, fits in with the 6th chapter of Ephesians.

The outline of the address is as follows:

I. First Principal. God wants us to live victoriously, becoming adjusted to the provisions he has made. Joshua, in the 13th verse of the 5th chapter is on the other side of Jordan. God does not call us to warfare until we have crossed the Jordan. This phrase in the Old Testament corresponds to another phrase in the New Testament—"in the Lord" or "in Christ." Israel was in the land of Promise over Jordan. God has nothing to say about warfare until we know where we are "in the Lord." Israel's enemy had to be dispossessed before the land could be possessed. After crossing the Jordan, there must be a recognition of Christ as Lord.

1. Must see ourselves in Christ. Dead, buried, raised together with him.

II. What saith my Lord unto his servant Joshua? 5:14 B.

It is surprising how perplexities and doubts flee when the truth gets hold of you. The word "Lord" in this verse implies sovereignty, ownership, possession.

III. Accept the Lord's Plan of Campaign.

The church of God in many places does not accept God's plan. It adopts methods of social activity. Undoubtedly Joshua had his own plan for the conquest of Jericho, but the man with the drawn sword had plans which ran counter with Joshua's. God sets aside the wisdom of the world in all its ways. "The world in its wisdom knew not God," said Paul. God's plans are set forth in the first Jewish Council in Acts 15, namely, "to take out a people for his name." The man with the drawn sword was none other than the Lord Jesus Christ before his incarnation. God wants young lives to respond to his appeal. Two out of every three in this great world of ours have not yet heard of Christ. Let us link our lives up with God's plan of Campaign.

IV. Keep Going on in Faith.

These four principals as stated are all found in the 5th and 6th chapters of Joshua. Eph. 6:10, 11 is similar to what was done in Joshua and these four principals. "Strong in the Lord" is position. "In the power of his might," is power. We cannot have power over the foe unless we observe and realize in experience these principals. We are to put on the whole armour of God in order to become victorious over the foe. This armour is first, the girdle of truth. Christians sometimes get loose in the spiritual life. They need tightening up. To read God's Word first thing in the morning is a means to tighten up our spiritual life. Second, the breast plate. This is the most obvious of all the armour. To have the righteousness of Christ, we must also have righteousness. We must be upright, downright and outright for him. Third, feet shod. We are caused to step on sharp places at times. Complaint and murmurings do not get through the sandal of peace. Fourth, the shield of faith. Interposes between self and the enemy. The enemy knows how to use fiery darts. He tries to depress the Christian. Why do we need so much armour? Because we are in a serious conflict. Fifth, the helmet. This piece of armour protects the brain. Understand in your mind what salvation is. The mind must be preserved against attacks of the evil one. Sixth, the sword of the Spirit, the Word of God. Seventh, praying always. This keeps the armour bright, usable and prevents it from getting rusty.

Afternoon Session

2:00—Opening Song and Devotions led by Mrs. A. V. Kimmell.

2:15—Address, "The Indwelling of the Holy Spirit." Prof. Alva J. McClain.

Following the catechism method of teaching on this subject, Prof. McClain asked the following questions and answered them:

1. What do we mean by the indwelling of the Holy Spirit?

Answer. The presence of the third Person of the Trinity dwelling in the life of man.

2. Are all men indwelt by the Holy Spirit?

Answer. Every man has a spark of the Divine. In a sense, all men are indwelt by the Holy Spirit. In Eph. 2:12, we learn of the special indwelling of believers not possessed by those outside of Christ.

3. Are all Christians indwelt by the Holy Spirit?

Answer. Yes, a person cannot be a Christian without the Holy Spirit in their lives.

4. What must we do in order that we may receive the Holy Spirit?

Answer. Some people tell us we must agonize in prayer. There is no Scripture warrant for this. It might be suggested in Luke 11:13, but those disciples referred to in this text never asked for the Holy Spirit so far as we have any record. In John 14:16, Jesus asked the Father for them and in answer to his prayer, the Holy Spirit was given to all of his fulness, on the day of Pentecost.

3:00—Special number in song supplied by Second church of Los Angeles.

3:15—Address, "The Application of the Redemptive Work of Christ Through the Holy Spirit." Dr. Isaac P. Ward, Los Angeles.

Dr. Isaac P. Ward, formerly associated with Rev. Billy Sunday in evangelistic work and recently called to become a member of the faculty of the Bible Institute of Los Angeles to have charge of the Personal Evangelism branch of the Day School, brought to the conference a very edifying message on the above subject. The object of the message, he stated, was found in 1 Peter 3:15, "To sanctify the Lord God in your hearts and be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason for the hope that is in you, with meekness and fear." The speaker opened his address by stating that there were multitudes of people professing to be Christians who, if an outsider asked them why they were Christians, they would not be able to give a reason for the hope that is within them. Paul says that we are "spectacles." The only way that multitudes will know of Christ is by the testimony of Christians.

Application of the redemptive work of Christ through the Holy Spirit is seen first, in its actual beginnings, second, in its continuance and completion.

In its actual beginnings, the work is seen in the union of the soul with Christ, regeneration, conversion and justification. The union of the soul with Christ is different than God's providential dealings with man. It is not a union with any system of doctrine or external union with the organized church. It is the union of the soul with the personal omnipotent Christ. The figurative teaching of Scripture upon this union is seen in a building and foundation, Eph. 2:22; also in the union of husband and wife, Rom. 7:4. Also as natural life in the vine gives life to the branches, John 15.

The direct statements of Scripture regarding this union are seen in the following passages, John 14:20; Rom. 8:9; John 17. The nature of this union is not merely a natural union as God has between all nature, not merely a union of essence that destroys personality of believer; not conditioned by participation of divine sacraments, but positively, it is organic. The vital life of Christ becomes a dominant principal within the believer. It is an indissoluble union, Rom. 8:38, 39. A consequence of this union is seen in that it gives a legal stand and rights in Christ. "And ye are Christ's and Christ is God's." 1 Cor. 3:23. Through this union we have successive and increasing needs, Heb. 4:15; Heb. 2:18; John 1:16.

The following seven "togethers, setting forth this union of the believer with Christ" are clearly taught in the Scripture:

1. Crucified. 2. Died. 3. Buried. 4. Quicken. 6. Suffered. 7. Glorified.

Evening Session

6:30—Y. P. S. C. E. Banquet in basement of church. Roll Call of Churches. (Response by special number.) Choruses! Good Eats! Good Fellowship! Good Fun!

8:00—Song Service conducted by Leo Polman.

8:15—Address, "The Four Walls of Youth." Dr. Isaac P. Ward.

About 300 young people and their leaders in the various churches gathered around the banquet tables, which were provided by the conference this year. Splendid fellowship was enjoyed and each church responded with a very interesting number from representatives which they appointed. Following the banquet, Dr. Ward, at 8:15, addressed the young people on the subject "The Four Walls of Youth."

The speaker opened his address by stating that planning a life was most important. It was like planning a building. The four walls around which the speaker wove his message were as follows:

1. Intelligently think it through. 2. Best kind of a plan. 3. Material in it. 4. Best season of the year.

2 Tim. 2:15, if carried out, will assure progress and success to every life. When we study God's Word we are to be dead in earnest. The tragedy now is that instead of doing work, people are writing books and seeking popularity. We should think through the plan for our lives. Not what men think but what God thinks should be our motto.

The best plan, Luke 2:25. 1. Wisdom—intellectual; 2. Stature—physical; 3. Favor of God—spiritual; 4. Favor with man—social.

Material, Phil. 4:8. 1. True—truth. 2. Honest—shut out mean things. 3. Just—right my obligation. 4. Pure—guard against evil company. Think seriously about these things.

The best season—in your present plastic period. You can mould your life into anything you want. The canvass of your life is before you. It is for you to draw the picture and fill in the colors you think best for that life. The secret of a master builder is seen in the 3rd chapter of 1 Corinthians. Life will never spell success to you until you actually take God into your plan. The real true aim in life is to please God. The life might well be wiped out if intellectual, physical and social only are lived. A bold front is never as good as a strong right arm. Billy Sunday often used to say that there is nothing but front doors to some people. You open the door and step into the back yard. Avarice wrongs many more lives than prodigality. Success is a failure when you do lower things when higher things are possible; when you live only to eat and drink and have a good time; when the pocketbook crowds out character. If you have made mistakes, put your life in the repair shop of confession to God.

This message will ever be remembered by the young people of our churches and we trust will bear fruit in their lives in the days to come.

Saturday, July 20—Afternoon Session (Business)

2:00—Opening Song and Devotions led by T. J. Steves.

2:10—Reading of Minutes. Unfinished Business. Report of Committees. Adjournment.

The following report on resolutions was presented at the closing business session of the conference and unanimously accepted:

Report on Committee on Resolutions

WHEREAS, The Brethren Churches of the Southern California District assembled in conference at Long Beach, July 12-21, 1929, realize that the first and chief work of the church is to give the Gospel of Grace of God to lost men.

BE IT THEREFORE RESOLVED, That we as a body of believers make every effort possible to stress: First—The need and importance of charity among ourselves. Second: More earnest evangelism. Third: The importance of prayer life on the part of our constituency for his people Israel, for one another, for the unsaved, and that we advocate personal endeavor to win men to Christ.

WHEREAS, The Lord has so graciously brought us to the close of another successful spiritual Conference.

BE IT RESOLVED, That we render unto God our genuine thanks for his Grace and guidance.

RESOLVED THAT we commend our executive committee for planning and carrying on of their splendid program, with special reference to Brother Kimmell for his many terms of faithful service as Moderator.

RESOLVED THAT we thank the Long Beach church for the many kindnesses, and for opening their church house under stressing circumstances of building.

RESOLVED THAT we express our gratitude to the members of the church for so graciously opening their homes for the entertainment of visiting delegates.

RESOLVED THAT we thank the floral committee responsible for the beautiful decorations.

RESOLVED THAT we thank Brother Leo Polman for so efficiently taking charge of the music.

RESOLVED THAT we express our appreciation to the newspapers for the space so kindly given for the advertising and reporting of this conference.

WHEREAS the world is appalled at the present crime wave.

WHEREAS, The President of the United States has found it necessary to appoint a Board to investigate the causes of Crime.

WHEREAS national moral laxity is evident and apparently increasing on every side.

BE IT THEREFORE RESOLVED THAT this conference enthusiastically promote the teaching of the whole Bible in these days of apostasy. That we advocate non-conformity to the world in consistent, Spirit-filled Christian living, and that we heartily endorse modesty of dress, Godly recreations, active brotherly love. Seeking to grow in grace and to glorify the Lord Jesus Christ in every act of life.

WHEREAS our attitude toward the present administration of the Bible Institute of Los Angeles is being sought.

BE IT RESOLVED THAT we fully and heartily endorse the present administration of said institution and pledge our prayers and interest to this mighty Christian Institution.

WHEREAS a great portion of the Protestant Church is today promoting unscriptural policies.

WHEREAS the Word of God teaches that there will be no lasting peace through man made programs.

BE IT RESOLVED that we as a conference continue to adhere to the faith once and for all delivered to the Saints, declaring that we believe that there will never be lasting peace here on earth among nations until the Prince of Peace comes back to earth to reign.

SELF-STYLED "FASHION ARTIST" WORKS FOR TOBACCO By Will H. Brown

The black sheep in the Chicago stock yards that was used to decoy one million other sheep to slaughter pens there, was only a poor dumb brute, knowing no better.

This can not be said of men and women possessing intelligence and reasoning powers, who use their influence to fasten the smoking habit on others, merely for the paltry dollars it may bring to them because of a testimonial given to a tobacco company for a financial consideration, to be used in newspaper advertising.

The English language has no words to describe a woman pursuing such a course. With this in mind, read the following extracts from a letter sent out, addressed to certain named persons, by one who styles himself a "fashion artist."

"I feel that the slender woman, who combines gracefulness and suppleness with this slenderness, is the woman for whom present day fashions are created. I feel, too, that in order to maintain fashion design on the high plane which it now enjoys, a preservation of this ideal of slenderness through sane eating, avoidance of sweets, and as the advertisement says, 'lighting a cigarette,' is one which every fashion authority will recognize as essential."

Now think carefully as you read the rest of her letter: "I am interested in knowing whether my judgment concurs with that of yours and other fashion leaders, and should be happy to have your opinion on the subject, so that I may give it out to the press for publication, unless you state to the contrary."

In other words, it is just a clever method to inveigle others into selling their influence to cause others to take up smoking. For ways that are dark, don't look to any poor heathen. Just study the methods of tobacco manufacturers who resort to such methods as noted.

There is more joy in formation than in reformation, but there can be no formation until needed reformation is accomplished.

to secure that end than fasting? Paul, keeping his "body under," 1 Co. 9:25, suppressing it in the chains of a spiritual slavery, is an illustration of the end to be secured by this duty. To seek of him a right way for us. The journey from Babylon to Judea (about 520 miles direct) has always been extremely dangerous to travelers, the country being infested by roving Arab tribes, who live by plunder; and they were probably not ignorant of the immense amount of treasure which the Jews were now carrying. For our little ones. The most priceless treasure of all.—E. As there is no babe cradled and rocked that has not its mother, in the ordinary course of life, to overhang it by night and by day, to kiss it as it sleeps, and to cover it with smiles and caresses when it wakes, so every creature that is born into life has a God whose ever-watchful soul broods tenderly over it by day and by night and who interspheres it in his own radiant thought and feeling. And for all our substance. vs. 25:27; 33, 34. Prof. Fenton says, "The Bullion by mere weight was of silver, £182,250, and of gold $547,500, sterling; but in purchasing value probably 10 or 15 times the present power in our day." Ezra was poor in himself; yet rich for he had the king's treasure-house to draw from. But is that not true for every one of God's children? Ezr. 7:20; 1 Co. 3: 21-23—The Illustrator.

Prayer Needed in Everything

We think too much of prayer as a means of accomplishing something especially difficult, as given especially for the meeting of emergencies, and not enough as a part of our daily life and constant requirement. If we used prayer more for our everyday needs and as a constant source of help, we would find it more readily effective in our crises. "If you ask me, 'What should we pray for?' I answer, 'Everything which you need.' Remember only two things: one, that to ask only or mainly for earthly blessings is a dreadful dwarfing and vulgarization of the grandeur and holiness of prayer, as though you asked for a handful of grass when you might ask for a handful of emeralds; the other that you must always ask for earthly desires with absolute submission of your own will to God, lest God should grant you your own bane."—F. W. Farrar.

Here is a surgeons' secret, as reported in a Boston daily paper: He is a Boston specialist, known far and wide for his skill in surgery. He was talking with an intimate friend the other day, when he let fall these words:

"I am not a church member. No one imagines that I am a religious man. But I want to tell you that I never take up a scalpel to perform an operation without quietly asking the Almighty to help me do what I know I cannot do unaided."

"In an age of seeming thoughtlessness, when people bask in the sunshine of prosperity and appear to be quite independent of any Higher Power, it would be interesting and perhaps astonishing to the average person to learn how many prayers are offered up, silently and informally as well as upon bended knees in closets and at church altars, for divine guidance in daily tasks and at critical junctures of all sorts."

"The greater a man really is, the more likely is he to acknowledge that his achievements are not his alone but done with the assistance of others and—though he may hesitate to say this—with a strength and wisdom derived from communion with the 'Lord and Father of mankind.'"

"Call it superstition if you will, but measure it by its fruitage in the lives of the noblest and most serviceable members of the human family."

OUR LITTLE READERS

TABBY ANN'S REVENGE

When Nan Lane was eight she went to spend the summer with Grandfather and Grandmother Lee, who lived on a farm. There were no children for playmates, but there were frisky little calves, and playful lambs and colts, and she soon made friends with them all.

Then there was Tabby Ann, the big gray-and-white cat, and her three cunning kittens. Nan always saw that the mother cat had a saucer of fresh milk for breakfast and plenty of meat scraps for dinner and supper. She tied gay ribbons around the necks of the kittens and always invited them to the tea parties of Lady Maud, her best doll.

One afternoon, in the midst of one of Lady Maud's frequent birthday feasts, grandfather returned from a visit to a neighbor, and called to Nan as he came up the steps:

"Guess what I have in my pocket for you, little girl."

"A red apple."

"No."

"A peach."

"No."

"A—why, grandpa—it's something 'live.'"

"So it is, girlie. It is Zip, a new playmate."

He took from his pocket a tiny black-and-white Mexican terrier, no larger than a big rat.

The little dog bristled and barked furiously at Tabby Ann and her kittens.

The birthday dinner was soon over, for Zip ate every morsel of the sandwiches and cake, and whined for more.

That evening he chased the kittens until they hid in the woodshed, and at supper time he devoured his own supper in double-quick time and swallowed Tabby Ann's before she could say, "Scat!"

Next morning Zip drove Tabby Ann from her saucer of fresh milk and drank it before Nan could reprove him for his greediness.

But worse even than his greed was Zip's way of taking all the petting and barking if Tabby Ann or her babies came near Nan. The cat and her kittens spent most of the time on the back porch, but mewed plaintively to show how they missed their little girl friend.

One morning Zip slipped into the pantry, drank Tabby Ann's milk, and ate her bits of meat before Nan could come to the rescue.

"Zip needs to be punished," said grandmother. But before Nan could decide upon a way of punishment he had followed the hired man to the barn, barking fiercely at everything he saw.

It was not long until the little terrier came running back with a big mastiff in pursuit. When he reached the back steps Zip turned and growled ferociously. The big dog was not to be driven away so easily. Thinking he had found a new kind of rat, he caught the little terrier by the neck and began to shake him vigorously.

Nan saw it all from the back porch and cried loudly for help. Grandmother had gone upstairs, and no one answered the call. Another minute and all would have been over for Zip. From the low porch roof, where she had taken refuge from the strange dog, sprang Tabby Ann, square on the mastiff's back. Her sharp claws dug into his thick skin with such force that he dropped the terrier to howl with pain. He ran from the yard and the cat leaped nimbly to the fence as he went through the gate.

"She saved your life, Zip," cried Nan as she took the frightened puppy in her arms. "You've got to be good to her from this on."

Zip only hung his head and wagged his tail, but from that day he was a different dog. He did not growl any more when Nan petted Tabby Ann and her babies, and they soon became such friends that they ate together without so much as a snap or a snarl. By returning good for evil, as a way to revenge, Tabby Ann cured the wee doggie of selfishness.—Exchange.

Heart Throbs of Our Church Leaders

XXIII—LIFE ABIDING

By Willis E. Ronk

The statement that we are living in a challenging age is made so frequently that it seems commonplace; but I doubt if any of us have fully realized its deep significance for Christianity.

We are living in an age of scientific discovery and invention. The reaper and the threshing machine have displaced the sickle and the flail; the electric lights have taken the place of the candle; in place of the ox-team and the horse we have the automobile, the train and the aeroplane; while we have methods of communication undreamed of by another generation in the telephone, telegraph and the radio. All this change has resulted in the discarding of much of the old for the new.

In this process of change the church has been compelled to examine anew her foundations, to test the old in the light of the new. The so-called "modernist-Fundamentalist" controversy is part of the re-examination process. The controversy has been unsettling in its effects, but will result in a firmer basis of belief.

Further evidence of change is seen in the greater organization in the business world, the duplication of which is attempted in Christian organizations. This is seen in our organized classes in our brotherhood, and in the search of new methods of religious education.

It is not my intention to criticize these tendencies, nor to enumerate all the characteristics of an age; but I want simply to point out our tendency in the church to look to "things," to "methods," to the "mechanics," to the "rational basis" of Christianity and to forget our true motive power.

Controversy may sometimes clarify an issue in the minds of people; a world war may aid in swinging the world out of its "ruts;" even new methods are essential in the life of a church, but this may all be at the expense of the spiritual life. I am convinced that the greatest need of the church is the dynamic of lives deeply in earnest, men and women who have experienced the abiding presence of Christ. Jesus said, "Without me ye can do nothing." "Abide in me, and I in you." "He that abideth in me."

Signs of the Times

by
Alva J. McClain

The Progress of "Modern Civilization"

John Landesco, research director for the American Institute of Criminal Law and Criminology, recently made a complete survey of "racketeering" in Chicago and reports the following startling situation there:

There has been a very extensive breakdown of governmental machinery in Chicago. The police, courts and public prosecutors are failing in their proper functions of crime repression. As a result, gangsters and gunmen actually control more than ninety necessary economic industries in that city. When an industry needs protection, it bargains with the crime overlords, and gets protection if it pays the price.

In like manner, over two thousand years ago, pirates controlled the Mediterranean Sea and exacted tribute from the cities that engaged in trade. The world hasn't changed much in some respects, except that criminals are more efficient today.

Some day (and it may be soon) the world will be policed by angels. (Matt. 13:41). One angel, like that which destroyed an Assyrian army of 185,000 men in one night, would make short work of the Chicago gangsters and gunmen, and also of those in Los Angeles.

Wigs and Robes

The lamentable fact that our judges and courts do not inspire the proper respect from criminals and spectators, has led to the suggestion that the judges should be rigged out with wigs and robes, after the English fashion. Thus, it is argued, we shall add to the dignity of legal procedure.

Doubtless, the dress of the English judges enhances the impressiveness of their courts, but it will take something more than "wigs and robes" to strike respect and fear into the hearts of evil-doers. The trouble goes deeper than this. Read the following description of a Chicago court room as given by an investigator:

"It is crowded almost to suffocation. The smoke is always thick. There is much laughing, loud talking, whispering, and expectorating. At times the noise rises to almost deafening proportions, due to the shuffling about and the loud shouts of the bailiff, the pounding of the gavel and the remarks of bystanders, and the efforts of the judge to elicit information from reluctant witnesses."

No mere wig and robe could give dignity to such a court room. What the American court needs is to kick out all the flashlight photographers, sob-sister reporters, slyster lawyers, theatrical prosecutors; then cut loose from the endless and absurd red-tape and technicalities, and begin imposing sentences with inflexible justice and impartiality. Such courts will inspire respect.

A robe does not make a judge any more than a long tailed coat makes a preacher. True dignity does not consist in clothing, but rather in moral character and high integrity. Read the record of the final judgment in Revelation 20:11-15. Nothing is said about "robes." But there is a Judge from whose FACE the very heavens and earth flee away, and there is a GREAT WHITE THRONE. The Face speaks of moral character. The Great White Throne speaks of absolute justice. Human courts will command greater respect when they display more of these qualities.

Real Life and Reel Life

A representative of the moving picture industry, speaking before the International Association of Policewomen, sought to commend the industry as a moral influence by the following report:

"Of the thirty-eight so-called underworld pictures produced last year, the crook, or villain, was killed in fourteen instances, arrested in nineteen, and in five reformed."

The uninitiated laymen will wonder why, if there is any merit in killing fourteen of the crooks, the directors did not kill all thirty-eight of them. It wouldn't have cost any more. Or better yet, why have any crooks at all? That would be ideal.

Doubtless, the moving picture "artists" will argue that it is the function of an "art" to picture life as it really is. If so, they killed too many crooks. One out of thirty-eight would be more accurate in "real" life.

WORLD WET CONGRESS MEETS

Some of our Evangelist readers may be surprised to learn that there is such a thing as a "World's Wet Congress," for, though he have regularly remarked and published reports of "Dry Congresses" and conventions, we have never before made mention of a "Wet Congress" of world-wide representation. You may therefore be interested in learning something of the nature of such a gathering. Besides, the reading of this report may impress upon you, as it did upon us, a few facts: first, that the enactment and progress of Prohibition in America set the whole liquor world astir with fear for the safety of the trade in intoxicants; and second, the success of Prohibition in America will mean ultimately the adoption of the policy by practically all the nations of the world, and its complete success in America is dependent very largely upon the realization of such a goal; and third, the liquor interests organized and financed on a world scale, such as they never have been before, make it doubly certain that victory can come for sobriety and decency only after the most persistent and united warfare of all Christian forces of the world. And American Christianity must bear the responsibility of leadership. Now read the report of the wet congress:

The tenth Congress of the International League Against Prohibitions was held at Copenhagen recently, under the chairmanship of Baron de Luze who is at the same time president of the International Wine and Spirits Committee. The head of the Danish government, the socialist Stauning, had accepted the honorary chairmanship and spoke at the opening meeting and at the closing banquet.

After the Danes the French were the most strongly represented, by about 50 members; these included the Marquis de Polignac, the Count Chandon-Moet, the brothers Cointreau who, declared who, declared the Danish papers, manufacture liquors but do not drink them. Germany sent among others M. Kantorwicz; Scotland, Sir Alexander Walker, the great distiller. Every well-known brand of wine and liquor was represented, which evoked the remark from a witty journalist that it was not necessary to cite the names of the members: one had only to consult a "wine-list" to find them all. Besides the representatives of the liquor trade the organizers had invited the directors of the alcohol monopoly of Latvia, Switzerland, Poland, Turkey, Norway; this invitation had been generally accepted, although the interests of the monopoly which, for hygienic and fiscal reasons, endeavors to raise the price of alcohol, are in contradiction with those of the wine merchants and distillers.

In addition to the report of the General Secretary, the Russian Prince Pierre Mestchersky, who spoke of the efforts of the League, sometimes crowned with success, to prevent the passing of prohibitive or restrictive measures against alcohol or to induce the parliaments to cancel measures already taken, the Congress heard five communications: on American Prohibition, Hugh Fox, former secretary, of the American Brewers' Association; on Prohibition in Finland, Prof. E. Ehrnrooth of Helsingfors; on Local Option in Scotland and Great Britain in general, Harry Earnshaw; on Trade Aspects of the Alcohol Question, M. Olsen, director of the Danish Central Distilleries; on the Bratt System in Sweden, Dr. Bratt himself.

Needless to say that the reporters on prohibition in the United States and in Finland proclaimed this measure a fiasco. But whereas Mr. Fox, vigorously supported by the only woman member of the Congress, Mrs. Gross, contented himself with affirmations, M. Ehrnrooth endeavored to justify his conclusions by statistics. Whilst Mr. Earnshaw drew a very black picture of the effects of local option in Scotland and attacked even the Carlisle system of drink nationalization, Mr. Olsen dwelt on the economic importance of the liquor traffic for the state and for numerous categories of individuals.

The resolution unanimously voted by the Congress expressed regret that the temperance legislation of the state does not sufficiently take into account the liberty of the individual and the legitimate interests of the liquor traffic, proclaims once more the failure of prohibition and all systems inspired thereby, demands finally that the heavy taxation on alcoholic beverages be lightened, so as to be more in proportion with the prices and the purchasing capacity of the public.

The Congress closed with a sumptuous banquet: M. Stauning presided at the table

Disowning Our Lord

One of the outstanding weaknesses of the church lies in the fact that it is full of people who are daily disowning their Lord. This is not an indictment of the church as an institution, but of its membership. It is a reminder to us as members of that divine institution that in great numbers and in multitudes of instances we are falling short in honesty of effort and sincerity of purpose and service. It is an unpleasant thing to say, and we dislike to hear unpleasant things about ourselves, but if it is true we need to hear it and to be reformed by it.

We are prone to disown our Lord when surrounded by the worldly, irreverent crowd and it seems that we are likely to be subjected to scorn and ridicule because of our profession. We do not like to appear different in our conduct, in our habits and in our ideals from those about us, for there is a chance that some one will taunt us because of our goodness. So we fall in line with the enemies of Christ, march in the procession of the ungodly, skillfully conceal the fact of our discipleship and ape the conduct of those unborn by the Spirit of God. A young theological student went to work in a logging camp during a vacation period. When he returned to the seminary, the dean, having expected that he would be surely tried by the rough, ungodly men of the camp, asked how he got along with them. "Oh," he replied, "I never told them I was a Christian and no one ever suspected it; I got along swimmingly." That is the way all too many professing Christians get along in the world; to avoid its taunts and jeers they adopt its code of morals and standard of conduct.

It was because of fear that Peter disowned his Lord. At the hour of prayer he was full of confidence and determination; nothing could daunt him, so he thought, but he had not figured on the cowering power of threatened persecution and the publicly withering sense of fear that connection with an unpopular cause and a publicly disgraced leader would throw into his life. Looking at him from this distance, it seems to us that he ought not to have been taken so completely off his guard, for he was warned by his Lord. Beside he had had such association with Jesus as should have inspired him with courage for the cause. He was a chosen disciple, a member of the inner circle, a witness of Christ's most wonderful works and teachings and a sharer of the most lofty and faith-building experiences. Surely more was to be expected of him than to deny his Lord. But that is like our human nature and Peter was intensely human. Before we criticize him too severely let us consider how well he illustrates the tendency on the part of us all to slink away from the points of persecution and suffering, and how few are the times when we have shown any greater courage than he. The fact is, many of us shy away in fear and disown our Lord for much less cause than that which led to Peter's downfall.

Many times we deny our Lord because of selfishness and greed. An opportunity may arise for sharing in some unrighteous gain, of promoting some questionable business venture or unworthy enterprise, of driving a sharp bargain with some one who is at our mercy, of misrepresenting for gain, or of playing dishonest with another's funds, and our selfish, covetous soul drives us on to do the thing we know we ought not to do,—that is denying our Lord for a price as surely as ever Judas sold his Master for thirty pieces of silver. In one way or another, on large or small scale, how often we are proving untrue to the profession we make as followers of the Lord Jesus Christ!

Not infrequently we are guilty of disowning our Lord by cold formalism in worship and lack of reality in our religious life. We go through our forms of worship with such thoughtlessness and lack of earnestness that they have a very slight influence upon us for good. We sing our songs, pray our prayers and read our Scriptures largely as a matter of habit, or as merely performing certain parts on the program, as one might play a part in a drama. We even preach our sermons, sometimes, in a sort of professional way, entertaining enough and perfectly proper in every way they may be, but lacking that moving, vitalizing power that flows from burning conviction. From pulpit and pew alike we proceed with our ritual and even our special forms of worship from Sunday to Sunday in a sort of matter-of-fact way, concerned indeed that all shall be harmoniously and effectively rendered but with little concern as to how it is all going to effect our lives in the following week. Then we go down from the house of God with a sort of satisfied air, feeling righteously within ourselves, but not always particular to see that that sense of righteousness is translated into life and conduct. Such is the superficial attitude that tends to develop in our worship today, as it did with the Pharisees of old, and we need to pause to hear our Lord say, "Except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven" (Matt. 5:20).

Our religion rests too lightly upon us. It does not go deeply enough into our hearts. It is not priced highly enough. It does not involve enough of sacrifice and passion. That is why we are daily disowning our Lord and proving untrue to his cause. We need to have our weakness and instability reproved by a reminder of the heroic endurance for Christ of some of the noble men of faith who have gone before. When Cranmer was overcome with suffering fear, his enemies offered him pardon on condition that he would sign a form of recantation. He did so, but at once seeing the weakness and sinfulness of the act he determined publicly that he had done wrong in yielding. When fastened to the stake, with the flames leaping around him, he thrust out his right hand into the flames, exclaiming, "Thou unworthy hand." Our hands are usually extended in an effort to get away from suffering and persecution and from the daily crosses that fidelity would call us to bear. We sing lustily, "Faith of our fathers! living still. In spite of dungeon, fire and sword," be we have not so much as the faith to walk two blocks through the winter's biting storm or summer's melting heat to church. With pride we sing, "Our fathers, chained in prisons dark, were still in heart and conscience free," and with scarcely a thought of what it means we follow on with words fit only for lips of martyr stuff, "How sweet would be their children's fate, if they, like them, could die for thee!" But when we get out into the actual contacts of life we will not so much as endure a single rebuff for Christ's sake, nor deny ourselves of a single ill-earned dollar, nor turn our backs upon a single worldly pleasure. We make idle words of a hymn of mighty passion and a mockery of an experience that is as sacred and vital as life itself. Our conduct denies our testimony. We confess our Lord with our lips and disown him with our lives. Hear the challenge and rebuke from the lips of him who himself endured the cross, despising the shame, "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow me" (Luke 9:23).

"Labor Omnia Vincit"

"Well now, why didn't he use English?" you are saying. "That may have all been very well for the ancient Romans but we prefer our communications in plain English." And you are right, though these words are about as widely understood as the E Pluribus Unum on a cent. But there is a story connected with this motto. We got it from the pen of a fellow craftsman.

There was a Labor Day procession at the head of which was carried a banner with these words, "Labor Omnia Vincit." A smart alec standing on the sidelines started a lot of fun which turned out to be at his own expense when he said the big banner read:

 "Labor gets everybody."

"What do you mean—everybody?" sang out a jovial truckman.
 "Speak for yourself, sonny. You're not talking for me!"

"He means: work gets his goat!" mocked another with a laugh.
 The smart alec looked around as if he wanted to hurt somebody, but he changed his mind and tried to take it as a joke when he saw how big the other fellow was.

I had to smile, said our editor friend, because he looked like the sort of a lad who spent most of his time trying to get out of doing very much and was sore because he couldn't quite succeed. At least he thought there was something wrong with the fellow who would march in a parade to advertise the fact that he was a workman.

But just then, as if he hadn't had enough a newsy piped up with:

"Say, you big simp, don't you know what that means? It says:

"Work conquers all things."

"That's our club motto. Why don't you try it sometime?"

You should have seen the smart alec; he blushed as red as a fire truck and started to push hastily back through the crowd. He hadn't gone very far before the newsy shouted after him:

Hey, where ya goin'? Lookin' fer a job? Don't you know this is a holiday?" I had to grant him this much, though, says our reporter as he fled up the nearest side street to get away from the jeering: he had sense enough to keep his mouth shut. I guess he realized that although the world may tolerate the idler, the workers of the world who make up the rank and file of us aren't going to stand dumbly by and see any loafer get much pleasure boasting about it.

That is about the sort of reception a loafer may expect to get anywhere, and no matter what class of loafer he is. Wherever he goes he will find himself about as welcome as a flock of crows to a farmer in a newly planted cornfield.

The world believes in work. That is the way it has gotten where it is. And the men who would get along agreeably with the world must show himself willing to work, and he who would put himself in the world's eye, must be willing not only to work, but to work hard and persistently. The great men have all been of that kind. "Noah Webster worked thirty-six years on his dictionary; Bancroft, twenty-six years on his History of the United States; Michael Angelo took seven years to paint the Sistine Chapel ceiling; Titan worked seven years on the Last Supper. And what shall we say of Victor Hugo, who, when he was writing Notre Dame, sent all his clothing out of the house lest he be tempted to go out? of Thackeray, whose Vanity Fair was refused ten times? or, rising to a higher realm, of Robert Morrison and Henry Martyn, who worked heart-breaking years in China and India without a single convert? The measure of a man's soul is his ability to disregard the hindrances and concentrate his energies on the achievement."

There is no secret to success but work. Work will win, no matter what your line of interest. "Labor conquers all things."

EDITORIAL REVIEW

NO PAPER NEXT WEEK.

The church at Muncie, Indiana, is plodding steadily forward under the pastoral leadership of Brother M. L. Sands. We are informed that during the present year $2,000 have been added to their church building fund, which is decidedly a mark of progress.

Brother Dyoll Belote, who with his good wife recently paid a visit to the editor's home, informs us that he is closing his work this fall as pastor of the Second Brethren church of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, where he has led the people in the erection of a new church building and greatly strengthened them in membership.

From Canton, Ohio, we learn that nine have been added to the church membership since last report. The Tuesday night Bible instruction class conducted by the pastor, Dr. J. C. Beal, is a feature of special interest in the work there. The work of the various auxiliaries is holding up splendidly and the support of the Sunday services has been encouraging. Elder D. F. Eikenberry is the loyal and enthusiastic correspondent.

It has been brought to our attention that we erred in mentioning Brother A. V. Kimmell as the newly elected moderator of the Southern California conference. Instead Brother A. L. Lynn, pastor of the La Verne church was the new incumbent, while Brother Kimmell was the retiring moderator. We beg the indulgence of those concerned for having made this mistake.

On the Sunday of August fourth Dean J. Allen Miller and Dr. W. S. Bell were called by the First Brethren church of Dayton, Ohio, to officiate in the installation of their new pastor, Rev. R. D. Barnard. On that Sunday Brother Barnard preached his first sermon as pastor, having conducted his past service the previous Sunday in the church at Mansfield, where he closed a pastorate of six years or more.

Brother Freeman Ankrum, pastor of the church at Oak Hill, West Virginia, tells us about his recent vacation visiting relatives, which included folks of the Church of the Brethren and the Brethren Church and also friends in both churches. The point of special interest is that he observed a marked friendliness and desire for closer fellowship among the Church of the Brethren people visited. It would be a wholesome thing for the last one of our preachers to discover that by experience. Rubbing elbows helps wonderfully to kindle fraternal feelings.

Dr. W. S. Bell writes his "impressions" of the Shipshewana project, and in brief it is that he has been completely sold on the undertaking. He believes thoroughly in the worthwhileness of the institution and in its future. He pays deserved tribute to the men who sponsored the undertaking, especially Brethren G. W. Rench and A. T. Wirick, whose unselfish purposes and sacrificial efforts have been fully demonstrated. More and more the Shipshewana Brethren Retreat is winning friends and support, and if it keeps on advancing as it has recently done it will not be many years until it will have become a brotherhood interest and institution.

The Second Church of Los Angeles finds that their Vacation Bible School affords them an opportunity of getting the message of the Book into many homes that would otherwise remain closed to them—a splendid result. Brother Leo Polman was the capable superintendent of the D. V. B. S. The revival meeting under the evangelistic leadership of Brother A. L. Lynn, resulted in fifty confessions, not all of which were finally baptized into the church. The Sunday school maintains an average attendance of over 300. Other evidences of the very encouraging growth of this church under that capable pastoral leadership of Brother A. V. Kimmell are reported.

Dr. Charles A. Bame, pastor of the church at Ashland, Ohio, makes brief mention in his "Travel Flashes" of his work at that place and states that he is planning to be engaged in evangelistic work this coming winter. He tells of a trip to Meyersdale, Pennsylvania, where he was called as a special speaker in the jubilee celebration of "united" Brethren in that district. The district was one of the first to begin Sunday school and it was to celebrate the beginnings of that institution that this program was staged. Brother Bame found not the slightest evidence of any sense of division among the members of the two groups there gathered, a fact which augurs well for the future. It might be added that this district not only pioneered the Sunday school movement among the Brethren, but also the making of Sunday school literature, if we are not mistaken, and it was our own veteran editor, Dr. A. D. Gnagey, who did the first work along this line.

PRAYER REQUESTS FOR THIS WEEK—

Pray for the leading of the Spirit at the General Conference now in session at Winona Lake, Indiana.

Pray for God's blessing upon the various boards which meet at Conference time to transact business pertaining to the various general interests of the church, namely Foreign Missions, Home Missions, Ashland College, Superannuated Ministers' care, the Brethren Home, Christian Endeavor and Publication interests.

Pray for the W. M. S and the S. M. M., which organizations are now in session planning their work for the coming year.

Pray that steps may be taken to give the boys of our church something of special interest in succeeding General Conference programs and some organized suggestion to challenging their energies in the home church.

Moderator's Address

By Dr. Edwin E. Jacobs, President of Ashland College, and Retiring Moderator of the 1929 General Conference

Brethren and Sisters, and Friends of this Conference:

As retiring Moderator it falls to my lot to give both a word of greeting to you a word about the general situation prevailing in the church, but before I do either of these things, I want to raise my voice in thanksgiving to Almighty God for certain blessings which have flowed to us within the past year.

I want to thank him:

1. For whatever advance the Church Universal has made both at home and abroad within the year.

2. Especially for that of our own denomination in whatever way it may be reckoned, a In the number of new church buildings and additions to our membership.

b For the number of consecrated young men who have entered our Seminary for training for the Christian ministry.

c For the way in which the church has responded to the call for foreign missions and the other offerings on special days.

d For the very splendid way in which all the churches have received the representative of the college.

e And for the advance which the college has been able to make and for the prospects of an immediately bright future.

3. For the fidelity of our leaders, both old and young, who have seen fit to continue with us, rather than to take places of supposedly larger influence in outside activities.

4. For the advances made in universal peace and that we have avoided, at least in part, the folly of extreme militarism and the insanity of war.

5. For at least, no governmental weakening in the matter of prohibition.

6. For whatever spiritual leadership which America holds—an idealism begun under Woodrow Wilson and continued in a degree under his successors.

7. For material prosperity, without which, America could by no means finance her philanthropic enterprises, her churches, her schools, hospitals, missions and other worthy causes.

For all of these things we ought to be profoundly grateful to Almighty God, both Ruler of human destinies, and Judge of all the world.

Now, I may be pardoned, if, as a layman, I do not present any definite plans or make specific recommendation to this Conference. I fear that my vision is too limited and my wisdom too small, for such a task. However, I shall, on the other hand, attempt a brief survey of the conditions of our times as they effect the work of our church, with the hope even in mind that I may stir up in other minds more fertile than my own, plans and methods of furthering in definite ways the interests of our own denomination.

So, first of all, I want to stress the fact that this is a conference of our own church. Here we ought to be intent, of course, in furthering the work of the Kingdom in general, but we must not be swept off our feet with general enthusiasm, but must keep first and foremost in our minds, that we are furthering and strengthening our own denomination. And in doing that, we shall best further the general interests of the Kingdom of God on earth.

Some of our number have been caught up with the general megalomania of the day. Things must be large in order to be either useful or good. Anything that is small is, by that very fact, inferior; such as a college, an automobile, or even a church. We know this in sociology as the "prestige of numbers." Anything that is large is impressive and is to be sought after.

Now, this is neither logical nor true, for much of the best there is in life, can only come through the devotion, the consecration, the vision of the smaller groups. It is a fact in American history, that many times the majority was wrong, decidedly wrong, while the minority was right.

But what is more, in a denomination no larger than our own, the influence of the individual is multiplied many times and we, as units in the Kingdom of God, may count for more than ever we could if conditions were different.

1. We all recognize this as a day of unprecedented prosperity in business. Money flows like water. Easy come, easy go. And with this, there seems to be a notable lack of thrift and self-denial. Whatever we see advertised on the billboards, in the magazines, or whatever we see anyone else have, that we want too. Our children are restless under a rule of frugality and careful spending.

But I want to remind you, that historically we are a plain people. We affect to discount somewhat, the tinsel and bauble of this life, and with piety to set our minds upon higher things. We have a long history of plain living and high thinking behind us. The superfluities of life with their foam and show, we, at least historically, have given a secondary place.

Yet the spirit of useless spending has gripped us too. I suppose I am the "voice of one crying in the wilderness," when I suggest that we have a worthwhile message even on this point. I am frank to say, that I do not believe that we ought to depart from our historic position in the matter of waste.

My first suggestion is, that we as a people, practice frugality, avoid useless waste, and conserve all, our lives, our time, our talent and our treasure, for the advancement of the better things of life, rather than for purely selfish ends. Thus will our coffers be full, and we shall escape the quicksands of the world, be a worthy example to others, and at the same time have money for the advancement of the Kingdom of God on the earth.

2. As noted above, this is an age of wealth, and is therefore, an age of leisure. So amusements and recreation claim much of our time. Our culture in America is still young, yet there is growing up among us a leisure class, and with that has come the demand for music, art, play, amusements, and recreations.

There are those who go so far as to castigate us very severely for the amount of time and money we put into our amusements. They say we are pleasure mad. They characterize this day as a pleasure-mad age. Jazz, sports, marathon contests of everything but what is useful, compel us to burn the candle at both ends. The theater and the movies come in also for their share of criticism.

Now the facts are; that as we advance in civilization, we are bound to have more time and more money for the lighter things of life. That cannot be avoided. But I think that we have a wholesome message on this point too. Amusements and recreations are all right in their place, but certainly they should not usurp the place that ought to go to things of more worth. Therefore, I commend to our church, that we look well to the example we set relative to play, music, art and books. God knows that the news stands are flooded now with pictures and works of art, so-called, that can not do good but must do harm. If we poison the wells of life at their very source, what may we expect of the future?

3. I think also that we have a message in this age of lawlessness, of impurity, and corruption in politics, and general disregard for age-old and tried sources of authority. I am aware here, that I am treating a very trite subject and yet the need is so pressing and the evils are so outstanding, that I can not forego this opportunity of raising my voice against the general spirit of laxness abroad today. And while I neither believe in, nor argue for, the church's participation in any of these things as an ORGANIZATION, yet on the other hand, I feel that we as follower of Christ, have a mission in using our every power in the direction of law observance. Our rulers, our courts, our administrators of justice, ought to feel behind them the salutary influence of the right thinking men and women of America. I am confident today, that the administration of justice in America, is now hampered by the most baneful forces ever known to government. Leaders of gangsters, even when imprisoned, still direct the forces of lawlessness from their prison cells. Life and property, to quote another, are perhaps less safe in America right now, than anywhere else in the civilized world. And so in passing this subject of the most tremendous importance, I want to call my brethren and sisters to put their influence on the right side. Otherwise, our common country will not be safe nor desirable for the on-coming generations.

4. In education, too, we have an ideal to aspire to.

a We must never lose sight of the fact that Christianity is a form of religion which lends itself very readily to a high state of intellectuality. Its foundations rest upon both reason and truth. And when any leader strives to separate it from that foundation, he is sure, sooner or later, to find his followers falling away and his structure by this, that while I fully recognize the divine nature of the church in its inceptions, yet I want to call to your attention that its founder himself said, that the truth, that his truth, would make men free. Nor has there ever been a time when Christianity, in its purity and essential elements, had to hide its head in shame before the true finding of either science or philosophy. And that leads me to the next point, viz., b That we should strengthen our own educational forces and instrumentalities. Mental enlightenment is sweeping the world. I can not at this hour even begin to recite some of the advances made in learning within my own memory. Science is going forward by leaps and bounds. What seemed impossible yesterday, is commonplace today. In the biological science, for just one example, we have almost entered into the secret places of the Most High, in our investigation of certain life phenomena. And when men are handling the very secrets of life, as men do today, their hands and hearts ought to be restrained, fortified, and sanctified by the best ideals of Jesus Christ! To let the unregenerate, crass, unsanctified forces of life lead us in certain matters relating to those yet unborn, seems to me to be fraught with the most sinister possibilities.

c. It is important, then, that our education should be spiritual and not material. Men should come to our educational institutions with clean hands and a pure heart, or else we are in grave danger of defiling the very springs of life. Colleges, like everything else, are in a state of flux today. There are forces driving us forward, and in some cases, I think backwards, but at any rate driving us. Small Christian colleges no longer set standards. They follow them. Yet, the very existence of the various denominations, is wrapped up in their educational centers. In our own case, whatever else may be said about our general advance, we can not expect to go forward without our college. And here is when I want to make my climax, so far as this one point is concerned. It is that the time will never come when we shall not find it necessary to supply the needs of the college with gifts. When you no longer trade off your old automobile for a newer model, when you no longer buy improvements for your radio, your home, and your farm machinery, when you no longer avail yourselves of the mechanical improvements of the day, then your college too will need no further improvements. But as long as life is moving, dynamic, and so long as improvements are being made in other fields, just that long your college must keep up with the vanguard.

So in order to make our college conform to the best intellectual standards and at the same time keep it true to our historical denominational ideals, we must call from time to time on the church for proper support.

6. Evangelism. Here we come to the crux of it all, evangelism, the gaining of new members. If we have anything worth disseminating, if we have a message that has brought blessings and comforts to our own hearts, then we ought to provide machinery and instrumentalities that others may know about it too. In evangelism, two elements are important. First, the gaining of new members, and second, the genuine conversion of those whom we recruit. We have enough complacent, easy-going, half-hearted members now. What we need are men and women, alert, anxious, aggressive and soundly converted to the teachings of Jesus. It seems a pity that so much of the church's energy right now must be expended in rousing those already within her own folds, to an activity that shall be worthy of the name they bear.

I doubt if this conference could do anything more worthwhile than to devise some means of setting up new churches within our own territory. We lose every year untold members by their moving away and thus losing touch with the denomination. If I had any one recommendation to make to this body, it would be that some means be provided for keeping those whom we already have.

And I could not close this paragraph on evangelism without saying, of course, that I mean it to apply to all our missionary interests, foreign as well as home.

7. Stewardship. I regard this as the outstanding need of the church—stewardship. I am not here pleading for the tithe, although that would be ideal, but rather I am asking for a consecration of all our resources for the Kingdom of God. With this end accomplished, our choirs will be filled with those who can sing, our pulpits with those who have the gift of preaching, our Sunday school classes with those who can teach and our coffers would be overflowing with money. If this happy end were accomplished, it could not be otherwise. "And straightway he rose up, and left all, and followed him." "He that loveth father or mother or brother or sister or houses and lands more than me, is not worthy of me." "He that would come after me, let him take up his cross daily and follow me." I know how the ministers feel about so many offerings. And I would suggest that this conference attempt to devise methods so that offerings should not be so burdensome. Not that the church should get less money; not that, but that we could get as much or more, with less unseemly begging methods. I only suggest this.

But to return to my first statement, I know of nothing now more important than that our members reconsecrate their all to the use of the Master.

8. I hope, therefore, that this may be our best conference. Other denominations are wrestling with the same problems that we are, and which I have just enumerated, viz., evangelism, stewardship, education, recruiting for the ministry, universal peace, social justice, and the purity of their denominational sources, while some have gone much farther and suggested church unions and more cordial interdenominational relationships. Some have gone notably further in their social program, asking for certain legislation in certain directions. I think furthermore, that I sense the spirit of some of these larger denominations rightly, when I say, that they are closing up the gaps of difference within their own ranks.

Let it be known, at least to my mind, that the cause of Christianity now has fight enough ahead of it with outside forces, without inviting any difference within its own ranks. If I can read the signs of the times aright, I should say, that in the face of present day tendencies in the home, in education, in science, in government, in the social world, and in the youth movement, the Church of Jesus Christ, of whatever name or creed, right now, has about all it can do to maintain itself, without inviting schisms and factions within its own membership. I am not particularly alarmed, but I am anxious for the future of Christianity in America, when I look over the forces now arrayed against it.

But he that fights for us is stronger than he that fights against us. The cause is his, the duty is ours. I pray God to give us wisdom and fidelity to the best interests of the Kingdom of God, that we may help usher in that happy day, when his "will shall be done on earth as it is in heaven," which culmination he has bidden us to make the first of all our prayers to him,—"Our Father who are in heaven, Hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done on earth, as it is in heaven."

Grace and Gumption

By "A Western Pastor"

Recently a white-haired Christian lawyer, in speaking of the need of a certain internally fractured church, philosophized, "The requirement in this particular case is a man who will exercise a large amount of Christian grace and—and—gumption."

We heartily agreed.

Since then we have thought much of this trite and truthful statement, along with the recent Evangelist editorials dealing with pastor and church relationships. And some questions arise.

What are these elements—fully analyzed?

Are there really preachers of the Gospel who lack these characteristics?

Sometimes one is tempted to believe there are large numbers of the laity who, though well schooled, have never learned the definition of "Christian," but certainly not so with the modern college-polished minister! As to "grace," the cheapest copy of "Webster" will tell him it is "unmerited favor or good will." Hence, it is Christ-like "favor or good will extended to others, even though they do not deserve it." Spit in the pastor's face, lies told on him, messages unheeded and laughed at though Spirit-breathed, family brought to dire straights through curtailed income, treachery practiced—yet sweet-spirited, godly, upright, though unmerited, counsel, love and beneficence, without a hint of rancor, bestowed by the under-shepherd on his sheep. Is this in any wise a hint of Christian grace?

And "gumption!" When we boys were on the farm together, more than thirty years ago, a term often used amongst us was "horse sense." We meant "the very simplest kind of common sense and judgment." Again, are ministers wanting in this factor? Or, after all, are our church woes almost wholly attributive to the unruly wandering laity?

Verily, we speak with discretion, when, in answer to this last query, we affirm the contrary. The minister-teacher-pastor-undershepherd, the leader of the flock, must go first. He must be head and shoulders in the lead in the practicing of good sense, so far as congregational polity is concerned, and so much the more so when it comes to genuine Christian grace. If the major-general fails what can be expected of the private? (Jas. 3:1 r.v.).

The men of the world—those outside the church—are steadfastly maintaining their position without, because of the "war" within. And sometimes our lips are almost silenced in the face of the truth which we know and which we know that they know. Back of these lamentable conditions, in whose pathway lies strewn so much ecclesiastical wreckage, are so often, we fear, ministers—yea, even Brethren ministers—who are woefully lacking in Christian grace and gumption!

Born Again

By J. H. Crofford

Every person not familiar with the Bible teaching would receive the Master's words, "Ye must be born again" with as much a stonishment as did Nicodemus. Knowing as people do the laws governing the natural birth, without a knowledge of any other, such language would be received as an absurdity, something ridiculously impossible.

With the birth of every child comes the thought of a bringing forth, a physical bringing forth by a mother of that which was conceived, whose nature will be similar to hers, but her spirituality can not be inherited.

From this viewpoint it was impossible for the old man conversant with the teachings of the scriptures and familiar with the laws of nature, to comprehend the thought in the mind of Jesus from the Savior's words that to enter the kingdom of God "ye must be born again."

Nicodemus' convictions were that his inherited nature did not fit him for eternal life, and he realized the impossibilities of a second physical birth through which to attain to a righteous life, fitting him for eternal salvation. In all probability he was familiar with the language of Job 25:4, "How can he be clean that is born of a woman?" The physical birth does not fit us for the kingdom, for "That which is flesh is flesh. (John 3:6).

Jesus says in Matthew 11:11, "Among them that are born of women, there hath not risen a greater than John the Baptist, notwithstanding he that is least in the kingdom of heaven is greater than he."

Many men have risen to prominence in the world and through their knowledge and wisdom the peoples of the nations are benefited, and they are called great in this world, but they must be born again to be great in the kingdom of heaven. The natural birth does not qualify for an admission into his kingdom, and salvation is only promised upon a new birth, that which was a mystery to Nicodemus, and which proves to be a mystery to many of this age.

Our lexicographers tell us that birth is "the art of coming into life." Life exists before birth, therefore, a better definition is, the act of bringing forth life into a sphere of sight, hearing and conscious activity, which involves three stages. The first stage is, the bringing forth of the head, the seat of understanding, sight and hearing. The second stage brings forth the trunk, which contains the organs of life, and the third stage, the limbs, or organs of motion. The complete physically born being then starts out to grow in size, strength and knowledge, and is a creature of the world kingdom. This birth and kingdom existence does not qualify for Christ's kingdom, for "we were shapen in iniquity and conceived in sin" (Psalm 51:5), and his kingdom is not of this world (See John 18:36) for from it we are called to his kingdom.

The sinfulness of this world kingdom into which we have been born, and become partakers of, cannot enter Christ's kingdom, and a mere resolution carried into effect to live reformed lives merely converts into moralists, or a different living and not to new creatures, born again. Without any ray of hope of eternal salvation, divine arrangement laid the plan for our purification through the sacrificial death of Jesus, who said, "Except a man be born of water and of the spirit, he cannot enter the kingdom of God."

To be born again implies an intervening death, brought about after the age of accountability through a knowledge of right and wrong, and the piercing of the heart by the arrow of conviction of sin, through the drawing of God. Jesus, who knew no sin, died for the sins of the world, and "if we are planted together with him in the likeness of his death (Romans 6:5,—knowing no more of sin), we shall also be in the likeness of his resurrection * * * that henceforth we should not serve in sin. For he that is dead is freed from sin." (Romans 6:6, 7). "Being dead to sin, we can live no longer therein" (Romans 6:2). After death, the burial, or baptism (immersion), which only can bury; into his death, (Romans 6:3) which is for the cleansing from sin. "Therefore we are buried by baptism into death" (Romans 6:4).

Having died the death to sin, and having been buried, or conceived through the operation of the Spirit, whose source and destination are so mysterious as the coming and going of the wind, we are brought forth from the water by the power of the Spirit, "born of water and of the Spirit." (John 3:5). The water which conceived, symbolizing the mother, and the Spirit the life giving source, whose nature we inherit, as in the physical birth, in three stages. The first to be brought forth is the head, containing the organs of intelligence, sight, hearing, feeling, etc.,—the first essentials to the Christian life. Next follows the trunk, containing the organs of life, which cause the intellectual organs to function. Lastly, the organs of action are brought forth and we have the fully equipped, thoroughly cleansed, newly born organism to start laboring for the Master.

The proof we have that we are born again is "Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin; for his seed remaineth in him and he cannot sin, because he is born of God," (1 John 3:9). "Every one that loveth is born of God" (1 John 4:7). "Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ is born of God" (John 5:1). "Whatsoever is born of God overcometh the world" (John 5:4). We must be in possession of that unfeigned love, "for this is the love of God that we keep his commandments." When we are filled with the Spirit there is no room for sin; we cannot look upon sin with the least degree of allowance, and the things which were temptations to us, are now disgusting in our sight. All desire for things worldly will have fled. As the poet expresses it, "Gone from my heart the world, with all its charm." Love for sinful things can then have no room in our hearts. ## SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

THE FINAL TRUTH

There is good in all religions; and there is some error in all but one. That one is the religion of Jesus. That religion contains good only. It contains all the good that is contained in all other religions. It would be in vain to find a single principle, a single precept, a single ray of hope in any non-Christian faith that is not included in the religion which Jesus brought to man. On the other hand, it would be impossible to find a single element in the true Christian faith that is erroneous or that is not in keeping with the best interests of mankind. Nothing that Jesus ever said has been found untrue; no principle that he laid down has ever been reversed. As men approach the standard of correct moral judgment they come closer to him, and ultimately the world will look to him alone for moral and spiritual authority.—Religious Telescope.

EUROPEAN PROTESTANTISM GETTING TOGETHER

One of the few compensations of the World War in the field of religion is the marked evidence of the growing cooperation between the different Protestant bodies of Europe. These are all small. They have never worked together, having always gone their own way. The great cataclysm left them distressed and bled white. Roman Catholicism on all sides of them was practically undisturbed, and because of this world-wide connectionalism it was able at once to take advantage of the situation to promote its own interests to the highest limits of success. Now stricken Protestantism is getting together. A meeting is to be held at Basle, August 23 and 24, which will be called "The Second Bethesda Conference." With this gathering the American church is going to be articulated through the sympathetic interest of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America.—Western Christian Advocate.

RUSSIA "SEEING THINGS"

Moscow comes forward with detailed charges of an international conspiracy headed by the United States having in view the permanent ejection of Soviet Russia from Manchuria, increase of the hold of the Chinese Nationalist government upon Manchuria, imperialistic expansion of America in Manchuria, internationalization of the Chinese Eastern railway and subsequent American control through loans to the road. The long-established and well-known American Chinese policy is sufficient answer to all such suspicious charges. By word and act, for a long period, the United States has shown her desire that China should have opportunity for development in its own chosen way.—The Presbyterian Advance.

NINETY WHITE STUDENTS TO FIFTEEN NEGROES PER TEN THOUSAND ATTEND COLLEGE

While the gain in ten years in the annual income of the seventy-nine Negro colleges and universities, studied by the Bureau of Education, has been 275 per cent and the increase in physical plants 146 percent, the most important gain from one point of view is the 185 percent increase in the same period in productive endowments—indicating a growing faith in higher education for the boys and girls of the colored race in America.

There is still an enormous disparity between the provision made for white and Negro college youth. It is estimated by the government that for every ten thousand whites, ninety white students are attending college. The corresponding figure for Negroes is fifteen.

These figures take into account the increase of enrollment of Negro students from less than seven thousand in 1922 to approximately seventeen thousand in 1929.

In contrast with the figures in all other parts of the country, the survey of the number per ten thousand of white and colored in high schools in the District of Columbia shows that while the figure for white citizens is 245, that for colored is 302. In comparison one notes that Florida's two corresponding figures are 383 and 81, while even progressive North Carolina shows only 98 colored to 382 white in the same comparison.—The Congregationalist.

PRESBYTERIAN CONSERVATIVES FOUND SEMINARY

For five years there has been a hot contention between the Fundamentalist and Modernist groups of the Presbyterian Church for the control of Princeton Theological Seminary. The battle has been waged on the floor of every General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church for half a decade. The last Assembly meeting in May of this year took the control of the seminary out of the hands of the old board of directors and placed it in the hands of the Modernist group.

Recently the conservative element, headed by a number of the professors of the Princeton Seminary, has established a new seminary to be known as Westminster Theological Seminary, and to be located for the time being at Philadelphia. Drs. Robert Dick Wilson, Oswald T. Allis, Cornelius Van Tail, and J. Gresham Machen will constitute the nucleus of the faculty of the new institution. Prominent Philadelphia Presbyterians are supporting the new enterprise. The new seminary will not be under the control of the General Assembly as is Princeton Seminary. The success of the venture will be watched with interest by the religious forces of the country.—The Evangelical-Messenger.

WE THOUGHT THERE WAS NO SUCH THING AS PAIN

From an exchange we clip the following:

The Baptist recently carried an item claiming that Mrs. Eddy resorted to the use of medicine in later years. A Christian Science official criticised The Baptist for giving publicity to a report that would stir up enmity. The editor replied by asking this official whether the statement was true or false. He replied, "After her discovery of Christian Science Mrs. Eddy did not believe in the use of any drug in the practice of Christian Science, and after that date did not use a drug, except in several instances she employed an anaesthetic as a measure of temporary relief from violent pain." The exception is rather enlightening.—The Evangelical-Messenger.

"THE NEW PATRIOTS"

The phrase is said to have been coined by the President for men who have been persuaded to make personal sacrifices to serve the government in times of peace. He is said to have enlisted the services of a number of such men by insisting that the patriotism of peace ought to be as potent as the patriotism of war. His view is that if the government is worth fighting for it is worth serving. That is sound sense, and the encouraging thing about it is that he is reported as having brought a number of desirable men to his point of view that money is a minor consideration as compared with the opportunity to perform a public duty, especially to a man who already has more of this world's goods than he knows what to do with. Of course this is not agreeable to politicians who want places for needy henchmen, but it commends itself to the good judgment of the country.—The Presbyterian Advance.

Our Worship Program

Daily Readings and Comments

MONDAY

Personal Cleansing—Matt. 7:1-5. How easy it always is to see the shortcomings and failures in the lives of others, yet how often we do not even suspect the presence of the most glaring faults in ourselves! Help us, O Father, to know our own faults, and cleanse us from them; not only for our own sakes, but also that we may be of greater service for thee in the world. And as we hope for mercy from thee in that day, may we be merciful toward those with whom we have to do.

TUESDAY

How Much More!—Matt. 7:6-12. We are none of us perfect, and our imperfections are all too apparent; yet none of us would for a moment hesitate to give to a child of ours any good thing which it is in our power to bestow. How much more shall our Father in heaven, perfect in love and wisdom, give good things to them that ask him. James says we have not because we ask not; Father, may we never fail to ask thee for those things we have need of; and above all, fill us with thy Holy Spirit!

WEDNESDAY

He that Doeth—Matt. 7:13, 14, 21-23. A striking picture, filled with sadness and warning. Many would enter in at the gate that leads to life, but they insist on taking things with them that have no place in the kingdom; others would seem to have given their lives in service, and yet are refused entrance. We may not know wherein they failed, but we have this definite assurance: he that doeth the will of God may enter! If we wish to know his will, he will show us the way and enable us to walk therein. Help us, then, and help us to point others to Jesus—the Way, the Truth, and the Life.

THURSDAY

By the Fruit—Matt. 7:15-20. Men do, sometimes, gather fruit of thorns! Yet, if they are allowed to abide for a time, it is found that the grapes have no vital connection with the thorn, they soon wither, and MORE grapes are not forthcoming. Then the true nature of the thorn is apparent, and by its fruit we know it. Of course, God, who seeth all things, may know more quickly the true nature of the fruit. We can bear no good fruit except we be united with the true Vine; and God save thy people from the punishment of fruitlessness!

FRIDAY

Upon a Rock—Matt. 7:24-29. There is no building so secure as that which is built on a rock, and there is no life so secure as that which is built upon Christ Jesus. Having faith in him, we can do no less than believe and do his bidding. May our lives stand firm through all the storms of doubt now raging in the world, because we have heard thy word, and do it!

SATURDAY

Faith and Healing—Matt. 8:1-17. There are few more striking expressions of faith than that of the centurion; even Jesus marveled. We cannot help but believe that today, by the same power, Jesus still heals the broken bodies of men; but what is more important, he can take the souls that are leprous with sin and cleanse them, and can raise up those that are spiritually sick unto death, and fill them with radiant life. May we not be cast out into outer darkness because of unbelief.

SUNDAY

A Hard Thing—Matt. 8:18-22. It is not an easy thing to follow Jesus. "This is a hard saying," complained some of his early hearers; "Thou, therefore, endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ," Paul urged the young Timothy. If we would follow him today, we must not undertake it lightly, but count the cost; then, keeping our eyes upon our leader and looking to him for strength, let us follow on. "Lead on, O King eternal!"

How to Teach the Word

By James H. McConkey

Illustrate

You state your truth. But suppose it is not clear to your hearer. His mind does not grasp it. Then you must take the next great step in Christ's teaching method. That is—illustrate. What is an illustration? What is its place in the Master's perfect teaching method? What does it do for the hearer? The derivation of the Word will greatly help us here. It comes from the words—"in," and the Latin word "lustrō," meaning "to shine." An illustration takes an unfamiliar truth and makes the light "shine in" upon it by comparing it with a familiar truth. The use of an apt illustration is like touching an electric switch in a dark room. It floods the whole situation with light. Illustration is the application by the teacher of one of the greatest laws of the human mind, that of association of ideas. By this great law we lay hold of an appropriate truth which is unfamiliar and unpossessed by linking it up with that which we already know and possess. This is one of the great laws by which a child's mind, as well as an adult's, acquires knowledge. Let us cite an example.

I had a college classmate who was the father of a sweet, bright little girl. Visiting once in his home this incident occurred: Grandma was out in the kitchen shelling peas. Helen's mother did not know her whereabouts, so she inquired: "Helen, where is Grandma?" "She is out in the kitchen, mamma." "And what is she doing?" "She is unbuttoning the peas." Helen was not familiar with the word for shelling or podding peas. But she had often noticed that when pea pods were opened the peas lay therein exactly like the buttons along the edge of her shoes after she had unbuttoned them. So Helen took that which was familiar to her and with it described exactly a term which was unfamiliar. Then when mamma explained to her that "unbuttoning peas" meant "shelling" or "podding" peas, the child immediately understood the new term. This was, in germ, a fine illustration. For it used the very principle needed for an illustration by using that which she did know to describe that which she did not know.

Clear statement and simple illustrations are like oil to our mental machinery. They lubricate the thought-grooves so that ideas enter the mind with the least possible friction to the hearer. Christ was a frictionless teacher. His teaching messages are marvelous for their easy reading. Statement and illustration are the two rails of a mainline track which carry the teacher's train of thought directly and speedily to its appointed designation. Without these he is liable to be sidetracked upon one of the many sidings of collateral thought which, however enticing and numerous, are, when yielded to, none the less destructive to clearness, directness and forcefulness.

Let us add a few suggestions here about illustrations.

First—Illustrations vary in value. Naturally for the teacher of the Word the most valuable illustrations are those from the Word itself. For when your message is made up not only of statements from the Word, but also is illuminated by illustrations from the same Word, it immensely multiplies its value and preciousness to the hearer of that Word. Therefore, in teaching the Word of God, seek first to strengthen your message by illustration from that same inspired Word.

Second—Illustrations should be simple. How marvelously true is this of those used by the Master Teacher himself. The sky, the sea, the shore, the pearls, the treasure in the field, the lost coin, the wandering son, the fishes of the sea, the fowls of the air, the lilies of the field, all these are so amazingly simple that the mind of any intelligent child can grasp them with ease. Other things being equal, the simpler an illustration is, the more valuable it is, for it enters the mind with the least measure of friction and, therefore, becomes that much more valuable an instrument for the clear conveyance of thought to the listener. Clearness of statement and simplicity of illustration are two of the conspicuous traits of all of Jesus Christ's teaching.

Third—Illustrations should be familiar. That is, they should not only be simple in themselves, but they should be familiar to the class of people to whom they are being given. It would not be good teaching to use a group of railroad illustrations when speaking to an audience of seafaring men. Neither would it be wise when addressing railroad men to use illustrations with which only sailors were familiar. The choice, therefore, of an illustration which is adapted to the mind and the experience of the hearer is of great importance to the teacher.

I once knew a man who was a great teacher of the Word and an earnest, persistent worker for souls. He was off on a vacation by the seashore one summer and made the acquaintance of some fishermen. One of these men was not a Christian, and my friend took occasion to cultivate his acquaintance especially and to press upon him the claims of the Gospel as opportunity offered. One day he was walking along the shore and came across his fisherman friend busy with his nets. "John," said he, "what fish are hardest to catch?" "Mulletts," promptly replied the fisherman. "Why?" said our friend. "Because they back out of the net," was the reply. "Well, John, don't be a mullet," was the quick thrust from the lips of this keen observer of men and things. And the trust went straight home to its mark and was used of the Spirit to bring the man to decision for Christ. For he had a long time been halting and vacillating and the mullet illustration was exactly the truth he needed to bring him conviction of his mistake. Drawn as it was right from his own fisherman life, it fitted the case perfectly and did its work.

Apply

What is the use of mixing up a remedy unless you take it? What is the use of sharpening a sword unless you use it? What is the use to state, and illustrate, unless you also apply it to the consciences of the readers? Here we reach the last point in Christ's method of teaching. In this great sermon of his on anxious care note how searchingly he applies it to his listeners. See how constantly he plays upon those two personal pronouns "You" and "Ye." Here also we should imitate him, and not fail at the close of every message to press home tenderly, searchingly, yet lovingly, to the heart and conscience of every listener the great truths which we have been permitted to teach—remembering always that the spirit of God is faithfully witnessing in the hearts of our hearers to the words of God which we have been permitted to speak.

The other day I heard a gifted preacher. He was preaching a sermon to children. It was only five minutes long. But it was a masterpiece. And it was such because this particular preacher had mastered the Master's art of preaching. His statement was that we had to put something in to get something out of life. His illustration was perfect. He cited the old country well. Sometimes a child goes to the well with a pail for water. He pumps and pumps and no water comes. The leather valve of the pump socket has grown dry and the water leaked out. So the child's mother comes out and pours in a can of water. Then a few strokes of the handle and the water spouts out. Then he admonished the children whenever they saw an old well to ever remember that they must put something into life if they would get anything out. That five-minute message will linger a lifetime in the memories and hearts of not only the children, but the grown-ups who heard it. Why? Because it perfectly followed the Master's art of teaching—preaching. It stated with simplicity; it illustrated with graphic familiarity; it applied with direct earnestness to the lives in the speaker's presence.

Matchless Teacher! True as steel; simple as a child; brave as a lion; clear as a crystal mountain brook; searching as the mid-day blaze; probing to its innermost depth the hearts and souls of men. What an example for us! Shall we not follow in his train? To forego all ambition to be "original," to realize with gladness that the words which we speak we speak not of ourselves, but speak from him; to get his messages; to drink deep of his spirit of humility; to know that as the Father hath sent him even so also has he sent us; and then to state with limpid clearness; to illustrate with child-like simplicity; and to apply with heart-searching, Spirit-saturated earnestness his own blessed teachings—what greater joy and honor could we covet for our teaching?—Taken from "Christ Life" and "The Word of the Cross," August, 1929, Vol. V. Published by Howard A. Banks.

Eleven cents per mile is the average charge for passenger air travel over the regular transport lines in the United States. a survey of the Boeing Air Transport reveals. It is possible for a passenger to travel 12,914 miles over air transport lines operating regular passenger service without retracing the route, and the cost of such a trip would be $1,427.

(Lesson for September 8)

NEHEMIAH REBUILDING THE WALL OF JERUSALEM

Scripture Lesson—Neh. 2:1 to 7:4.

Printed Text—Neh. 4:6, 15-21.

Devotional Reading—Psalm 85:1-7.

Golden Text—The people had a mind to work. Neh. 4:6.

Introductory Note

Today we study one of the most important of the deeds of Nehemiah, of whom we have as yet heard nothing in the lessons for this year. We know nothing certainly about the family of Nehemiah. He must have been of at least noble birth, or he would not have had the position of cup-bearer to Artaxerxes, king of Persia, as that position held with it the power and influence of counselor, statesman, courtier, and favorite.

Neh. 1 relates how Nehemiah learned of the condition of Jerusalem. This was 13 years after the return under Ezra, and still much needed to be done. He prayed to God that he might be able to do something to help his people. Neh. 2 tells us how his prayer was answered. We hardly realize the danger of Nehemiah in his sad appearance before the powerful king, but verse 2 of this chapter says "I was very sore afraid." And yet he knew he was a favorite of the king. He asked to be given leave of absence from the court, and to be sent as the king's representative to Jerusalem to rebuild its walls for protection—this city which had so often rebelled against its masters.

But the king granted his request, and he was given the rank and power of a royal governor over the land and authority to requisition from all officers of the king in all places whatever was needed for the work.

The whole story is very interesting, and should be read carefully. The special part printed is that in regard to the building of the walls which illustrates our subject of Teamwork, or of Co-operation in Religious Work.

After Nehemiah's arrival from Persia he, like Ezra, spent three days in resting from the wearisome journey, in presenting his credentials, and in making the long and ceremonious Oriental salutations. He had not boasted of his purpose or told any one of his plans, but prudently wished first to see "the lay of the land." That he might get his information at first hand and secretly, he arose in the night and with only a few trusted attendants, and with only the animal on which he himself rode (probably not a horse but a surer-footed mule or ass), he passed around the ruined wall, noting how much work would need to be done in order to restore the wall and its various gates. Nehemiah's next step was to call a meeting of the Jewish leaders, including the priests, the secular authorities, the heads of families, and representative workmen. He gave them an account of God's providential leading which had brought him to Jerusalem, not at all forgetting the favor of the king.—Illustrated Quarterly.

The Plan of Work

"The wall was parceled out among forty-four working parties," some of whom were women, the daughters of the ruler of the half part of Jerusalem (v. 12), some nobles, other priests, Levites, merchants, the son of a goldsmith, and of a perfumer. "It was like the rebuilding of the walls of Athens after the invasion of Xerxes; like the building of the walls of Edinburgh after the battle of Flodden. Every class of society, every district in the country, took part in it." This may seem a small thing to hasty readers, but it was a master stroke of genius. Not only was it a grand division of labor, but animated the work with a noble emulation.—Ibid.

People Had a Mind to Work

The people—the common people of whom God made so many of them because he liked them—the common people did the work. They had a great leader, but they did the work. We hear of Caesar and of Hannibal and of Lee and of Grant, but what would generals be without the great mass of common people who fought their battles? We will not find their names in tomorrow morning's paper. We will see the name (as I write this) of a great Chinese General and a great Russian leader's in the morning paper, but I am now thinking of those millions back in Russia and China who will have to bear the brunt of things if China and Russia go to war. It is the common people after all who must do things if they are to be done. The pyramids of Egypt are called the tombs of the kings, but they are really more than that. They are the tombs and the memorials of thousands, yes, millions of men who slaved in Egypt that one man might have great power and wealth and comfort and honor and have his name preserved. No man knows how many of the lives of common people were sacrificed in making those pyramid tombs possible. Weary, working, dragging, deadening, destructive years in the lives of myriads of men that one might be glorified. Let us give a thought to the common folks that God made.—Herman Eldredge, in Herald of Gospel Liberty.

Need Nehemiahs and Ezras

Ezra and Nehemiah were two types of useful men in the Kingdom of God, and the world will always need both types. Ezra was the priest and spiritual leader and Nehemiah was the layman and man of affairs. Ezra built great spiritual ideals and Nehemiah built material things. The world needs Ezras and Moody's and Russell Cromwells and Phillips Brooks; but the world needs, too, and always will need, Nehemiahs and John Wanamakers and Herbert Hoovers and Henry Fords and Lindberghs—men who can build as well as men who can dream. In fact, the Nehemiah type must be dreamers and see right visions or they will not work out. Nehemiah saw the walls of Jerusalem full rounded and complete before he ever laid a stone or cleaned away a yard of rubbish. Sanford White saw the Woolworth Building before men began to dig the earth for a foundation. John Wanamaker saw his great merchant's palace which covers a whole city square in Philadelphia when the square was occupied by the Pennsylvania freight house. Ancient and modern Nehemiahs were they all, and we need them, Ezra did a great work, but without a practical Nehemiah, it would all have been destroyed. Nehemiah came and built and preserved Ezra's work.—Ibid.

Selected Plans for Junior Committees

A COMMITTEE CONTEST

For Executive Committees

Let the executive committee meet with the superintendent and arrange a committee contest. First of all, see that every Junior is on some committee. The contest is between committees, and the credits given are counted, not to individuals, but to the committees to which the individuals belong. Thus:

Points
All the members of the committee present .....	20
Half the members present .....	10
Members reading a clipping, each .....	1
Members adding a comment to a clipping .....	2
Members giving original testimony .....	5
Committee bringing written report to the business meeting .....	5

Other points may be added, if desired. Let the contest run two or three months, and let the winning committee be guests of honor at a social.

HALLOWE'EN SOCIAL

For Social Committees

It is not too early to prepare for a Halloween social, which should be held at the end of October. Get the boys to prepare a big Jack-o'-lantern, and let it set in a prominent place. Have apple-races conducted like a potato-race, the runners carrying each an apple on the blade of a knife. If possible, have a dozen or more apples in a large tubful of water. Stir the water so that the apples rush around, and then let the Juniors take turns, dropping a fork from a certain height into the moving mass. The Juniors win the apples the fork sticks in. The committee should get the superintendent to write out a number of questions about Christian Endeavor. These should be copied by the members of the social committee, numbered, and hung upon the wall. Slips of paper should be given to the Juniors, and each one present should write down the answers to as many questions as he can. A small prize may be given for the best set of answers.

LOOKING FOR DARK SPOTS

For Sunshine Committee

Arrange with the superintendent to give five or ten minutes of a meeting to sunshine committee work. First of all, the members of the sunshine committee should meet before the meeting and agree each to tell one piece of sunshine work done during the past month or two. After the committee members have told of their work the Juniors may be asked to mention sunshine work that the committee may do. The chairman will make a note of suggestions, and will try later to put them into practice. To ensure success the superintendent and possibly also the pastor should be asked to make one or two suggestions.

MOUNTAIN CLIMBERS

For Lookout Committee

Here is an idea for lookout committees which may prove helpful in a contest. The contest will be called "mountain climbers." Divide the society into two parts in the way usually done in a contest, and appoint a captain and lieutenant on each side. Arrange a schedule of points, so many points for attendance, so many points for bringing a visitor, so many for taking part in the meeting, so many for offering prayer, and so on. Now take two large sheets of paper, and on each draw the outline of a mountain. The mountains must be the same height. Then each Sunday mark the progress of the two sides in climbing the mountain. A certain number of points won by either side will take the side that makes them so many yards up the mountain. The side will win which is able first to plant a United States flag—a small flag an inch or two in size—on the top of the mountain.

COMMITTEE LEADERS

For Prayer-Meeting Committees

The committee may plan with the superintendent to lead the meeting one evening, all the members of the committee taking part. A special program will be arranged beforehand, and each member of the committee will know exactly what he is expected to do.

One will offer prayer, asking the members of the society to follow with sentence prayers; another will call on some one to read the Scripture and then give a short talk; yet another will give an object-talk, while another will give a blackboard talk, and so on. Plan to have many Juniors take part, assigning them something to do a week before the meeting.

A MISSIONARY SOCIAL

For Missionary Committees

The missionary committee may plan a social meeting for one evening. In September the missionary topic is India. Let the missionary committee, with the superintendent's aid, dress in Hindu costumes and receive the members and guests, in Indian fashion. Have a table of Indian curios, and let the missionary committee explain them. Have singing and sentence prayers then serve Indian salad—artificial leaves, each one having written on it one fact about missions in India. The Juniors will read aloud the facts on their leaves. Arrange beforehand with two Juniors to give an object-talk and a blackboard talk, let them give these talks in the character of missionaries telling about India. Arrange also to have several Juniors ask questions about the work in India, and have other Juniors ready with replies to the questions.—Junior C. E. World.

gers of the mission; all of them were missionaries first.

They are, too. I wish I could express what they taught me, of patience and perseverance and gracious self-sacrifice.

By the time I returned to America, I was so proud (and at the same time so humble) to share that title missionary, that I didn't care who knew it. (The mission itself might have cared, for I was a most unattractive looking specimen at the time; "a famine refugee" was the usual descriptive phrase. I was no credit to any profession.)

On the boat, coming across the Pacific, a stunning English woman came up to me one day. One eyebrow was tilted with curiosity.

"You're not a mission'ry, are you?" The insinuations of that remark! It connoted old poke bonnets, and little old ladies, with hair skinned back from their foreheads.

I answered quietly (having learned much from the doctor.) "Yes, I am a missionary."

An amazed silence greeted that. She puffed away for several moments, planning a fresh attack.

"Well, I must say, you're certainly not my idea of a mission'ry."

My answer grew crisp. "That's no compliment to me."

"What!" she cried. "You mean to say you're not ashamed of being called a mission'ry?"

I could not be as gracious as the Doctor. The sarcasm born with me will never be quite killed. "Well," I countered, and my voice was rather sweet, "Are you ashamed of being the wife of a foreign business man in the Orient?"

"My dear child," she exclaimed in the most startled tone, "that's entirely different."

"Entirely," I answered, more gently than before. "That's why I'm not ashamed of being a missionary."

She didn't understand. People like that never will unless, perhaps, they meet people like the Doctor and the Dean, who are missionaries first. My own friends, (some of them) never will! That girl who walked the campus with me still pats my head with tolerant sighs, as though to say, "Poor darling Prilla. What a child she is! We must be patient. Some day she will get over all this mission business."

On the other hand, one of the most stunning girls from that same crowd is making great strides in Americanization work. She happens to be one of the leading social women of her city. She radiates life. I had not seen her for some time, until last year, and, I must confess, the magnificence of her startled me. It was a relief, too, to be with someone who didn't ask me to explain why I was "still interested in missions."

"Tell me, honestly," she said one night, "how do you do it?"

"Do it?" "You know quite well what I mean; how do you dare have faith enough?"

"How do you?" I returned. She smiled. "You might not believe me." "Or you me," I said.

"Well, then," she decided, "perhaps it's the same reason."

We looked at each other. I know she was seeing the faces of her Italian workmen and the wistful madonnas who came to her to help them solve the strain of living in a foreign land. I knew I saw the face of a Wen Shan student, and I heard the children out-

"Not My Idea of a Missionary"

By Priscilla Holton

When I was in college nothing was farther from my thoughts than the possibility that I might some day be a missionary. In fact, I remember quite distinctly discussing the matter with a member of "my crowd" as we were walking around the campus one night in my sophomore year. As usual, we were painting vivid pictures of the future.

"Well," I announced emphatically, "there is one thing I hope I never become, and that I never may have anything to do with—and that's a missionary!"

The girl with me stared in amazement. "For mercy's sake!" she cried, "what ever put that into your head? Why in the world should you?"

"I don't know why I worry about it," I admitted, "but there is something inside me that won't keep still. It keeps saying that some day I'll end up by being one."

She laughed. "It certainly would be choice!" Then she added slowly, "No, I don't know that it would be so strange after all. I can just picture you as a missionary; you're that fond of poking your nose into other people's affairs."

Which is still, I have discovered, the connotation in people's minds with the word missionary.

I became one after all. Yet even when I started for China, bubbling over with youthful enthusiasm, keen for the opportunity of teaching in a foreign land and of giving willing service, I was still, in my own heart, a teacher, rather than a missionary. The doctor who was taking me out to China shared none of my aversion to the word. She seemed to delight in using it before the public, I used to think. No matter where we registered; no matter what what vise we signed, quite simply she wrote against the word "profession"—missionary physician. I was careful to write teacher. She never noticed the looks of superiority cast in her direction. But one day after an officious official had "high-hatted" her, I blurted out, "Why don't you sign your name as a doctor? Why do you always drag in that word missionary?"

She gazed at me with that look of tolerant indulgence, which I later recognized as meaning 'How young you are, my child!' and her answer was simply, "Because I am a missionary first, and a doctor second."

I shook my head with a sigh. It was incomprehensible to me that she actually preferred that word.

Before long I understood. On the boat out, I learned my a. b. c. China taught me still more.

Deans of universities, brilliant scholarly men, were missionaries first and deans second. They preferred to be!

Surgeons of hospitals, who performed intricate eye operations were missionaries first.

Teachers and nurses and business manaside that compound wall in Foochow. Neither of us answered, aloud. But my heart said, and those faces were still before me:

"It is because we have seen Jesus the Christ, I am not ashamed to be called a missionary."—The Missionary Herald.

VACATION ECHOES

Oak Hill, West Virginia

Since the last report to the Evangelist, one has been added to the church by baptism. The general interest of the church keeps up and the future has not yet lost its promise.

For a vacation this year it was decided to use the time just a little differently. The eighteen days were used in visiting relatives and friends with less time devoted to traveling and sightseeing.

The first place visited was the college town of Bridgewater, Virginia, of which Mrs. Ankrum is an alumna, where the president and former president of the school were met. Other members of the faculty were visited. The Bible which belonged to Alexander Mack and now owned by the college is a highly esteemed book. This is carefully protected and is prized very much. The names of the former owners of the book and how it was finally presented to the college are on record. Bridgewater has a large building program and is making splendid growth. I found here a fine feeling toward church union and healing of the divisions of the preceding generation. Friends and relatives were visited throughout the Shenandoah Valley, not neglecting to stop with "Locke of Woodstock," and "Brother Ed" of Maurertown. A week was spent in the vicinity of Washington in which a number of trips were made to the Capital City. The Brethren church was visited, and we hope to eventually visit there when the splendid basement has grown into a church. They have a splendid location and are badly in need of a completed plant. Sunday morning we visited with the Church of the Brethren at Oakton and at a very urgent invitation preached to them. This people also is not hostile to a closer union between the two Brethren bodies.

From Virginia the Eastern Shore was the next place scheduled. Here we visited with Rev. E. C. Woodie, pastor of the Church of the Brethren at Denton, Maryland. He had formerly preached in Fayette County, West Virginia, and was part time pastor of the Gatewood Brethren church. I had the opportunity of meeting many of his splendid progressive people and preaching to them on Sunday night. Here I found a desire and a hope among not only the young but among the aged that some plan be worked out that the forces of Dunkardism might march side by side and under one banner.

Perhaps I am unable to understand some things, but I believe that some in both churches need to seek divine forgiveness because we are struggling along in so many places divided when our strength and forces could be handled with less loss than at the present time. I have never had a better reception in any Brethren church than I have had in those several churches in which I preached and visited this summer. From Denton, Maryland, the beautiful roads of the Eastern Shore stretched out ahead of us through the Garden of America down to Cape Charles. After crossing the bay we were met in the town of Phoebus, which is a small town half way between Fortress Monroe and Hampton, by an old Sunday school teacher in the person of Mr. J. D. Findley, of Hampton, Virginia. He will be remembered by many men of the church as being a trustee of Ashland College for years, and also an alumnus of the college of some forty years ago. Mr. Findley moved from Glenford, Ohio, ten years ago to the farm. The unfortunate part was that the Glenford church lost him and there was not any Brethren church near where he moved and while he is still an ardent member of the church his valuable services have been lost to it for ten years. He is the type of man that the church needs. Perhaps if he moves again he will locate where there is a Brethren church.

The return from Hampton was made through Richmond and a stop of a day was made at Staunton. From there the trip was completed to Oak Harbor and another vacation had become history. Nearly fifteen hundred miles had been driven and no trouble of any kind was experienced.

By the time this is in print we will have our usual delegation at Winona, and will be looking forward to the next largest event in our church life here which will be the meeting commencing in October with Brother Ashman at the helm. The indications are that the meeting will not be a failure, but we will not predict now, but will tell you more after the battle is over.

FREEMAN ANKRUM, Pastor.

TRAVEL FLASHES

Ashland

Rather scarce has been the news from the home base. The pastor, however, is not the correspondent for the Ashland church and does not pretend at this time to report for his correspondent there, save that we have had a good year and made some fine gains in gathering about all the expected harvest and with some promised to come into the church ere we leave, the first of October. We are planning to do evangelism this winter unless the Lord leads otherwise. We are in his hands and want to be where he wants to use us for the enlarging of his plans in the earth.

Meyersdale, Pennsylvania

It is to report this meeting that I have begun this message "to the churches." Western Pennsylvania was one of the earliest of the districts to begin Sunday schools. When the time came to celebrate the beginnings of the Sunday school, they discovered, (in the records) that there was but one Brethren Church. It was before the division. So, this district, under the leadership of the Fraternal Relations Committees of each, planned to have a "jubilee" without any semblance of division. I was invited by the committee from our side of the house, to speak for the Brethren Church. It was a long, hard drive, but we were so fraternally received and our message so wholeheartedly accepted that we were made sure it was quite worth while and the results abiding. One feature of the day was a picture of folks who had been in Sunday school fifty years and they were amazed to discover that the number reached one hundred and seventy-five. Another, was of those present who were at the first convention fifty years ago, and I believe the majority of those were of the Brethren people (Progressives). My main point was that there had been a good deal of pioneering done by those sturdy fighters for the truth fifty years ago, and there is still much to be done; a fine field for the present-day pioneer is to recognize our unity and make it work and save the remnants of churches and missions whose lack of it will mean a total loss for both divisions. We need to emphasize our unity. We do it all the time anyway, in our convention work and in the general work of Christendom; why keep Brethren apart from each other when we fellowship others of the Christian faith far less in harmony in faith and practice than we are? Why sing, with the people of every denomination and not make it as real as possible with those who are "bone of our bone and flesh of our flesh"? Why not move forward to reunite families and churches broken for fifty years and answer to the extent of Christian possibility, the prayer of our Lord, "that they may be one * * that they may be one in us; that the world may believe that thou hast sent me." (John 17:2.) It was a great, fine inspirational meeting which we hope will be often duplicated in other districts and the "ununited" Brethren shall again be in the fine fraternal spirit that pervaded this meeting.

"Onward Christian soldiers

Marching as to war"

Rushing home, We rested a day and made ready for the trip here where for the two weeks preceding conference, we hope to hold forth the Word to a friendly few of God's people.

CHARLES A. BAME.

MY IMPRESSIONS OF LAKE SHIPSEWANA, INDIANA

I have recently returned from attending the Bible Conference at Shipsewana. It has been several years since I had been there and I was surprised at the great progress and improvements made in the past three years.

This project is worthy of recognition, encouragement and support of the Brethren Church.

Several years ago a small group of our men among whom Brethren George Rench and A. T. Wirick led the way and to whom in a large measure the credit belongs, promoted and established this Brethren retreat. They, with others, saw the possibilities of development and the need of a social and religious center, where our people could combine a summer outing and at the same time receive a spiritual uplift.

A tract of forty acres of land adjoining the lake was purchased for which a small group became financially responsible. These men unselfishly gave to this cause their time and opportunity of benefiting personally from this investment, as they could have sold later for a big profit.

To give our people some idea of this unselfish effort made by our brethren mentioned and others who have shared in this enterprise, I want to say, we have here today property, at a conservative estimate, that is worth $40,000, with only $2,000 against it. This has been acquired without the church assuming any financial responsibility and for which the church is the one beneficiary. What more could be asked?

I think the location is well chosen. It is only a few miles from the Michigan line and is far enough north to make it an ideal summer retreat. It is only a few miles from Goshen, Elkhart, Warsaw, Nappanee and South Bend. It is accessible by paved highways from every direction. It can be reached easily by bus, auto or railroad. Mail is delivered daily, telephone lines, electric power and supplies are on the ground.

One of the biggest assets is the wonderful artesian springs, that furnish cold, pure water, with beneficial mineral elements.

You would be surprised to see the beautiful cottages that line the lake front, lovely lawns, pretty shrubbery and flowers. Some of these cottages have cost up to $6,000. There are nearly fifty of these cottages at the present time; some of them are occupied through the entire year. Besides this, there is a large tabernacle for public services, a large dormitory for the girls and women, a new hotel just completed with splendid service and arranged for comfort.

This retreat offers to our people an ideal place for a summer home, or a retreat of a few days or weeks for those taking a vacation. All the water sports can be enjoyed here. A fine bathing beach has been developed at a considerable cost with a sand bottom, also now boats, gas launches and fishing. Many people enjoy the sport of fishing and this offers you an opportunity to "show your stuff." The lake contains pickerel, bass, blue gills, sun, perch and large blue catfish. Scores of other lakes are accessible from here by a few minutes of reasonable drive. "Nuff said" about fishing or you will detect my weakness.

You cannot get lonely here, for there is always something doing. If you want a change to city for a few hours, it is only a short drive. On the opposite side of the lake, about two miles there is another development containing about forty cottages owned by private parties.

This place is no longer an experiment, it has become permanent and established. The Bible Conference, Young People's Bible School and church programs have been getting larger each year. It is now a question of how large it will become and how many of our people will avail themselves of an ideal summer home and vacation spot, with congenial surroundings, fine fellowship, Christian uplift, surrounded with recreational sports and lake privileges.

This in a special way should appeal to our people in Indiana, Ohio and Illinois

New hotel completed this summer on account of distance. If any reader of this article should desire more information, write Rev. A. T. Wirick, Shipshewana, Indiana. There are a few choice lots left. If you want one, better not put it off too long as they are being taken fast. No one profits financially, as all money is used for ground improvements.

W. S. BELL.

CANTON, OHIO

Since the last report from the church at Canton, some events have been transpiring which may be of interest to the brotherhood.

Perhaps the thing of most interest is the number added to the fellowship by baptism. Since our last report nine have been baptized, all members of two families. In each case it was father and mother and the children—one young man and four young ladies.

At the July quarterly business meeting the congregation accepted a revised code and constitution. The old one was largely rewritten bringing it in harmony with the Word, and also giving the local congregation a much larger say in the ruling power of the church.

Perhaps the greatest feature of our present activities is the Tuesday evening Bible Study Class. This class has been meeting every Tuesday evening all summer with Dr. Beal, our pastor, as the efficient instructor. He has been giving the folks real definite teachings on the great fundamental principles of the Bible. Dr. Beal has a real message and somehow he has the power to make that message an intense reality to all who hear him.

The remarkable thing about these study evenings is the hearty cooperation and response by the many who attend. The attendance has averaged between 49 and 50, the lowest being in the thirties and reaching up to almost 60. At present this effort promises to become one of the most outstanding activities of the church. And with all this the Thursday evening prayer service has not suffered in its interest.

All the auxiliary activities of the church are in full swing. These, as well as the Sunday services have not experienced any noticeable slump.

The Sunday evening services have held up well. Dr. Beal gave a number of evening sermons on the Book of Daniel. These were followed by a series of lectures on the subject, "The Remarkable Jew."

The congregation has asked our pastor to hold our special evangelistic meetings, which are to be held some time this fall or early winter.

of honor, surrounded by the Ministers of France, Italy and Spain at Copenhagen. To quench their thirst the guests were supplied, among other beverages, with six brands of champagne. But, remarks a journalist, none of them exceeded the limits of a wise moderation.

A day after the anti-prohibitionist Congress, there assembled at Copenhagen a great gathering convoked by the Committee of the Federation of Danish Temperance Societies to celebrate the 50 years existence of the abstinence movement in Denmark. Addresses were delivered successively by Prof. Westergaard of Copenhagen, on certain aspects of the question of alcoholism and alcohol investigations, by Councillor Ljunggren of Stockholm on temperance teaching in Sweden, Advocate Heilesen of Copenhagen on the Danish bill against alcoholism, Dr. Strecker of Berlin on alcohol as an enemy of civilization, Dr. Herold of Lausanne, on alcoholism from the international point of view.

SECOND BRETHREN CHURCH OF LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

Our Slogan: "The Bible, the whole, Bible and nothing but the Bible" is reaching far and wide.

Through our Vacation Bible School we reach many homes in our community we could enter in no other way, and are able to send the light of the gospel to many parents through their children.

Brother Leo Polman superintended our Vacation Bible School again this year, proving himself of inestimable value in his work with the children.

The teachers were from among our own church folk and proved themselves not only loyal but capable workers.

In May Brother A. L. Lyn, pastor of the church at La Verne, California, held a three weeks' revival meeting for us; his splendid sermons resulted in strengthening our members in the faith as well as adding souls to the Lord's work.

The attendance was large and uniform, resulting in 50 confessions, many of whom have been baptized, some however being younger members of our Sunday school, their parents advised against membership until they were older.

Our spring Lovefeast was the largest in attendance we have had, and a spirit of love and good fellowship prevailed.

All departments of the church are sustaining a good attendance through the summer months, our Sunday school holding above the 300 mark.

Looking forward each week with much interest to the prayer meeting and Bible study class, all will miss our pastor, Brother A. V. Kimmel, while he is away attending our National Conference.

Visits from Brother and Sister Mark Early of Lost Creek, Kentucky and from Brother and Sister Sheldon of Africa, who told us of their work, were interesting and instructive

8:00—Address, "The Baptism of the Holy Spirit." Prof. Alva J. McClain.

Continuing the series of addresses on the Holy Spirit, Prof. McClain clearly set forth the teaching of God's Word on this work of the Holy Spirit.

When the Holy Spirit came to dwell in the believer, he came not in answer to the disciples' prayer, but in answer to Christ's prayer, John 14:16.

John 7:37-39, the Holy Spirit is typified by water. Some say "What about Acts 2:38, stating that faith is not enough, but that repentance and baptism are necessary before the Holy Spirit is received?" Both are true. One cannot believe without repentance, which means a change of mind. Baptism is evidence of faith. These words were spoken not to gentiles but to Jews and the application of Acts 2:38 to gentiles is wrong. Every Jew had a certain relation to God. They believed in a Messiah. The only problem with them was that when the Messiah came they did not recognize him. The Apostle did not say to believe on the Messiah, but to change their minds concerning the Messiah.

The question is asked "Why was it that the early disciples did not receive the Spirit when they began to follow Jesus, if faith alone brought the Holy Spirit. Why the interval in the lives of the disciples? John 7:37-39 answers this question. The Spirit was not yet given, the reason being that Jesus was not yet glorified. The coming of the Holy Spirit must be upon the basis of a final redemption.

The baptism with, in or by the Spirit are synonymous terms. The three English prepositions are used to describe the one Greek preposition. In the Gospels and the Acts we have the record of the history of the men who lived. In the Epistles a record of what our experience ought to be. First, what do we mean by the baptism with the Spirit? "Baptizo" means immersion, therefore to be baptized with the Spirit means to be plunged into God himself.

Second, Who are they who have been baptized in the Spirit? In Matthew 3:11 we have the beginning of the gospel period. In Acts 1:5, the ending of the gospel period.

In Acts 2:1-4, first, baptism of the Spirit "filled the house," "sat upon," second, found; third, filled.

The three great experiences that come to the men who would gather in this upper room—in verse 1 we learn that it was given to all present. In verse 3 the Holy Spirit sat upon each one of them. If this were to be the experience of believers today, is it not strange that in meetings termed "tarrying meetings" it is only an occasional one who receives the Spirit?

1 Cor. 12:13 is the heart of the teaching of the baptism of the Holy Spirit. This Epistle is not only written to the Corinthians as we see from the second verse of the first chapter, and therefore all are baptized into one body by the Holy Spirit when they accept Christ as their Savior.

When does this experience come? When we become Christians. A question arises over the passage found in Acts 11:15-17. Some asked, "Were there no believers before Christ?" Evidently not in the full New Testament teaching. They followed Jesus but only when they received Jesus as Lord did they receive the Holy Spirit. Just as water baptism is the door to the visible church, so is baptism by the Holy Spirit the door to the invisible church. This must take place when you enter the body.

Still some say what about the incident in the 8th chapter of Acts. The Samaritans, the scripture teaches us, had very little dealings with the Jews. They had a rival worship and it was necessary that they recognize the priority of Jerusalem and that salvation is of the Jews. In Acts 19:1, men were not Christians at all. They were disciples of John.

What is accomplished by baptism of the Holy Spirit? The believer is plunged into God himself. Translates us into Christ himself, Gal. 3:27. We are once baptized into one body by one Spirit.

Sunday, July 21—Morning Session

9:30—Sunday school in charge of A. H. Kent, Superintendent, First church of Long Beach.

11:00—Opening service, H. V. Wall, Vice-Moderator, officiating.

11:15—Special musical number supplied by the First church of Long Beach.

11:30—Sermon, "The Infilling of the Holy Spirit." Prof. Alva J. McClain.

Brother McClain's sermon Sunday morning especially to believers on the subject of the Infilling of the Holy Spirit was most edifying. In his introduction to this subject, the speaker stated that it is possible to be a member of the body of Christ and not to be filled with the Spirit. To discover your life a barren waste; to find Christian service a drudge and not a joy. In face of temptation not winning victory over sin. The spirit of prayer not a constant thing. Void of testimony in the hour called for. Not that you do not have Jesus Christ in the heart; not that you have not received, baptized of the Holy Spirit, but that you have not the fullness of the Spirit. From the beginning of the church, leaders have taught that there is a life above the average life. Many names have been given to this deeper life, and it is immaterial as to what the name may be, so long as we live a life constantly filled by the Holy Spirit.

What do we mean by the infilling of the Holy Spirit? The English words fill and filling tell what God intended us to understand. When the Pharisees were filled with madness, they abandoned themselves to the spirit of madness. For the moment every thought and action was motivated by the spirit of anger. It is the same with the Holy Spirit.

What is God's purpose in this filling? The purpose of the baptism is to bring us unto God. The purpose of the indwelling of the Spirit is to bring God unto us. Read carefully the following passages: Luke 1:13-17; Luke 4:1-2; Acts 2:4; 4:8, 31; 6:3; 7:55. There is always something to do in the service of Christ and for this reason the Holy Spirit fills us with power to engage in that service. An engine is never fired and a car is never started without a purpose.

Is it the will of God for every Christian to be filled, or is this privilege reserved for a certain few? Absolutely, it is the will of God that every Christian should have this experience. In the Old Testament times, the Holy Spirit came upon individuals for special work. On the Day of Pentecost, all present were filled. The church began with every member filled. Eph. 5:18 is first a command. God never commands his people to do something they cannot do. This is entirely different to the baptism of the Spirit. Second, God intends this experience to constantly continue. There ought not to be a single moment in our lives that we are not filled with the Holy Spirit. Third, can have all other blessings mentioned in the book of Ephesians and not be filled. Fourth, since I am commanded not to be filled with wine, which involves conscious sin, it is also a sin not to be filled with the Holy Spirit.

What can we do to be filled with the Holy Spirit? Yield solely to Jesus Christ, Rom. 6:12, 13. The Greek tenses of this word "yield" are wonderful. 1. Present tense. 2. Aorist tense, signifying single act once for all. It reads, "do not be continually yielding yourself to sin but yield yourself this once for all unto God." This can take place at the time of conversion. Sometimes it is separated. There is no other way to receive the fullness of the Holy Spirit than by yielding. It is not a question of our beseeching God. He is beseeching us. Rom. 12:1.

Can this fullness be lost? We can never lose the indwelling presence of the Holy Spirit, but we can lose the fullness of the Spirit, Acts 4:21. In Acts 4:21 we see an illustration of how a man lost a bit of courage. That moment of lost courage through fear of man resulted in the loss of the fullness of the Spirit. They immediately hunted up their own company and had a prayer meeting. In verse 29 their prayer was to look upon the threatenings but do not mention the Holy Spirit. This passage is not a second Pentecost. There is only one Pentecost but there are many fillings of the Holy Spirit.

It is Brother McClain's belief that every Christian starts out with the fullness of the Spirit. Possibly the next day they go back to work and meet with former associates and the Spirit gives them an impulse to speak a word for Christ. The moment they refuse to witness that moment the fullness of the Spirit is lost. Or the Christian may read a command in God's Word and refuse to obey that command. That moment the fullness is gone.

Afternoon Session

3:00—Opening Song and Devotions led by Paul Bauman.

3:15—Special number in song supplied by the First church of Long Beach.

3:30—Address by Harry Rimmer, "The Testimony of Modern Science to Inerrancy of Genesis 1."

Addressing the conference for the second time on the subject with which Mr. Rimmer is well versed, he brought to our conference very interesting facts concerning the testimony of science to the inerrancy of the first chapter of Genesis. In verse 5 of Genesis 1, we read that God said, "Let there be light." At that time the earth was in a condition of chaos. Some other renderings of this verse which possibly hold closer to the original meaning, are as follows: "light be" "a light was" "existing light," the literal interpretation being "come on light and light came on." Light mentioned in the 14th verse refers to a light holder. "Let there be luminaries in the firmament." When Jesus speaks of himself, he speaks as the Light. In speaking of believers, as light-holders. Light existed before the account in Genesis 1. The criticism of the impossibility to have light before the sun is answered by the fact that there are many varieties of light aside from the sun. For instance, cosmic light which comes from the earth. Light is a creature. Its very nature can be changed. Light is physical. Light is spiritual in that it has a ghostly and eternal nature. God almighty created it. God said light was good because it was pure. No such thing exists as dirty light. We may adulterate water and salt, but light can never be adulterated. Light makes creation visible and also makes creation possible, for nothing can live without light. Light is good because it is essential for protection. It is also essential for instruction. It is good because of its therapeutic value. Darkness is divided light. Light is divided darkness.

What is visible light? Light consists of colors with red at one end of the spectrum and violet at the other end. Many colors between. It is a wave of material matter fitting through space at an unthinkable speed. Physically all colors are the same. They are only light on different wave lengths. After creation light was still under God's control. Ex. 10:1-23. The spiritual value of God's Word is infinitely more valuable than the scientific value. Ps. 21:1, 36:9; 43:3; 89:15; Isa. 10:17.

When Jesus came he interpreted that light. Isa. 42:6; 49:6; 60:3, 19, 20. John 1:14. Light is used of the Christian. Matt. 5:14, 16; Rom. 13:12; 2 Cor. 6:14. God divides the light into darkness—Christians from the world. In Phil. 2:15 Christians are described as light holders. An interesting passage on this word is found in 2 Cor. 4:4-6, where the Greek were "photismos" for light is used twice in this passage. It is the only place where it is thus used in the Scripture. From this word we get our word photograph. Christ is to be photographed on our faces.

Evening Session

7:30—Song Service in charge of Danald Davis.

7:45—Devotions led by Ralph Ryan.

7:55—Special number in song supplied by the First church of Long Beach.

8:00—Sermon, "The Gifts of the Holy Spirit." Prof. Alva J. McClain.

The closing address of the conference was delivered by Brother McClain, who spoke on the subject of the gifts of the Holy Spirit. The text for the message was Eph. 4:7, 8. Reviewing briefly the contents of 1 Cor. chapters 12, 13 and 14, Prof. McClain showed from the first three verses of the 12th chapter that herein are found the great tests of spiritual gifts. We are told how to distinguish the Spirit of God and the spirit of this age. In verse 3 someone says that talking tongues in text is the test, but according to this passage it is not God's test. In verses 4-11 we have the list of spiritual gifts. This list is also given in verse 28; Rom. 12:6-8; Eph. 4:11. A relative importance of order of these gifts. Teaching first where mentioned at all. The gift of tongues is last in the list. It is foolish for man to make one gift the standard of all other Christians. 1 Cor. 12:17. The spiritual gifts are distributed among God's children. There is not a member of the body of Christ who does not have a gift. The Spirit distributes not according to our own will but according to God's will. We do not choose our gifts. The fact that they are called gifts implies that the Giver selects the gifts. A child will generally take the most spectacular gift. People are doing the same thing today—the gift of talking in tongues. A proof for this is seen in 1 Cor. 14:20. In 1 Cor. 12:12-14 we have an analogy of the human body and the body of Christ. First, members should be contented with gifts given them. Verse 15. Second, members dissatisfied are actually contending with God himself, verse 18. Third, all are dependent upon the other, verse 21. Fourth, the least attractive gifts often are the most important, verse 22. Is there a perpetuation of spiritual gifts, or in other words do they continue down through the ages? One group says yes, another say we belong to the infancy of the church. 1 Cor. 13:8. We have an intimation that some never cease. The gift of prophecy has ceased from the very day that John laid down his pen on the Isle of Patmos. Others may cease, but it does not say when. How are we to tell when certain gifts cease? If we find the gift is still in the church, this gift still continues. We are to exercise our spiritual gifts.

1. Neglect not the gift within. 1 Tim. 4:14. 2. Exercise in accordance to the Word of God. 1 Cor. 14. 3. Exercise to the glory of God through Jesus Christ, our Lord. 1 Peter 4:10, 11.

The Southern California District of Brethren churches during the past year has become an incorporated body in the State of California and hereafter will be known as the Brethren Conference of Southern California.

All praise to him who made possible this wonderful Bible conference.

(Signed) ALAN S. PEARCE,
Secretary.

OUR LITTLE READERS

HOW THE BREAD CAME TO THE CHILDREN

The little old man sat in his doorway. He was smiling, for he loved to watch the people passing by, and everybody was kind to him.

The plowman passed by with his shining plow and his strong steady horses. "Where are you going, plowman?" asked the little old man.

"To plow the ground, and turn over the sod, and make ready for the sowing of the grain, so that, by and by, the children may have bread," answered the plowman.

Then came the man with the harrow. It had many wheels, sharp like knives.

"Where are you going, oh, man with the harrow?" asked the little old man.

"To break up the sod that the plowman has turned, and fit it for the sowing of the grain, so that, by and by, the children may have bread," said the man with the harrow.

A man came by with a sack on his back. "Where are you going, oh, man with the sack?" asked the little old man.

"To sow the seed in the moist ground, so that, by and by, the children may have bread," answered the man with the sack.

Then the long summer passed, and the dew fell on the earth at evening and moistened the grain; the rain fell and watered it; the sun shone and warmed it; the earth fed it; and by and by, there stood a beautiful field of wheat that swayed with every soft breeze, and shone like gold in the sun. And still the little old man sat smiling in his doorway, for he had watched the growing of the grain with great joy.

Then there came a great, wonderful machine, with long sharp knives like swords, and with great wooden arms, and it was called a reaper.

"Where are you going, oh, man with the reaper?" asked the little old man.

"To cut the ripe grain and bind it into sheaves, so that, by and by, the children may have bread."

Then he drove his beautiful horses into the great field. And the long shining knives cut the grain, so that it fell in long yellow rows. Then the great wooden arms caught it and tossed it, and bound it in some wonderful way into sheaves of grain, and flung the bright sheaves back to the earth.

And the farmer's big wagon came and gathered all the sheaves and carried them to the barns.

Then came a band of threshers with an engine and a machine.

"Where are you going with your engine and your machine?" asked the little old man.

"To thresh out the wheat and separate it from the straw, so that, by and by, the children may have bread," answered the threshers, as they hurried on.

Then came a man with many bags of grain piled high on his wagon.

"And where are you going, with all those bags of grain?" asked the little old man.

"To take the threshed wheat to mill and add it ground into flour, so that, by and by, the children may have bread," answered the man.

Then came a grocer's boy from the mill, with barrels of flour.

"Where are you going, oh, grocer's boy?" asked the little old man.

"To take the flour to the homes, so that the children may all have bread," answered the grocer's boy.

Then the cook mixed the flour and made it into beautiful loaves, and baked it in the oven. And the dear mother cut it into thin slices, and the children came to the table to eat the bread.

But before they ate it, they folded their hands, and bowed their heads, and said this grace:

"We thank thee, Father, for the bread

That shall supply our need,

And may we live to prove our thanks

By loving word and deed."

ANNOUNCEMENTS

WELT ALEXANDRIA AND CLAYTON, O.

This circuit will be vacant October first. Any pastor interested in taking up the work at West Alexandria and Clayton is invited to write either to D. M. Detrick, Chairman, Brookville, Ohio, or to Wilson King, Secretary, West Alexandria, Ohio.

IN THE SHADOW

WILSON—Mrs. Alma (Krisinger) Wilson was born near Berlin, Somerset County, Pennsylvania, March 31, 1889, a daughter of George Wesley and Mary (Ling) Krisinger and one of a family of eight children. She passed away at Tulsa, Oklahoma, August 13, a victim of acute appendicitis. The body was brought to Johnstown, Pennsylvania, her former home, where brief services were held at the home of her brother, Mr. J. B. Krisinger, on Saturday morning, August seventeenth. The body was taken to Berlin for burial in the family plot in the Odd Fellows' cemetery.

Mrs. Wilson is survived by her mother, two brothers and four sisters, the brother and one brother having preceded her to the grave. She united with the First Brethren church of this city under the ministry of Elder W. S. Bell, but for some eight years has been compelled to reside away from the city for ill health. The services here were conducted by the undersigned by request, the writer having ministered in like capacity to the family at the demise of a brother, some three years ago. May God sustain the sorrowing loved ones.

DYOLL, BELOTE.

WOODS—Jennina Wideman was born January 30, 1848 near Lodi, Ohio and departed from this life Friday, August 8, 1929, aged 81 years, 7 months, and 19 days. She was one of six children born to Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Wideman, all of them preceding her in death. She was united in marriage to John Woods February 27, 1870. Their home was blessed with six children, five of whom remain to mourn her passing. She has been a member of the Brethren Church at Homerville for nearly fifty years. The greater part of her married life was spent on a farm at Litchfield, Ohio, whereupon they moved to Spencer where she has lived for the past 23 years.

She leaves to mourn their loss six children, six grandchildren, two great-grandchildren together with many relatives and a host of friends.

Services were held at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Charles Parent, of Spencer, conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. C. V. Hyman and Rev. Isaac Bennett.

Questions Answers

Conducted by
J. Allen Miller

Readers are invited to send in suitable questions, which will receive consideration as space permits.

45. What do you think of long pastorates? M.

I have frequently expressed my convictions on this matter. I believe in making the pastorate just as long as it can possibly be made. Of course no man should stay longer than the best interests of the church justify. However the people of all congregations should cultivate the earnest desire to retain the services of a worthy and capable pastor for just as long a period as possible. I have just read a bit bearing upon this point in the daily press. One of the largest and most successful Methodist Episcopal Conferences is now in session at Columbus, Ohio. Bishop and Superintendents are agreed upon the desirability and even the necessity of making the pastoral relations as long as possible for every man in the Conferences. My own observation has been uniformly favorable to long and happy pastorates and some of the strongest churches with which I am acquainted have sustained consistent growth and development under the leadership of the lifetime services of their pastors.

46. When is a Church dead?

Now that is some question! I have in mind to say that no church is dead so long as there is a single family in the group that is on fire for God. I ought perhaps make it stronger and say that no Church is dead if there remains a single member of the Body of Christ alive among the number supposed to constitute the church. Do you mean that, you ask? Yes, I mean just that. For one man filled with the Holy Spirit could revive the whole church that is asleep or dying, or he could become the center around which an entirely new congregation of believers could be gathered and constituted into a church. Really, as I am thinking of this question, its bigness and importance dawns upon me. Is there a discouraged member of some struggling church reading these lines? Pray God to give you grace and fill you with the Holy Spirit that the work may be revived. It can be done. You are perhaps the very one upon whom God is depending for this very thing in the community where you live. Bestir yourself, my dear brothers and sisters of these many weak and struggling churches, and do something. It is not size that counts for everything; it is not numbers; it is not wealth, nor even great preaching. It is a man filled with the Spirit of Christ and determined to do his will that will find the blessing of God.

Horrors of Fascist Punishment

(Editor's Note—In the absence of Prof. McClain's timely comments, due to his long auto trip from Long Beach, California to Winona Lake, Indiana, to attend National Conference and his return again to California, we are publishing in this space the following story of the horrible punishment inflicted on the political deportees of Italy.

Their deprivations and sufferings remind one of the tortures of the early centuries. This story, written for the Evening Star, Washington, D. C., and the North American Newspaper Alliance by Francesco Fausto Nitti, who himself was deported for political reasons and escaped from the island on which he was imprisoned, will be of interest, especially because of the attention that has been given to Mussolini both in pulpit and in press. The story reads in part as follows:

"I had been arrested in Rome, December 2, 1926, immediately after the 'exceptional laws for the security of the state' issued by the Fascist regime had come into force. These laws provide, with other things, for the deportation to penal settlements in remote islands for periods up to five years of all considered opponents of Fascism.

"I remained 16 days in jail without a hearing, or even being questioned. I was not tried, so could offer no defense. A special commission, consisting of the provincial secretary of the Fascist party, of a colonel of the Fascist 'Black Shirts,' of a colonel of carabinieri and of a procurator of the King, sentenced me, without so much as seeing me, to five years on the Island of Lampedusa.

"I received a sheet of paper on which was typewritten a statement that I was considered dangerous to the Fascist state and that, according to public report, I had expressed the intention of violently upsetting the conditions of that state.

"I need not add that the several thousands of political deportees from every part of Italy have had the same reason given for their sentence, and have been proceeded against in exactly the same way, without being allowed a word in defense.

"I left for Lampedusa with 60 other deportees. We traveled 10 days with our wrists fettered with heavy iron manacles. We were then chained together in groups of three, four or five. We traveled in very slow trains and on board these trains we were confined in cellular compartments, in which we stayed handcuffed and alone. These compartments are so constructed that the prisoner is obliged to sit all the time. He can neither lie down, eat, drink nor wash himself. As the carriages are all metal, the prisoners are stifled by the heat in the summer and frozen in the winter.

"At Naples we embarked for Palermo, Sicily, which we reached after a night at sea. We were crowded in the hold of the steamer and remained handcuffed throughout the night. The sea was high and wretched prisoners were often thrown against each other, and once or twice water broke into the hold and drenched us.

"The Palermo Prisons in which we were confined are about the worst in Italy. We stayed two days at Palermo. The prison was full of people arrested for being connected with the 'Mafia,' a criminal association the Fascist government has declared it has destroyed.

"I was thrust with four other deportees into a cell where there were about 60 of these Mafia people charged with cattle thieving, armed robbery or murder. We, the political deportees, had to sleep on the ground on two sacks of straw among the five of us. The only food we received was maize, boiled in water and salt, repulsive in its uncleanness.

"From Palermo we went to Girgenti, which meant another night in a prison train. The prison at Girgenti is on a high hill from which the sea can be seen. We were marched up to the prison on foot along a rough and stony road, and we were forced, manacled as we were, to carry our luggage. Our sufferings may be imagined. We remained in that prison seven days, sleeping on the hard ground. We were grossly overcrowded, and in my cell, where hardly six people could find accommodation, there had been crammed 16."

Mr. Nitti then describes the remaining lap of the journey to the islands on which similar sufferings were endured. After they arrived at the island they were forced to sleep in stuffy barracks which were locked at 5 P. M. every day. They were not allowed to go in groups of more than five, were forbidden to bathe and "two miserable cafes" of the village were out of bounds.

"Water," he continues, "was very scarce. All we had was rainwater collected in cisterns and kept during the many months of dry weather. The water was almost undrinkable and crawling with parasites. We were guarded by 800 Fascist militiamen under several officers. One, a lieutenant, was for four months the tormenter of the deportees. He and his men would beat and otherwise ill treat a lot of political prisoners. Never a day passed without some act of violence committed for no apparent reason. This man used to threaten us with death and expressed the wish that another attempt would be made in Italy on the Duce so he might have an excuse for massacring the lot of us.

"The methods were so brutal that the Italian government, in view of protests in some foreign papers, was obliged to order an inquiry, and shortly afterward Lampedusa was cleared of political prisoners, who were distributed among the islands of Pantellaria, Ustica, Libari and Ponza.

"There are now altogether about 2,000 political prisoners. Most are detained in the islands I have just mentioned, while the remainder are confined in various places in the interior of Italy.

"At Ustica, the worst of these islands, the Italian government has confined Gen. Roberto Benicvenga, attached to the supreme command during the war and then president of the Association of Italian Journalists. His

Comments on Our Recent General Conference

It is a good conference that sends people away satisfied, and the late conference at Winona Lake seems to have done that. People were satisfied with the direction of the conference; Brother E. L. Miller, secretary of the Executive Committee proved himself a good engineer. They were satisfied with the dignity and dispatch with which the business was transacted and the efficient and impressive manner in which the various programmed sessions were handled; Moderator A. J. McClain and his assistant, Vice Moderator C. L. Anspach, showed themselves capable presiding officers. The people seemed satisfied with the program and the various speakers who appeared from time to time throughout the week, as attested by the numbers and regularity with which they attended the sessions of each day. The speeches were uniformly of high order and the speakers came with messages well prepared and delivered them with effectiveness. They were satisfied with the spirit and inspirational character of the conference. Courtesy and consideration were manifest on every hand, while the spiritual impact of the messages was in general strong and challenging. They were even satisfied with the weather, at least we heard no complaints, and surely the Lord could not have given us any more ideal weather if we had ordered it special.

Of course, when we say there was a general sense of satisfaction regarding the conference it is not to imply that it was perfect in every particular. If it had been we would be in a sorry plight, for then there would be nothing more to strive for. If every note that might well have a place in such a conference had been uttered, we would have left us no ideal conferences to dream about and seek to bring into realization, and there would be no overlooked duties or phases of truth with which to challenge the delegates of future gatherings. But whatever any one may have thought to be lacking,—and a week is too short a time to consider everything of merit, yet there was no lack of time and emphasis given to the general interests of the church. And that is as it should be, for to take care of these interests is one of the principal reasons for our coming together. They were made the object of prayer at the morning prayer services and were given intelligent consideration in business and convention program. No layman or minister could have attended this conference faithfully and have gone home without a fair knowledge of the work being done by the various departments of our church's denominational life.

Of course, the thing that stands out big in the program of every conference, and rightly so, is the missionary task of the church—both home and foreign. The addresses and reports of furloughed missionaries and Foreign Board leaders who live very close to the problems and tasks which confront the church in its world responsibility are always of vital interest to every conference attendant. The accomplishments in foreign missions the past year were very encouraging and the gifts of the brotherhood to that work were larger than on any previous year. A new missionary in the person of Miss Edna Patterson was consecrated and set apart by conference to be sent into the African-field. Home missions also received considerable attention and the growth of mission churches was reported as encouraging. Two things of special importance were launched as indicative of progress and aggressiveness in this field,—one was the decision to put a home mission secretary into the field to visit the churches and in other ways build up interest in church extension, and Brother R. Paul Miller was selected for the place, and second, the appointment of a committee consisting of Moderator A. J. McClain, R. Paul Miller and Dr. W. S. Bell to cooperate with the committee on the Spiritual State of the Churches to make a full and complete survey during the coming year of our fields, our resources and our opportunities for extension of the church.

The educational task of the church figured large in the conference program. This work is being accomplished by two agencies, namely, Ashland College and Seminary and the National Sunday School Association. Responsibility for the Christian education of our youth was laid by President Jacobs and other educational representatives directly at the door of the church and the importance of guarding the integrity of the church college and of giving it adequate support was emphasized. The Sunday School Association under the leadership of President W. I. Duker plans to do a bigger thing this year in the way of promoting the religious educational work of the local church, in addition to what it has been doing for Kentucky mission work and for religious educational work in Ashland College.

The Publication interests of the church were given due consideration on the conference program, special addresses being given by Dr. E. E. Jacobs, Dr. Martin Shively and Prof. C. L. Anspach. One of the things of absolute necessity to the growth of a worthwhile denomination is a denominational literature. We are getting along with the least possible production in the way of a church literature and yet it is entailing an annual loss because of the limitation of our selling field. If we are to become more efficient along this line it will necessitate a more wide-spread and more generous support of Brethren-made publications. Every dollar spent on non-denominational publications to the lessening of our own publications lessens our own financial resources by that much and consequently weakens our power to make an adequate and efficient literature. The making of a church literature is not to be looked upon as a financial proposition, which can be made to pay for itself, but an investment in denominational ideals and as surely deserving of support and as truly dependent upon such support as missions or education.

The Benevolence work of the church—support of the superannuated ministers and of the Brethren Home—was given consideration at conference,—more consideration at conference, it is to be feared, than was given in a goodly number of the churches. It seems that about half of the churches failed to send in an offering for the Superannuated Ministers' Fund, with the result that the Board was compelled to go before conference and ask for privilege to appeal for another offering between the close of conference and December first. The Brethren Home reported the receipt of some good gifts on the annuity plan which lays upon the churches the stronger necessity for better immediate support. Such support of the aged and helpless of our number, and especially our aged ministers, is a responsibility the church cannot evade. Self-respecting Christian folk should not attempt it. (More next week).

Talking Young People Out of Marriage

One reason for so many ill-fated marriages is the suddenness and lack of serious thoughtfulness with which the marriage state is entered. All too many look upon getting married as just an ordinary, insignificant event of a day, and consequently the marriage altar is approached not soberly, advisedly and in the fear of God, but lightly, inadvisedly and with scarcely a thought as to the meaning of it all. And there is a prevailing notion among some that nothing can be done about it. Love is a matter of the heart, they say, and reason and sober deliberation are by that very fact ruled out. It is true that love is a matter of the heart, but true love is not without thoughtfulness and consideration for the object of its affection. It is not true, however, as some think, that when the heart speaks all other voices are silent. The heart gives passion and impulse to life's relations, but it is not necessary that it shall be blind and deaf to all considerations of reason. In fact, the most genuine and heart-felt love is based upon thoughtfulness and understanding. And as a rule, it is the young man and maiden who have not taken love seriously and subjected it to the scrutiny of common sense, who come to grief. With lightness and frivolity they meet, are attracted by something superficial about each other's person or possessions, experience a thrill superinduced by some of the strange antics of the day and imagine they are in love, when, in fact, it is something very different that possesses them. In such a state of mind it is easy for one to persuade the other to enter into the marriage relation, when possibly they are ill-suited to each other.

It is at such a time that young people need to have thrown about them some steady, thought-provoking influence. But what is to be done and how? How to get them to be more deliberate and sincerely considerate is the problem that faces every Gospel minister who takes his responsibility seriously. Some help could be given by pulpit instruction concerning the Bible standard of marriage relations and the mutual obligations and requirements of husbands and wives from a Christian point of view. Some are encouraging the conduct of instruction classes by tactful, prepared, consecrated leaders, who will be able to bring young people into an intelligent and reverent attitude toward marriage and home-making. But a certain Episcopalian rector of Chicago has undertaken to solve the problem by what he calls a matrimonial clinic. He illustrates what he means by telling us of his handling of a recent case. A prominent young couple came to him with all arrangements made for marriage, the date was set and the caterer and florist engaged. The rector called them into his office for consultation, and after carefully discussing the matter from every

EDITORIAL REVIEW

The Ohio conference will convene at Ashland, October 22 to 25.

The Mid-West District conference is announced to be held at Mulvane, Kansas, October 8 to 10.

The Illiokota District conference is to be held at Lanark, Illinois, October 1 to 3, and the program is to be found in this issue.

The Pennsylvania conference will be entertained by the Meyersdale congregation on October 7 to 10. The place of meeting has been changed from the Third church of Johnstown.

We are glad to be able to carry to the Evangelist family in this issue something of the spirit and character of our recent National Conference. In next week's issue we shall have other "impressions" to publish, as well as the minutes of the secretary, Brother J. L. Gingrich.

Our correspondent from the Hammer church near Franklin, West Virginia, writes, speaking kindly of those ministers who have preached to them the Word of God, and especially of Brother S. P. Fogle, who served this church for twelve years and was recently recalled for a few services, at which time two were added to the church by baptism.

We publish in this issue the annual report from the Secretary, Dr. Henry V. Wall, of the Evangelistic and Bible Study League, also the report of the Treasurer, Brother N. H. Nielsen. Dr. J. C. Beal was the League's representative in the evangelistic field during the past year and proved himself especially popular as a Bible expositor. Brother Wall urges generous support of the League to the end that they may keep an evangelist in the field for full time this year.

The second Sunday in October is set aside by General Conference to be observed as Laymen's Day. An offering is to be taken for a very worthy purpose, that of building up a fund with which to assist worthy young men in preparation for the ministry, and a service is to be devoted to the encouragement of the laymen in the activities of the local church. Suggestions for carrying out this two-fold purpose of the day will be offered later by those responsible for its promotion.

Dr. Charles A. Bame used his vacation in August granted by the Ashland church to assist the Brethren at New Troy, Michigan in a revival. The campaign resulted in fifteen souls confessing Christ and fourteen being baptized into membership in the church.

Brother Bame has been engaged by the Evangelistic and Bible Study League for the coming year and so will spend his entire time in the evangelistic field, for which he is especially well equipped and in which the Lord has greatly used him in times past. His itinerary has not yet been completed and churches interested should write him at once for a date.

The fact that 40,000,000 persons are reduced to the verge of starvation by famine conditions in China, and further that a typhoid fever epidemic is ravaging various famine-stricken districts and that not a few American relief workers have succumbed to the scourge ought to arouse American sympathy and dollars to a wide extent and for immediate relief. A very responsible authority says, "Certainly there is nowhere in the world today where death is so imminent to so many people, nor where the afflicted are less to be held responsible for the conditions they face than in China." The National Headquarters of China Famine Relief, U. S. A., is at 205 East 42nd Street, New York City. Those who feel moved to help can be assured that this is a worthy cause.

It is winter time in the Argentine and that generally slows up public services, and especially revival work, according to the report of Dr. C. F. Yoder, though it is a good time for teaching in the homes. Notwithstanding this situation, conversions are reported and the various missions are being well attended. At La-boulaye two converts are reported and at Rio Cuarto seven. An epidemic of grippe has attacked Rio Cuarto. Brother Yoder is working on a history of our mission work in Argentina. That reminds us that Dr. Florence Gribble is performing a similar service for the brotherhood on behalf of the African mission. These histories, once completed, will make possible mission study classes in our churches dealing directly with our own mission fields, and with the information supplied by those who by experience and training are able to speak as experts.

This week we have two reports from Philadelphia's First church, one from the church correspondent and one from the pastor. The occasion is the closing of a six years' pastorate by Brother R. Paul Miller. It is a most commendable piece of work that Brother Miller was enabled to accomplish with the cooperation of that splendid church and under the blessing of God. A ten thousand dollar mortgage on the church was paid off, a seven thousand dollar repair expenditure was made and paid, foreign mission offerings greatly increased, five missionaries furnished for the African field, and the church greatly built up in numbers and spirituality. The distance which these people travel to worship and in such large numbers is remarkable for a city church. They have set before themselves a great objective, that of building a new church nearer the location of their members and also maintaining their old church to serve the needs of the newcomers in that district. Brother Miller has felt and yielded to the call to the evangelistic field in which he has previously been greatly used of God.

Brother Homer A. Kent, pastor of the church at Washington, D. C., expresses the appreciation of that congregation for the interest taken by the recent National Conference in the appeal for assistance in erecting a new and suitable church building in the Capitol City. Conference set aside the third Sunday in May of 1930 on which it is urged that churches throughout the brotherhood shall take an offering for this purpose. The Washington church has gone forward at a commendable rate and the members have shown an exemplary spirit of sacrifice in their endeavor to secure for themselves an adequate equipment. But the church at Washington is not financially able to erect without assistance a building of the type that should be found in that city of beautiful churches. Conference does not contemplate the erection of an elaborate structure costing hundreds of thousands of dollars, such as many of the large denominations are building. It is to be a simple but beautiful building, adequate for the needs, and a fitting expression of the spirit of Brethrenism. This church, as no other one can, will represent the Brethren church in the eyes of the nation and the brotherhood is rightly concerned that it shall worthily represent us and every church will want to have a part in making it what it ought to be. But you will hear more about this matter as the month of May of next year approaches. Conference appointed a committee consisting of Brethren W. S. Bell, W. C. Benshoff and E. L. Miller to cooperate with the local building committee in putting across the undertaking.

A Future Program for Ashland College and Seminary

By President Edwin E. Jacobs, Ph.D.

The institutions at Ashland which we generally know as Ashland College and Seminary, have but a single character and legally exist under the incorporate name of Ashland University. Under recent Ohio laws, the word college may be substituted for university in such schools as ours without endangering property rights, which substitution was recently made legal in our case. Hence the present name, Ashland College.

The College proper has three departments, viz., Arts and Sciences, Education, and Music. We have neither Business, Home Economics, nor Art. We formerly had all three of these but have eliminated them and are concentrating on the former three, as that is about all we can do and do well now; nor is there any intention of extending the present scope of the college proper for the future. For all of the work now given, we have full and complete State recognition. In fact, by far the majority of Ohio colleges have only the three departments which we sustain.

The Seminary

The Seminary was formally established by vote of the Board of Trustees some twenty years ago and Dr. J. Allen Miller was made the first dean, in which position he continues today. He was, for a time, the only teacher in this department but some fifteen years ago, J. A. Garber, then pastor of our church at West Alexandria, Ohio, was called to assist him. This arrangement, with but two teachers, continued for a period of years, when Alva J. McClain was called to the work, thus giving three teachers to the Seminary. However, at no time did these three teachers give their full time to Seminary teaching but taught also some subjects in the College. While this had its advantages, it also had its disadvantages and has recently been discontinued.

After several resignations in the Seminary faculty, Kenneth Monroe and Melvin Stuckey were called, and now for the coming year, these three men, viz., Dr. Miller, Professor Monroe, and Professor Stuckey, will devote all their teaching time to the Seminary, except that Dean Miller will teach two subjects which both Seminary and College students are required to take, viz., Ethics and Philosophy. This puts the work of the Seminary on a better footing than ever before and there is no intention of reducing its work, but rather plans are in mind definitely to advance its efficiency.

The work of the College and Seminary are thus seen to have been closely related and students intermingle freely. The facts are, that some students who come here with the definite plan in mind of entering seminary work, are drawn over into the College, while, on the other hand, the Seminary has gained probably as many as it lost, by recruiting from the College, so that there is probably an even exchange. In this number I am including many ministers' wives who entered the College but who quit all secular training and are now helping in the very important work of the ministry in the capacity of pastors' wives.

Recognition

As the work is organized here, the College and Seminary share and share alike in the matter of scholastic recognition. If one fails, they both fail for the standards in both must be high. If we are to maintain and enlarge our recognition,—and we must,—then we must meet certain well-defined standards. About that there can be no question. And that is what all this struggle is about and nothing dare interfere with the goal so important and so nearly in sight.

If I know the mind of the Board of Trustees, their plan is so to strengthen both the College and Seminary, as to receive and then maintain this recognition. I say, both receive and then MAINTAIN, for recognition once received and then REMOVED does only inestimable harm. It can not even be contemplated without the most appalling fear. It would be well nigh fatal.

We are hoping for this next important step in recognition within this school year. That is what we have been working for and praying for, for years. That is what the Board publicly promised at the time of our Golden Jubilee, just one short year ago, here in Ashland. But then the struggle will not be wholly over for we must keep what we get.

Then, the next step will be to concentrate upon the Seminary, and that ought to be very soon. A separate building has been contemplated with a larger degree of separate control and teaching, and courses more distinctly seminary in character, so that the dean will have more time to direct and plan for that part of the work. With these highly desirable ends accomplished, the future ministry of the church will be greatly benefitted.

It is important, moreover, to know that the constitution of the College, adopted more than fifty years ago, sets forth the general idea relative to the ministry and to religious education. The very second sentence of that document reads as follows: "The training of suitable men (sic) for the ministry of the Gospel shall always be sacredly regarded as one of the main objects of this institution." Hence it is plain to be seen that the institution known as Ashland College, must give prime importance to religion and religious instruction. Nor have the Board of Trustees, nor any president of the College ever overlooked that fact.

With these aims and ends in view, it would seem as if the endowment campaign now in progress under the tireless efforts of Dr. Bell, should be continued with unabated vigor. Let us not forget that within very recent years, the City of Ashland gave to the College about $175,000.00, thus showing their interest and confidence in the work. As I indicated in a recent address at our National Conference, an educational institution, no matter what State it may be located in, has many masters, and amidst all the babel of voices, it must hear clearly the call of duty,—duty to its church, its founders, and its supporters. And we should never lose sight of the Bible injunction that he who buildeth a house labors in vain unless the Lord buildeth.

If I know anything about the future plans for this institution, they are to strengthen both the College and Seminary. In the words of the slogan of another Ohio college, the Board of Trustees has decided to make Ashland "a better and better college." This applies equally to the Seminary. Let all friends watch, work, and pray for the culmination of this happy and important end.

Ashland, Ohio.

UPLIFTING PRAYER

Sometimes a fog will settle over a vessel's deck, yet leave the topmast clear. Then the sailor goes up aloft and gets a lookout which the helmsman on deck cannot get. So prayer sends the soul aloft; lifts it up above the clouds in which our selfishness and egotism befog us, and gives a chance to see which way to steer.—Spurgeon.

An Appraisal of General Conference

My Impressions of General Conference

By Alva J. McClain, Moderator of the Conference

First among my impressions of the 1929 Conference, I would like to mention the very gracious courtesy and kindly spirit which seemed to permeate our various sessions. The task of the presiding officer is made easy or difficult by the presence or absence of this spirit. My task was easy. No conference of several hundred people can meet in continuous sessions for a week without situations arising which may, under certain circumstances, result in much unpleasantness. Only an unflinching consideration for one another can maintain the high spiritual level which prevailed at the late conference. Ministers, speakers, officers, organizations and audiences—all seemed striving to realize the Christian ideal to "Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others." (Phil. 2:4). In this respect, my memory of the conference is very precious.

I also came away from Winona Lake this year with a deep conviction of the general doctrinal soundness of our church. The program contained scarcely any formal doctrinal addresses, yet the great fundamental doctrines of the Word were kept constantly before our minds in sermons, Bible studies and addresses. Practically the whole field of Christian doctrine was touched, from the Inspiration of the Scriptures to the Second Coming of Jesus Christ. And not once did I hear any note of doubt expressed with respect to any great truth of Christianity. Best of all, these doctrines were not preached as abstractions, but Christ was lifted up and made the center of all truth. No church can fail that does this. Let us be vigilant to maintain our doctrinal soundness. Without it, there can be no true church unity.

Among the ministers, it seemed to me that an increase in the teaching note could be observed. This is well, for a teaching ministry makes a strong church. We must be careful, however, to preserve the passion of preaching, and not permit our teaching to become academic and pedantic. Also I was impressed by the number of young ministers who are serving the church. Although few of them were on the program, they were among the most faithful in attendance of the various sessions.

The speakers of the conference gave evidence of careful preparation for their part in the conference. In general, it may be said that they had something to say, they said it well, and quit! There was a happy lack of these last-minute extemporaneous addresses. This was particularly noticeable among the speakers at the devotional Bible study period preceding the evening sermons. Since the time was limited, it would have been easy to have used it without much preparatory work. But every study I heard had been carefully worked out.

The work of the various Boards should not be overlooked. The Home Board has taken a fine forward step in planning to place a full time secretary in the field whose business will be not merely to appeal for money (as most Board secretaries do), but also to make a genuine contribution to the planting and building up of churches throughout the country. The Foreign Missions Board handled an enormous volume of business, and made an encouraging report. The College Board reported commendable progress toward the coveted goal of academic recognition, and also a desire to see the seminary made a standard school just as soon as possible.

The work of the women assumes a place of ever-growing importance in the conference. And in addition to their own programs, they are the most faithful attendants upon the regular conference sessions. The program and attendance of the Sisterhood girls was impressive.

There are other matters which deserve mention, but space is limited and I am writing hastily, en route for the west.

1925 East Fifth St., Long Beach, California.

My Impression of National Conference

By G. L. Maus

The Editor asked me to give to the readers of the Brethren Evangelist my impressions of the late National Conference held at Winona Lake, Indiana. We so often hear folks say after each conference that "This conference was the best of any they have ever attended." I shall not make such a statement. In many ways the conference just held excelled even the fondest hope of most delegates. To others, possibly this is not true. There were some signs manifested in this conference which seem to me to point to real progress. By this statement I do not mean to say we have not progressed in the past, but to say that tomorrow we will progress with more certainty upon what we stand and believe. What the writer means by this statement is this, we are getting upon the bedrock of Christian doctrine which cannot help but bring success.

The first fact that impressed me was the decided emphasis and determined stand of the church upon Brethren teaching. I do not think we have been as earnest in the past as we ought for that teaching that makes us a distinct people. I think the 7:30 Bible study hours were the best and most instructive hours during the whole conference. In those hours the speakers sought to lay before their hearers the great fundamental truths as taught in the Word of God. If we have a distinct message to give, we do the world an injustice in not proclaiming it. I am a firm believer that there is an increasing belief among our people that we do have a message from God's Word for the world. A reverent and loyal belief in the Bible as Gods' Word to men is the basis from which we confidently proclaim our message. It is not an interpreted Bible in the light of mans' wisdom but as the Holy Spirit teaches us.

To me it is surely something to rejoice in when we consider that we have a Gospel from God to give to the world. It is a great deal of comfort to belong to a Christian body which believes the message of God and dares bring it to this needy world. The religion of Pentecost is exchanged for a mechanical religion based on organization. A deeper spiritual life is being manifested among our ministry and laity, which I believe will result in good to the world and a greater Brethren church.

I am impressed with the growing understanding and mutual trust of our people in each other. The unity of our ministry and the earnest plea for a widespread propaganda of Brethren teaching bids fair to be realized. I am encouraged as a Brethren minister, that out of the darkness of yesterday through which our church has just passed, there is a dawning and glorious hope for our church. There is a great battle ahead, but the promise is there. It is my earnest prayer that the whole brotherhood will awaken to the task of a greater and more useful church.

Conference Impressions

By A. E. Whitted

The 1929 National Conference of Brethren churches is history. We are in the habit of saying that each gathering of this nature is better than the one preceding. I am not making any such assertion, but I am convinced in my own mind that the Conference just closed was one of the most inspiring and helpful in all the twenty years of my experience as a minister in the Brethren church.

Many things entered in to make the conference what it was, I want to make mention of a few of these things in this brief sketch. In the first place I was very favorably impressed with the high order of the messages brought by those who appeared each day on the program. Every message I listened to, and I missed but few of them, was right to the point on the subject involved, full of literary merit and always sounding a clear note of loyalty to the Word. These messages therefore were thought provoking and tended to inspire the hearer to a deeper spiritual life and to a life more fully given in service to the Lord. It seemed to the writer of these words that behind every message was the slogan, "The Whole Bible and Nothing but the Bible." If every message falling from the lips of men standing in Brethren pulpits everywhere, will ring as true we need not fear the onslaught of all the cults and isms so prevalent in our day.

Another thing that favorably impressed me was the action taken by the general Home Mission Board to conserve our membership. This has been the great need through these many years. We win thousands to the church during the year and lose thousands, not in so many instances by their falling back into the world, but by their moving into communities where we have no church and nothing has been done to hold them to the Brethren faith. It becomes very unpleasant to listen to the report of our statistician from year to year with little or no advance in membership when we know of the hundreds entering the church doors. With the carrying out of the plans advanced by the Home Board it is to be hoped that matters may be different. May the spirit of the Lord attend the efforts of Brother R. Paul Miller as he goes forth in this work.

I was also pleased with the new arrangements of our evening services. I refer to the time given to Devotional Bible Study. Nothing better could have filled the half hour leading to the sermon. It seemed to be the opinion of all that the Executive Committee had created an advance that it would be well to follow in the years to come.

In closing these few lines let me say that the general spirit that prevailed through the entire week was a spirit of brotherly love and kindness. The spirit of the Psalmist was surely upon us. Psalms 133:1. Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity. May every one who was privileged to attend this conference be inspired to a deeper consecration and to forth in our several ways to advance the Kingdom, so that by our efforts many souls might be made ready to meet their Lord.

Conference Impressions

By Willis E. Ronk

The General Conference which has just closed impresses the writer as being one of the very best which he has ever attended, most certainly the best in many years. When a writer makes such a statement as this, we are immediately interested in his standard of measurement, which evidently depends on the individual making the comparison. Since any comparison might seem to reflect on other conferences or individuals, the comparison very likely were better unmade. Perhaps after all the difference might be in the individual making the comparison.

My own impression is that, although I felt in the least receptive mood of any conference which I have attended, I received the greatest blessing of all. The thing which impressed me most was the quiet earnestness of the delegates. This was in no small way due to the opening keynote sermon by Dean J. Allen Miller, and to the dignified, thoughtful, and earnest manner in which the Moderator, Alva J. McClain, and Vice-Moderator Dean Anspach presided over the conference. This attitude is significant in any conference in this day. The writer is somewhat conversant with conditions in two other denominational conferences, and he knows that in these conferences as in our own there has been a general restlessness and dissatisfaction among ministers as well as the lay members. The change for the better is significant.

The next thing which impressed me was the thoughtful and careful preparation on the part of those appearing on the program. I heard again and again the remark, "I didn't know he could preach or talk so well." All of which ought to remind us, that we are all growing older, and that we make the grave mistake of thinking of each other as we were ten years ago. I am convinced that the church has never had a better prepared and more capable ministry in her pulpits nor a more intelligent lay membership than today. I heard less criticism and more praise of our conference than ever before.

Worthy, too, of note was the increase in our membership as reported by the statistician. This shows that in spite of readjustments we are growing, and had a complete report been possible, still more commendable gains would be evident. With this should be noted the efforts at conservation of our membership, and the looking to increases through evangelism. A special effort will be made the coming year to locate and keep in touch with isolated members, to aid small churches through the Home Board and the Evangelistic and Bible Study League. The Home Board has secured the services of R. Paul Miller as evangelist, and the League the services of C. A. Bame. With the opportunity for every church to have evangelistic services, there ought to be a still more commendable gain in membership next year. All in all this was a great conference.

The Morning Prayer Meetings

By Frank G. Coleman

The early morning prayer meetings were of an exceptionally high character. Perhaps no other session contributed so much to the spiritual life of those in attendance than did this early communion with the Father. Folks came and prayed and went away strengthened for the day's work.

The messages were of a very high type and laid before the praying folks every department and phase of our work. The attendance was good throughout the week. The writer does not recall a single year when it was better. The prayers were earnest and deeply spiritual, showing a soul yearning for the work of our beloved church.

On every hand was to be heard commenting on the wonderful conference we were having. May we not find the source of this wonderful spirit of agreement, and blessed fellowship, in these early gatherings for prayer, where we came so close to God and he to us?

Annual Conference and Home Missions

By R. Paul Miller

Without question the Annual Conference of 1929 has gone on record as having endorsed the most aggressive Home Mission program yet attempted by the denomination. For years the various departments of the denominational work have been realizing that their forward programs, though worthy and proper, were faced with serious limitation or utter failure due to the lack of increase in members sufficient to make success possible. The Foreign Mission program has gone forward apace and we praise God for it, but the Home Mission appeal has lagged. A church with a Home Mission program smaller than its Foreign Mission, Educational, or Benevolent goals will soon experience a serious collapse of all its activities. A house that is built out beyond what its foundation will carry can only fall apart.

The Home Mission Board has realized this fact fully in all its phases for years but has not had the opportunity of launching what they felt to be the needed remedy. Far reaching plans are not hatched in a day. They felt that the only way to really begin this forward movement was to place in the work a field secretary who could keep in touch with all the mission points personally, promote new enterprises, engage in a program of conservation of all our isolated members of whom we have thousands, to assist by revival meetings, Bible conferences, or by giving aid in any especial difficulty facing any particular field.

Such a program is a big undertaking and is realized to be such by all who have any conception of such things. But no less aggressive goal can be considered as sufficient to meet the need that the Brethren church is facing at this hour. It goes without question that the carrying out of such a progressive movement will demand a great and faithful support by prayer. Without much earnest, believing prayer we can never go forward in power. It will also involve much greater expense of money than heretofore, but no money ever given to the work of the Brethren church will be engaged in a more vital cause than this. IN VIEW OF THIS SITUATION, THE HOME MISSION BOARD IS COMING TO THE BROTHERHOOD ASKING FOR THE LARGEST HOME MISSION OFFERING AT THANKSGIVING TIME THAT HAS EVER BEEN MADE BY THE BRETHREN CHURCH! Not that our giving should go to the cause of Home Missions at the expense of other departments of our work. That would be foolish and but robbing Peter to pay Paul and result in a distorted and crippled work in some other department. But rather that the Home Mission cause should receive its just consideration in the hearts of the people which it has never yet received in the Brethren church!!

The success of this movement will bring success to all other departments of our work and provide for their sound support with a bright future. The failure of it has a sombre portent the seriousness of which a generation hence we would not like to put in words. BUT IT WILL MEAN MIGHTY SOBER THINGS TO THE CHILDREN OF OUR PRESENT GENERATION!

However, our Home Mission Board is most optimistic, feeling that the real heart of the entire brotherhood is back of it in this great step. The Board will go ahead and engage in the great task trusting the pastors to lead the brotherhood in seeing this thing through to the glory of God, the exalting of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the saving of countless men. We believe that this Annual Conference just closed marks the launching of the greatest movement toward the accomplishing of the great and distinctive task allotted to the Brethren church by God that we have ever attempted. May we all live to see it achieved if our Lord tarries.

Berne, Indiana.

SABBATH DOINGS OF JESUS

Jesus honored the Sabbath in everything he did on this day. His high regard for it is an underlying fact of his entire ministry.

In its observance he gave the supreme place to worship and religious instruction. He began his public ministry at Nazareth by "entering into the synagogue as his custom was, and standing up to read." From there he went to Capernaum, where he "taught them on the Sabbath day." As he began, so he continued throughout his ministry. From this Sabbath-keeping custom there is no known departure. All his reported places of resort on the Sabbath were places of worship.

He performed miracles of healing on the Sabbath. At least seven of his thirty-three recorded miracles were wrought on this day. With one exception, they were chronic cases and might well have waited for secular time. It was here that Jesus came into sharpest conflict with the religious leaders. It was his sabbath miracles more than anything else that led to the final and irrevocable break between him and these leaders.

What did Jesus mean by performing these miracles of healing on the Sabbath and by justifying the related act of his disciples in plucking and eating the heads of grain to satisfy their hunger as they went through the cornfields on the Sabbath day? He was recalling holy time from oppressive and hampering strictness. He was removing from the Sabbath the graveclothes of formalism and of a false sanctity with which the Pharisees had enshrouded it. He was teaching that works of necessity in ministering to a man's physical needs and works of mercy were always essential parts of true Sabbath keeping. He was declaring that by forbidding ministering to the sick and suffering on the Sabbath the Pharisees had shut out of the day one of the blessed ends it was designed to serve. He was setting aside Pharisaic rules and regulations regarding the Sabbath to secure freedom to use part of the day, not for worldly ends—for secular business or secular amusements (he never justified these)—but for deeds of mercy and charity.—The Christian Statesman.

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

JEWS FEAR EXTINCTION

At the 16th Zionist Congress meeting at Zurich, Switzerland, A Rupin, Palestine leader, startled the delegates with figures showing that Jews are rapidly disappearing as a race. The causes, he said, were voluntary acceptance of Christianity by many Jews and intermarriage with other races. He urged that steps be taken to save a remnant of the race in the Jewish homeland in Palestine. Several speakers condemned Soviet Russia and urged that Great Britain and United States be warned not to grant that country diplomatic recognition.—Pithfinder.

ONE VIEW OF IT

At the Institute of Public Affairs at the University of Virginia, reports The Living Church, Dr. Warren H. Wilson has recently put forward the thesis that the present sad state of the country church is due to bad political and ecclesiastical legislation. He cited the tariff as favoring the manufacturer at the expense of the farmer, thereby making farm life less attractive, drawing the more intelligent away from the farm to manufacturing centers. The denominational organizations were to blame in their lack of support of the small country church working against overwhelming odds. Where the country church vanishes from the scene, superstition stalks into take its place. When witchcraft and fetishism are actually in our midst, we have brought home to us the necessity of a militant Christianity.

GANDHI MAY AGAIN ENTER POLITICAL FIELD

The most important news that has come over the wires from India recently, according to Mr. C. F. Andrews, missionary and friend of Gandhi, recently writing in the New York Chronicle, is that Mahatma Gandhi contemplates entering once more the political arena at the end of the year 1929, unless the British are prepared to grant dominion status to India. "He has promised to lead a struggle of mass civil non-payment of taxes on the part of the peasantry," Gandhi, now nearing his 60th year, is persistently pursued by ill health, Dr. Andrews reports. "How far his health will be able to endure the strain of political work is difficult to estimate."—Christian Century.

THE DISCIPLES SHOW WILLINGNESS TO MERGE

According to reports the recent convention of the Disciples held at Seattle, Washington, manifested a growing inclination to closer fellowship with the Baptist churches. No direct negotiations were entered into, but the convention drew up a declaration of principles that was intended as information for others concerning the beliefs and practices of the Disciples churches. This may form a basis for consideration of union. And to an outsider one is tempted to question what reason apart from historical traditions could possibly be cited as sufficient cause for them to remain apart. Similar in doctrines and practices of worship, similar in church polity, each independent of central authority, democratic and congregational, one finds it difficult to see any real reason why they should not unite. And we believe it would be a great gesture toward ultimate church union if they could.—The Evangelical-Messenger.

angle they decided that they were unsuited for each other, and cancelled the arrangements. Dr. Gerhard says he believes such clinics to be one of the best preventives of divorce, as often he is able to show the betrothed parties that the step was taken too hastily and unadvisedly. He is confident that had they gone through the marriage ceremony it would have but ended in the divorce court sooner or later. The Evangelical-Messenger, reporting the case to its constituency, suggests, "Perhaps this idea is worth considering by the pastors of the Evangelical church."

And we would add, by pastors of the Brethren church also. At any rate, there are times when it would seem so. Surely we can afford to be more cautious about performing marriage ceremonies and urge less hasty and ill-considered action on the part of those who contemplate the marriage relation. If a minister in officiating at a marriage, wishes to be not merely an officer of the state but a divine agent as well, it might be well for him to make sure in his mind that he has God back of him before he presumes to say, "What God hath joined together, let not man put asunder." And if he cannot talk young people out of marriage when they ought not to get married, he can at least sound the warning and refuse to be a party to an arrangement that is entered into lightly and inadvisedly.

Our Worship Program

Daily Readings and Comments

(Keep with your Bible)

MONDAY

The Word—John 1:1-5. Jesus, our Savior, existed together with God from the beginning. He is here called "the Word," no doubt, because he spake and it was done—"Let there be light, and there was light." The life that he lived, together with his resurrection from the dead, also speaks as nothing else could. He has been,—rather, he IS—the light of men; and the tragedy of life is that so many walking in darkness still fail to find in him the light. God open the eyes of all!

TUESDAY

Sons of God—John 1:6-14. He came unto his own,—the things and the beings that he had created—and they received him not! But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, as sons, we partake of the nature, the power, and the glory of the Father. Let us praise him for his unmerited love, and because he has by faith enabled us to behold his glory. And even as there are many other potential sons of God in the world, may we be strengthened to carry the light to them also.

WEDNESDAY

God Revealed—John 1:6, 7, 15-18. John's mission in the world was in no wise different from ours: to bear witness of the light, that all men through him might believe. Just as truly as John was sent from God for this work, so have we been sent from God (Matthew 28:19, 20). And just as we know John was faithful unto death (not merely until death), in fulfilling his mission, so may each one of us lay down our lives daily in willing service, bearing witness of the God revealed in the person of our Lord, Jesus Christ.

THURSDAY

A Voice—John 1:19-28. God's work has ever been done by those of deep humility. I believe that this is due to the fact that as these men communed with God, beholding his matchless glory and holiness, they more fully realized their own needs and limitations. John thought of himself not as a person, to receive the admiration of men for the great work he was doing, but only as a VOICE—God's voice,—proclaiming the truths of God. As we go about through all the world to proclaim thy message, O God, fill us with deep humility, and may the voice be ever the voice of thy love.

FRIDAY

An Eye Witness—John 1:29-34. To John a sign had been given: when he should see the Spirit of God descending and remaining upon one whom he had baptized, he should know that this was the son of God. And John, as an eye witness, beheld the Spirit descend in the form of a dove, upon Jesus of Nazareth. Others also bare witness of these things which they beheld for themselves. Let us praise him that our faith rests not upon pagan myths and legends, but upon the testimony of eye witnesses, sealed by God himself. We KNOW whom we have believed.

SATURDAY

Where Thou Dwellest—John 1:35-42. The question of these first two disciples, in the light of their later actions, reminds of Ruth's expression of loyalty: "Where thou lodgest, I will lodge." May this be the desire of every believer today: to dwell ever in the presence of the Lord. And may we not be selfish in this desire, but let us also first find our own brother and bring him to Jesus as well.

SUNDAY

On the Heart—John 1:43-51. Jesus knew there was no guile in Nathanael because he knows the hearts of all men; time and place, or distance can not limit his power thus to read the hearts of all. As we come into thy presence today, to worship thee, do thou cleanse our hearts from all guile, so that we worship thee in spirit and in truth. And then shall we see greater things than ever Nathanael saw. In Jesus' name, Amen!—T. C. L.

SPECIALIST AND LAYMAN

Speaking of the specialist, we are moved to remark that we have perhaps been too ready to accept him as the final solution of all our difficulties. Churches have sometimes been too eager to place all educational responsibility upon one professionally trained person and let the layman who formerly bore the load go merrily on his way in blessed unconcern. We believe in the specialist. We want him to have a big place in the program of religious education in the future. We believe that many phases of religious education are so technical that they require professional training for their successful execution. We believe also, however, that there is a large place for the layman in the church program of religious education. His talents, his experience in the business and professional world, his freedom from the sins of professionalism put him in a position to render a unique service which will greatly enhance the work of the specialist.—International Journal of Religious Education.

Editor's Select Notes on the Sunday School Lesson

(Lesson for September 22)

Malachi Foretells a New Day

Scripture Lesson—Malachi 1:1 to 4:6.
 Printed Text—Malachi 3:1-12.

Devotional Reading—Isaiah 11:1-10.

Golden Text—Behold, I send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me.—Malachi 3:1.

Introductory Note

Evidently Malachi lived and spoke during Nehemiah's second term as governor of Judah, Mal. 1:8, after his return from a visit to Persia, 425-400 B. C. The description he gives of the evil conditions among the Jews agrees with the account in Ne. 13. "The last chapter of Bible history and the last chapter of Bible prophecy belong to the same period of time." More than 100 years passed since the first return from captivity in Babylon; but they have been troublous times. The people are cured of idolatry, but the evil spirit of self-righteousness and unbelief has not been cast out. The name Malachi means "My messenger," and he speaks with the directness and authority of a true messenger of God. The canonicity of his prophecy is established by references to it in the New Testament, Mt. 11: 10; 17:12; Mk. 1:2; 9:12; Lu. 1:17; Ro. 9: 13. His message opens with a word of grace: "I have loved you," saith the Lord, 1:2, and ends with a "curse" upon those who receive that grace in vain. 4:6; cf. 3: 14 with 2 Co. 6:2.—Ex.

"Malachi is like a late evening which brings a long day to a close, but he is also like a morning dawn which brings with it the promise of a new and more glorious day! And it is very significant that as in the New Testament Christ is heralded by the great forerunner who in all the circumstances of his life and story so closely recalled Elijah, and who evidently had in his mind the words of Malachi as well as of Isaiah (compare Matt. 3:11, 12; 11:3, 10, 14, with Mal. 3:2; 4:2). The figure of the herald in the wilderness, of the great law-giver, of the mighty prophet, cast their dim shadows upon the page of Malachi; they shine forth in all their majesty in the pages of the Gospels under the splendor of the Sun of Righteousness rising with healing in his wings."—F. W. Farrar.

Bible Principles of Giving

"1. Our gifts to men must have God as their primary object and thought. Honor the Lord with thy substance, and with the first fruits of all thine increase (Prov. 3:9). He that hath pity upon the poor lendeth unto the Lord (Prov. 19:17).

"2. Giving should be done modestly, and not with ostentation. When thou doest alms, let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth (Matt. 6:3). He that giveth, let him do it with simplicity (Rom. 12: 8).

"3. Only willing gifts are acceptable of God. Of every man that giveth it willingly with his heart ye shall take my offering (Ex. 25:2). Not grudgingly, or of necessity; for God loveth a cheerful (literally, hilarious) giver (2 Cor. 9:7); see also Philemon 14).

"4. Giving should be methodical, systematic. If we do not keep accounts of our receipts and our gifts, we shall quite certainly think we are giving more than we are.

Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him (1 Cor. 16:2). To do good and to communicate forget not (Heb. 13:16).

"5. Our gifts should be proportioned to our ability, and should grow as it grows.

Every man shall give as he is able, according to the blessing of the Lord thy God which he hath given thee (Deut. 16: 17). If there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not (2 Cor. 8:12).

"6. The tithe is a reasonable standard of giving for the average income. Just as we keep one-seventh of our time especially sacred to the Lord, and thereby are helped to serve God with all our time, so if we set apart one-tenth of our money as peculiarly God's we are helped to use in God's service all that we have. Our Lord said even of the tithing of mint and anise and cummin, these ye ought to have done, while not leaving weightier duties undone (Matt. 23:23).

77. Generous giving is rewarded by God, in this world and in the world to come. There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth. The liberal soul shall be made fat (Prov. 11:24, 25). Cast thy bread upon the waters; for thou shalt find it after many days (Eccl. 11:1). Give and it shall be given unto you (Luke 6:38). It is more blessed to give than to receive (Acts 20:35). He which soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully (2 Cor. 9:6)."

Tithing and the Kingdom

"In the judgment of the writer, tithing is the solution of every financial problem of the church and Kingdom, and indirectly the solution of certain spiritual problems as well. It is quite unnecessary to believe in the tithe as the legal requirement before one believes in and urges it as a means and method of high moral and spiritual value. Many a man can give ten-tenths of his income more easily than another can give a twentieth. Nevertheless, as a working basis for the vast majority of Christians, it is the real minimum, and it is nothing less than amazing how those who adopt this method and measure of giving are blessed and prospered. To sit down with one's pencil for a few minutes to calculate what could be done by Methodism for Christ and his work, if Methodists would tithe, makes one's heart glow with the wonder of it, and then makes one's heart burn with the shame of it, to think how far short of it we fall. I believe in the tithe, have practiced it for many years, have induced many people in my pastorates to try it, and so far as I have known, always with blessing and joy to them."—Bishop Laurens J. Birney.

To the question, What would such systematic giving mean for Christian Men? Dr. Harris Franklin Rall answers: (1) It would mean moral victory. We have slurred over the passages in which Jesus has pointed out the peril of money. He made it one of the two great dangers of the Christian life—the love of the world and the fear of the world. There are multitudes of Christian men whom God has prospered who are actually giving a less percentage of their income today than ten or twenty years ago. It hurts them to give even what they do. Their danger is as real as that of the drunkard or gambler, and more subtle. A fixed proportion set definitely aside means moral victory.

(2) It would mean freedom and joy in giving. The Lord loveth a cheerful giver, but there are many people to whom giving is more like pulling a tooth. Benjamin Adams, of sainted name, wrote on "The Fun of Giving." Set a proportion apart once for all. You will find so much freedom and joy in the spending of it that you will want to increase the amount.

(3) It would mean a richer spiritual life. There is only one method of spiritual growth. That is fellowship with God. And here is a fellowship in the things that are most like God and that he cares most about—giving and loving and serving. . . . Shall not the revival for which we pray come this way; not in big tabernacles and crowds and statistics, but in the larger life of this Spirit of Christ, filling his church and his people?"—Church School Journal.

Endeavoring for Jesus

Tune: I Walk with the King

For Christian Endeavor I'll now take my stand,

A friend that has meant more than riches to me.

It links me with millions in every far land,
All praying and working more faithful to be.

Chorus:

My heart I will give to Endeavor,
The work of my hands to C. E.
I'll turn to the right,
And strive with a might Endeavoring, Jesus, for thee.

The friends of Endeavor are loyal and true,
Their visions of service unbiased remain.
There's room in its work-shop for me and for you.

'Twill help to protect us from sin's ugly stain.

Endeavor is made of both young folks and old.

Its joys and its blessings they equally share

And after this life, when the story's all told

I'm sure that in heaven, C. E. will be there.

JUNIOR COMMITTEE PLANS

ENTERTAIN THE PASTOR

For Social Committees

Out in California the officers of the Orange County union some time ago entertained the pastors of the county at a special dinner. Here is something that Junior societies may do, the social committee, of course, taking the lead. They do not need to invite outside pastors, but they may invite their own pastor and his wife. If they wish to make a specially good impression, they may invite the superintendent of the Sunday school as well. In the social, besides games, the Juniors may present some of their Bible drills, to show the pastor what they can do in that direction.

SILENCE IS GOLDEN

For Prayer Meeting Committees

The idea of a "Silence-is-golden" meeting is to prevent whispering and talking without permission during a meeting. Place the chairs the width of a chair apart. In the open spaces and slightly behind place other chairs, so that the chairs will have a sort of checkerboard appearance. At the beginning of the meeting the members of the prayer meeting committee will give to each Junior a small badge, on which is written "Silence is golden." These badges are pinned on. On the blackboard write: "You have your badge. You must not talk during the meeting except on the topic. If you do, you must put your badge in the offering-plate at the end of the meeting." The superintendent will read this, and put the Juniors on their honor not to whisper in the meeting. This plan has been successfully tried, and works.

AMERICA'S SONGS

For Music Committees

A departure from the ordinary study of hymns would be a study of the stories connected with some of America's songs. A booklet issued by the National Bureau for the Advancement of Music, 45 West 45th Street, New York City, gives the stories of twenty favorite American songs, including "America," "My Old Kentucky Home," "Old Folks at Home," "Dixie," "Old Black Joe," and so on. The story of these songs might be told in the Christian Endeavor meeting, and then a rousing song social might be given afterwards, at which the stories would be retold and some of the songs sung.—R. P. Anderson in Junior C. E. World.

MISSIONS

Argentina, South America

Since our meeting for Bible study with the pastors in July the work has been going forward in all parts in spite of the usual difficulties in the winter. While the cold causes a falling off in attendance sometimes yet there are conversions in the winter as well as in the summer. It is not the best time for revival efforts as it is at home, because neither public halls or private houses are warmed and the poor people are not warmly dressed, but it is a good time for teaching in the homes, and the really bad days are not so many. Our winters are usually dry and sunny.

Brother Iztueta writes from Laboulaye that two more have been converted there and the hall is too small for the crowds. However work has begun on the new building on our lot there, and in a few weeks more we hope to have our own quarters both for the pastor and the meetings.

In Rio Cuarto we have had a visit from Mr. Arthur Neve, agent for the British and Foreign Bible Society. He was formerly agent in Palestine and gave us a lecture, illustrated with slides, showing the places of interest in the holy land. There was a large crowd and great interest. This week seven more publicly accepted Christ and others are near.

The schools have been closed for a month on account of sickness. There is an epidemic of grippé with complications that are rather serious. There are from fifteen to twenty funerals a day here in Rio Cuarto and few families have not one or more members sick. In our own family only Brother Romanenghi has been ill, and he is better.

Brother Yett hopes to go out with Brother Federico Sotola Jr., next week on another trip with the old Bible coach, while waiting for the money to arrive for the new one. In his absence we will take care of Tancacha along with Almafuerte from Rio Cuarto.

I am taking advantage of the winter season to do a lot of writing that must be done, so as to be ready for evangelistic meetings in the spring. I am now working on a history of our mission work in Argentina.

By the time this reaches the Evangelist, or before, the General Conference will be in session. We pray that it may be crowned with blessing and that the apostasy which is killing the spiritual life of so many churches may not find an entrance into our denomination. In this country as everywhere else the attitude of doubt toward God or his Word destroys the fruitfulness of the workers. Prophets who have no message from God had better plow corn.

There is much poverty and misery in the winter time and the pastoral work of our churches is correspondingly heavy. Pray for the pastors here that we may all be filled with the Spirit and be fruitful in our service.

The China Famine Situation

Announcement by the China International Famine Relief Commission of Peking that there are 40,000,000 persons reduced to the verge of starvation by wide-spread famine, has been rapidly followed by cables telling of the death from typhus in a single famine-stricken province of 13 American and foreign missionaries, who were engaged in relief work, according to a statement issued at the National Headquarters of China Famine Relief, U. S. A., 205 East 42nd Street, New York City.

James A. Thomas, for 26 years a resident of China, where he served as vice-president of the Chinese-American Bank of Commerce, yesterday stated, in connection with the late news from the famine areas, that while in certain regions recent rains are reported to have been of some help, the total of persons given as "on the verge of starvation" is actually greater than at any time during the present famine.

"The fact that self-sacrificing Americans are actually giving their lives in an attempt to provide relief for these people will, I believe, bring this terrible mass suffering more closely to us than anything else could possibly do," Mr. Thomas stated.

"We may discuss, in an abstract way, methods of relief," he continued, "but now, surely, we can all realize that while we debate ways and means not only are thousands of the starving succumbing, but also our countrymen in China are losing their lives.

"Just a few days ago I learned that in one section, where it had been hoped that something of the crop had been saved by late rains, a break in the dykes of the Yellow River resulted in the flooding of nearly 500 square miles of farm lands, completely destroying what was left of the maturing crops.

"Within the last month we have had reported a Moslem outbreak in one of the famine provinces, Kansu, which took 20,000 Chinese lives.

"If there had also been American victims of this human aggression our immediate interest would have been challenged and official as well as individual action to remedy the situation taken.

"When Nature itself becomes responsible for the loss of human life among our fellow beings, even though our compatriots lose their lives in an effort to relieve the sufferings of those so afflicted, we do not have our attention so strikingly called to the situation.

"Even in the case of the Moslem outbreak in Kansu, so inaccessible is that region, from the point of view of communication, that weeks elapse before we are aware of what has occurred. Then too, the native of Kansu has few if any friends at court to plead for him in the hour of affliction. We do not number among our acquaintance, as individuals, nor among our constituencies, if we are officials, those who either by blood or religion are directly connected with the victims.

"Certainly there is no place in the world today where death is imminent to so many people, nor where the afflicted are less to be held responsible for the conditions they face than in China.

"The American China Famine Relief organization is striving to raise $4,000,000 to save the lives of an equal number of the starving in regions which, our American Minister has agreed, are readily accessible. Personally I am convinced that there is no more deserving goal toward which the efforts of humanitarian America could be directed."

PHILIPPINE PROBLEMS

Sixty delegates from every section of the Philippines last March discussed at a round table conference led by Dr. John R. Mott the problems common to all. The dominating note was to plan a concerted attack upon such questions as: Reaching an increasing number of the best young people for Christian leadership; meeting an enlarging evangelistic opportunity in the Islands; securing an ideal relation between the younger churches in the Philippines and the older churches in America; augmenting our financial resources to meet our enlarging opportunities; and further promoting the fullest cooperation and unity in the Philippines.

The Conference expressed the desire to correct the impression that the evangelistic opportunity in the Philippines is passing, and declared that Christian forces were never so numerous and favorable, this being especially true of the educated classes and student youth.

The Philippine churches were called to an increased study and practice of Christian Stewardship. Though a hearty response ought to augment materially the financial resources of the Islands, our staggering opportunities will be far from met. The appeal was therefore sounded to the Church in America to expand generously its subscriptions. It was heartening to note the reiterated desire expressed by Filipino leaders for a systematic reduction of mission aid to established churches, thus to release mission funds for the great advance which must be made.—Philippine Presbyterian.

Governments may protect people in their rights of freedom and property, but only the law of God can make good citizens and a prosperous nation.

TRAVEL FLASHES New Troy, Michigan

My recent work was that I was beginning a series of meetings at New Troy, Michigan, where I had spent a summer several years ago, and had organized a new church at Glendora. It was then my hope that a small circuit would be thus formed and a preacher for the two places be comfortably supported. But the new one was not to survive, though the mother church is still vigorous and active, and has perhaps the best outlook for her future she has ever had; for they have the largest Sunday school in their history, and a live organization it is. Cross-sections of language, religions, and denominations and non-denominational liberty, together with far too great a number of men altogether unchurched makes the field hard to unify for anything. It is a case of the faithfulness of the faithful which must finally triumph. It is a time for our people to do their utmost and nothing could happen that would mean so much as just aggressive, steadfast, unmovable practicing of the Christ Spirit.

The fort is being held just now by people whose days of service will not last so many years more and then, unless the new ones carry on, another church in Michigan will be gone. But the rest of the story is that our meeting brought in some new people who are ambitious to do things and to be busy for the Lord. With proper leadership and guidance, we hope that new workers will be developed and new organizations will be formed and more baptized. There were fifteen confessions and fourteen were buried in baptism in the Galien river which flows beside the town. Several were heads of families and others old and big enough to take prominent parts in the work of the church. They promised to pray and read their Bibles which if they do, they will not fail or fall. My heart is open to these people and I hope to help them again if the opportunity offers.

National Conference

Quitting this meeting Sunday evening, we were in Winona by Monday evening ready for the conference. It was a good conference. One of the best from the standpoint of regularity of the delegates at the sessions (after we had sung them into them). The program was of a high order and well arranged. The speakers gripped their audiences with the seriousness of their messages and no ripple or serious disharmony appeared. New plans were laid which we hope will work out to the salvaging of many of our smaller churches. Two of us hope to be busy in the field of evangelism this year and it is to be hoped that no church too small or too weak shall be left crying for an aggressive campaign of uplift and evangelism.

Evangelism

My time has been engaged by the Evangelistic and Bible Study League and I hope to be kept busy from October first to the end of the year advancing the cause of the Lord and our people. Ask for time of myself with address at Ashland, Ohio, or H. V. Wall, Long Beach, California, or A. V.

Kimmell, 6000 Compton Avenue, Los Angeles, California. We desire that my itinerary shall be completed as soon as possible to avoid the expense of "long jumps" in travel. I'll be happier, too, to know my schedule as soon as possible. We expect several Mission Boards to claim a portion of my time in their conferences this fall.

TENTH ANNUAL REPORT OF THE EVANGELISTIC AND BIBLE STUDY LEAGUE

The evangelistic work of the League the past year has been done by Dr. J. C. Beal, giving only part time to the work. Meetings were held by him at the following places:

Canton, Ohio; Udell, Iowa; Hamlin, Kansas; Milledgeville, Illinois; New Lebanon, Ohio, also Fremont, Ohio.

The League also gave financial aid to the evangelistic meetings held by B. F. Owen at Columbus, Ohio. From each of these places we received one or more letters of commendation and appreciation of the work being done by the League. At one place we found the pastor discouraged and ready to quit. After the meetings closed he wrote us that the Bible was a new book to him, and he was now preaching the Word with a power unknown to him before.

Each year's service as Secretary of the League convinces us more and more that the outstanding need of our membership is systematic Bible teaching and expository preaching to familiarize our people with the Word, so that each individual member will become an active personal worker. If this is done our membership will increase rapidly. We have no desire to be the largest denomination in the world, but we can be one of the best.

Our desire is to have an evangelist in the field for full time the coming year. The evangelist should be a good Bible teacher and capable of leading his classes in Bible study in such a way that the work will be properly organized and carried on after the evangelist leaves.

The preamble setting forth the purpose and plan of the Evangelistic and Bible Study League as adopted ten years ago reads as follows:

"Realizing the apostasy now threatening Christendom, in this age of Bible criticism, when thousands of church members are being swept into the fads and frauds of religious movements; with a dearth of spirituality in the churches and a growing indifference to the claims of the Gospel; we as members of the EVANGELISTIC AND BIBLE STUDY LEAGUE feel bound, with our claims of a whole Bible and a whole Gospel, to put forth a special effort in leading men back to the WORD OF GOD and anchoring their faith to the ROCK, CHRIST JESUS, and thus reaching forth to save lost men."

As a result of the recent election the following men were elected as officers of the League:

President ..... A. V. Kimmell
First Vice-President ..... J. A. Miller

Second Vice-President ..... Martin Shively
Third Vice-President ..... George Rench
Treasurer ..... N. H. Nielsen
Secretary ..... Henry V. Wall
Directors for three years: W. S. Bell, W. A. Gearhart, Ed Miller, A. L. Lynn, W. C. Benschoff.

The following men are directors of the League as a result of a former election: L. S. Bauman, Geo. C. Carpenter, R. Paul Miller, Chas. A. Bame, W. E. Ronk, A. J. McClain, Chas. H. Ashman, J. C. Beal, Geo. T. Ronk, A. E. Whitted.

We thank you for your support and earnestly request your prayers to continue with us in this great work.

FRANKLIN, WEST VIRGINIA

Dear Readers of the Evangelist:

As no one has given a report from the Hammers church I will attempt to give my first letter. We are still having Sunday school regularly and Brother Garber of the Church of the Brethren, preaches twice each month since Brother Hall died. He had served us two years after dear Brother S. P. Fogle had been so faithful in coming over 12 years as our pastor at a sacrifice of time and money. He had never disappointed us one time in all the twelve years, making some trips in the dead of winter. His faithfulness kept us very much encouraged, adding all those to the church who accepted Christ during his pastorate. He arranged in times past to have Brother Gribble of Africa, Brother R. S. Garber of Washington, D. C., Brother Herman Braatz with him. Brother J. M. Bowman is very dear to us also as he baptized my brother and me. All have helped to keep the fire of God's love burning in our souls. When Brother Fogle's health failed him we had Brother J. I. Hall till he was called home, and just this July we wrote Brother Fogle and he came, regardless of his condition and preached four sermons that were enjoyed by all and a full audience was out on the third Sunday to hear Brother Fogle. Two dear souls, Fanny Kate Hammer, only 10 years old, and Linnie Ann Hartman, 12 years old, were baptized at that Sunday. Praise the Lord that this much was accomplished during the meeting.

My dear sister, Mrs. Maggie Kingel of Bradley, Wisconsin, was visiting us at the time and had the pleasure of attending the meetings with us. She had with her their little boy Leroy who later was taken seriously ill. We thought he could not live, but we feel sure that it was our prayers that helped to bring him out of danger. I report this as a testimony to the value of prayer. Oh! if people would only pray in earnest, it is wonderful what can be accomplished by prayer.

My sister's husband came to accompany his wife and child home. It will be remembered that Brother Fogle held a meeting at Bradley, Wisconsin, two years ago and my sister's husband was converted at that meeting. God bless the men who are willing to preach the Gospel even in the out-of-the-way places and gather those who are scattered into the fold.

Brethren, pray for us that we may keep the work of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ alive here. LIZZIE HAROLD.

FIRST BRETHREN CHURCH OF PHILADELPHIA

On Sunday, July 28th, we said "Farewell" to our pastor, Brother R. Paul Miller, who had served us for six years. We want to give "honor to whom honor is due" by reiterating some of the outstanding things accomplished during his ministry.

Finding that we had no adequate constitution and by-laws he immediately set about having one drawn up and adopted by the congregation, filling a long-felt need.

Then he suggested wiping out a $10,000.00 mortgage, which hung over us heavily, and showed us how by systematic arrangement, we could do it in one year. Of course we said "it couldn't be done." But, under his aggressive leadership, and large faith "we did it."

We then repaired the church throughout, putting it in a splendid condition at a cost of about $7,000.00, which is all paid for, some time ago.

Five of our African missionaries, Mr. and Mrs. Foster, Mr. and Mrs. Kennedy and Miss Elizabeth Tyson, sailed, during Brother Miller's pastorate, and, by the way we hear from National Conference, that our Sister Edna Patterson, is to leave us for Africa in October, making eight from Philadelphia, for Africa, and the end is not yet, for we have a number of life-work recruits now in preparation, who were led to this dedication of themselves through Brother Miller's influence.

We also sent out one of our "boys" into the active ministry, Brother Samuel Adams now pastor at Kittanning, Pennsylvania.

Another innovation which our pastor introduced, was the "Daily Vacation Bible School which has been successfully conducted part of each summer, since he came among us. He, himself superintended this work, compiling all the catechism used, planning all the work for, and with the teachers. He, with our splendid teachers, gave all this extra time and labor through the hot days of July, without any remuneration.

Brother Miller was not only pastor of the church, but also a much loved teacher at the Philadelphia School of the Bible. And many are the splendid young people he won for the Brethren faith, through his work there. In fact, it is stated that the class, which will graduate next June is one-third Brethren. All of these were won and baptized by our Brother Miller.

It was remarkable how many souls were saved in the last few months of his work here. About twenty-five of our Sunday school children accepted the Lord Jesus at a morning service held especially for them, many of whom have been baptized and received into the church.

And a number of adults too who were long considering and hesitating came during the last few months, up to his very last day we had confessions and baptisms.

So, surely God has set his seal of approval on his faithful preaching of the Word, and our loss will be others' gain.

We know that God has so signally used him before in evangelistic work so we're trying to be unselfish, and think of the many he may be able to save and help, instead of the few.

We had a crowded house to bid him "God-speed" on his last Sunday our choir sang his favorite pieces, and he gave us a splendid parting message from 1 Timothy 6:11 and 12 verses. And may the Philadelphia church be true to his admonition, to "Fight the good fight of faith," "Follow Jesus," "Hold fast," "until he comes."

In the meantime may God wondrously bless and use our Brother Miller wherever he goes and send to us another pastor, who like the one who has left us, preaches fearlessly always "The Bible, the Whole Bible, and nothing but the Bible."

Church Correspondent.

SIX YEARS IN PHILADELPHIA

Six years ago when I was invited to leave my evangelistic work and become the pastor of the First Brethren church of Philadelphia, I took up the work with a keen anticipation of a happy experience. It has proved to be all and more than I had anticipated it to be. They have been years of hard work for both pastor and people but through it all a note of joy has been ever present. As I leave this people and this happy work it is only because I feel that the Lord is calling me to the evangelistic field once more. I have felt this call for years and the delay in responding to it has largely been because the ties in Philadelphia have been so hard to break. I trust that they have not really been broken but that they shall live on eternally.

During these six years much has been accomplished by the church in clearing off all indebtedness, completely renovating the building, and perfecting a fine working organization in both church and Sunday school. The missionary spirit which was already there has grown so finely that the offerings for Foreign Missions are second in the brotherhood and eight of their own members are on the Foreign Field in Africa. I believe this church has the largest number of its own actual membership on the mission field of any church in our brotherhood. This church meets all her obligations for benevolences without so much as an appeal, and the White Gift and Foreign Missions appeals are the only direct requests for special offerings made during the year. Not a cent is raised except by free will giving prompted by the love of these people for their Lord.

The church has gradually pressed on into a place of real prominence in the field of Bible Teaching in the east. Each year greater and larger Bible conferences are being held, led by the best Bible teachers in America. This feature of progress has not only enlarged her constituency but also has led nearly a score of her young people to prepare themselves for definite Christian work. Inside of three or four years most of these young people will be somewhere in Christian work either on the foreign field or at home. During this time two young men have been ordained to the ministry and are now most successful pastors.

What the church has and is accomplishing for her Lord is in the face of tremendous obstacles. The community in which the church itself stands is almost entirely antagonistic to the work. Jews, colored people, and Roman Catholics, make up most of the community which twenty years ago was a fine field for our work. These people can be reached with the gospel but not with the type of work we are now doing to care for God's saints. Each of the different classes of people about the church demand a different type of work, to be reached for the gospel. Practically eighty-five percent of the church attendants come long distances to the services, averaging at least five miles across the city. This has necessitated a movement to build a new church building in another section more conducive to our work and then to carry on such gospel work in this community as will reach the type of people there. A fund has already been started and an extension committee has begun the work of seeking a new location for a new work.

The new pastor who takes up this work will find a united people, a spiritual people, and a people who love lost souls and are ready to sacrifice and work for him who loved them and gave himself for them. I cherish for him the same joys I have had here, only in greater measure, and I believe that he will, under God, lead this people into a great period of expansion and testimony.

Personally, I feel like a father who has left his family for a long period of years. I seem to feel it more as the reality is impressed upon me that I am no longer their pastor. Their parting words and gifts make every recurring thought most tender. I covet for every pastor in our brotherhood an experience such as has been this gift of God to me.

R. PAUL MILLER.

BUILDING FOR A DAY

Building a house to last for but one day may almost be said to be true of much of the construction work that is done in the Congo, says Rev. W. N. Ware, of Wembo Nyama, Congo Belge. Often the white ants devour the temporary mud and grass houses so quickly that they almost seem to vanish overnight.

For some time past Mr. Ware has been in charge of the industrial work at Wembo Nyama, the largest Methodist mission station in the Congo, and has spent much time seeking ways and means to combat the ravages of the white ants. He believes that brick and galvanized iron roofing are the only building materials that can be used successfully in the Congo.

Building even a temporary house of mud and grass is a slow business in Africa, says Mr. Ware. It takes as a rule from six months to a year to build a house with two large rooms and two small ones, a verandah around it, and a kitchen outside. This will keep the entire work line of from 80 to 100 men busy, with the exception of necessary time given to caravan work and to repairing the damage done by the white ants on other buildings.

"Hundreds of poles must be brought in to build one small house," says Mr. Ware. "The natives must walk from six to eight miles to find the upright poles for the side supports and the verandah. These must be about six inches in diameter and about twenty feet long. It takes from two to eight men working all day long to bring in one of these upright poles on their shoulders. The poles used for rafters are smaller and are found nearer the mission. Boys and young men in the Bible and day schools work during the afternoons collecting and bringing in these poles. Grass for the roof is also collected by the schoolboys. It takes thirty young men working in the afternoons after school for two weeks to bring in enough grass to cover an ordinary house.

"The first step in the building proper is to set the uprights in holes about a foot and a half apart. Then reeds are tied on to make lattice work to hold the mud. These reeds are tied with a vine called by the natives 'nkodi.' There are no nails in the underneath high enough to reach the floor and eat the planks. When we notice that the floor seems to be solid in spots and sounds dead instead of hollow, we know that the ants have reached the wood. Probably the next day there will be great holes in these places. Ants even manage to come up through the brick floors laid in cement and eat the sills and other wooden parts of a brick house. They will eat their way into trunks and packing boxes and devour the contents unless the trunks are elevated several feet from the floor. Often when a house is finished after months and months of labor it is destroyed almost in the twinkling of an eye by a bolt of lightning or eaten practically overnight by the white ants.—Christian Advocate.

A Dangerous Book

*When Jesus stood in the Temple,
And questioned the Rabbis there
Religion and education,
Were each in the house of prayer.
And the Church of Christ, the Mother,
Of learning, science and art,
Was counted a friend and patron,
And never from them apart.*

*Now, the Bible is dangerous,
And should be banished from school:
Impractical, too, is Jesus,
Teaching the Golden Rule.
Love and forgiveness, are ancient,
And a little bit too slow,
For an age of autos, and airships,
And the static radio*

*So all the children are thronging,
The Religious Week Day School,
Where safely taught is the Bible,
And menacing Golden Rule,
And once again in God's Temple,
The children hear and see,
The words and face of the Master
As of old in Galilee.*

*The moral here is apparent,
Which lifts one out of the lurch:
Poison isn't poison when
You swallow it in a church.
But swallow it in the schoolroom,
And the dose will vegetate,
A chemistry of explosion;
The union of Church and State.*

—Charles A. Finch in The Kansas Messenger.

Congo. Such nails as the natives have seen they call the 'foreigner's nkodi.'

"After the lattice work for the walls is made, the next step is to put on the roof or the rains will wash the mud from the walls as rapidly as it is applied. The dirt for the walls is brought to the station in baskets by the natives, made into a soft mud, and daubed by hand on the walls. After drying for two weeks the walls are smoothed by an application of very thin mud and finished with a coat of white dirt similar to our lime. This then gives the appearance of a plastered wall. A blue clay is also used, and often the walls are white within and blue without or vice versa.

"Floors are made of brick, wood or dirt. Many residences still have floors of red clay packed down hard and covered with reed mats. Native houses all have dirt, floors and the mats are used by them for beds instead of floor coverings. Wooden floors must be raised many feet off the ground or the ants will build ant hills

AN INTELLECTUAL SNOB

Real intelligence is rarely on a high horse. Some of the most intelligent men the world has ever known have been the most humble. For most intelligent people will tell you that the more they learn, the less certain they are of their own thoughts and ideas. It has always been so.

Intelligence is tolerant, is understanding, is simple. It cannot be otherwise.

When we hear men, therefore, speaking of intellectual snobs, we wonder what they are talking about. Perhaps they have reference to that half-baked variety who worship at the shrine of Mencken, the Boy Blusterer from Baltimore. Or they may mean a certain type of citizen that subscribes to one "highbrow" magazine in order to air the editor's opinions each week. Or they may be talking about the correspondence school type who "strut their stuff" without interference from friend or foe. Surely such people as these should not be honored by referring to them as intellectuals—even if the "snob" is added.

But the real intellectuals, have you ever heard them called snobs? On the contrary, have you not always heard how simple they were, how easily accessible, how humane in all their dealings with their fellow men? It's invariably the rule. We doubt quite seriously if there is a real intellectual in the world today who is actually conscious of it. So the "intellectual snob" must be a myth.—The High Road.

A friend is something we must win for ourselves. No one can give us a friend unless something within ourselves attracts the relationship.

HORRORS OF FASCIST PUNISHMENT

only offense is that he is a Freemason and a democrat. . . .

"The Fascist government frequently asserts that the political deportees are all extremists, communists and anarchists. This is not true. There are many deportees in the islands who are ordinary middle-class people whose only sin is that they want to see liberal institutions and civil freedom in their country."

If men will endure such horrible treatment in the name of a cause that offers political freedom and refuse to bow the knee to a political tyrant at the risk of their life, what ought Christians not be willing to endure for the sake of the freedom that we have in Christ Jesus and in the name of him whose banner we have pledged to carry to the ends of the earth!

OUR LITTLE READERS

THE MIRROR

By Stephen Southwold

King Bardolph was probably the handsomest monarch who had ever ruled over the fine and prosperous country of Carsovia. He was tall and dark and broad and upright. His black hair was thick and curly, his eyes blue, his teeth white, his complexion ruddy, and his strong legs were as straight as fir-trees.

In his throne-room, facing the throne, was a very bright, clear mirror; and although he was by no means vain, King Bardolph would often stand in front of his mirror, and regard with much satisfaction his very comely reflection.

But as the years rolled on the king grew lazy. He gave up his hunting and his riding, he walked no more, he breakfasted in bed and then turned over and took a nap until noon. When he did go out, he lolled in his fine carriage and yawned.

After leading this indolent life for some time, King Bardolph came one morning and stood before his splendid mirror. As he gazed at his reflection he started back with horror. What could be wrong with the mirror? Looking back at him from its smooth, polished surface was a fat, blotchy, red-faced man, with puffy eyes, a mottled nose and a rounded stomach.

"Bless my buttons!" gasped Bardolph, "what a horrid-looking fellow! The mirror must be bewitched, for I'm sure that can't be me. I may be a trifle plump, but that creature is hideously fat and certainly eats too much. Now I don't eat too much. Let me see, what did I have for breakfast? Dear, dear, dear, what was it now? Er—six eggs, seven sausages, half a chicken, four rolls some butter and some honey. Now that's not too much for a King. No, it certainly can't be me. Some wizard has bewitched the thing." And pulling a little doubtfully at his lips, he rang a bell.

When a footman entered, King Bardolph said, "Take this mirror up to the store-room, bring another and put in its place."

Upon the morrow King Bardolph hurried over his breakfast, and then walked up to the new mirror as quickly as his breathlessness would allow. As he saw the same horrid-looking fellow gazing back at him, he raised his clenched fists above his head and bellowed madly.

At that moment Diplo, his wisest and most trusted counsellor, entered the throne-room.

The King beckoned him, and when he was come to the mirror, King Bardolph said, pointing at the image in the glass, "Tippo, is that me?"

"Is that I, your Majesty means," ventured Diplo.

The King stared at him in angry puzzlement for a moment, and then he smiled and said, "Yes, of course, my wise Diplo, but kings make their own grammar. What I wish to know is, am I like that?"

Diplo smiled. "Certainly not, Your Majesty," he replied.

"Then what is the matter with the thing?" asked the angry monarch.

"The glass is faulty," replied Diplo, "Come with me, Your Majesty," he continued; and taking the King by the arm, he led him to a little window in the topmost turret of the palace.

Diplo pointed out over the blue distant hills, "Over there, O King," he said, "the Sorcerer Mohrab, in the long ago, hid the Mirror of Truth. The man who wishes to see himself as he really is must seek this magic mirror himself, and, having found it, may look within and learn the truth."

"I will set off in my carriage tomorrow, after breakfast," said Bardolph.

"That would be useless," replied Diplo; "he who seeks the Mirror of Truth must seek it afoot. Moreover," went on Diplo, "it is only to be found one hour after dawn. Thereafter for the remainder of the day and night it is invisible."

The King sighed deeply. "Ah, well," he said presently, "What must be, must be: tomorrow I will arise betimes and seek this magic glass."

And so, upon the morrow, King Bardolph arose from his silken bed before the dawn, and upon unaccustomed feet searched the hills. But he sought in vain, and returned wearily homeward.

Diplo met him and said, "Do not lose heart, O King; you shall find, if you will seek; try again."

And so upon the morrow, and for many mornings, for weeks and indeed for months, King Bardolph sought and sought upon the distant hills, in the fresh cool dawns for the magic mirror.

At the end of six months he was once again fine, slim, handsome, straight and ruddy. Diplo came to him and said, "Your Majesty, I dreamed a dream last night, and in it I thought that the Sorcerer Mohrab came to me and told me where the Mirror of Truth lies hidden. Tomorrow I will come with you and show you the place."

And so upon the morrow the two set off together. Diplo found it difficult to keep pace with the King's swift strides, but at last they reached the hills, just as the red face of the sun climbed over the misty peaks. The King stood staring at the beauty of the dawn. He seemed to have forgotten his errand, forgotten Diplo, forgotten everything.

A cry from the ground startled him to awareness. He looked down, and there at his feet crouched Diplo, pulling from under the bushes a fine shining mirror.

Diplo sprang to his feet, and crying triumphantly, "The Mirror of Truth," held it in front of the King.

The King stared into its smooth, polished surface. He saw within it the loveliness of the eastern sky, and the splendor of the new-come sun. But he saw also a fine, handsome face, with ruddy complexion and crisp curly black hair.

"At last!" he cried, "the Mirror of Truth: I knew I was like that." Then taking the mirror from Diplo, he turned it around and looked at its back. In the middle of the ebony was a long jagged scratch.

King Bardolph looked wonderingly, at the scratch for a long time, and then he said slowly, "Why, Diplo, my old mirror had a scratch on its back like that."

Diplo laughed softly. "No doubt, Your Majesty," he said; and then, after a little pause he went on, "for this is your old mirror."

"Then how in the world did it get here?" "I got it from the store-room before we started," replied Diplo, "and carried it here under my cloak."

"You sly dog!" cried Bardolph, not knowing whether to be angry or to laugh, "then there is no such thing as a Mirror of Truth?"

"On the contrary, Your Majesty," replied Diplo with a wise smile, "all mirrors are Mirrors of Truth; and all mirrors now will show you the same reflection as the one you are holding."

"Diplo," said the King, as they made their way back to the palace, "you deserve a reward for your cleverness: what shall it be?"

"A walk with Your Majesty," replied Diplo, "to the hills each dawn, as long as we both shall live."

"Granted!" cried King Bardolph with a great laugh.

The King kept his word, and in some of the very old history books, you may find them spoken of as Bordolph the Merry Monarch and Diplo the Chuckling Counsellor.—The Children's Play-Hour Book, Longmans.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

MID-WEST DISTRICT CONFERENCE

The Mid-West District Conference will be held at Mulvane, Kansas, October 8, 9, 10.

C. A. LANDIS,
Entertaining Pastor.
W. H. SCHAFFER,
Hamlin, Kansas, Secretary.

FOUND AT WINONA

Ladies coat and scarf. Owners write description to Rev. E. M. Riddle, 1120 E. Market Street, Warsaw, Indiana, and articles will be mailed. E. M. RIDDLE.

FOR DELEGATES OF THE PENNSYLVANIA DISTRICT

Conditions have arisen at the Third church of Johnstown, which make it difficult on account of equipment and lack of room to entertain the District Conference. They have been relieved of the responsibility at their request.

The conference will be entertained by the Meyersdale congregation, October 7-10.

WILLIS E. RONK,
Secretary Executive Committee.

AN APPRECIATION

On behalf of the Brethren of the Washington church, I wish to express through the medium of the Evangelist, our heartfelt appreciation for the generous and sympathetic attitude which was shown toward the Washington building program at the General Conference. We trust and believe that whatever the brotherhood feels inclined to do in the way of helping in the establishment of a strong church in the Capital City will be for the glory of God and the strengthening of our beloved denomination. We solicit the prayers of the brotherhood in behalf of this undertaking.

HOMER A. KENT, Pastor.

A NEW BULLETIN IDEA FOR PASTORS

The Layman Company is now putting out its Tithing Pamphlets in four-page Bulletin form, printed on two inside pages only, other two pages blank, for local material. The cost will give a saving of at least $5 per week to any pastor who uses four-page bulletins in his Sunday services. A good opportunity for five or ten weeks of tithe education without expense or special distribution. Twenty subjects to choose from. Send for free samples and price list.

Please give your denomination, also mention the Brethren Evangelist.

Amos--Prophet of a New Day

By W. D. Furry, President of Shorter College.

AMOS arrested the attention of his countrymen of the middle of the eighth century before Christ by challenging the bases of the comfortable and almost universal optimism which then prevailed. It was a time of peace and prosperity. Under the leadership of Jereboam II, the territorial possessions of Israel had been greatly increased and wealth had grown with the conquest. Amos succeeded in getting himself branded as a pessimist by his vigorous insistence that the civilization of Israel was more pagan than religious. A second but greater Elijah, Amos suddenly appeared from among the herdsmen of Tekoa, a stern figure in shepherd's garb, challenging the gay crowds at the royal sanctuary of Bethel. The people were not irreligious but worshipped God with a varied and sumptuous ceremonial. Magnifying the doctrine of national election they wholly forgot the doctrine of service. The nation regarded its prosperity as proof of the pleasure and sanction of God and pledge of its continuance. Conceiving the relation between the nation and God as natural rather than moral, spiritual considerations played little part in their thought and conduct. While punctilious and scrupulous in all ceremonial observances the nation failed to realize that every religious truth has a moral bearing and places the individual or nation who receives it under a moral obligation.

Amos applied his prophetic gifts to a pitiless criticism of the popular and sacerdotal religions of his day and thus becomes the pioneer of the first great moral advance. In frequent addresses Amos presents in varied ways his new and epoch-making doctrine that God's choice of Israel was ground for greater condemnation and that his blessing was conditional upon the righteousness of the people.

Precisely here Amos comes close to the vital interests of our twentieth century and we do well to study him anew. The Bible is still our best seller and multitudes own some sort of allegiance to the God of Amos and of Christ. The Church was never better institutionalized nor enjoyed greater popularity. But today as in the day of Amos too many are following "afar off" and shrink back from the audacious certitude of the ancient prophet's belief that God's unvarying test of a nation is the justice of its political and economic life in all its relationships.—The Christian Index.

Questions Answers

Conducted by
J. Allen Miller

Readers are invited to send in suitable questions, which will receive consideration as space permits.

47. Why is Sunday often called the Lord's Day? And how does it differ from the Jewish Sabbath?

This question really merits a lengthy discussion to do full justice to all the facts involved in it. But there are some very clear and definite facts to be noted and for the sake of impressing them upon the reader's mind let us enumerate them.

(1) The Lord's Day is not the Jewish Sabbath. It is not even scriptural nor historical to call the Lord's Day a Sabbath. The Sabbath is an Old Testament institution. As such it differs from the Lord's Day of the Christian Church in its meaning, its manner of observance, and its institution.

(2) The Jewish Sabbath is the seventh day of the Week. The Lord's Day is the first day of the week. The Jewish Sabbath was one of the essential parts of the Law, an essential and integral institution of the Law. As such the authority of the Law of the Sabbath ceased as certainly and as completely as any other part of the Law or any of its institutions when the New Covenant was sealed in the Death of Christ.

(3) It was very early in the second century that the first day of the week was distinctly recognized as the sacred day of the Christians under the name of the "Lord's Day." Such tradition certainly must hark back to Apostolic practice and teaching. And how it came to be so regarded becomes quite clear as we study the New Testament records. The Acts reveals the fact that at the first, Jewish Christians met on the old Mosaic Sabbath as well as on the First Day of the week. The First Day of the week was honored as the day upon which the Lord arose from the dead. One can not escape the conviction that emphasis was laid upon this fact. Note the following references: Mk. 16:2; Lk. 24:1; John 20:1; Mt. 28:1; Mk. 16:9-20; John 20:19; 20:26. Gradually the observance shifted from the Sabbath to the First Day for worship. This was always in honor of our Lord's Resurrection.

In connection with these references we may cite those other statements in which it is clearly indicated that Christians met for worship on the First Day of the week. So St. Paul in 1 Cor. 16:2. Then a little later we have the incident referred to in Acts 20:7. There would be no point to the mention of either of these texts of the First Day of the week if the use and propriety of the day as a day of worship was not in vogue.

(4) As for the use of the name "the Lord's Day" we may call the reader's attention to Rev. 1:10. This is the only mention of the term in the New Testament. It has been held by a few that the term here refers to the "Day of the Lord" of the Old Testament eschatological prophecies. This can not be the true meaning. The Old Testament Day of the Lord is a day of judgment. Besides this, there is no reference in early Christian Literature that identifies the term "the Lord's Day" with this Old Testament "Day of the Lord."

On the contrary we have an altogether different connotation of Greek words when reference is made to either of these terms. (I will paraphrase the original for both terms so that even an English reader can note the difference. He Kuriakē Hemera meaning the Lord's Day as used in Rev. 1:10 and everywhere when the first day of the week is meant; He Hemera (tou) kuriou when reference is made in the Septuagint or in the Fathers to the "Day of the Lord.")

I will close this brief discussion with an early, perhaps the earliest, reference to the Lord's Day as the first day of the week or the Christian's sacred day of worship. "But every Lord's Day do ye gather yourselves together, and break bread, and give thanksgiving after having confessed your transgressions, that your sacrifice may be pure." Didache 14:1. The date of this writing certainly can not be later than 120 A. D. Thus from the first the Christians observed the first day of the week.

A CHOICE BETWEEN CIVILIZATIONS

By Ernest H. Cherrington, L.L.D., Litt. D.,
General Secretary of the World League Against Alcoholism

The ultimate type of civilization developed in this country will be determined by the final attitude taken by the American people upon the prohibition question. Ultimately the issue is, not merely how much alcohol may be permitted in legal beverages, but whether the nation will continue to develop our high pressure industrial civilization or, abandoning this, revert to some modification of one of the various "cultures" prevalent in Europe.

No one disputes that the civilization of wine using countries is historic, beautiful and of a very high order. Equally indisputable is the fact that it is essentially different from the civilization we have been evolving in this land. Ivy covered ruins, traditions that reach back through centuries and give color and life to the customs and habits of today, a classicism which expresses itself not alone in literature and art but through more or less well defined social distinctions which sometimes approach the caste system, leisure, patina: all these have their charm. They are a part of the heritage of an aristocracy which still gives color even to such democracy as prevails in the old world. In that civilization wine has played its part.

Compared to the ancient civilizations in the wine countries of the world, American life may seem crude to some. Mass production is one of the keystones of the life. Standardization is a shibboleth. We have set our tempo not to the measured pace of an historic past—although we have through inheritance an equal claim upon those legacies of history bequeathed by the past generations of Europe—but to the present and the future. In that quickened pace of swiftly moving men and machinery, there is no place for the retarding enemy of speed, beverage alcohol. When expert students of our industrial life such as Herbert Hoover, Henry Ford, Roger Babson, Irving Fisher, Thomas N. Carver, Paul H. Nystrom, Herman Feldman, B. C. Forbes—to name only a handful out of a host—find that our production ratio, our standards of living, our high wages, our general distribution of wealth and prosperity or our homes and automobile ownership have a direct relation to our policy of national prohibition, it is quite evident that the type of civilization now developing in America can be maintained only by the continuance of that policy. There may be more romance, more ivy, more ruins, more long established social order, more charm in the wine civilizations of the old world than in what some love to call our raw, crude industrialism. It is noteworthy, however, that Congress has been compelled to build a wall of immigration laws against an exodus from the wine lands to dry America. Thatched roofs and immemorial castles alike may be lacking in America, but equally lacking are the poverty, the hopelessness, the discomforts and the fixed social condition which is the lot of so many in other lands. While no wine shop portals swing open here to the seeker of surcease of sorrow in the flowing bowl, wide doors of opportunity open in their stead. None here are taught to be "content with that station in life to which it doth please the Lord to call them." Nor need any drug themselves with nepenthe or mandragora into forgetfulness of their hard lot.

The old challenge "Under which King, Bezonian?" cannot be ignored. America may make herself a pale copy of Europe on a magnified scale with the wine and the beer which hitherto have been one of the significant factors in the character of civilization Europe has developed. We may turn from our high pressure industrial methods to the slower speed by which European workers earn from one-fourth to one-tenth the amount an American worker receives for a day's work. Instead of our present ratio of one automobile for every five people, we might reduce this number to the ratio of one to each 64 people which prevails throughout the world outside of the United States. Instead of democracy we might devise a stately although parasitic aristocracy. We might turn savings accounts into debts and exchange the widely diffused comfort and ease of the average American worker for the less enviable condition of his European fellow. We might substitute for the gateways of opportunity the swinging doors of the debit, the tavern, the inn and the wine shop. It could be done. More, it would be done if the alcoholists for the vintner and the brewer should have their way. But in the way of realization of their aims there stands the cold common sense of the American citizen who prefers crude American prosperity with prohibition to the alternative presented by the wine lands of the world.

More General Conference Comments

The most that the average attendant at General Conference carried away, we dare say, was an impression. He will remember very little of what was said, unless he took notes, and the average person did not do that. But he did carry away a certain impression, or feeling, or attitude of mind, and if the conference was a success for him, he went away with a feeling of satisfaction and encouragement in the work of the church, with a sense of having been inspired by and confirmed in the belief of the truth of the Gospel, and with a consciousness of the importance and responsibility of giving self and substance in larger measure to the service of Christ. He doubtless went away feeling spiritually strengthened and refreshed by the messages delivered, though he may not be able to quote one entire sentence that was spoken. And that is more important—to be thus impressed—than to remember all the rhetoric that was there poured forth. And he will have been reassured by having met so many others who are active and confident and loyal. That personal fellowship with those of kindred mind is always an outstanding benefit of such gatherings, and the fraternal spirit and hopeful attitude manifest on every hand at this conference was such as to buoy up the jaded, discouraged soul of some local church leader. Every such delegate, however much or little he may have been able to report of what was said and done at conference, ought now to be able to carry back some of that fine sense of belonging together, of fellow-feeling, of mutual understanding and ought to do what he can to rekindle, if it has been smoldering, that kindly, helpful spirit in his own little group.

The attendance of Conference was a sort of a three-sided affair, from the standpoint of personnel, instead of being "four-square" as would have been ideal. In other words, there were men and women and girls in goodly numbers, but few boys. That was a noticeable lack and not a few of the leaders felt the significance of the situation. It was not a characteristic peculiar to this conference, it was simply more noticeable and more pronounced due to the accumulating force of our neglect of the boys for a number of years. There has been no special inducement for boys to go to conference. They have been offered nothing that was of their own distinctive interest, as is offered to the girls through the Sisterhood of Mary and Martha, and to the women through the W. M. S., and now to the men, since they are getting the good sense to exclude the women, through their Laymen's organization. But there is encouragement in the fact that conference sensed this lack and appointed a committee (E. L. Miller, R. R. Haun, E. M. Riddle, Delbert Flora and Donald Bame) to work out a program and plan of organization that will not only offer the boys something of interest and helpfulness at General Conference, but that will carry the challenge of service and loyalty back to the neglected boys in the home church. Many will be looking forward expectantly to the work of this committee.

This conference gave occasion for an increased hopefulness in the church's future by the emphasis it placed on the building up of the home base. For several years there has been a growing awareness of the importance of launching out more aggressively in home missions until it has become a strong conviction on the part of some of our leaders, particularly those of the Home Board. This conviction was manifest in conference address, in expression from the floor of conference and in the advanced program of the Home Board, and proposes to achieve its ends in three avenues of special effort. One is that of conservation through a program that is to be worked out for the effective shepherding of isolated members and unchurched groups, from which we have suffered a great leakage in membership. Another is the stirring of the churches to the support of a more challenging home mission program, particularly through the efforts of a field secretary, who has been appointed in the person of R. Paul Miller. And another is the increased emphasis that is to be placed on evangelism under the leadership of the Evangelistic and Bible Study League, the Home Board's field secretary and also, as was suggested by certain of the leaders, through the various district mission boards. Greater emphasis on evangelism is one of the most important duties to be pressed upon the churches at this time, and every possible means to get every unit into line and active should be made use of. We believe it would be helpful to have a goal set before the brotherhood to stimulate to more intensive effort and definite results within a given time. There is something about a limited time set for a specific task that puts the urge into people. We suggest a five thousand net gain in membership in the next five years.

Another thing that gave a feeling of optimism to many at conference and caused them to entertain a sense of pride in the church was a consideration of the growing size of our moneyed investments and gifts in behalf of the Kingdom. As the financial reports of the various interests were being read we did a little calculating and discovered that by means of all these various boards we are handling, annually a total of approximately $315,000.00 of receipts, not including the financial receipts of the W. M. S., the report of which was not given at the General Conference financial report session, but which we understand is slightly over $10,000.00 for the year. Nor did we include in our calculations the College Endowment receipts from Ashland city and county. This does not mean that we make outright gifts of that amount each year, for Publishing House earnings as well as college tuitions and Endowment earnings are included. But it indicates the size to which we, though still one of the least of denominations, have grown. And our actual gifts per year, for the general interests (not including district missions) as indicated by these latest reports, are in the neighborhood of five dollars per capita, that is, for every man, woman and child of our membership. These figures are not accurate, but are approximately correct and are a source of encouragement, especially in view of the fact that this last year has been a poor year for some of our general offerings.

This, of course, is not intended as food for our pride and self-exaltation, but merely to lift some of our discouraged brethren out of the slough of despond. We have done nothing whereof to boast, and we cannot boast save in the cross of Christ. We have not begun to do our best. We have not given our tithe, to say nothing of gifts of sacrifice and self-denial. When we have given our very utmost, and sacrificed to the very limit, we must still say we are unprofitable servants; we have done only that which was our duty to do. But if we have been discouraged and disposed to give up, let us take heart in the thought that God has so abundantly prospered us, and used us beyond our expectations. And what we have done is but a faint token of what he will yet enable us to do if we but trust and obey and give ourselves over wholly to his will.

The Roadside Cross

Two men were riding through the country roads of Ohio when they came upon some little wooden crosses, possibly three or four feet high, planted near the roadside. One man, who had come from a distant state and was not familiar with these little white crosses, inquired of his friend what they meant. He was told that they were placed there as a warning against careless and reckless driving, that each cross marked the spot where a death by automobile accident had occurred and stood there as a mute appeal to caution against the kind of driving that might lead to other tragic deaths. The stranger to these parts protested that the cross was too sacred and significant a Christian symbol to be put to such a use. And his friend at first thought was inclined to agree that he was right, that such a strange use of the cross was almost sacrilege, that it was bringing down a sublime, holy thing to a common, earthly use.

But after a little thought, the Ohio man said to his visitor that he was not so sure that such a use of the cross was wholly unjustified, or that it was so great a profaning of sacred things after all. Men are meeting with needless death all along these highways, and nothing speaks so readily and plainly as the cross to every man of whatever station in life, or race, or degree of understanding of the danger or death that lurks in the way. The cross speaks a language that all men can understand, and it warns against death that is unnecessary and avoidable, if men will only use care. And so if it can be the means of saving men from physical death, why should it not be used?

And besides, these crosses by the roadside will accomplish a far higher service than that for which they were planted. They will bring to the minds of men thoughts, possibly, seldom entertained or long since excluded, thoughts of a cruel and untimely death of long ago, a death that seemed untimely indeed, and yet one that occurred in the very fulness of time—the death of Jesus Christ upon the cross of Calvary. It is true that these little crosses have their peculiar and local meaning, and there is a marked contrast between these needless deaths by accident and the dying of him whose death was not accidental, but was fore-ordained from the foundation of the world, and was not purposeless but was for the salvation of men. And while these crosses may carry a local and temporary meaning, yet they cannot help reminding men of that infinitely greater event that is worldwide and timeless in its significance—the death of the Son of God. The cross, wherever it is planted and whatever its environment, cannot be entirely separated from that greatest tragedy of all history. Whatever other meaning men may seek to give it, it will continue to speak to the world first and invariably of heaven's Supreme Sacrifice. It is as impossible to disrobe it of that meaning as it is to detach the sun from its rays. Every sight of the cross will speak of the dying of the only begotten Son of God; it stands for a death that warns against death. And it behooves men that they, seeing it, will not close the doors of their minds against the thought of him whose death was not needless nor fruitless, but will themselves be warned against a death that is at once unnecessary and inexcusable, and unending in its consequences.

Laymen's Day is the second Sunday in October. This is the one day in the year when the laymen are supposed to have charge of at least one of the services and take an offering.

Brother B. F. Owen, who has accepted a call to the pastorate of the Nappanee, Indiana, church, writes that he and his family are nicely located in their new field and have been kindly received by the church. The opening services were well attended.

Our Indiana Brethren will convene in district conference at the North Manchester church, of which Prof. J. Raymond Schutz is pastor. This is a good place for "progressive" Dunker folks to go. The date is October 8 to 10. The program is to be found in this issue.

The program of the Pennsylvania district conference is to be found in this issue. The place and date are Myersdale, October 7 to 10. We are sure that Brother Willis E. Ronk and his good people will prove themselves good hosts and that they will be pleased with a large attendance.

Dr. A. D. Gnagey, pastor of the church at Altoona, Pennsylvania, writes that he is back on the job, since attending conference, well and happy, and adds: "Fall campaign has opened and I mean to push it with vigor through the year." It sounds like a young pastor talking. And why not? Youth is not a matter of years, merely, but of spirit and of purpose, and we might add, of personal care.

We are indebted to Brother J. L. Gingrich, secretary of General Conference, for the excellent report of the proceedings of the late conference. Those who were not privileged to attend, will enjoy acquainting themselves with the particulars, and those who were there may wish to refresh their memories some. Brother Floyd Sibert, the assistant secretary, supplied the minutes for the Sunday activities.

On their page the Christian Endeavorers will find a report by their general secretary, Miss Spice, of some of the things they did at Winona. We wish to call attention to the fact that they made provision for keeping this department fresh and interesting through the year and the burden of that responsibility will fall upon their newly elected editor of that department, Brother Thomas Hammers, a young theolog of Ashland College. We bespeak the hearty cooperation of all Endeavorers in his efforts.

We are in receipt of an announcement of the "Annual Homecoming and Anniversary Day" held in the Brethren church of Carleton, Nebraska, on September 8th. All-day services were conducted with a dinner in the church at the noon hour. Two features of interest characterized the afternoon service: a sermonette on "Old Hymns and their History" together with the singing of some of the old hymns, and special honors bestowed on one of their girls who had missed but one Sunday school service in eight years. Such faithfulness deserves being honored. Brother W. R. Deeter is the pastor of this church.

The National Board of Benevolences is calling for that offering that you failed to send in last February for the support of the superannuated ministers. It amounts to just forty cents per member. Now count your church members and then multiply that by forty and you will have the amount you were supposed to give. Because a goodly number did not give their share, the Benevolence Board is faced with a shortage of eight hundred and fifty dollars. General Conference authorized the Board to go before the churches with another appeal for the offering they failed to get early in the year. It is evident that they cannot pay allowances out of an empty treasury. But winter is coming on and those of our own number whose care rests in large measure upon the church must receive their allowances. The brotherhood cannot afford to do itself the dishonor of failing to meet this unavoidable obligation. Those congregations that have not done their duty, whatever may have been the reason for their failure last February, should come across now. The date suggested by the Board—September 22—will be found too early for many, doubtless, but it is perfectly proper to use the next Sunday, or any other during the fall, for that purpose. But take the first suitable date and get your duty done and the money into the hands of the Board for use.

Word from Brother E. L. Miller, secretary of the General Conference Executive Committee, informs us that our Conference has been granted its regular week at Winona Lake in 1930. He says, "I have the great pleasure to report to you that the Board of Directors of Winona Institutions agreed to set their programs back a week so we could plan to be at Winona again next year. I have signed the contract to the effect that we have the usual privileges and meet August 25th next." Brother Miller truly expresses what was the feeling of the late conference when he says it was very kind of the Goshen people to invite the 1930 Conference when it seemed that we had no suitable date at Winona, but after consulting the pastor and some of the church people, he feels sure that, all things considered, they are better pleased to have the conference go to Winona. It was gracious of the Goshen people to invite us and it was unselfish of them to refuse to press their claims after we had once voted to go there and had been offered our old date again at Winona. That reminds us, too, that we need to be appreciative of the consideration shown us by the Winona management. Brother Miller adds: "Several of our leaders have written me telling me how they enjoyed the conference this year. They enjoyed the program and also the fine spirit and sweet fellowship that was rampant during the whole of conference week. . . . Already the Executive Committee has gone a long way to give us a better program next year." The committee and its efficient secretary deserve our thanks and sincere resolve to support them next year.

PRAYER REQUESTS FOR THIS WEEK—

Pray that all churches that have not responded may now take the necessary offering in response to the new appeal of the Benevolence Board.

Our missionaries in Africa are continuing their request for prayer. They say your prayers are being answered for the clearing up of the war situation, and they wish the continuance of your prayer support.

Pray for the district conferences soon to be held.

Things By the Way. XXI

By A. D. Gnagey

Our Best for God

With the wonderful story of God's marvelous deliverance of the children of Israel in his mind the great law-giver of Israel had no hesitation in demanding the people to bring the very best they had when they made an offering to God. How could any one, rather, how dare any one, bring an animal that was blind, or broken, or lame, or diseased, and expect God to be pleased with it while the best of the flock was kept back from him and for the one purpose that he might use the best for himself? Would that be putting God first? "When you make an offering," said the law of Moses, "there shall be no blemish in it." The best we have is not too good to give to our Lord. For our sakes he gave up to death the best and finest in heaven,—“what hast thou given to him?” God wants our trust, our love, our obedience, he expects the kind word, the pure thought, and the loving deed, and more than that, he asks of us a life given over to him for the service he can prepare us to render. The best thing you have is your life, and your life, every day of it, is the offering he is asking you to give to him.

The Life of the Early Church People

In a few poignant and succinct statements, a half dozen verses, Acts 2:42-47, we are given a picture of the life of the disciples during the early days of the church in Jerusalem. They remained in that city and at first were not disturbed by the Jewish leaders, being looked upon as faithful Jews who differed from the others only in their belief that Jesus was the promised Messiah. Three things characterized the life of these early pupils of the Spirit, all three of which the church of today will do well to imitate. (1) They were constantly taught about Christ,—there was more teaching than preaching. For centuries the church had overlooked the teaching program of Jesus. We have now discovered that the great commission as recorded by Matthew says nothing about preaching, while the word TEACH appears twice. The church must be a teaching church if it would be apostolic. The early church was more than a Sunday school, it was a day-school as well. Peter and John and the other apostles who had known Jesus were the first teachers; the people who joined their circle were the pupils. Thus early in its life the church was regarded, as it should be now, a training school for service, not as a community of full-fledged saints. Christians are saints in the making. (2) They regularly attended public worship and observed the Lords' supper. The temple was their church edifice for the time being. They had daily prayer meetings, and at home observed the breaking of bread, which seems to imply that they daily gathered by families or in larger groups to commemorate the Lord's Supper. In this united service they found mutual strength and inspiration. One helped the other. Such services are just as necessary for the growth of the Christian life now as then. To be apostolic we must go to church, or at least assemble somewhere for public worship. (3) The spirit of fellowship was very prominent. Read the story, especially verses 44 and 45. They shared their possessions with those who were in need. "The distinction between mine and thine was lost in an overflowing love." That line was obliterated. There was no middle class, no lower element, and no higher. This rare generosity and their spirit of mutual helpfulness impressed their neighbors as decidedly unusual, and it was unusual, so that day by day many were won to their belief and way of living. For, note, to them the religion of Jesus was a way of living, a different way. It meant new life to them, the abundant life. About fundamentalism and liberalism and modernism the people of the early church knew nothing. They did know Jesus, and to know him and the God who sent him—this was life eternal for them, and it is for us today. They were not asked whether they believe this or that. When one confessed Jesus as his Savior, the one who was crucified and rose again the third day, that was sufficient. It is different now. There are certain beliefs which one is expected to hold or be marked as unorthodox, beliefs with which the early church was not burdened and concerning which Jesus never said a word. Our only hope for unity of thought and practice is to rally around Jesus as the center and life, the all of our religion, to take him seriously, think as he thought, speak as he spoke, pray as he prayed, work as he worked, live as he lived—beyond that no mere human authority may go.

The General Conference

As at present organized, it is essential that this body, representing all the churches of the brotherhood, should meet annually. This it has done since the year 1892 when it met for the first time at Winona Lake then known as Eagle's Lake, owned and controlled by the Byer Brothers, one of whom still lives. Since 1892 the General Conference of the Brethren churches has met annually at this place, with these exceptions, three times at Ashland, once at Johnstown, and once at Dayton. Prior to 1892 the Conference met at Ashland in 1882, at Dayton in 1883 and again at Ashland in 1887. Then no conference was held until 1892 when we began our annual pilgrimage to Winona Lake. The last conference, therefore, was the forty-sixth gathering, but the forty-third annual. In those early days we counted among the leaders such men as H. R. Holsinger, J. H. Worst, Stephen H. Bashor, of evangelist fame, W. L. Spanogle, J. H. Swihart, P. J. Brown, J. M. Tombaugh, Hildebrand of Waterloo, Iowa, with J. L. Gillin and J. Allen Miller just coming into prominence. Then as now, the Brethren claimed substantial reasons for our existence as a separate body of people. It was ever made clear that we stood for something distinctive, something worth while, it was a four-square stand on the Gospel. The side issues, the trappings, the extra baggage we have taken on since did not trouble us in those days. It is no longer baptism by trine immersion, the three-fold observance of Holy Communion that distinguishes us from other communions. One hears very little about these outstanding doctrines which were characteristic of the early church and which made the Brethren church different from other bodies. Evidently we have lost something, erst-whiles which some of us regret. And those of us who took our stand for a gospel-alone church in a day when it meant social ostracism, the loss of friends, the breaking away from home ties, fathers, mothers, brothers and sisters, friendships, which caused deep and painful wounds, to those of us who passed through that early stage of reconstruction, it all seems like a dream, yea, more than that, well-nigh tragic, pathetically tragic, as the memories of those former days loom up. Our eyes and ears are open and sensitive to the teaching which characterizes these annual gatherings, and unconsciously we ask ourselves, Was it worth-while? If the beliefs to which one must now subscribe his name to enter the Brethren ministry had been paramount in those early days, the reader may be assured that a goodly number, some who have fallen asleep and others who still linger, would have counted the cost of that early struggle.

Why I Appreciated General Conference

By N. V. Leatherman

I particularly appreciated our General Conference this year because of the definite interest manifested, looking towards church extension and conservation of our membership. At another conference some talking and suggesting along this line was the rule. This conference stepped forward.

A field man for the National Home Mission Board is to be highly appreciated by all who are interested in the forward movement of the church. The backing of this move on the part of the church further demonstrates an interest and willingness on the part of the church in cooperating with our Boards in matters that really mean business. If we are loose in our government, methods, aims and actions, it is not the mind and intent of our people that we be so. We need leadership. We need aims set. We need to be challenged. Then we will respond. Ashland College Endowment Campaign demonstrates this. Our Foreign Mission Program demonstrates this. Now we are looking to the National Home Board to lead, aim and challenge us with a program equal to either our College Endowment or Foreign Mission Program.

One other outstanding thing besides many others we appreciated was the action taken to appoint a commission or committee to survey our isolated membership. Just what benefits will be derived from this survey remains to be seen, and depends very largely upon the committee appointed, which we would in no way question, as well as it depends upon the faithfulness in cooperation on the part of pastors and church leaders. At any rate, we believe the idea and intent of the action is a very commendable one. And one which should merit our heartiest support with enthusiasm. These two actions thrilled the writer as no other actions in the conference, and we appreciated it all.

An Appreciation of the late Brethren Conference

By M. E. Horner

Having been asked to contribute a few lines to the Evangelist in appreciation of the late conference, I can truly say so far as I was able to judge that it was one of our best, during our history. I think I had the pleasure of attending our first conference held at Winona Lake, Indiana, and have only missed a few since that time. Sometimes enthusiasm in discussion ran high but was interesting to the eager listener. The late conference seemed to possess the true spirit of peace and good will through the entire program. The conference made no mistake in choosing Brother Alva J. McClain as its moderator; he served in a fine Christian spirit to the closing session. The addresses, papers and lectures were all uplifting, at least all we heard bore that tone. Brother Rensch's paper to the ministers was truly great. Read it when it appears in the Evangelist. Then, too, Dr. Jacobs on Laymen of Bible Times, Dr. Shively on Laymen of the Present, and a sister gave a very interesting paper on Laywomen of Bible Times. These all were given at the Layman's sessions.

Dr. Arthur I. Brown's lectures each day added much to the interest of the conference. I think we are safe in saying that, judging from the attendance at the lecture sessions. His last lecture on the Present World Signs of the Near Return of our Lord, closing with a touching story of the conversion of one who was deep in sin, brought tears to many. Brethren, we should have a word of good cheer for the servants of the most High who are out in the interest of the Kingdom, even if they are not of us. Read Mark 9:38. Our conference, as well as others, are an inspiration to one. During the early part of August we enjoyed a day at Lake Harbor, Michigan, at the "Defenders of Faith conference." Enjoyed very much Howard Snyder, the bird man, also a great sermon by Dr. Winrod, and a typical Jewish passover illustrated in full, by a Jewish Rabbi.

May God bless the future conferences, both state and national to much good.

Goshen, Indiana.

The Bible Lectures of the Conference

By William A. Steffler

The forty-first annual conference of the Brethren church has passed and now is history. It will long live in the memory of those who were privileged to attend. While we would not acclaim it the best conference we have had, we believe that it is equal to them all. That fine spirit which is truly BRETHREN was manifested through the entire week; everyone had a kind word and a congenial smile for the other fellow.

While the messages and devotions were all predominated by the Spirit of God and were enjoyed by the delegates present, the feature of the entire conference was the Bible lectures by Dr. Arthur I. Brown.

Perhaps Dr. Brown is not very well known by the people of the Brethren church, but he proved himself a real child of God, one who truly loves the Lord, one who is willing to sacrifice time, money and self to proclaim the wonderful truths that the Lord has laid on his heart.

It was this writer's privilege to have a personal interview with Dr. Brown and his whole conversation was one of giving praise and glory to the Lord who saved him when he was but a lad of twelve (12) years of age.

Dr. Brown was born in the state of Michigan. As a young man he was educated in the United States, but he took his college work and graduated from the Toronto University of Canada. He took postgraduate work in both England and Scotland.

While yet a young man he wandered from the teachings of the Word of God and he became an Evolutionist and a Modernist. God opened his eyes to the real truth while he was yet being taught by that great evolutionist, Sir Arthur Keith.

About four years ago he felt the call to leave a very successful surgery practice and go forth preaching the truths of the Scripture that God had revealed to him. During these four years he has spoken in many colleges and at large conventions, being used of the Lord to lead many out of darkness and doubt into which they had entered by accepting MAN'S theory instead of GOD'S.

We were extremely fortunate in having this man with us during our conference. The subjects on which he spoke during the convention were: "The Wonder Book of the Ages," "Genesis and Modern Science," "The Absurdities and Collapse of Evolution," "Christianity at the Crossroads," "Jonah and the Whale: Noah's Ark and the Flood," "Signs of the Times." These lectures were received by a large audience.

Near the close of the conference, delegates tired as they were from attending many sessions were eager to hear Dr. Brown give a special lecture on, "THE WONDERS OF THE HUMAN BODY." This was given in the afternoon of a very warm day but the auditorium was well filled.

Being a surgeon Dr. Brown was able to give a very interesting study on this body of ours and he would always add, "Back of this marvelous body we must recognize the designer."

Dr. Brown received many fine words of commendation for his lectures but he always gave the praise and glory to his Lord, where it belonged.

Hundreds were inspired at our conference by these Bible lectures and we trust that such rare treats in the future will be enjoyed by even more of the Brethren people.

May God bless and continue to use in his service, Dr. Brown.

May we, who heard the messages have our faith strengthened so that God will be able to use us more and more.

The Eternal Purpose of Grace

By Frank Gehman

(Written copy of sermon delivered on the evening of July 31 at the Asbury M. E. Church of Uniontown, Pa., in one of a series of union services.)

Text: "That in the ages to come he might show the exceeding riches of his grace in kindness toward us in Christ Jesus."—Eph. 2:7.

The kindness of one person toward another never fails to warm our hearts. An unusually fine expression of kindness draws forth our instant approbation. The kindnesses that man may show to man, however fine and noble, fall notably short of God's grace which is his unchangeable and loving kindness to man. This grace of God is eternal. It abides forever, and its effects abide forever. It is purposeful. Its purpose is as eternal as the grace itself. Paul makes known that purpose to the Ephesians as being such "that in the ages to come he might show the exceeding riches of his grace in kindness toward us in Christ Jesus."

Man figures PROMINENTLY in the manifestation of the grace of God. He gives the very occasion for its manifestation. We are not concerned here with the question of whether or not more of God's creatures than man are involved in his grace. We are speaking of that particular grace which God has shown to his special creation, man. Man has called forth this particular grace from God. Paul is thankful "for the grace of God which was given" the Corinthians "in Christ Jesus" (1 Cor. 1:4). This grace which came to them, and which comes to all children of God, would not be in the world had it not been necessary for Jesus Christ to come into the world to save man. Had not man sinned the coming of Jesus Christ to save him had not been necessary. Thus man's sin has afforded the occasion for the manifestation of God's grace. It called forth an evident expression of God's love in the grace wherewith he supplied us in the salvation of Jesus Christ.

That man benefits from the exercise of God's grace is well known to every regenerated person. That benefit means all the difference between life and death, between salvation and condemnation. "By grace have ye been saved through faith; and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God" (Eph. 2:8). It is impossible to conceive a larger, more valuable benefit than this. In countless ways the teeming millions of our own fair country benefit from our national institutions and laws, yet that benefit is only temporal. The benefit which repentant men receive from the grace of God ministered to us through his Son is eternal. So that man figures strongly in this expression of grace by virtue of the benefits derived from it.

Man also has a large place in it because he shares in the glory accruing from this manifestation of grace. His glory is not the same as that of the Father, neither is it identical with that of the Son, yet he participates in glory. Despite the mutual sharing of glory each has his own special investment, the Father, the Son, and redeemed man. The grace of God provides our atonement. The Father's glory comes from the act of supplying the grace. The Son's, which raises him above all things in heaven and earth, from his having effected the atonement. Man's comes from receiving it. The Son counselled with the Father, "The glory which thou hast given me I have given unto them; that they may be one, even as we are one" (John 17:22). This is the glory of present union with Christ, and unity in Christ. It is not the future glory of the heavenly state in which the saints seem to more fully share the glory of Christ. It is "the glory, therefore, of the indwelling Spirit of Christ; the glory of an accepted state, of a holy character, of every grace" (J. F. B.). Thus man figures in the great evidence of God's grace toward us through having occasioned it, through benefiting directly by it and from having a share of glory in its expression.

While man is important in the matter it is even more strongly obvious that Jesus Christ himself is ESSENTIAL to the successful accomplishment of grace. He has given us the actual manifestation of that grace. Except for his faithfulness we had not known the grace of God. God chose before the foundation of the world that the Son should be the vehicle of grace. In the Son was invested all the powers, all the fulness of the Godhead (Col. 1:19; 2:9), that he might be lacking in nothing in making known every grace of God. Although the law came through Moses, "grace and truth came through Jesus Christ" (John 1:17). The one representing another must always be equal to his task. In choosing one through whom to manifest his grace to the world God chose a faithful witness, and "hath at the end of these days spoken unto us in his Son" (Heb. 1:2).

Again, Jesus Christ is essential to the successful accomplishment of the divine purpose of grace in that he has made it possible for us to be recipients of that grace. What is the use of sending an envoy to a country or to countries, with a proffered solution to an international problem when all know that the solution can not be put into practice? God's grace would mean nothing to men were it totally out of our reach. Thousands of willing hands would have aided those unfortunate crews of airships disastrously drowned at sea in attempted trans-Atlantic flights had the crews only been accessible. Jesus Christ has made possible the working of divine grace in our hearts. He has made us recipients of it upon our choice of it. "But now in Christ Jesus ye that once were far off are made nigh in the blood of Christ" (Eph. 2:13). "For through him we both (Jew and Gentile) have our access in one Spirit unto the Father" (Eph. 2:18).

The purpose of grace stands, eternally, in him. "That . . . he might show the exceeding riches of his grace . . . in Christ Jesus." As he has been responsible for making plain the workings of grace so does the eternal purpose of grace stand in him. The very kindness of the Father toward us is in the Son. He has opened the great storehouse of God's kindnesses to our needs. What we lack has been made up in Christ Jesus. If either the vehicle or the recipient of grace were to cease to be such the exercise of grace would cease despite any character of the giver. However, the purpose of grace is that "he might show in the ages to come the exceeding riches" of it. Our eternal existence depends upon the eternity of Jesus Christ for our life is in him, but as he is "the same yesterday and today, yea and forever" (Heb. 13:8) the great purpose of grace is realized in its eternal application.

This great purpose is that "through the ages to come" God's "kindness toward us in Christ Jesus" may be seen by all. God MUST ASSUME this glory upon himself. Nor can we accuse him of being selfish in taking it to himself. His love has prompted his grace toward us. Love cannot be selfish, and, particularly so, perfect love emanating from the Perfect Person. There is a lot of false modesty in the world. It may, occasionally, become as bothersome as conceit. If you have earned praise don't feign undue modesty in receiving it. If you haven't deserved praise don't conceitedly think it should be yours anyhow. God faces no need of petty discriminations such as man does. What is God's is his. What isn't simply isn't. He extended grace to man; the glory for doing so is his. Nothing of selfishness enters either into the act or the purpose of the act so he cannot be selfish in receiving the glory.

Certainly it is impossible for man to have the glory. He has neither saved himself nor exercised the grace. He has all the time been only receiving. In fact, his honor comes in receiving that which God has provided. He is the party of the third part in the contract, and the only importance and value he has is that which the first two parties (the Father and the Son) have attached to him. He has all the time been taking in and not giving out. He has been the recipient and not the provider of grace. Manifestly the purpose of grace is not to show forth eternally any splendid qualities of man.

It simply follows that the weight of glory must rest with God. It is impossible for God to alter his own character. He must always be consistent with himself. Consistency, to say nothing of justice and equity, demands that he who provides the grace shall be the One to be eternally glorified thereby. There is no question from where the grace is forthcoming. That grace itself is to be eternal in its manifestations premises that the honor shall also be eternal. Man cannot alter the character of, though he might take away from the property of God. Nor can man change his own character sufficiently to rise from death to life. Such being true so far as man is anywhere concerned grace's purpose must be realized in the eternal glory and honor of God.

That great purpose, Paul informs us, is "that through the ages to come he might show the exceeding riches of his grace in kindness toward us in Christ Jesus." It is to be to the ETERNAL GLORY of God. It is the showing of "the exceeding riches of his grace in kindness toward us." It is the revealing of the graciousness of his character. The glory of God is nothing more nor less than the clear revealing of his true self. Nothing more is necessary than that God's true character be openly manifested. Some of God's creatures have an extremely poor conception of who God is and what he is like. When we receive his grace we are helping make him more clearly evident to the blind ones of his creation. This purpose of grace gives us an exalted picture of himself. How purposeful then is this grace of God which teaches us more of the marvel of his Perfect Being! It is an eternal picture, and, therefore, an eternal glory.

God is the Perfect, Supreme Being of the universe. His very perfection and supremacy are shown in this eternal purpose of his. There is greater glory in mercy than in strict judgment. Or, as James puts it, "Mercy glorieth against judgment" (Jas. 2:13b). The small-souled man prefers to strike his enemy the death-blow when the enemy is helpless. The noble man gives his enemy an equal chance. The father down a man goes the tighter Satan binds him—the weaker he is the more Satan imposes his own will upon him. The farther down a man is the greater distance does God's grace bring him to that level whereon the children of God dwell—the weaker a man is the more strength God supplies. "And he hath said unto me, My grace is sufficient for thee: for my power is made perfect in weakness" (2 Cor. 12:9). The purpose of God in his graciousness toward us only demonstrates the great height above man at which he dwells.

Man's full realization of life and eternity rest upon his willingness to accord to God his rightful place in the universe. In fact, this is essential to salvation itself. It implies the recognition of God's saving power and grace through the blood of the Lord Jesus Christ. It requires a recognition of man's need of what God has provided. It implies our receiving it in the manner in which he has given it for our redemption. God is showing the exceeding riches of his grace in Christ Jesus toward us. Unless we receive it to ourselves we have failed our part in the eternal purpose of it. His glory is manifested in the showing of this grace; we are invested in glory in the receiving of it. The eternal purpose stands in both, and Jesus Christ is the One who has made possible both the Father's manifestation and our acceptance of it.

SOME DENOUNCE BUT MORE WELCOME CHRISTIANITY

A prominent Christian Chinese from Taining, Shaowu, China, received an official appointment in Kienning. Followed, as is the custom, a series of feasts to which prominent gentry were invited. This Chinese is enthusiastic about his new faith and discusses it at all such gatherings. A representative of the Kuomintang was among the guests one night. Rising, after one of these discussions, this latter man astonished his host by a virulent attack on Christianity. "In the minds of many," he argued, "all missionaries are representatives of the Imperial West, and whether here as ministers, teachers or doctors, are spies in disguise." What was the attitude of the remaining guests at the banquet? One man out of ten assented. The rest kept a discreet silence. Only those who have lived in China and worked with the Chinese know what they think of the missionaries and their work. It is not well, say the missionaries, to listen too much to the voice of protest and consider too little the opinions of the respectable citizens who think before they speak.

But if anyone thinks that this is a new attitude on the part of the Chinese, or certain Chinese, toward Christian missions, they are very much mistaken, declares Rev. George W. Shepherd of Kienning. Over one hundred years ago, he points out, when Dr. Morrison, the first Protestant missionary, began his work in Canton, this same attitude prevailed. Down through the years the identical argument against Christian missionaries has been presented by the same type of agitators. Always the theme is the same; the missionaries are hypocrites, using philanthropy and religion as a screen behind which they may operate for the downfall of China. "Less than ten years ago," declares Mr. Shepherd, "it was impossible for missionaries to purchase one square foot of ground in this city, as the gentry and leading citizens were opposed to the coming of foreigners. Since then they have been sending repeated requests to the American Board for the return of those Americans who have left during the recent disturbances."—The Congregationalist.

DR. ZWEMER TO TEACH

Dr. J. Ross Stevenson, of Princeton Theological Seminary, has announced that Dr. Samuel M. Zwemer, of Cairo, Egypt, has accepted the Chair of History of Religion and Christian Missions at Princeton. Dr. Zwemer is well known to those interested at all in missions. He was ordained to the ministry in the Dutch Reformed church in 1890 and became a missionary to Arabia in 1891. He has traveled extensively in mission work and is perhaps the foremost authority on missions to Moslems. For a number of years Dr. Zwemer has edited The Moslem World, a magazine dealing with missions to Mohammedans. He has written many books on the same subject and is well known as a speaker of power and earnestness. He was in the thick of the Arab uprisings of 1892 and 1904. It was Dr. Zwemer who supplied the organizing power which brought into being the conference of Missions to Moslems. For many years now his home has been at Cairo. His coming to Princeton will strengthen the faculty of that Seminary along missionary lines.—Herald of Gospel Liberty.

CITY AND RURAL BUDGETS

A recent survey made in the state of Virginia reveals the fact that the average city church budget is about ten times the average rural church budget, while the annual contribution per city church member is only twice as much as the contribution per rural church member. The difference in budget comes about through the fact that the average city church in Virginia has a membership of 477, while the average rural church has but a membership of 109. On the basis of average income, it is probably true that the rural church member is contributing far nearer to his limit than the city church member.—International Journal of Religious Education.

SENATOR DILL SHOWS THE WET STATEMENT INCORRECT

Last week the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment made the assertion that the death rate from alcoholism has been mounting since the adoption of prohibition. Senator Dill of Washington has pointed out the misinformation contained in the statement.

"United States census reports tell a different story," he said. "The census bureau's analysis of its recent statistics says:

"The death rate from alcoholism reached 5.6 per 100,000 of population for the twenty years prior to prohibition. The highest it has been since prohibition is 3.9 per 100,000. It averaged 2.5 in the dry states and 4.5 in the wet states. In all but four cities the death rate from alcoholism is lower than in the saloon days."

"The Mutual Life Insurance Company report for 1926 said:

"This year every important cause of death showed a decrease from the year before."

Dr. George H. Gigelow, commissioner of public health in Massachusetts says:

"What is killing people now who die from alcoholism is what killed them back in the days of the high alcoholic death rates of 1916 and 1917 and before, namely, ethyl alcohol, grain alcohol, or good pure alcohol."

"Dr. Reid Hunt of Harvard Medical School says:

"It is well for everybody to remember that a person deeply intoxicated is near death, and that a dose of alcohol slightly greater than necessary to cause profound intoxication is a fatal dose."—The Christian-Evangelist.

Our Worship Program

Daily Readings and Comments

(Keep with your Bible)

MONDAY

John 2:1-12. Whatsoever. This has become something of a controversial passage in recent years. It is the writer's opinion that Jesus would not perform this same miracle again if he were living in the world of today, because of the different standards which have resulted from his own teachings; like divorce, many things have been permitted through the years, "because of the hardness of your hearts." To me, the passage shows, rather, the ability of Jesus to help in any time of need, his great power, and his matchless simplicity. O that all men might learn that when they do whatsoever he commands the common things of life are transmuted into beauty and nobleness!

TUESDAY

John 2:13-25. Preparation for Worship. There were many wrong practices going on in the temple in Jesus' day, causing him to call it a den of thieves. He referred not so much to the cheating of the merchants and money changers, as to the fact that people's minds were taken away from the thought of worship. They were thus robbed of the very thing for which the temple existed, and the effect was far-reaching. May this not be true of our Christian temples today, Our Father, either through their week-day activities, or through their worship services on the Lords' Day. And in the temples of our lives may no wrong or impure things rob us of our fellowship with thee, thus robbing our fellow men of the influence of a God-directed life as well.

WEDNESDAY

John 3:1-8. Inexplicable. Many sincere Christians are today spending much time trying to explain just how and why the things of the Spirit operate. Our Lord himself made no effort to do so: they are as inexplicable as the wind. We may study them experimentally, and learn many of the laws that govern them; we may feel the Spirits' movings within us, and see the effect of his movings all about us. But explain it?—Never! May we yield ourselves more fully to thy Holy Spirit!

THURSDAY

John 3:9-15. He Knows. Jesus alone can tell us of heavenly things; may our hearts ever be open to receive his message! He has been in heaven, with the Father, and he came down from heaven to show us the Father in his own person. He KNOWS whereof he speaks. He has showed us that the Way of the Cross is the only Way of Life. We do not profess to understand, but we believe, because we believe him. Let us praise him for the great love that caused him to be lifted up in our stead!

FRIDAY

John 3:16-21. The Light. The love of Jesus truly shines forth as a light, in a world where hatred and greed so largely rule. It is in the light of his love that our own lives shall some day be judged. All must, sooner or later, come to the light that their deeds may be made manifest. How all-important that our lives be cleansed now, so that we will not be ashamed in that day!

SATURDAY

John 3:22-30. The Friend. John was only a voice, bearing witness of another whom he loved and served. He sought no honor or glory for himself, but rejoiced because he could serve the bridegroom and be counted as his friend. With no thought of self-seeking, may each one delight just to honor him!

SUNDAY

John 3:31-36. Above All. We thank thee, our Father, that thou hast sent thy Son with a message of love and forgiveness. We know that all things have been given into his hand, and that he is above all—above all in love, in mercy and loving kindness, in holiness and righteousness. May all thy people and all thy ministers throughout all the earth this day place thy Son above all in their message, in their worship, and in their own lives. In Jesus' name. Amen.—T. C. L.

Why Celebrate Special Days?

By W. Edward Raffety

Every Bible school should have a calendar of special days and events. This should be determined by the workers' conference or school cabinet, where all officers and teachers can have sufficient time to decide definitely the important events of the year. Some schools find it best to keep in mind events on the calendar for a period of three years. This scheme will make possible a distributed emphasis from year to year so as not to overdo; e. g., Christmas celebration each year to the neglect of Easter, or other church or school festivals. To list events on this school calendar has many advantages. The school will know what to look for, and committees can have sufficient time to get ready acceptable programs, where programs are required.

The observation of special days in the Bible school should never be left to hit-and-miss, which usually is miss. When events are timely chosen and far enough apart during the year, best results follow. Some schools need to adopt the slogan: "Fewer and better observations."

In this article we consider the reasons for celebrating special days in the Bible school and what kind of special days are really worth while.

The following are reasons which seem most important:

1. To give needed emphasis to matters of worth-while interest which can not be cared for adequately in the regular instruction and worship periods of the school or class. In many schools the classroom time is so short and so significant, best continuous and constructive work can not be done where the set courses of instruction are too frequently interrupted. Likewise, too often to turn over the worship period to miscellaneous matters, for the most part foreign to the spirit of worship, is hazardous planning. The devotional expectancy means much as pupils approach the period of worship.

There are, however, many most excellent matters which should be brought to the attention of Bible school pupils and workers over and above formal instruction or worship. The school calendar will note these, and responsible people will get ready for them.

2. To discover new abilities in children and young people, especially along histrionic and musical lines, when dramas, pageants and certain types of programs are presented. Leadership skills also are often undiscovered until a piece of direction is assigned which yields most satisfactory results. In most churches in these days it is often amazing what talent comes to the front when some of the best of the now available Christmas or Easter pageants are offered, and where participants are discreetly chosen. Both directors and participants need to discover themselves. These program occasions often open up on "acres of diamonds" so near at hand that even parents are surprised at unrealized abilities which program responsibility brings to light in their own children.

3. To give Bible school workers and children, and young people especially, a chance to develop known abilities along the lines of their wholesome ambitions. We have witnessed an unusual exhibition of platform talent at a high school auditorium on the part of young people who are in Bible school every Sunday, and who have never been asked to participate in a Bible school special day observation. In almost every instance, these same young people would respond to the offered privilege of using their dramatic or musical skills in the Bible school event. There are so many kinds of things that children and young people do so well in these days, their abilities are a challenge to Bible school leadership.

4. To capture histrionic and musical gifts in children and young people and channel them for great moral and spiritual ends. Luckily, there are now available in magazine or pamphlet form great character-making dramatizations which require decided ability in presentation, and are, therefore, attractive to those who have dramatic gifts. It is as natural as life itself for certain types of young people to present dramatically some of the most significant truths of life. Only last Sunday night, at a big union out-of-door church service, I saw a talented woman keep two thousand people looking and listening intently as she, for more than an hour, dramatized events in the early life of Jesus. The whole was so reverently, beautifully done that few sermons would have more faithfully presented the truth.

5. To conserve exuberant energies of children and young people. Our Bible school pupils for the most part like to do things. Special day celebrations as now planned offer a variety of opportunities for youth to express itself—drama, music, readings, making of stage sceneries, electric wiring and spotlighting, advertising, poster-making, ushering, managing and many other necessary things to conserve strength and the willingness to serve.

6. To enrich fun-fellowships of both old and young through a Bible school cooperative enterprise. To get ready for and present many kinds of special day programs brings Bible school folks together in happiest hours. How often we have heard young people say: "Oh, church! we never have any good times down there." Where such a remark is heard, the Bible school leadership is at serious fault.

7. To arouse in parents a greater interest in the school. Special days often mean first-acquaintance days for some parents. They go to the church building because Jack or Janet or Bill or Betty is on the program. Bible school leaders who are wise ones use every event of this kind to get in closer touch with such non-church homes, and to follow up the first meeting of pupils' parents by a home visitation. A special day program has opened the door to the church itself for many parents.

8. To focus community attention on the school and the church. A man of the street was heard to say: "They're putting on a big doings over at the Blank church, and I'm goin'! They always have good programs." There are, of course, many things for which a church should be known in a community. The well-planned, wholesomely helpful special day observance is one of them.

9. To capitalize on a calendar collective interest, nation wide or church wide. At the Christmas season, when Christmas is in and on the air, the Bible school is dense indeed that does not make good use of the opportune time to use the Bethlehem story in all its beauty and beneficence. Even so is the celebration of the resurrection of Christ by a Bible school, by using some of the many new, obtainable Easter pageants. Other days which the nation or the church generally may be observing should be used locally in the spirit of loyalty to a worthy cause.

10. To make possible for Christian truth a wider and more attractive hearing. People are so apt to drop into the monotonous routine, that special days afford fresh appeals, and, with such beautiful programs as are now within the reach of all planners, the old, old truths of the gospel of Jesus Christ may be vividly and forever impressed upon those whose eyes and ears are leaden to the ordinary ministry of the church and its school.

Let us now briefly notice some

Kinds of Special Days

There may be more, but we here make only a sixfold classification of special days in the Bible school.

1. Church Festivals.—Christmas and Easter, and perhaps we may add the great autumn day of rallying the entire church and Bible school forces to renewed efforts in kingdom service.

2. Patriotic and Civic Days.—Memorial Day, Dominion Day, Fourth of July, Victoria Day, Armistice Day, Flag Day, Thanksgiving Day, Washington, Lincoln or Lee Days, and others when the dominant note is the patriotism of peace.

3. Home Tie Celebrations.—Homecoming Day, Children's Day and Children's Week, Child Welfare Day or Week, Father's Day, Mother's Day, Father and Son or Mother and Daughter Days, Old Folks' Sunday, Home Dedication Day, Home Department Day, Cradle Roll Department Day, and others which set the child of the family in the midst of the community's thought.

4. Seasonal Emphasis.—Harvest Day, New Year's Day, Flower Day, May Day, Arbor Day, Springtime Festival, Winter Festival, Summer Picnic, Athletic or Field Day, Autumn Rally and Promotion Day, and others.

5. Christian Life Days.—Decision Day, Confession or Declaration Day, Forward Step Day or Week, Bible Sunday, Temperance or Law Enforcement Day, Day or Week of Prayer, Enlistment Day, Go-to-Church Sunday, and many others that center in Christian life and duty.

6. International Good Will.—Golden Rule Sunday, Peace Day, Armistice Day, Disarmament Day, and the broader, finer uses of some of the patriotic and civic celebrations above referred to.

Next week, on this page we will together think of Bible school planning for special days, considering the personnel, duties and privileges.—Taken from "The Lookout," August 11, 1929, Page 11.

Review: Significance of the Exile and the Restoration

Devotional Reading—Isa. 61:1-9.

Golden Text—The lovingkindness of Jehovah is from everlasting to everlasting upon them that fear him, and his righteousness unto children's children.—Psa. 103:17.

A Brief Review

Reviewing is looking backward from some tower or hilltop, over the landscape through which we have been traveling. The hills, the valleys, the cities, the villages, the forests, the fertile fields, we have been seeing in detail through the Quarter we now see as one broad country, and we understand the meaning and power of the land as a whole.

Use of the Map. The principal countries where the events took place should be noted on the map, their relations to one another, the modern names of these lands given, and the events in each reported.

Secular History. The Bible history is made more real, and more interesting, when the contemporary events of secular history are connected with it, joining day school with Sunday school. And often the secular history throws light upon the Biblical history.

The Monuments, the remains of ancient times found in the ruins of their great cities within the last century, add greatly to our knowledge and interest.

Three Periods. We should today review the past two Quarters, not the third alone. It is all one history, from Isaiah through the Exile and the Restoration.

I. First Period, B. C. 755-586, Judah still a kingdom, but gradually losing its independence, until the final fall of Jerusalem and the destruction of the temple.

II. Second Period, B. C. 605-538. The Exile in Babylon, overlapping the First Period because of the three deportations, the Fall of Jerusalem coming with the third and last.

A period of discipline, of sifting like wheat, of the refiner's purifying fire. The Jews learned their need of God, the value of his religion, the blessedness of the Word of God; they gained the broadening of their ideas and sympathies, the increase of their culture.

Discipline, purifying in the furnace, the strength that comes from overcoming, is the need of all individuals and churches today.

III. Third Period, B. C. 536-538, the Preparation for the Return, and B. C. 536-428, the Restoration of Jerusalem and the nation—with on onward vision to the coming of Christ.

The Message for Today. It is good for every person to review his own past life and the past year. As the rower looks backward that he may go forward, so we look at our past in order to make a better future. We look at our failures that we may learn the lesson we teach, and then forget them as God forgives and blots out forever. We look at what we have gained, in order that we may stand upon that past and do better. Every good, as well as every mistake corrected, may be a stepping-stone to better things.

It is well therefore to see

1. What lessons we can learn for ourselves from the history we have been studying.

2. What the history has to teach our nation.

3. We can take courage from the fact that even with such imperfect people, and such hard times, real and great progress was made of which we are now reaping some of the results.

4. Let us see visions of better things, and keep the divine ideals always before us.

5. There are great evils to be driven out of our country. The whole land is waking up to realize the need of civic righteousness.

6. There is always need of awakening new reforming zeal. For every step we gain gives us views of new needs, and new ideals.

7. Every Christian Land ought to be a perfect example of the kingdom of God, and of the blessings that abound in it.

8. Every failure to live that life lessens its influence over the heathen nations.

9. The principles we have been studying apply to our own times, but are to be worked out in ways adapted to modern life.—Illustrated Quarterly.

Illustrating the Golden Text

Psaln 103:17.

Mrs. Helen Strong Thompson tells the following reminiscence:

"I think we would better keep a book of remembrance, daughter," said my father, as we sat beside our evening fire, rehearsing some unusual perplexities and sorrows.

Life had gone very hard with us that year, and I had become a chronic complainer. Just now brother Joseph lay helpless with a broken limb, and she, who could run smooth music from the roughest stone," the mother dear, had been taken from our sight.

"A book of remembrance, father?" I replied. "Why, I thought the Lord kept that."

"Yes, but why shall not way-worn mortals keep one also?—in which to note God's mercies; to recount the blessings of the way; the 'red-letter days' of sunshine after storm and darkness, joy after sorrow, quiet and peace after confusion, unexpected good, deliverance from danger? It has become easier to speak of our misfortunes and trials than of our blessings. These are received in silence. I'm afraid we shall never become 'house-top saints' at this rate."

"Don't say 'we' blessed old father!" I cried penitently, noting with a pang the glory of swift-coming translation over the noble head and face. Smiling at my eagerness, he softly repeated:

"Every lifetime

Yes, the narrowest and most dear

Is a cup that still runs over

With the gifts of God most dear."

"Suppose we take these pocket diaries, and write in them 'Gifts, versus Losses,' 'Blessings over against Trials,' 'Joys more than Grievs,' and see what comes of it. I think it would prove no small aid to our happiness and spiritual health."

A very tender and penitent heart made its first entry that night in the little book.

MISSIONS

Progress in Turkey

Some Observations of Our Secretaries

MISS EMERSON'S IMPRESSIONS

Turkey is very different from the country I saw four years ago. The picturesque red fez is nowhere to be seen, except on the Turkish hodja (teacher), who has it swathed as usual in the white turban. But we did see veiled women even in Constantinople, despite the fact that the veil is supposed to have disappeared with the fez. On our trip to Ephesus I noticed women in the villages as we passed who looked exactly as they did four years ago, veiled and shrouded in their charshafs. Of course in the cities one sees more women than formerly in European dress, quite fashionable in fact, but the veil and the charshaf are not infrequently seen. Men and women mingle more freely than formerly in public places and conveyances. The old division between men and women on trams and boats seems to have disappeared. There are more automobiles and better trams. The train on which we traveled from Constantinople to Angora was quite as good as the one I took from Salonica to Athens. We were in a compartment sleeper exactly like the European trains.

Why a Reform is Put Through in a Hurry

The most impressive thing is the way the people are studying the new Latin alphabet. As I recall it, we heard last July or August that the old Arabic script was to be abolished and Latin characters adopted. It was a tremendous undertaking, but the Ghazi (Mustapha Kemal Pasha) said that it must be, and that ended it. Before the National Assembly broke up, he is reported to have taught the deputies the new characters and to have charged them to teach their constituencies. Even though the law regarding the change had not been passed, it was generally understood that by early November the new script would be in use and the law would be passed soon after the Assembly convened on November 1. Fifty thousand school teachers had to pass the examinations in the new script before that time. Imagine it! When I asked why a year was not given in which to make the change, the reply was that if so long a time were allowed them the people would not take the matter up in earnest. If a change is to be made, it must be ordered put through promptly. Already the signs on boats, railroad stations and many shops are in the new script. In Smyrna we saw signs in Arabic script which had been defaced with great daubs of paint as though the owner were telling us that even though he had not had time to get his new sign, the old was gone forever. Posters showing the new characters are posted in public places, —railroad stations, buildings, docks, and even in village streets. We saw one in Seljuk, a little village mostly of mud houses. Primers are in use everywhere. Grown-ups and children are studying them in the trams, on the boats, everywhere. It is going to be a great thing for the Turkish people, for many more will be able to learn the new letters than had learned Arabic, and the percentage of literacy will be increased greatly. The newspapers are still being printed in the Arabic, but there is an increasing amount of space given to news and articles in the Latin script.

Turkey Wants Clean Literature

And that leads me to speak of the effort that is being made by some forward-looking editors to put out clean literature in magazine form. On the way to Seljuk I borrowed from a Turkish man sitting opposite me a magazine which looked interesting. It was in Arabic script, but I could tell something about it by the pictures. There was one of a series of articles giving a biography of Emerson and extracts from his essays and journals! There was a "better babies" page and a page for boys and girls, playing up hero stories. At the top of the page was the question, "Who is the greatest hero?" and there followed illustrated paragraphs on different types—aviators, a nurse, an Arctic explorer, moral leaders, etc. One picture was of Lincoln taking the shackles from a negro slave. It is very significant. The country is awake and it certainly has some alert leaders who are thinking deeply about the problems of education, economics, religion and morals.

Miss Seabury Listens In

On our train en route to Angora the railroad guard was studying. He sat down between stations across from us and would read the letters slowly to himself. Suddenly from behind him there stepped forward a young, very intelligent-faced man, without good clothes, however, or any air of means or education. I should say he was a working man of humble circumstances, about thirty or a bit less.

"Let me help you, Friend," he said.

He sat down beside the guard and they went at it. He was an excellent teacher, I should judge, and in a few minutes several others had gathered around for instruction. Presently an old gentleman across the aisle, a regular "Old Turk" who sat all curled up on the seat, Turkish fashion, twirling conversation beads in his fingers, spoke up in cynical tones and said, in effect, that this was all tommy-rot and the good old days were gone forever, etc.

Well, our young friend went to it with enthusiasm and made a fairly impassioned address on the subject. Did his worthy friend not realize how few of their people could read and write compared with other nations? And that even with the best education available did he not know that one never could learn more than about ten per cent of what he really needed for life? And that the literature of the world was most of it closed to them? Now this new language would change all that. Visitors from other lands could learn their language and perhaps be really able to read it and they too could read much better in other languages. And now all the people would be able to learn. Why, his tiny little daughter had learned in one week the new character and he himself had learned in four hours. It was a wonderful new day that had come to their country, etc., etc. I wish you might all have seen the fire of his face and the eagerness of his voice and the light in his eye.

The Department of Education is busily working out a plan on a very wide scale for adult education. New day indeed! Some one said to Ulvia Hanum, of whom more anon,

"O dear, the lovely old Arabic character is so antique-looking and so artistic." She pressed her lips together hard and answered,

"Well, we of my country have been paying far too great a price for that art." One cannot fail to catch the impression that this is a great and promising nation of people.—The Missionary Herald.

NORTH AMERICA

World Service Commission

The sixth annual meeting of the World Service Commission of the Methodist Episcopal church was held in the Chicago Temple, July 23rd. The total receipts for proportionate distribution among the constituent boards during the fifth World Service year were $6,573,261.27, an increase of $696,104.20. Non-distributable receipts of the World Service Commission were $1,388,637.36, a decrease of $395,109.83. The net increase of receipts of both types was $30,994.37. Total receipts were $7,961,898.63.

Funds distributed during the year were as follows: Board of Foreign Missions, $2,482,300.06; Board of Home Missions, $2,482,300.06; Board of Education, $1,196,892.24; Board of Hospitals, Homes and Deaconess Work, $114,874.34; Board of Temperance, Prohibition and Public Morals, $109,563.13; Board of Pensions and Relief, $106,046.44; American Bible Society, $81,285, a total of proportionately distributed disbursements amounting to $6,573,261.27.

Sixteen areas showed a gain in receipts for World Service during the fifth year, and five showed a loss. Sixty-one Conferences showed a gain and twenty-eight showed a loss.—The Christian Advocate.

MINUTES OF GENERAL CONFERENCE

The forty-first General Conference of the Brethren church convened at Winona Lake, Indiana, Monday evening, August 26, 1929. The session opened with a spirited song service conducted by C. A. Bame. The Moderator, Dr. E. E. Jacobs, presided and also led in prayer invoking God's guidance upon the evening session and also throughout the conference.

Charles A. Bame conducted the devotional service of the evening by asking the audience to respond with Scripture quotations and the leading in prayer.

There being no Conference Membership Committee appointed, the Moderator named the following brethren to serve in this capacity, Dr. J. A. Miller, chairman; Martin Shively, W. C. Benshoff, H. C. Dooley, and Wm. Schaffer.

The opening sermon of the conference was preached by vice-moderator, Dr. J. A. Miller, who spoke on the subject, "My Apology for Being a Christian," basing his remarks on Hebrew 6:13.

Session was concluded with song and the closing prayer by C. A. Bame.

Tuesday Morning

Tuesday morning session was opened by singing, "I Love to Tell the Story." C. C. Grisso led the conference in the devotions by reading from the first chapter of I Thessalonians and leading in prayer.

The credential committee reported 68 ministerial and 116 lay credentials which makes a total of 144. The report was accepted and the committee continued.

The organization of the Conference was next in order. A motion prevailed that the result of the election be given at the close of the morning session.

"How Firm a Foundation" was heartily sung as the conference emerged into the next hour at which time the Moderator delivered the moderator's address.

A motion prevailed that the Conference receive and publish the address in the minutes as well as the Evangelist.

A motion was made that the recommendation of the retiring Moderator as relating to next year's Bible lectures be considered by the new Executive Committee.

The Committee reported the election of the following conference officers: Moderator, A. J. McClain; Vice-Moderator, C. L.

Anspach; Secretary, J. L. Gingrich; Assistant Secretary, Floyd Sibert; Treasurer, N. G. Kimmel; Statistician, George E. Cone.

The newly elected Moderator and Vice-Moderator were introduced to the conference, and responded with appropriate remarks.

A. V. Kimmel led the conference in prayer. The Bible lecturer, Dr. A. I. Brown, was introduced to the conference and brought a thought-provoking and soul edifying message on "The Wonder Book of the Ages." The benediction was pronounced by F. G. Coleman.

Tuesday Afternoon

The afternoon session was devoted to the National Christian Endeavor interests. Fred C. Vanator read the Scripture and led in prayer. Mrs. M. A. Stuckey favored the conference with a piano solo. The address of the hour was preached by Delbert Flora on the subject, "The Challenge for Christ and the Church."

A very helpful and inspirational pageant entitled, "Keeping the Keys," was rendered by the Warsaw Christian Endeavor Society. Benediction was pronounced by E. M. Riddle.

Tuesday Evening

The evening session was opened by singing, "Marching On to Zion." J. L. Gingrich led in prayer. A devotional and Bible study was conducted by J. C. Beal on the theme, "A Bird's-eye View of the Work of Christ."

The Committee on Rules and Organization reported the election of A. V. Kimmel, W. I. Duker and Geo. S. Baer as constituting the Committee on Committees.

After singing "Holy Ghost with Light Divine," the evening sermon was preached by C. C. Grisso on the subject, "The Christ We Preach." 1 Cor. 1:13. The closing song—"The End of the Road," was sung prior to the Benediction by R. Paul Miller.

Wednesday Morning

C. A. Bame led in inspirational song service. Miles Taber read from Isaiah 6 and offered prayer.

The Credential Committee brought in an additional report, making a total of 74 Ministerial and 144 Lay credentials, or a grand total of 218 credentials.

The report was accepted and the Committee asked to continue.

The minutes of the previous business were read and approved by conference.

The various interests of the church made their financial reports which will appear in a later edition of the Evangelist. These reports were all accepted by the conference and asked to be placed upon the minutes.

A motion prevailed to accept the recommendation of the Publication Board to elect Brethren C. L. Anspach, J. C. Beal and G. W. Rench as members of the Board.

A motion prevailed that the Moderator appoint a Committee on Fraternal Greetings to visit the Eel River Christian Conference. The following brethren were appointed in this capacity, E. L. Miller, R. R. Teeter, and W. E. Ronk.

"Onward Christian Soldiers" was sung as the conference emerged into the succeeding session which was devoted to the thought of benevolences. Russel Barnard offered prayer at this time.

J. J. Wolfe and J. L. Kimmel spoke in behalf of the superannuated ministers. The report of the Brethren Home was given by Martin Shively, which report was accepted and asked to be filed.

The address of the session was delivered by Dr. J. A. Miller on the subject, "The Christian's Obligation to the Poor."

A motion prevailed that the conference reelect J. L. Kimmel to succeed himself as a member of the Board of Benevolences.

Conference joined in singing "He Keeps Me Singing." A. L. Lynn led in prayer which prepared the hearts and minds of the people for the second Bible lecture of Dr. A. I. Brown on the subject, "Genesis and Modern Science." The benediction was pronounced by G. C. Carpenter.

Wednesday Evening

Spirited song service marked the opening of the evening session. The Conference united in praying the "Our Father."

Fraternal greetings from the Eel River Christian Conference were brought by Dr. Warren H. Denison who was introduced by Mr. Whitlock.

In the devotional Bible study, C. H. Ashman spoke on the subject, "The Gospel of Jesus Christ," basing his remarks on the first chapter of Romans. This period was closed by singing "Rock of Ages."

A vocal solo, "One Sweetly Solemn Thought," was sung by Glenn Wagner, preparing the people for the evening sermon preached by G. C. Carpenter, who spoke on the subject, "The Old Time Religion." After singing "Tis the Old Time Religion," Grant McDonald pronounced the benediction.

Thursday Morning

The morning session opened with singing, "I Shall See the King." The invocation of the morning was pronounced by Geo. E. Cone.

The Credential Committee reported that there are now 79 ministerial and 186 lay credentials or a total of 265. The report was accepted and the Committee was asked to continue.

The Committee on Committees reported as follows:

Conference Membership—C. L. Anspach, Clarence Stewart, N. V. Leatherman, N. G. Kimmel, Sylvester Lowman.

Rules and Organization—Dyoll Belote, Benjamin Owen, Charles Sensenbaugh.

Sunday School Nominating Committee—M. A. Stuckey, A. E. Whitted, Geo. E. Cone. C. E. Nominating Committee—Homer A. Kent, S. C. Henderson, Delbert Flora.

Committee on Boys' Organization Work—Rev. Ed. Miller, Prof. R. R. Haun, Rev. Delbert Flora, Rev. Earl Riddle, Donald Bame.

A motion prevailed that the report of the National Sunday School Association be referred back to the committee.

A motion prevailed to elect M. D. Kerr and C. G. Wolfe as directors of the Brethren Home and Cecil Hendricks as treasurer.

By vote of the conference Freeman Ankrum, W. C. Benshoff, J. Wesley Platt, Mary C. Wenger and S. M. Whetstone were elected members of the Home Mission Board.

Martin Shively made a financial report of Ashland College. The report was accepted by the conference.

A motion prevailed that the Secretary be instructed to insert in the minutes the summaries of the financial reports of the Foreign and Home Missionary Societies. These reports will appear elsewhere in the paper.

The Statistician read the report of the congregations of the Brethren church. A motion was passed that the report be accepted with the thanks of the conference and spread upon the minutes.

The Committee on National Conference Executive committee comprises the following brethren representing their respective districts—Ohio, W. H. Beachler and R. R. Teeter; Northwest, C. C. Grisso; Illiokota, Geo. E. Cone; Southeastern, E. L. Miller and Freeman Ankrum; Indiana, S. M. Whetstone and Clarence Stewart; Mid-west, L. G. Wood; Southern California, A. V. Kimmell; Pennsylvania, W. E. Ronk and J. L. Gingham.

Conference joined in singing, "Marching On to Zion" as the period emerged into the Home Missions Session. Wm. A. Gearhart presided while the various pastors of the mission churches responded with a few words of greetings and encouragement concerning their work. Freeman Ankrum spoke briefly yet very optimistically concerning the work of Kentucky. The President, H. F. Stuckman, called the attention of the church to the future outlook of the Home Mission Work. The period closed with singing, "Let the Lower Lights be Burning."

W. C. Benshoff, through prayer, lifted the people to the Throne of Grace.

The third conference lecture by Dr. A. I. Brown on the subject, "The Absurdities and Collapse of Evolution," was given at this time. Benediction was pronounced by A. J. McClain.

Thursday Afternoon

After the usual song service conducted by C. A. Bame, the afternoon session was devoted to the National Sunday School Association. The opening prayer was made by M. A. Stuckey.

W. I. Duker presided at the recognition service for Sunday schools who had attained to the Standard of Excellence as set by the Association. There was only one school, Hagerstown, Maryland, to enjoy this distinction.

A. D. Gnagey spoke on "What are the Requisites of a Successful Sunday School?"

R. R. Haun addressed the conference on "Christian Education." The benediction was pronounced by Orion E. Lemert.

Thursday Evening

"Where the Gates Swing Outward Never" was joyfully sung to open the evening session. God's blessing was invoked by the Moderator, A. J. McClain.

The devotional Bible study period was led by M. A. Stuckey. The speaker discussed the question, "What was Jesus Interested in Most?"

While the offering was being received, the conference was farowed by an organ offertory by Miss Vada Grisso. The offering amounted to $49.58.

Mrs. R. R. Haun sang a very much appreciated solo prior to the preaching of the evening sermon by Claude Studebaker on the second chapter of Joshua, verse 18. The service closed by singing, "I'll Live for Him" and the pronouncing of the benediction by Wm. Schaffer.

Friday Morning

The song service was opened by singing "There is a Fountain." The devotions of the morning were brought by Samuel Adams reading from Ephesians 1:1-14 and leading in prayer.

The Credential Committee made an additional report resulting to date in 82 ministerial and 202 lay credentials or a total of 284. The report was accepted and the committee asked to continue.

The minutes of the previous business were read and approved.

The Resolutions Committee read the report which was adopted by conference.

The Christian Endeavor Nomination Committee reported as follows:

President, E. M. Riddle; Associate President, F. C. Vanator; Secretary-Treasurer, Gladys Spice; Departmental Superintendents—Quiet Hour, Ray Klingensmith; Citizenship, Delbert Flora; Publicity, Thomas Hammers; Junior, Miss Carry Trent; Intermediate, Mrs. Joyce Saylor; Service, Homer A. Departmental Superintendents: Educational, M. A. Stuckey; Missionary, Miles Taber; Home, Homer Kent; Citizenship, R. R. Haun.

A song, "Rescue the Perishing" was sung, followed by prayer by F. G. Coleman.

The next hour's time was devoted to the work of the Evangelistic and Bible Study League, presided over by A. V. Kimmell. The report of the secretary and treasurer was brought by Henry V. Wall, which will appear in another edition of the paper. Brethren J. C. Beal and R. Paul Miller brought two very instructive and thought-provoking messages. The hour was closed by prayer by A. V. Kimmell.

Conference asked for an offering which amounted to $40.76.

Conference was favored with a vocal solo, "Jesus Has Loved Me," by Harry Richer.

The fourth Bible lecture of Dr. A. I. Brown was brought at this time, entitled, "Christianity at the Crossroads." Benediction pronounced by Dr. W. E. Biederwolf.

Friday Afternoon

The song service was opened by singing, "I Shall See the King."

George Ronk led the people to the Throne of Grace. The afternoon session was devoted to the interest of Ashland College. The following speakers spoke on their respective subjects in order—

"Relation of the College to the Church," W. S. Bell.

"Function of a Theological Seminary," M. A. Stuckey.

"Future of Ashland College," Dr. E. E. Jacobs.

"Business Administration of the College," Geo. Ronk.

The session closed by singing, "The Son of God Goes Forth to War," and the pronouncing of the benediction by Martin Shively.

Friday Evening

After an inspirational song service the devotions were led by A. T. Ronk, by reading from John 15:1-11 and leading in prayer.

President E. E. Jacobs read a paper on "A Christian College in Relation to Science."

The Committee on Cooperation with the Washington, D. C., church was reported to consist of W. S. Bell, W. C. Benshoff and E. L. Miller.

An offering amounting to $77.73 was received at this time.

Conference joined in singing "Let the Lower Lights be Burning." Prayer was offered by the Moderator A. J. McClain.

The closing address was delivered by Prof. J. R. Schutz. The benediction was pronounced by Geo. C. Carpenter.

J. L. GINGRICH, Secretary.

The Boy Scouts of America banded together in tree-planting projects and planted more forest trees and shade trees during 1928 than in any previous year in the history of the Boy Scout movement. More than a million trees were planted throughout the United States during the year. Walnuts from a black walnut tree at Mount Vernon were taken for planting all over the country as memorial trees to George Washington. From a black walnut tree in Arlington National Cemetery, Boy Scouts have planted walnuts in memory of Robert E. Lee.

AN ARMORY OF PROHIBITION WEAPONS

By Ernest H. Cherrington, LL.D., Litt. D., Director of Department of Education, Anti-Saloon League of America

Facts, the invincible weapon against sophistry and fallacy, fill "The Anti-Saloon League Year Book for 1929," newly off the presses of the American Issue Publishing Company. In addition to highly valuable data covering the progress toward prohibition in each state of the union, this book sets forth the educational phases of the campaign against alcoholism today. Beside a special discussion of this campaign with the presentation of the work being done by the Anti-Saloon League and other agencies, there are discussions of "How Governmental Agencies Can Assist Temperance Education," "A Summary of Provisions for Scientific Temperance Instruction, and Prohibition Enforcement Codes, in the Several States," and "Laws Referring to Scientific Temperance Teaching in the Several States."

The attitude of President Hoover toward prohibition is set forth at considerable length.

"Prohibition and Public Health," is discussed by Dr. Haven Emerson, formerly Health Commissioner of New York City, in a very comprehensive contribution.

The failure of the Quebec liquor system to control the liquor traffic in that province of Canada is developed succinctly by Ben H. Spence of Toronto, whose long study of the Ontario situation makes him an authority on this theme.

Rosters of the various dry organizations, a rather comprehensive bibliography of publications on the alcohol question and a very full index give additional value to this volume.

Sunday School Notes

On the fly-leaf my father's familiar hand had written:

"Here, then, inscribe them, each red-letter day!

Forget not all the sunshine of the way
By which the Lord hath led thee; answered prayers

And joys unasked: strange blessings, lifted cares

Grand promise echoes! Thus each page shall be

A record of God's love and faithfulness to thee."

It was strange after that how my book of remembrance filled up. I soon had to have another. Sometimes I compared mine with father's, who said: "You see, daughter, we do not have to search for his gifts; they are legion to those who have open hearts."

Often we found we had mentioned the same gift or deliverance, but oftener the need of individuality or experience had recognized what the other had missed. Where I had noted gifts of bread and loving kindness, my father had offered thanks for the gifts of chastening and for hidden manna. Underneath the former he had written: "Courage! ye that bear the sublime lot of sorrow. God wills it. It is the ordinance of infinite love, to procure for us an infinite glory and beatitude!"

And beneath the latter: "We have meat to eat that ye know not of!"

I noticed a spirituality to his remembrances that marked him, indeed, as a "house-top saint." Not a day passed but I had occasion to take the little book from my pocket, to note perhaps, a sweet surprise, a gracious gift, unexpected strength, or cheer, or light; a soft air after a day of withering heat, a radiant sunset, a perfect day, an hour of peace, an answered prayer, an hour of fellowship, a friend.

That coming year, life took on new meanings. Joys unexpected and unasked came into my life, till the soul cried out: "Lord, it must be a mistake. This cannot be for me!"

Then my little book began to show new revelations of truth and God, some blessed inspirations, thanksgiving for a cross to bear, and some conception of God's way with a soul. So that when one day we found our dear, old father "fallen on sleep," with a smile of heavenly brightness on his face, I was able to write in my little book of remembrance, "Thank God for an abundant entrance into his rest."

"Thank God for all my loved
That out of storm and care

Have risen to peaceful heights above,
And stay to meet me there."

Dear, tempest-tossed reader, try the "Remembrance Book."—American Messenger.

OUR LITTLE READERS

THE STORY OF A LITTLE SEED

Once upon a time there was a tall milkweed that stood in a fence corner at the very edge of a large wood. As the summer advanced, the milkweed was covered with long green pods and by and by these pods burst open, and dozens upon dozens of tiny seeds with soft, downy tips, came peeping out. "My children, my lovely little seed children," murmured the milkweed, as she swayed to and fro in the summer breeze, "you must fly away now and leave me, one by one. But the good God meant that every one of you should sink down into the cool, damp earth and grow up to be a big, splendid milkweed just as I am."

"And so we will and so we will!" cried all the downy seeds together "we will not forget what you have told us. Goodbye, dear mother, good-by." Just then a gay little breeze came dashing by and caught them up in his arms and away they flew, here and there and everywhere. But wherever a seed dropped into the cold, damp earth, the milkweed mother knew that a tall, splendid plant like herself would; be growing next summer.

One little seed, smaller than the others, with downy wings that glistened in the sun, shrank back into the green pod and refused to go with the rest. "I like the sunshine and the pure, sweet air and the bright blue sky," she cried; "don't cast me on the ground, Mr. Wind, but take me sailing away and away, and ever and ever so far!"

Now the wind was a jolly, rollicking fellow, so crying, "All right, here we go!" he caught her up and carried her off in a hurry. On and on she flew with breathless haste, through the woods and over the brook to a wheat field that stood fair and shining in the sun. At last she caught on a prickly ear of wheat and hung there, breathless.

"And who are you?" she cried at last, when she was rested enough to speak.

"I am a stalk in a wheat field," answered the wheat politely.

"And how came you here?" said the seed gazing admirably down at the long yellow stalk.

"Oh, I was a tiny grain once," said the wheat. "But a farmer planted me in the cool, damp earth, and I grew up to be the splendid stalk that you see."

"I don't want to be planted," said the little seed saucily. "I had much rather fly about in the sunshine. Take me up again, Mr. Wind," and away she flew.

When she stopped again, after a long, glorious flight, she caught on the rough bark of a broad, graceful tree, covered with green leaves and luscious fruit.

"And who are you?" she asked again.

"I am an apple tree," said the big tree, kindly.

"An apple tree, and how came you here, pray?" asked the seed.

"Oh, I was just a tiny apple seed once," said the tree, "but I sank into the cool, damp earth just here, and now I have grown into a great, broad tree and bear ever so many delicious apples every year of my life."

"That's all very well," said the little seed, "but I like better to fly in the sunshine," and away she went, rolling and tumbling and laughing in the summer breeze.

She flew back into the large darp forest this time, and when she stopped again she found herself in the arms of a great forest tree, larger and more splendid than any she had ever seen.

"And who are you?" she asked of the big, rough tree.

"I am an oak," was the answer in big, kindly tones.

"And where did you come from?" asked the seed.

"Oh, I was nothing but an acorn once," said the tree, "but I sank into the cool, damp earth just here, and now I am a great fine tree, with ever so many birds nestling in my branches."

Just then the seed looked down into a hollow in the great, gnarled branches and saw a little brown something, ugly shriveled and old.

"And who are you?" she said with a little shrug of contempt.

"Oh, I am an acorn," came the answer in a shrill, cracked voice, "a last year's acorn that didn't want to be planted. Just see how safely I am hiding."

The tiny seed looked at the poor, wizened acorn, and at the big splendid oak, and hung very quietly in her place for a long, long time. At last she called out, very gently: "Take me down to the cool, damp earth, Mr. Wind, for I want to be a milkweed like my mother!"

"All right," said the good-natured wind and away she flew.—The King's Builders.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

NATIONAL BOARD OF BENEVOLENCES

Dear Brother Pastor:

If you were at the Conference and heard the reports of the secretary and treasurer of the Board of Benevolence you will know that on account of the poor response on the regular Benevolence offering day we are eight hundred and fifty dollars short and cannot meet the December payment to our dependents. If you were not there, this letter will inform you of that situation.

By an act of the conference, this board was given permission to ask for a special offering to make up the deficiency and to fix the date for the taking of this offering. In order to get this date as far away from any other offering day as possible we have selected Sunday, September 22.

If your church has paid for the Superannuated Ministers the full forty cents per member you may ignore this notice. If not, please take the offering on the above date to make up the shortage. If you have had no offering for this most worthy cause, forty cents per member is the amount asked for, and is the amount actually required to meet the obligations placed on the board by the conference.

Will you not kindly put this matter before your people on the above date and have your treasurer send the money to the Secretary of the Benevolence Board as soon as possible?

Thanking you in advance for your interest in this work, we are, sincerely

Yours in his service,
THE NATIONAL BOARD OF BENEVOLENCES,
J. J. Wolfe, Secretary,
North Manchester, Indiana.

Roots and Fruits

By Rev. Frances Shunk Downs, D.D.

There are those today who espouse the ethic of Christ but who will not bow the knee to the person of Christ. They desire the benefits of the Christian religion without having to fulfil the conditions of the Christian religion. They attempt to live the Christian life without first becoming Christians.

On the other hand, there are those who profess their faith in Christ who fail to incarnate the spirit and teachings of Christ. They make much of roots, but the world sees little of fruits. There is an excess of argument but no overflow of life. They hold to Christianity, but they do not apply it to the world. They possess a gospel but they have little passion to propagate it.

Our modern world needs a company of people who are rooted in the faith and fruitful in the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ; who will defend their faith in love and propagate it in power; who will glory in the Cross and take up their own cross; who will lean only on Christ for salvation, and who will pour out their lives in Christly service; who having learned they cannot live without Christ, will not be content until every man knows of Christ; Who see in Christ the fulness of the Godhead bodily, and who daily will offer their own bodies a living sacrifice for the service of men; who know their citizenship is both in heaven and on earth, and who are truly at home in two worlds; who give Christ his crown-rights as the Lord of Glory, but who will not fail to make him King of their own lives.—The Presbyterian Advance.

THE Western Trail

This is being written in Santa Fe, New Mexico, second oldest city in the United States. Californians boast of their climate, but they have nothing better than the crisp, clear air of the plateaus of New Mexico. Santa Fe is exactly 7000 feet above sea level.

One finds all kinds of climate on the western trail. In Chicago we roasted. In Nebraska, it was rain and mud, (and such mud!) In Colorado we slept at the foot of Pike's Peak, and wished we had brought the extra blankets we decided would not be needed. And now in New Mexico no words can describe the exhilaration of riding in this high air beneath a cloudless sky. It is worth going through mud and rain to get here.

In millennial days, the prophet declares that the desert shall be made to blossom as the rose. I hope, however, that the Lord will leave a few deserts for those of us who love them. The reason some people find no charm in the deserts is that they rush through them in Pullman trains and high powered automobiles. The beauty of the desert is more subtle than in other places of nature. It does not yield itself to the hasty tourist who boasts of the miles he drives in one day, and wishes he were past this "God-forsaken country." The wise do not try to argue, they simply feel sorry for him. Having eyes, he sees not. To know the desert, one must take time, sleep there, watch the sun go down, feel the softness of the dry night breezes, see the incredible brightness of the stars, smell the tang of greasewood and pinon pine after the rain, experience the thrill of vast distances, and watch for the ever changing and subtle colors of soil and verdure and light—but why go on? You must see in order to appreciate.

Yesterday we turned aside from the beaten trail, and took a new road from Raton to Santa Fe. Crossed the Sangre de Cristo Mountains at Eagle's Nest Pass (9200 feet). Eagle's Nest Lake, just west of the Pass, with its blue waters, is a sight worth seeing. We had plenty of time to enjoy the scene, because of a large nail picked up as we crossed the Pass. I could not have picked out a more beautiful spot on the whole trip to change a tire!

SPEAKING of Detours

Last year we found the road so fine along the Platte River in Nebraska that we decided to take the same road to Denver. But, alas, roads change. East of North Platte the main highway was closed, and we were detoured 35 miles through a river bottom where it had been raining four days. We began the detour at four o'clock in the afternoon and pulled through the last mud hole at midnight, time eight hours. The average time, I was informed, was about sixteen hours, and sometimes twenty. The State had caterpillar tractors and four-horse teams at the worst holes, but even then the road could not be kept clear of stalled machines. Some drivers, after fighting for hours, slid into the ditch, and quit, too weary to go on until morning. When I plowed through the last hole, there were six cars completely bogged down here and there all over the road. The occupants were asleep. We had the distinction of going through the entire detour without being stuck once or receiving any help. Some attributed this achievement to large tires and rubber chains, others said it was the high clearance of our car. Still others were kind enough to say I was a good driver. I am inclined to suggest the Grace of God, a "more credible hypothesis," as Carlyle would say.

AN Unusual Engineer

After plunging through the first ten miles of the detour, I began to grow rather critical of the highway department of the State of Nebraska. I had visions of the Engineer sitting in his comfortable home, listening to the howling wind and pouring rain. Then I noticed a peculiar thing. About every mile or less, there would be a jam of machines in a mud hole. We would wait while they were being dug and pulled out. And always, in the thick of the fight, I would see the same man. At one place dozens of cars were stopped behind a broken down car, and no one had a shovel to dig a path around it. I offered my shovel, and the same man grabbed it and went to work. When the last car was through he brought my shovel back, and I said, "How on earth do you always appear at the time that help is needed?" He answered very simply, "I am the highway Engineer." And he added, "we are doing our best to keep the road open." I felt like giving him three cheers. The presence of this man, fighting with us and for us out there in the mud and rain, seemed to take away all the bitterness of the ordeal.

Then I thought of him who is the "Engineer of the Universe." How he left his home in glory, came down into the midst of the sweat and toil of human existence, enduring all that we endure and infinitely more. Such a God, I can love. He is no far-off god, watching from his Olympian heights our struggles, indifferent as to their outcome. But he was here with us, and he is still here with us in Spirit, amid the darkness of the night, keeping the "road open" for weary travelers. Lo, this is our God. To him be glory unto the ages of the ages.

The Economic Waste of Sin

(Review of "The Economic Waste of Sin" by Lahman Forrest Bower; The Abingdon Press, New York.)

By Ernest H. Cherrington, LL.D., Litt. D.,
Director of Department of Education,
Anti-Saloon League of America

Few realize the tremendous drain that crime and vice make upon the economic as well as the human resources of the nation. Therefore "The Economic Waste of Sin" by Lahman Forrest Bower—an Abingdon Press publication—has an important message for this age. This book, which came from the press several years ago, might be marked, n. d., as library catalogs are accustomed to indicate those volumes which are timeless in their appeal. Naturally, much of the data Mr. Bower uses is not up-to-date, but the principles he sets forth and the conclusions he draws are even more true today than they were when he compiled his material. Crime, war, disease, poverty, alcohol, prostitution and the drug habit are the principal forms of sin whose economic waste he discusses.

Mr. Bower writes: "The annual liquor bill of our country, in the good old days, was paid eventually by the sober and industrious through increased taxation and charities. The income of our government from the liquor business, which, through unscrupulous politicians and unwise naturalization laws, was prolonged for many years, was the most expensive contribution it has ever received for its support. Every dollar came not from the fruits of production, but represented destruction and non-production which increased the aggregate costs of living throughout the country many times the amount of the excise taxes." Developing this thesis, he points out the loss of billions of dollars to industry and trade through the liquor habit and the liquor traffic.

One notes one error in Mr. Bower's volume—or it may be a mistaken emphasis. He asserts: "But who are contributing the funds for the return of alcohol—those formerly engaged in the traffic?" The saloon has gone beyond recall; this is realized by all; no reason for saloon-keepers—most of whom are in better business now—to contribute. The great majority of the breweries and distilleries have been converted into productive industries with many more employees than before, and their owners are no longer interested in the question. True, some persons will contribute because they want it back for personal indulgence, but these do not justify by their standing or resources a tithe of the attention and support which this campaign is receiving from the majority of the metropolitan press."

Mr. Bower feels that much of the anti-prohibition movement, in his words, "is simply intended to divert the attention of the people from other large unsettled economic questions, and that it is liberally financed by profiteers, exploiters, and conversionists to enable them to retain and continue their plunderings." Whether or not this be true, the fact remains that reports made by leading "wet" organizations show many very large contributions made by men and families who were long identified with the liquor traffic before prohibition. That "hope" which springs eternal in the human breast" has not entirely died with the brewer and distiller. The expectation of regaining a traffic that once was worth nearly three bil-

The Objectives of Laymen's Day

There is a cloud the size of a man's hand appearing on the horizon, a sign of hope, which the church will do well to take notice of. As the cloud which appeared to the servant of Elijah gave assurance of the coming rain bringing relief from the long prevailing drought, so the Laymen's movement, though as yet only a small stirring of activity, gives promise of an answer to a long felt need in the church. There has been a dearth of local leadership and a lack of masculine aggressiveness in church activities, together with a certain lameness in giving that has had a marked unfavorable effect on our denominational life and growth. This has not been the universal experience, for in certain localities the men have been mustered into service and organized in ways that have counted for much in the growth of the church and the extension of the kingdom. But taking the church as a whole, the men as such have not distinguished themselves for any particularly noteworthy thing they have accomplished or undertaken, nor for any specially aggressive attitude towards matters religious. There has been no general movement nor organized effort to enlist the man-power of the church in behalf of any particular enterprise that will forward the interests of the Kingdom. The women of the church have long been organized and set to certain great objectives, and they have been combing the brotherhood to get the last woman enlisted in active service and striving for spiritual attainments. But the men have been neglected, or rather, they have neglected themselves and their responsibilities.

It is encouraging, however, to note that for a few years some of the leaders among our laymen have been growing dissatisfied with being at ease in Zion and have been catching a vision of the greater possibilities of men for service in the Kingdom. And they have been bestirring themselves with certain objectives and trying to bring others to share their feeling of responsibility. The Laymen's organization is the result. The organization is not as yet very thoroughly worked out, nor has it been carried down to the local church, but it has commendable ambitions along those lines. It has received the approval of General Conference and given a date in the church calendar when its aims and ideals may be promoted. That date is the second Sunday in October. On that date it is proposed that the laymen shall be granted the privilege of doing two things—conducting a service and taking an offering.

This two-fold purpose of the day is indicative of the two-fold aim of the organization. It aims first to organize the men and to stir them to greater activity and loyalty in the local church. One of the great needs of the kingdom today is a more consecrated and more spiritually active lay leadership. There is very much work connected with Kingdom extension that ministers cannot do, or that they have not the time or the opportunity of doing, but which laymen can do if they will. There are souls to be won in every parish that only laymen can reach. There are men out of touch with Sunday school or any Bible instruction and who can only be interested by some fellow-craftsman who knows his Bible and is in vital touch with the Lord Jesus Christ. There are communities in which preaching must be done and churches built up, if such work is to be done, by consecrated laymen who know the power of the Gospel and are eager to bear witness to its saving grace.

In a certain Indiana town there was a church that had died. The building was closed. There was no sign of life. And what was worse, no one entertained any hope that the work could be resurrected, reports a contemporary religious organ. Twenty-five miles away there lived a man—a layman—who saw the situation and who still believed that the Gospel was the power of God unto salvation. He acquainted himself with the conditions, saw that the community needed the Gospel preached and needed the influence of the church. He proposed that the church be re-established, but the people said it could not be done. This only interested the man the more and he decided that it should be done. He was not one of these men with a lot of time on his hands that he didn't know what to do with. He was a lawyer with a good practice and heavy demands upon his time, but his first interest was the kingdom of God. So he cleaned out the building and began preaching on the Lord's Day. He began a Bible school and had regular services each Sunday. The people rallied to his help. The building was renovated and neatly furnished. A furniture house from a nearby city furnished the chairs. A piano was provided. A young man with a fine voice took hold of the music and organized a choir of the young people of the community. The work thrived. Men from every walk of life were converted and united with the church, which had been resurrected through the instrumentality of a faithful layman. And such laymen as that are needed in our church, and it is one of the aims of this new Laymen's organization to arouse men to such loyalty and service.

In the second place, it aims to build up a fund with which to aid worthy young men in their preparation for the ministry. Not a few of those who answer the call to preach the Gospel as a life work come from among the poor, and are unable to secure for themselves unaided the schooling they need. If we were denied the services of those now in our ministry who have found such aid necessary, we would lose some of our strongest preachers and most successful pastors. It is worth while as well as right to make provision for such aid. An organization that will undertake to do that is most valuable and deserving of support. That is the object of the offering to be lifted on Laymen's Day, the second Sunday in October. It is to be added to a fund from which approved young men may borrow to help themselves through school. It is not to be a gift, but a loan. And surely the least a church should be willing to do for those who lay their lives on the altar of service is to make possible convenient loans which will enable them to accomplish their training uninterrupted. A church that wished to be really generous, nay, rather, that wished to meet the young men half way, would make full provision for their education. It would say to them, You dedicate your lives and we will contribute our money. You present your bodies, holy, acceptable unto the Lord and we will sanctify our funds. But even that would not be meeting the young men half way. For the valuation of a life cannot be computed in dollars and cents. But surely the church that accepts the challenge of young life, sanctified and meet for the Master's use, can ill afford to do less than consecrate its substance for their training for service. To take an offering for that purpose is one of the immediate aims of Laymen's Day.

Light on "Naval Experts"

It has been interesting to all lovers of peace to receive the light that has recently been thrown on the kind of "naval experts" that have been working so assiduously against the limitation of naval armaments and the program for the promotion of peace. Mr. William B. Shearer, who has been one of the most outspoken and noisy of these so-called "experts" and who did much at Geneva to thwart the efforts of those gathered there in the interest of reduced armaments, is found to have been an employ of certain large ship-building companies. That means that instead of being a naval expert, he was merely a propagandist, a sort of lawyer pleading the case of his selfish clients. It means also that when he was attacking the churches so viciously for their effort to influence against a big navy, he was speaking as a mere propagandist and not as a navy expert. Mr. Shearer was working by every possible means to keep the nations out of the ways of peace and in the ways of war and hatred for the sake of the gain of gold, as were also the big shipbuilding companies. He confesses to have been paid $51,230 by these companies and is suing them for the collection of more than $250,000 for such unpatriotic services. One can scarcely imagine more despicable greed than that displayed by these shipbuilders and their one-time employee.

This so-called "naval expert" seems to be representative of the kind we are usually hearing making so much noise when the nation's lawmakers are trying to hear the expressions of sentiment from their constituencies. He says he was employed to prepare information and literature about the financial side of the shipbuilding industry and also to deliver addresses and to interview public officials and press representatives. In view of all this The Congregationalist asks the pertinent questions:

1. Does the recent disclosure about the "naval expert's" employees indicate why he is so anxious to have the churches let the whole peace question alone?

2. Are other professional propagandists for greater preparedness as well paid as he has already been or seeks by court procedure to be?

3. In view of the fact that there has been some talk of an investigation of the peace societies (to which none of them would object), would it not now be in order to have the investigation slant in the opposite direction?

4. Was it such "experts" as Mr. Shearer who furnished the so-called data for Captain Knox's groundless attacks on the Federal Council of Churches in the United States Naval Institute Proceedings?

5. Does the connection of the shipbuilding companies with the "naval expert's" income indicate why the Naval Institute was so ready to jump to the inference that the church organizations receive money from self-seeking groups?

It gives cause for rejoicing that President Hoover gave such prompt and bold rebuke to such base propaganda and profiteering efforts. The President wrote when making public a letter from E. G. Grace, president of the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation, in which payments of money to Shearer were admitted:

"The disclosures of interference with and propaganda against the efforts of the government in its negotiations of international agreements for the reduction of naval armaments are so evident as to require that these matters should be gone into to the very bottom."

It is certainly time to put a check on such pernicious propaganda. The nation is not safe so long as it is given free rein. In this vein the New York World writes editorially:

"Our own profiteers of patriotism have already had a bad setback, thanks to President Hoover's resourcefulness. The chief value of pursuing the investigation to the end will lie in exposing the mechanism of organized jingoism. The more the public learns about how it works the more immunity it will acquire to its blandishments. Such immunity is very important. For in public affairs the side which is patriotically bellicose always has an enormous psychological advantage over the side which is moderate and pacific. As men are now constituted it almost always seems more patriotic to suspect the foreigner than to trust him; it is almost a little bit dangerous, or at least embarrassing, not to go along with the fellow who has the loudest brass band and is waving the largest flag.

"If the movement for international peace is to make progress it must find ways of breaking up this instinctive association between patriotism and pugnacity. It will take a long time to do this: the rhetoric of men like Mr. Shearer touches popular emotions that are more ancient than the reasonableness of men like Mr. Hoover. Fortunately for the United States, and perhaps for the world, the President is well fortified against the sort of passion which the Shearers have to sell, and his determination to put them out of business during the naval negotiations is one of the surest indications among many others he has given that he means to put the prestige of his office and the whole weight of his character into the campaign for peace."

EDITORIAL REVIEW

---

We are giving place in this issue to a report of the recent Bible Conference at Winona Lake, which many of our people enjoyed this year.

Brother J. E. Stookey, secretary of the Laymen's organization, offers a suggestive program for the observance of Laymen's Day. See the news department.

The Mid-west District conference will be held at Mulvane, Kansas, October 8 to 10, and the program is to be found in this paper. Brother Claude Landis is pastor of the entertaining church.

Religion does not consist in definitions and creeds, but in a life lived with Christ in God.

The Christian must believe that God has spoken to man through his Word, and that he writes his law upon the human heart.

We extend to Prof. Kenneth M. Monroe our sincere sympathy and bespeak the sympathy of the Evangelist family on account of the recent sudden death of his father in Los Angeles. He did not succeed in reaching home before his father's death.

Communion service will be held in the Fairhaven church near West Salem, Ohio, on Sunday evening, October 6, according to word just received from the pastor, Brother George Pontius, as we were going to press.

Cambria County Brethren Christian Endeavor Union is heard from again, the occasion of the report being the quarterly meeting. The award of the Union was taken by the Second church's society and this was its third consecutive win. Let us hear from other groups or individual societies.

If you believe in intercession and you desire the prayers of the brotherhood for the work of your church, or for some special campaign or for some undertaking or problem, send your request to the editor and it will be given place in these columns. Let us help one another by our prayers.

Rev. Dyll Belote, of the Second church of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, has accepted a call to the pastorate of the Brethren church of Ashland, Ohio, which was made vacant by the resignation of Dr. Charles A. Bame to engage in evangelistic work under the auspices of the Evangelistic and Bible Study League. Brother and Sister Belote will enter upon their new field of labor the first of October.

Miss Lyda Carter reports her school at Krypton as numbering twenty-seven, and the number would be still greater if she were able to take care of them. A pastor and his wife are greatly needed at Krypton. She asks for second hand clothing, as also does Brother Drushall at Lost Creek. Many of our people have been taking delight in this kind of support. If you wish a bag in which to mail your clothing, write to them for one.

Brother G. E. Drushall writes of the very encouraging beginning of the new school year at Lost Creek, Kentucky, where the largest enrollment in the history of the institution is recorded. He speaks also of the marked demand for school work at Krypton, where Miss Lyda Carter is doing a courageous work. The very large attendance at Riverside Institute necessitated the purchase of some new equipment. Other improvements have added much to the appearance of the buildings. Brother Drushall makes a strong plea for the continuance of support to the high school work.

President E. E. Jacobs gives us his usual interesting college news items, among which we note concerning the enrollment of the college, that it has reached almost the limit of the capacity of the college to care for. The number 290 is not a large gain, but it is a gain, and that in the face of the fact that some colleges are experiencing a decline in attendance. It is doubtful if the college ever began a year's work with finer prospects and with as enthusiastic and uniform a confidence of the local constituency. And the response to the Endowment campaign bespeaks the loyalty and confidence of the brotherhood. The increased strength of the college and of the seminary as well is rightly reassuring.

A note from Rev. Clarence Y. Gilmer of Kewanna, Indiana and written in behalf of our church at Camden, Ohio, informs us that Elder N. V. Beery is again pastor of that church "after an interim of one year." Also, it states that "Brother Harley Zumbaugh and the writer held a two weeks' meeting here in June. Five were added to the church. This church has had discouraging experiences, but is beginning to face better prospects. The Camden Brethren held their home-coming on August twenty-fifth with the writer and his wife in charge of the morning worship. Brother John M. Garst, of the Church of the Brethren, gave the afternoon message."

The Church and Education

By L. H. Brumbaugh

Christianity is preeminently a teaching religion. Its founder has no more fitting title than that of "Master Teacher." Jesus possessed all power and might have been anything that he chose to be. He might have set forth his marvelous truths in written words and we would know him as the Master Writer. He might have moved the world God-ward through the instrument of music and we would know him as the Master Musician. He might have presented his message through paintings and sculpture and we would then know him as the Master Artist. But Jesus chose to give his message and move the souls of men through the teaching process and the world will always think of him as the Master Teacher. He chose to meet men face to face and impart his truth through the spoken word and the example of his life.

And this same Jesus, who taught by precept and example the true way of living, before he ascended to heaven and a cloud received him from men's sight, sent forth his followers with the commandment that they should make disciples of all nations and teach men everywhere to observe all the things which he himself had taught them. Jesus commissioned his followers to be teachers and the chief work of his church therefore becomes an educational task. The church is recognizing more and more with passing time that the most effective method for advancing its cause is through the teaching process. Whenever in the past the energy of the church was absorbed in theological and philosophical disputations the church lost ground; whenever she applied her energy to the teaching of youth the Christ way of living she made great progress.

Now the educational task of the church is twofold. First, every child must receive religious instruction and thus be fitted for a place in society and in the kingdom of God. Secondly, special efforts must be made to provide Christian leadership in every field of worthy endeavor and especially in the field of education. Christian teachers are needed wherever there is any teaching to be done. Let us note briefly the importance of this twofold educational task of the church.

The agency through which the church aims to provide religious education for every boy and girl is the Sunday school, which is also frequently spoken of as the church school. The work of the Sunday school is tremendously important because of what it aims to do. Its motto is, "Every man and woman a Christian and trained to do effective work in God's kingdom—the Christian church." To make every boy and girl a Christian man and woman and to train efficient leaders for all phases of church work is the aim of the Sunday school. The Sunday school must not only lead men and women to accept and follow the Christ way of living but must also train these Christians so that they will be efficient church deacons, church trustees, church secretaries, church treasurers, and efficient Sunday school superintendents, secretaries, teachers, principals and whatever other officers may be needed. The Sunday school must be the training school for the future workers in the church.

The work of the Sunday school is important because of what it aims to do. Martin Luther once said, "The right instruction of youth is a matter in which Christ and all the world is concerned." The work of the Sunday school is important because of what it actually achieves. The very future of the church itself depends upon the teaching it provides for children and youth. According work. The best University is the Sunday school; and it is by far the most excellent way of conveying religious instruction." This great English statesman said further, "The knowledge gained in the Sunday school is higher and deeper than anything they get elsewhere. I would rather trust the destiny of a people to a nation of children trained in the Sunday school than I would to a nation that had not had such training."

President Wilson once said, to figures which are given ninety-five percent of the membership of the church today came into the church through the Sunday school; and of these eighty-five percent came into the church under eighteen years of age. The work of the church school—the Sunday school—is tremendously important because of what it is actually achieving.

Lloyd George once said, "All the best training I ever had was in a Sunday school. It is what has chiefly enabled me to do my

"No study is more important than the study of the Bible. There is no more effective agency for such study than the Sunday school."

Again, Mr. Wanamaker the great Christian and merchant prince has said, "I know of no other work that begins to compare in results with that attained by the Sunday school."

Hear this word from a great Confucianist—Viscount Shebusawa, of Japan. Speaking of our western culture he exclaimed, "There are two things in your program that are outstanding and which appeal to me. One is your Bible. One was given to me a year ago and I have read some of it nearly every day since. It is the greatest book ever written. I wish there was a copy in every home in Japan. The other is the Sunday school where young and old gather to study this book. I wish every person in Japan had the opportunity to attend a Sunday school. It would be the greatest thing for business integrity and morality that could possibly happen."

The work of the Sunday school becomes increasingly important as we realize the deep needs of this wide world in which we live. We have discovered that a culture without Christ does not and cannot meet the needs of humanity. Mere literacy is not enough. During the

EDUCATING CHILDREN

In educating children, we should attend first and last and always to the heart. For their heart is their life. But it is their life corrupted already with sin at its source. And society is corrupted precisely at its source through the want of Christian education. Neglect of the development, of the softening, of the radical amendment of the heart, is a thousand times more culpable in a parent or teacher than neglect of mental education.

Parents and teachers! Beware and be most careful not to let your children be wilful. Wilfulness is the root of bitterness in a young heart. It is the rust of the heart, the moth of love, the seed of much evil.

Look! Are the pupils of our schools taught that which concerns them more than all else—prayer? "Lord," said the disciple, "teach us to pray."

world war we learned that six percent of our people here in the United States were illiterate, while at the same time five one-hundredths, or one percent of the German people were illiterate. Yet despite this high degree of literacy the world war came upon us. In 1914 we were not lacking in wealth, culture or power, but we were sadly lacking in some of the most fundamental Christian virtues.

Macaulay once said, "Nine-tenths of the calamities that have befallen the human race had no other origin than the union of high intelligence with low desires." A general of the United States army makes this statement, "Our army cannot save the country, our navy cannot save the country. Our Sunday schools sown thick as school houses can save the country." And Mr. Babson, the well-known statistician, says, "The need of the hour is not more factories, railroads, steamships, armies and navies, but rather more religious education." Dr. Chas. W. Eliot speaking of the necessity of religious education said, "Exclude religion from education and you have no foundation upon which to build moral character."

Ever since the founding of our nation its greatest statesmen have been stressing the need of religious education and the development of Christian character. George Washington expressed one of his convictions in these words, "We shall preserve our liberty only by the religious education of our youth." And in his Farewell Address he said, "Let us with caution indulge the supposition that morality can be maintained without religion ... the reason and experience both forbid us to expect that national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principle."

Later statesmen have expressed the same conviction in other words. Theodore Roosevelt said, "To educate a man in mind and not in morals is to educate a menace to society." William Howard Taft says, "All agree that education in religion and morals is essential to the welfare of the nation." Warren G. Harding said, "Christian education is essential to Christian citizenship and right civic leadership." Shortly before his decease Harding said, "I tell you, my countrymen, the world needs more of the Christ; if we could only bring into the relationships of humanity the brotherhood that was taught by Christ, we would have a restored world." Calvin Coolidge has said, "We do not need more national development, we need more spiritual development; we do not need more intellectual power, we need more moral power; we do not need more government, we need more religion. We do not need more of the things that are seen, we need more of the things that are unseen."

From across the Atlantic there comes this message from Field Marshall Haig, "The gospel of Christ is the world's only social hope and the sole promise of world peace." And again Lloyd George exclaims, "The wounds of the world are bleeding and they can never be healed by any material thing. The only remedy is that healing and brotherhood which emanates from the gospel of Christ."

The supreme task of the Christian church everywhere, whether in the United States, Africa, Europe, South America, Asia, or the South Sea Islands is to plant the teachings of Jesus into the heart of childhood and youth. Only thus can the world be won for Christ. Benjamin Kidd put a most fundamental truth in words when he said, "Whatever you would have in the adult you must first hide in the heart of the child."

The first educational task of the church then is to perfect her teaching agency which we know as the Sunday school. Her second educational task is to make more effective her agencies of higher education whereby young men and women are trained for leadership in every field of worthy human endeavor and especially the fields of religion and education. One authority says, "It is important to remember that the church college is the place where about ninety percent of the world's Christian leaders are produced." We need the church college to train our ministry and missionaries. We need the church college to train men in a Christian atmosphere for the fields of law, medicine, commerce, public school teaching, and the other important professions. The state college does not provide a Christian environment for its student body. Dr. W. O. Thompson, for many years president of Ohio State University, has made this very significant statement, "I am in no way untrue to state institutions when I say that in our day a boy might become a bachelor or master in almost any one of the best of them and be as ignorant of the Bible, the moral and spiritual truth which it represents, and the fundamental principles of religion, their nature and value to society, as if he had been educated in a non-Christian country. Who is to supply this lack if not the Christian college?"

The future of the Brethren church, of Christianity, of civilization, and of humanity depends upon the support which Christians give the Sunday school and the denominational college. Let us close with those words of Benjamin Franklin, "When human science has done its utmost and we have thought the young worthy of honor, yet still we must recommend them to the scriptures in order to complete their wisdom, regulate their conduct through life and guide them to happiness forever."

The Closed Book

An Interesting and Suggestive Editorial from the "Presbyterian Banner"

He closed the book.* Jesus did this; and so there is a time to open and a time to close the Bible. Why did he do this?

Could Not Read It All

An obvious reason for closing the book was that he could not read it all. That would have taken many hours and would have put the last listener to sleep or have emptied the synagogue. And so he read a portion of it, as much as would serve his purpose at the time, and then closed the book. We are constantly doing the same thing. We take a passage for reading or study or a text, and then close the Bible until we are ready for it again. We cannot read any book all at once, but must take it chapter by chapter and page by page. Some readers read too much at a time and thus stuff their minds without digesting and assimilating it. We may run through the Bible in such a hurried and superficial way as to derive little or no profit from it. At the table we do not try to eat the whole larder or, in taking medicine, to swallow the whole bottle. We must take things piece by piece and bit by bit in all the fields of life. No one thinks he can build a house at one stroke of his hammer or make a garment with one stitch of his needle. The scientist, in his investigations, picks out one little piece, perhaps so small that it takes a high-powered microscope to see it, and concentrates his attention on that. It is no small part of the wisdom of life to know how to take things in their right proportion and order, when to open and when to close a book, and even in studying the Bible to know when to close it for meditation and mastery.

To Concentrate Attention on Himself

Jesus closed the book to concentrate attention on himself. He did not want his hearers to think only of the book and worship the Bible. The Jews came perilously near doing this very thing. They pored over its pages, counting its very words, droning it out in the synagogue and shouting it out on the streets, and were slaves of the book, worshipping its very letter. They guarded it as pagans do their idol gods, and to touch it with profane hands was to incur sentence of death. Jesus, having read from the book, then closed it and pushed it aside and took the center of the stage himself. He would not have that book take his place, but have them worship only him. The Bible is not the saviour of the world. We are to respect and reverence it, but are not to worship it. Some good people go so far in their reverence for the Bible, that they make the impression that it should be worshiped itself. But Jesus "closed the book," and thereby gave a visible sign that it is not an end in itself and an object of worship, but only a means to the end of worshipping him.

Did Not Need It

Jesus closed the book because he himself was above it and independent of it; in a sense he did not need it. He had the spiritual content and life of the book in his own soul. He was in himself a fountain of truth, that welled out of him as water out of a spring. Books did not make him, but he made books. His soul was a soil full of seeds out of which have come vast forests of literature. He had boundless originality and fertility of thought and expression, so that without any book he could speak as never man spake. The Jews were frequently astonished as well as alarmed at this living truth that issued from him. "How knoweth this man letters, having never learned?" they exclaimed. What college has he been to, that he can speak such wisdom? On another occasion they exclaimed, "A new teaching!" The scribes and Pharisees were worshipping its letter, but missing its spirit. Its pages were dead parchment to them, and they were dead to its life. It was not written on their hearts, and so it was really something foreign to them, and they were strangers to it. We do not know a book or a subject until we have it wrought into the texture of our minds and hearts. A student may read a book and commit it to memory and recite it glibly and miss no word of it, and yet have no glimmer of understanding of what it means. It is one of the fatalities of the classroom, that a student may make what seems to be a perfect recitation and yet be a perfect dunce; he does not really know what he is saying; and tell him to express his ideas in his own words, and then it turns out that he has no ideas of his own to express. Jesus was himself the Truth, a living and inexhaustible fountain of wisdom and life. All great teachers are their own books and speak out of the fulness of their own minds. Shakespeare did not get his plays out of books; though he may have got suggestions of them; but he set his stage up in his own imagination and created his own scenes and characters. Some men, when they close a book, are done and can say nothing of themselves; but Jesus closed the book because he did not need it, and spoke words out of his own soul that have ever since been the wonder of the world.

The Printed Book Not Enough

Jesus closed the book because the printed book was not enough and had to be supplemented with the living voice. He proceeded to explain and enlarge and illuminate and apply what he had read, and thus made it real and vital to the people. The living voice gives a quality to words that a book in itself cannot have. One may read an author, but, if he can hear him speak, he gets a new sense of the author's meaning and especially of his personality and power. There is not much education in a book, because it has no personality and lacks this subtle suggestiveness and contagion. This is why we have schools and colleges. Children and students go to school with the very books in their hands that they are going to study; why not, then, stay at home and read them there? Because they would not understand them and would soon be discouraged and stop; the teacher takes the same book the scholar studies, and puts light and life into it. The teacher has a contagious personality and kindles his own spirit in the scholar. The best work of the teacher is done when the book is closed and there is a vital impact of mind on mind and heart on heart. This is why the published Bible is not enough. It might be printed by the million and billion and scattered thick as autumn leaves over the whole world, but this would not insure the spread of Christian truth and life. And so we must have the teacher and minister and missionary to take the printed Bible and so explain and apply it as will make it clear to the mind, and plant it in the heart so that it will take root and become living truth. There is a great dearth and hunger in the world; not so much for the printed Bible as for the living word.

To Translate It into Life

Jesus closed the book because he wanted to translate it into the life of the people. As long as knowledge remains in a book and is not put into practice, it is a dead letter. One may have technical knowledge of music and yet have no skill in its practice and could not sing a note or strike a chord that any one would want to hear. One really knows music only when it has become wrought as habit into his nervous system, so that he sings as the bird sings, with unconscious ease, or plays the instrument as though it were an extension of his own muscles and nerves. Knowledge becomes life when it passes from the page into the personality and is bound up in flesh and blood and is itself a living book. This is the kind of gospel that saves. The printed Bible is good and necessary as a means to life; but it is not life itself, and one might have its whole contents in his memory and yet not have it in his heart and life. Printed Bibles in the most costly and luxurious binding may lie on the parlor table, and the living truth be sadly absent from the family life. Bibles may be a thousand times more pious than we than they were in Jerusalem, and yet the business and politics and the whole social order may be little pervaded by its principles and spirit. We have derived very little good from the Bible until we have got beyond the printed page, and can close it and then live it as epistles read and known of all men. We may well close the book if thereby we are made to see and know that it is only the Bible bound up in flesh and blood that has saving power for us and for the world.

Every Book Shall Be Closed

As Jesus closed the book, he did something that shall happen to every book. The books that are pouring from the press will have their little day and then pass into the dust of library shelves and soon into utter oblivion and destruction. The best seller of today will be closed tomorrow. The Bible itself as a mere physical thing will perish as the earth goes up in fervent heat. Everyone is writing a book, his own autobiography. Day by day he is adding page to page, and finally he will come to the last page and word. Death will close the book of everyone's life. This should make us careful as to what we write on these pages; for everything we put there shall be closed up to be opened again at the last day. However, a new volume of life shall then be opened that shall never close, but shall tell the story of life immortal.

His Body

By Dr. C. F. Yoder

One day as I was lost in thought
About my Lord in Heaven,
It seemed to me I heard his voice
And sight to me was given.
I saw a light from Calvary
Shine out o'er land and sea.
It was the glorious love of Christ
Who died to make men free.

And then the light, in human form,
Made earth and Heaven meet.
It seemed to extend around the world,
With many hands and feet.
It was the Church, the Bride of Christ,
The glorious living Word,
The witness to a dying world
Of Christ the risen Lord.

O sweet the voice that came to me
And said, "My child, be true.
You shall be hands and feet for me
While I am life for you.
My work on earth demands your voice,
And you have need to pray,
For I through you desire to work.
My child, go work today."

And then I said, "Dear Lord, take me
And make me all thine own.
I will be hands and feet for thee
To make thy Gospel known."
And as I gave myself to him
He gave himself to me,
And O the joy that now I know
Is like a shoreless sea.

SERIOUS SITUATION IN PALESTINE

In Palestine a serious situation has developed as the result of fighting between Jews and Arabs, a fresh outburst in the controversy over the practice of religious rites at the Wailing Wall. Censored news dispatches from Jerusalem declare the Arabs have been the aggressors and that more than fifty persons have been killed in the past few days. Palestine is under British mandate and Great Britain has taken vigorous measures to suppress the rioting. Five warships have been ordered to the Holy Land from Malta, troops are being dispatched from Egypt and the Cabinet met at once to review the situation. American residents of Jerusalem have appealed to the State Department for protection, but there is little likelihood that an American warship will be sent.—Methodist Protestant Recorder.

THE "NEW MESSIAH" REIGNS

Twenty years ago, in an out-of-the-way corner of India, Mrs. Annie Besant, world-famous theosophist, discovered a young Indian boy, Alcyone by name. The boy was twelve years old. Over the protests of his father, Mrs. Besant adopted the young Hindu, and the next year gave to the world a treatise, "At the Feet of the Master," which, so she said, had been inspired in a dream. A year later, 1911, she formally presented Alcyone—whose name meanwhile had been changed to Jiddu Krishnamurti—to mankind as the future "World Teacher," "Head of all Faiths," "Inspirer of all Religious Progress," God, she said, would speak through Krishnamurti "just as he spoke through the body of the disciple Jesus two thousand years ago." Krishnamurti, apparently, took his assignment in all seriousness. He was sent to the best tutors. He traveled widely. He assembled to himself—and to Mrs. Besant—100,000 people in the mysterious "Order of the Star of the East." But, in the end things went badly for the "new revelation." And last week, before 3,000 followers assembled in Holland, Krishnamurti resigned his post as the "New Messiah" and dissolved his organization. "It is useless," he said, "to try to reestablish order and harmony while individuals in themselves are chaotic, inharmonious and disturbed."—Christian Herald.

60,000 DEAD CHURCHES

Of the 200,000 churches in the United States, the Men's Church League reports that 60,000 are dead. The test by which their condition is judged is that they report no gains in membership. The mere statistical statement needs to be supplemented with a good deal of specific information in order to have value for guidance. The lack of additions in a particular year might occur in the history of a church which is far from dead. Again how many of these churches have died because of a shift in population either in residence or attendance at other churches? What have the automobile and the radio to do with the condition of any church? How far may these conditions be traced to changing currents of popular thinking on the subject of religion? The problem of salvaging thousands of dead churches would seem to be a major problem of missionary policy.—The Baptist.

MR. FORD'S RELIGION

Recent newspaper attacks upon Mr. Henry Ford's fine statement concerning prohibition have overshot the mark in common decency, not to mention the truth. One of the editorial attacks in an Ohio daily insinuated that he was insincere both in his attitude toward prohibition and religion. A friendly newspaper man went to him and asked him for a statement concerning his religious views, and this is what Mr. Ford is reported to have said:

"I believe in God and in Jesus Christ. I was brought up in the church. I belong to the church. I attend church. I never go to hear a sermon, whether it is by a preacher in a small church or a large one, that I do not get help.

"Religion is like electricity. I do not understand electricity, but I am deeply interested in it, I want to know all I can about it. I know that it warms our hearts and that it makes the world better. I know that it lights up the dark places of the earth. I see and admit its effectiveness even though I do not profess to understand it at all.

"We need more religion and less professionalism in our ministry and we need it mixed into industrial life; you can take the Sermon on the Mount and put it down into industry anywhere and it will work."

That ought to hold our newspaper cynics for a considerable spell. But more, it ought to mean something to every boy and girl in the land to hear the richest man in the world saying that he feels the need of going to church, hearing the gospel proclaimed, and rendering his share of furthering the Kingdom of Jesus Christ in the world.—The Christian Index.

SIGNIFICANT

At a recent session of the New York branches of the Catholic Central Verein and the Catholic Women's Union of America resolutions were adopted condemning the Volstead Act, and deplored the Federal control of education as a peril to individualism. Repeal of the Volstead Act was urged in a resolution adopted by the women's organization, in which it was declared that "the law has no moral character and is an infringement upon personal prerogatives." Federal control of education and the establishment of a Department of Education by the government were opposed as contrary "to the free aim of the land."

In this connection we add this news item to the effect that the New York World reports Cardinal McConnell, of Boston, as saying to one of its representatives: "Tell the American people that the Catholic church is opposed to prohibition." The cardinal surely wasted no words in giving his dictum. He wanted it to be clearly understood.

Still another item along this line. The American Issue says that Bishop Hartley, of the Catholic Diocese of Columbus (Ohio) has recently returned from a visit in Italy. In an interview in the Ohio State Journal the bishop contrasts the difference between the "orderly, sensible and law abiding lives" of Italians where there is no prohibition of liquor and the "disorderly lives" of Americans who are subject to the prohibition laws. "In Italy the people enjoy themselves in a Christian and sensible way, the father and mother sitting at the table with their children, each drinking a glass of wine with their food." He congratulates Italy that it does not have prohibition. The Issue rather pointedly adds that the "bishop might have also said that Italians, like other Europeans, are pushing and crowding to come to America, the land of freedom, opportunity, good wages and prohibition!"—The Evangelical-Messenger.

ITALIAN CENSORS FOR AMERICAN LITERATURE

Strange indeed is the news across the parting seas to the American people; a message which associates our proud republic with the government of Soviet Russia. Many a Russian book is of course a proclamation of the boldest anarchy with the wickedest type of atheism. But now comes the verdict of Italy to the effect that Russian books and American books are equally dangerous to the kingdom beyond the Alps in Italy. Here the language of condemnation which presumes to classify American books with those of Bolshevik Russia: "The ministry of Education, deciding that American and Russian literature makes bad reading for the youth of Italy, has placed the works of Jack London, Tolstoe, Targenieff, Gorky and Dostoevsky on the proscribed list. Booksellers are instructed not to place the books of these authors on sale because they are polluting the moral climate in which Facists youths must be nurtured. Acting on the Ministry of the Interior's instructions, the police of several cities sequestered copies of the banned American and Russian books with such zeal that a protest was raised by the federation of Italian booksellers which asserted that the police were exceeding the limits intended by the ministry. In reply Under Secretary of the Interior issued a second circular condemning the Russian and American authors, but announcing that the police would enforce the prohibition order against them with discretion. The circular points out that it is evident that the morbidity of the Russians and the reckless adventurousness of writers like London have had a bad effect on the Italian youth and promote delinquency. It was said the American and Russian books were deliberately put on sale by interests adverse to the present regime in Italy in order to thwart the purpose of the Facist regime in educating the new generation along rigid lines."—Methodist Protestant Recorder.

Daily Readings and Suggestions

MONDAY

John 4:1-8—Weary! In this incident we have one of the most convincing evidences that, although all the fullness of the God-head dwelt in Jesus of Nazareth, yet the body in which it dwelt was perfectly human. He was weary, and he sat in the shade, by the well, to rest; he was thirsty, and hungry—he that made the heavens and earth, and all that in them is! Also, we have here some measure of his love: being on an equality with God, he yet counted it not a thing to be grasped at, but laid it aside and took upon himself human form with all its ills, and became as one that serveth. When we realize something of what this meant to him, we will not hesitate even to be weary, or to hunger and thirst, that we might serve him. To them that are weary, he says, "Come unto me;" and to those that hunger and thirst, he says, "Ye shall be filled."

TUESDAY

John 4:9-19—Living Water. The woman of Samaria was thirsty, spiritually as well as physically. Her many husbands were simply an effort to satisfy her thirst artificially. The world today is just as thirsty, and is resorting to just as unsatisfactory methods of quenching its thirst. When, like the woman, we lay aside our prejudices and come to the Source of Living Water, our thirst is satisfied, and it is as a well of water springing up within us into everlasting life.

WEDNESDAY

John 4:19-26—Worship. People still quibble about the proper ways and means of worshipping God, even as this woman, and the Pharisees of Jesus' day. His plea here constituted one of the major appeals of his ministry: God is a Spirit, not limited by time or place, seeing all, even the hearts and motives of men. When we realize this, we may have constant communion with the God of heaven, even in the most unlikely places; unless we do realize it, our worship is vain even in the most sacred temples. May we worship him today in spirit and in truth!

THURSDAY

John 4:27-30, 39-42—Growth in Grace. Here we have one illustration of what it means to grow in grace; because of his wonderful knowledge, the woman at first saw in Jesus only a prophet; then as she drank in his teachings she hailed him as the Christ; then she went out and proclaimed him as such, and further blessing came both to her, and to the people of Samaria.

FRIDAY

John 4:31-38—Passion for Souls. The disciples had gone to buy meat for their hungry Master, yet when they returned with it he told them, in effect, that he was no longer hungry! The secret was in his passion for souls. His meat—that which satisfied him and made him forget his hunger—was to do the will of him that had sent him, to reconcile men to God. May a like passion for souls fill thy servants this day, that we no longer spend our time in feasting, but in seeking to win those that are lost!

SATURDAY

John 4:43-54—The Compassion of Christ. Jesus here, as ever, refused to use his power merely for show; but when the nobleman begged for the life of his son, the compassion of Jesus was at once aroused. How precious to know that his compassion is just the same today, and that no matter what our need, he is ever sympathetic and ready to help.

SUNDAY

John 5:1-9—Healing. Again we find the compassion of Jesus at work. Knowing the Jews and their narrowness, he must have known that to heal this man on the Sabbath would stir up opposition and hatred. Yet forgetful of all that, in view of the man's great need, he healed him. He is just as able to heal today, both physically and spiritually, if only we do not limit him by our unbelief. We pray for those in pain and suffering, who are in need of physical healing; let us not forget to pray for those who are sick with sin, that they, too, may find healing at the hand of the Great Physician.—T. ## The Beginners Department

By Muriel White

ORGANIZATION.—The Beginners' Department is composed of the children four and five years of age, commonly called the kindergarten age. These children differ greatly from the Primary children in interests and characteristics and are therefore grouped together in a separate department. In some schools children under four years of age attend the department regularly. These children belong to the Cradle Roll Department and, although they may meet with the Beginners during the worship service, they should be grouped together in a separate class and taught by some one who understands the needs of very little children. The book, Object Lessons for the Cradle Roll, by Frances Danielson, is full of suggestive material for teaching them.

Unless the Beginners' Department is large the only officers needed are the superintendent and a helper who also acts as the department secretary and pianist. If the department is composed of twenty or more children, other helpers may be added, if needed, and the offices of secretary and pianist should be distinct from that of the helper.

SUPERINTENDENT AND HELPERS.—The superintendent should conduct the opening worship service, the circle talk, and unless the helpers are trained and capable, tell the story.

The helpers assist the children with their wraps, conduct the pre-session work and assist with the handwork and arrange the details of the room, such as hanging the pictures on the burlap frieze, arranging the handwork material and leaflets. They should also sit in the circle and help with the singing, remembering, however, that they must help and not hinder. They should not sing so loudly that the children's voices cannot be heard, nor should they carry on whispered conversations with pupils during the circle talk or story. Their aim should be to perform the numerous little duties that make the morning program run smoothly.

PIANIST.—The Pianist should be the most capable musician in your church; one who understands children's music and sympathizes with the children. Children's moods may be controlled by the piano. A quiet, reverent atmosphere may be secured when the children are noisy, or a bright, cheerful atmosphere when the children are listless, by the use of carefully chosen music, played with expression.

SECRETARY.—The secretary should keep a record of the attendance, birthdays, and absences. At the close of the session she should hand a list of the absentees to the superintendent and teachers. She should also take charge of the distribution and care of the leaflets and should arrange to send through the mail, or by messenger, the leaflets to children who are absent on account of sickness.

She should be seated near the door and mark the attendance of children as they enter the room. She should be at her desk twenty minutes before the session begins. By the time the quiet music is played the record is complete except for a few tardy ones. To call the roll of the children after the session has begun is a waste of time that is needed for much more important things.

THE SURROUNDINGS.—The room, or corner, reserved for this department should be as beautiful and attractive as it is possible to make it, for it is here that the little child receives his first impression of God's house. The floor should be covered with a rug or carpet, the walls should be tinted in quiet, restful colors. Around the room, or especially in the front of the room, should be a burlap frieze on which pictures illustrating the theme, or seasons may be pinned. A few good pictures should be framed and hung on the walls. "The Sistine Madonna," by Raphael, should be the first one chosen. "Christ Blessing Little Children," by Ploekhorst, "The Child Samuel," by Reynolds, or "The Lost Sheep," by Taylor, are also very appropriate.

There should be a musical instrument, a piano if possible, for music is a very important part of the service. Low chairs should be the very first provision made in the way of equipment. These chairs should harmonize with the woodwork and other furnishings of the room and should be from ten to twelve inches in height. They should be arranged in a circle during the opening service. After the rest exercise, the children may lift their chairs and gather close about the teacher for the story. There must be a cabinet, or cupboard, for filing pictures, leaflets, the objects used in illustrating the lessons, such as nests, twigs, nuts, autumn leaves, cocoons and models like the sheepfold and the oriental house, as well as for the material used in lesson expression, crayolas, bogus paper, paste, pencils, scissors and small pictures.

There should be a row of hooks concealed, or a small closet, for the children's wraps. Nothing gives a more disorderly air to a room than wraps thrown over a chair or heaped on a window sill.

A low table, placed in the center of the circle, or at some point in the circle is desirable. On this table should be put the flowers which the children bring, the objects to be used in teaching, such as the autumn leaves and cocoon. At Thanksgiving and Christmas the gifts which the children bring are heaped on this table.

In some schools the Beginners Department will be forced to meet in the corner of the Primary room or even in the corner of the main auditorium. In that case, use a curtain or screen to separate the department from other classes. A screen is preferable to a curtain, since pictures and other illustrations may be pinned upon it. In case you meet behind the screen, you will have to employ the simpler rest exercises and your songs must be sung very softly.

The teacher should never be discouraged because the surroundings are not ideal. Many departments in one-room churches are getting results. Keep the ideal before you and work towards it, for "where there is a will, there is a way."

Look about your Beginners' room or corner and take a critical inventory. Is it light and well ventilated? Is there any way in which these conditions may be made better with the expenditure of a little time and money? Is it clean? Are all things in order? Is everything in the room quiet, restful and conducive to worship? What provision is made for the children's comfort? Are there hooks for their wraps or are the wraps strewn over chairs and in the window sills? Make a note of the equipment needed, and keep the list where you can see it often. As each piece of equipment is added, draw a line through the name on your list. "The need of the child should be the law of the school."

For further reading on this topic consult Methods with Beginners, by Danielson.

PICTURES.—A set of large pictures carefully chosen for the purpose accompanies each quarter's lessons. These pictures are in beautiful colors and mounted ready for use. They are effective when placed on the wall where the children can see and touch them, or they may be handled by the children when the teaching procedure gives occasion for that method. The pictures themselves include copies of masterpieces and child life pictures, done especially for this series. They were chosen for one or more of several purposes: (1) to make clearer the background and action of the story; (2) to deepen the emotional appeal of the lesson story; (3) to suggest desirable forms of conduct and thus widen the child's experience.

Other seasonal and conduct pictures may be found in magazines. These should be trimmed and mounted artistically, and filed for use at suitable times.

A set of six pictures by Jessie Wilcox Smith, the noted artist of child life, has been assembled.

Every picture in the room should be related to the child's experiences with the group of lessons being taught. A glimpse of the room should tell the story of the experiences which they have had during the quarter. Pictures should never be hung simply for the sake of decoration. Avoid using many pictures at once. If grouped in the right way, the pictures used with the lessons may hang on the burlap throughout the quarter, but the best plan is to file all the pictures used with the old theme except one picture which will suggest the truth of the theme just taught.

MODELS.—Models may be used if care is taken that they do not confuse the child's imagination. If they are familiar things, such as a nest, cocoon, autumn leaves, twigs, fruit, nuts, flowers, food, there is little danger of misunderstanding and the child is helped to see more vividly than through words, or even pictures. Models of biblical objects such as an oriental house or sheepfold must be used with great care, for since they are small reproductions of unfamiliar things they may hinder a child's visualization of the real object.

BLACKBOARD.—The blackboard can be used with telling effect, especially with the nature story. Its advantage over individual illustrative work done by the pupil is that several children may cooperate in making the story picture.

The blackboard may often be used for decorative purposes. Seasonal borders or sketches may be drawn by the teacher. Suggestions for these may be found in the Primary Education, from the Primary Education Company, 50 Bromfield Street, Boston, Massachusetts, and the Normal Instructor and Primary Plans, from the F. A. Owen Publishing Company, Dansville, New York. These are school magazines and you will be able to secure the use of them from the Primary teacher of the public school. In these magazines you will find simple patterns of trees, birds, fruit, seeds, flowers, which may be used in making seasonal borders to go around the top of the burlap, seasonal posters or posters illustrating the sons or nature lessons. Patterns may be secured also from the J. S. Latta Company, Davenport, Iowa.

MUSIC—Music is an important factor in the Beginners' Department. The songs chosen should be very simple yet tuneful. The words and music must be uplifting. They must say the same thing. Avoid teaching too many songs. Ten songs well learned are far more valuable to the child than twice the number poorly learned.

The songs should be taught to the children by means of a poster illustrating the different things mentioned in the song, by a story, a picture or through conversation. Songs should be developed naturally, and not by the drill method, so the children will comprehend the meaning of the words they sing. Songs for the Pre-School Age, by Shumate, 50c, Carols and Melodies by Levda, Songs for Little People and Song Stories for the Sunday school, by Hill, make a good collection of song books.—Taken from "The Workers' Manual," Revised Edition, 1929, by Ida M. Irvin, Christian Board of Publication, Beaumont and Pine Streets, St. Louis, Missouri.

Editor's Select Notes on the Sunday School Lesson

(Lesson for October 6)

Recognizing Our Debt to Others

Scripture Lesson—Neh. 4:15-23; Mark 12:28-34; Rom. 15:1-7; Phil. 2:1-8; Col. 3:12; 4:1; James 2:14-17.

Printed Text—Mark 12:28-34; James 2:14-17.

Devotional Reading—Psalm 40:5-10.

Golden Text—Not looking each of you to his own things but each of you also to the things of others.—Phil. 2:4.

The Quarter's Lessons

The lessons of this Quarter are different from the most of the uniform Sunday school lessons. These courses aim to make the pupils acquainted with all the chief passages on the subjects considered. While each lesson is based upon one or more leading passages, the classes are expected to get light on the subject from all parts of the Bible, thus growing familiar with the Book of books and discovering the unity of Scripture.

The Quarter is entitled "Some Social Teachings of the Bible." While all parts of the Bible, Old and New Testaments alike, have these teachings, and they are brought out in the lesson, yet since our modern Western civilization has its roots in Christianity we find more appropriate passages in the New Testament. It may be interesting to the older classes to trace, through other, unnamed, passages in the Old Testament the essential difference between the civilization under the law of Moses, and under the principles of Jesus Christ.

Comments on the Text

Neh. 4:15-23, which gives an account of the building the wall of Jerusalem under the direction of Nehemiah, the royal governor, shows the value of cooperation, which may be said to be one of the debts we owe to others about us.

Mark 12:28-34 gives another item in our debt to others.

28. And one of the scribes, who was a lawyer (Matthew); that is, one of the men learned in the Jewish law, who copied, preserved, interpreted, and taught the Jewish Scriptures. Heard them ... asked him with regard to the highest duty of a man—a question often seriously discussed by their teachers. What. Of what kind, moral or ceremonial, duty to God or to man?

29. Jesus answered, quoting from Deut. 6:4, 5, the very words which "every devout Jew recited twice every day; and the Jews do it to this day," and which they inscribed on the parchment enclosed in their phylacteries, and wore on their foreheads and arms during prayer. Is one. Whatever view we take of the Trinity, all believe in the absolute unity of God.

30. Thou shalt love, etc. "Love is the greatest thing in the world,"—great in nature, in power, in value, as the source and fountain of all virtue. With, or from, all thy heart, the general word for the inner man. It is the seat of the desires, passions, affections, emotions. With all thy soul. The life principle, the center of will and personality. With all thy mind. It is to be an intelligent love, from free choice under the direction of the reason and the judgment. With all thy strength. The utmost energy of heart, soul and mind, our whole being, no part left out, must go forth toward God in love.

31. Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. This love is the principle in the heart from which flows the Golden Rule in practice.

34. Jesus ... said unto him, Thou art not far from the kingdom of God. He understood the truth and sympathized with it at least in theory. He stood at the door of the kingdom. He knew his duty. Did he enter in?

Rom. 15:1-7. The strong owe much to the weak, even to abstaining from things allowed when indulgence would harm others.

Phil. 2:1-8. Be humble in service to others, Jesus Christ being the extreme example.

Col. 3:12; 4:1. Remember that whatever the difference in earthly rank or position all Christians have one Master, Jesus Christ, in whose eyes all were equal.

The Epistle of James has been called "The Gospel of Common Sense." We need, therefore, not be surprised at finding in it certain concrete things which we owe to others around us.

2:14. Faith ... not works. It is easy to claim faith in God, for no one save God can dispute the claim so far as its existence in the mind and heart is concerned. But men are ready to dispute its existence if there is nothing in the outward actions to prove it. There may be life in the dead-looking tree; but we consider it dead if there are no outward signs of life—no leaves and no fruit. Can that faith save him? Such faith can be but a theoretical belief in the truth of the Christian religion. James does not deny that faith is necessary for salvation; but argues that a faith which does not affect the life is a powerless faith which cannot save.

15. Destitute. The picture given is of the extremest destitution. If a man could witness such suffering and not be ready to help what can we say of his Christianity?

16. One of you say. Of what use are mere words to a freezing man? What poor man will believe the expressions of sympathy by the rich unless that sympathy shows itself in deeds of kindness? Words

Cambria County Brethren C. E. Union

The quarterly mass meeting of the Union was held in the Vinco church the evening of August 6, 1929. Considering the seemingly inevitable summer slump the meeting was well attended.

Evelyn Probst read the Scripture and J. H. Finnell led the song service. Aurelia Vickroy, Junior Superintendent, gave a short talk on "The Progress and Achievements of Juniors," and Eleanor Furry rendered several pleasing flute solos.

The highlight of the evening was an interesting report of the Christian Endeavor Convention held at Kansas City this year. Chalmers Wisegarver, a United Brethren youth who attended the convention, favored us with this.

The award of the Union was taken for the third consecutive time by the Moxham society who had an average of 67½%.

Carl Uphouse, as a fitting climax, presented a plea for Kentucky Missions and an offering was taken for said work. This offering was given at National Conference, to the Mission Board.

Misses Thelma Custer, Ila Wingard and Ora Mackall were in charge of a successful weiner roast following the meeting. Revs. Belote and Bowman were in attendance.

About 150 Endeavorers and their friends attended the Union picnic held at the Vinco Grove, August 15, 1929. Many ate supper on the grounds. Baseball games, contests and ring games were engaged in. The activities were closed with a marshmallow roast around a huge bonfire. Mildred Furry, a student at Ashland, conducted a very impressive devotional service.

The Union will lose, for the present at least, the able help of Mr. and Mrs. George McDonald, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Wagner, and Miss Mary Ashman, who have gone to Ashland to prepare for more definite work. The prayers and best wishes of the Union members follow them.

MISSIONS

Lost Creek, Kentucky

Another school year has opened at Riverside Institute and also at Krypton. If there were any doubt lingering in the minds of the workers as to whether there was any demand for the school work yet, it has all been dispelled by what our eyes have beheld. At Riverside Institute we have now the largest attendance we have ever had at this time of the year, if we have ever had so many at any time of the year. Our chapel now is overcrowded at the regular morning chapel service. And then here we have had to turn many away who had wanted to come. We could have taken in quite a number more if we had had the room. We do not recall any time in its history that there was such a demand for Riverside Institute as there has been this fall.

Then at Krypton, there has also been a strong demand for the school. One of the bravest and most faithful workers ever out on any field has been Miss Lyda Carter there. She has stayed there, even against all human discouragements, and has gone on with the school, and God has rewarded her faithfulness by sending to her even more than she should handle for the school work. At last account she had twenty-five there.

Krypton is needing so much a man and his wife on the field to help Miss Carter, and also to take care of the services, which she cannot do. The Rev. Manual Davidson was instantly killed while walking on the railroad track, and Miss Carter now is alone there, except for some girls who are with her. Why does she stay there in that work? There can be only one answer, and that is that it is God's will for her to be there and doing the work she does do.

The attendance at the schools this fall can only mean one thing, and that is that there is a real demand for the schools, and to ignore this would only be folly in the work. If you still doubt this any, read up on President Hoover's recent experience in his camp in the Mountains of Virginia.

The unusually large attendance at Riverside has necessitated the purchase of additional furniture, about thirty dollars, each of recitation chairs. The boys' dormitory, as well as the girls' dormitory has been much improved, the work for the same being mostly donated. Every room has been papered, some of the hallways painted, and the inside made so much more attractive, even so much so that one would hardly recognize it as the same place. The boys' dormitory which before seemed about gone, now looks entirely different, and is fully worth keeping up. A little effort, a little work, has made a big difference there. Outside entrances have also been placed on a couple school rooms, thus making that better and more efficient. One who has known Riverside Institute for many years said, "Riverside now looks better than it has for a long time."

And now since the work has launched out on faith that all its needs would be met, and since support through the Mission Board has been much cut down, our God has proven himself faithful and all our needs have been met so far. We fully believe that they will continue to be. Phil. 4:19. But dear reader, you can help along much by sending clothing to the Mission, that is, used or outworn or outgrown clothing. During the summer we received about four bags of such clothing. This clothing enabled us to get about twenty-five bushels of green beans and around three hundred quarts of blackberries. Such clothing helps a great deal, and if you will kindly drop us a card, we will mail you a bag in which you can easily put the clothing. You can send it to Riverside Institute either by mail or express.

The experiences of late have convinced us that it cannot be the will of our Lord to cut down in any way the message of Riverside Institute. There are a number of us here who believe it. Every worker now on the field was told before being engaged that there was not enough money in sight to meet the needs for the year. But not one let that stand in the way. The response has been the response of faith. The following have so faithfully answered the call: Mrs. Grace P. Slack of Long Beach, California, the teacher of Bible; Miss Bessie Hooks, high school principal and teacher, whose home is Kittanning, Pennsylvania; Miss Carrie Stoffer of Homeworth, Ohio, teacher in high school; Cyrus H. Cleveland of Chicago, Illinois, manager boys' dormitory and teacher in high school; Miss Clara Hall of Garrettsville, Ohio, teacher 7th and 8th grades; Miss Dove Barnett, Portsmouth, Kentucky, teacher grades 4th to 6th; Miss Omeda Hadden, Haddix, Kentucky, teacher grades one to three; Mrs. Drushal, teaches Bible, and the writer two classes in the high school. Miss Anna Barnhoft, Secretary.

Now why are we here and working as we do? All the above persons do much work outside the school room. Sunday schools are kept going, and other activities are kept up. Are we here for the sake of just keeping the high school going, as some seem to think? If that were true there would not be one of us here. Not one is here this year, without having first prayed very definitely about the matter. God has called us, and it is in obedience to that call that we are here to support the program of evangelism in this field. Other denominations are strengthening their work, school and all. Two of these have been in Breathitt County this last year. Brooks Memorial School has been raised up in this last year, as also is a new school place at Oakdale, both in this county, and both by the same denomination. Does this mean that the time has come to quit the school work? Only one answer is possible.

The workers at Riverside now meet four times a week for special prayer, Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday evenings. We believe that many of you will join us in prayer, that the will of our Lord may be done here and on this Mission Field. Pray for us that we may be guided aright, and that our needs may be met.

G. E. DRUSHAL.

LYDIAN GIRLS' BOARDING SCHOOL OF THE BRETHREN CHURCH

Krypton, Kentucky, Sept. 1, 1929.

Dear Fellow-Brethren:

This is just a word of appreciation heartily sent to those of you who have so thoughtfully sent us used clothing at any time, and to those who may be interested in God's work at Krypton. We appreciate the used clothing more than you can know. Our school has reopened again this year. We are considerably handicapped by a lack of workers on the field, but under God are doing the best we can. At present the school has an enrollment of twenty-seven. We could have several more if we were able to keep them here as boarding students. We are looking to God to send us a pastor who will help in the school. It is necessary that we have some one. Is there not in all the brotherhood some pastor or pastor and his wife whose hearts thrill at this call? Can it be that no one will come? It cannot be! The people here demand it. They frequently ask, "What have you heard about a new pastor?" Death has recently claimed one who was helping us. The people will not let the school discontinue. The little children need another helper. Two of the most beautiful little girls I've ever seen daily pray for a pastor. Sometimes they word their petition thus, "Send us a pastor who will love us and who will help in the school." He who comes, however, must be truly God-sent. None other would endure. None other would love the people enough.

We know that this school has been altogether worth while in the past. Today there are seven of our last year's students in Riverside. Perhaps no more than one would be there now if it had not been that they had attended this school first. This school still is necessary. It is in a place of opportunity. We must seize this opportunity and take boys and girls for Christ.

Again this year, as in the past, we will be very, very glad to receive any clothing which you may feel led to send. We constantly have calls for it. This summer we could have used much more than we did if we only had had it. People here are now looking for fall and winter garments of all kinds. We are very grateful for all that you have done.

May Brethren people everywhere pray for our Kentucky work, both at Lost Creek and Krypton, and may they respond as God shall lead them. Acts 18:13-15.

Yours in the Service of the King,

LYDA CARTER.

JEWISH CHRISTIANS IN U. S.

A survey of Jewish congregations in this country has recently been made by Dr. H. S. Linfield, Director of the Statistical Department of the American Jewish Committee. The figures may be accepted as substantially correct, as a very careful canvass was made. The statistics deal only with permanent congregations.

The canvass shows that there are 2,948 congregations in the United States. Of these 2,855 are in urban places with a population of 2,500 and over. There are 93 congregations in rural areas. These figures show that there is in the United States one congregation for every 1,386 Jewish men, women and children.—Our Jewish Neighbors.

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

The College opened Tuesday, September 10th with a good enrollment. There has been reported a slight decline in the enrollments in various colleges but ours shows no decline but a slight increase. By the time the enrollment is closed, there will be at least 290 students, exclusive of Saturday students and Music.

The enrollment in the Seminary is satisfactory. There are 14 new enrollments bringing the total up to 39. The enrollment in this department is very steady and does not vary much with the years.

The Saturday courses will start the first Saturday in October. Last year the enrollment in the first Saturday term was 74. This will make our total enrollment in the Arts and Theology as much as we dare have under the rules under which we operate.

All the new teachers were present for the opening and all give promise of meeting fully the rather exacting demands for such a school as ours.

The College reception was held last Thursday evening in the new Gymnasium. It was well attended. The main address was given by Hon. Hugh Culbertson, County Prosecuting Attorney. Dr. Martin Shively presided with grace and dignity.

The College band played one afternoon and evening at the Ashland County Fair.

I addressed the teachers of Wooster and Wayne County last Saturday on "Education for the Present Day." Edmund Vance Cooke, the poet, was the other speaker.

Athletics. We are playing here under the Ohio Conference rules, as we are a member of that organization. This means that Freshmen can not play in any intercollegiate sport. So far, everything has worked out all right as most of our veterans returned this year. How it will go next year is another matter, but the prospects are bright as we had 28 Freshmen out for practice.

It is a privilege to have several returned missionaries as well as some prospective ones, here in school. Rev. and Mrs. Sheldon are here and serve to keep before our minds the urgency of the Great Commission and at the same time to remind us that Christian heroism is not dead.

Professor Monroe was called to California on account of the sudden death of his father. He has returned to Ashland and has taken up his work. The entire College sympathizes with him in his loss.

At last we must comply with the State's orders and erect fire-escapes on Founders' Hall. This is an added expense to our budget. While they are necessary, two things are to be noted, first, the added and unprovided-for expense and also the complete State control from which we have no appeal. Ninety days' time only is given.

Dr. Bell is doing some work near here and has made good progress. I hope those who give through his work will fully realize how much the College appreciates their gifts. We are driven so hard from every quarter, that it takes every bit of resources, moral and financial, which we can muster to meet the ever present demands.

The work here will be very arduous this year and I hope the entire church will uphold us with its prayers. Conducting a College such as this requires expert knowledge and the reason why certain things are done here is not always clear but the Board of Trustees has only the best interests of the church and college and seminary at heart. The standards set by others are not always of our own approval but when we must meet them, we must, and our policies here must be shaped with these ends in view.

The ins and outs of the College are always open and above board and I invite correspondence relative to our plans and problems.

EDWIN E. JACOBS.

WINONA LAKE BIBLE CONFERENCE

The Thirty-fifth Annual Bible Conference in session for ten days at Winona Lake, Indiana; closed Sunday, August 25, with twelve inspiring meetings. At least 12,000 were in attendance at the combined services of the day. The Conference throughout was exalting in its instruction and in its association, and to thousands a spiritual feast. For the first time the Conference closed with Holy Communion at 9:30 P. M. in the Auditorium.

More than two thousand wended their way from the Tabernacle to the Communion Service in charge of Dr. Biederwolf, who was assisted by Ministers and Elders of various denominations. It was the most impressive and spiritual Conference closing on record and will no doubt be carried out in the future.

With the soul stirring messages of the preachers and Bible teachers the quiet communing with God at the closing hour, men and women who have been in contact with events for years at Winona were led to exclaim "the like of this 35th Conference we have never known."

The attendance throughout broke the record of last year by three hundred. Six hundred and ninety-four ministers were registered, coming from all parts of the United States. A large number of Home and Foreign Missionaries were in attendance who thanked God for the privilege afforded them.

The Conference closes with all expenses paid and a neat balance which Director Biederwolf turns over to Winona Institutions.

One cannot begin to tell of the many good things which the program afforded, sermons, Bible expositions, the splendid music directed by Homer Rodeheaver, the "Rescue Mission Boys," the Gideons, the Hillside services, the meetings for women, daily addressed by Dr. Massee, the inspiration given by the Missionaries who told of their work each afternoon and evening.

"Homecoming Day" was a great success. The largest crowd ever assembled on a mid-week occasion was here. Rev. "Billy" Sunday was the preacher, and the very mention of his name always brings great crowds to Winona. An "old fashioned lawn party" was held under the trees, where refreshments were served, and reminiscences of old time Winonians eloquently given. Dr. Biedewolf presided.

Among the preachers were, Drs. Frank H. Ballard and H. J. Wicks of England; Drs. J. C. Massee, Robert Watson, Boston; Dr. Robert G. Lee, Memphis, Tennessee; Dr. Wm. B. Crowe, St. Louis; Dr. Robert Scott Inglis, Newark, New Jersey, Dr. W. A. Sunday; noted Bible Expositors, Drs. Herbert W. Bieber and A. T. Robertson, drew large audiences at the morning hours, the Auditorium being filled.

There were a number of evangelists who spoke at the Hillside services. Dr. Biedewolf preaching at the opening Sunday evening service. His text, "Where there is no vision, the people perish." Many declared this to be the strongest message of the Conference.

Sergeant Alvin C. York, the great soldier, speaking on Sunday afternoon, told of his war experiences and also of his plans for the mountaineer children.

The consecration meeting for men on the Indian Mound led by Dr. Biedewolf will ever be remembered by the hundreds who took part.

Dr. Massee had charge of the women's meeting in the Auditorium, which was also largely attended.

The Conference goes down in history as one if not the greatest ever held in Winona. Dr. Biedewolf is a great director and will have the prayers of God's people in his work wherever he goes and in his plans for Winona Conference next year.

M. A. MARTIN.

MINUTES OF GENERAL CONFERENCE (Continued from last week)

Saturday Morning

The morning session was opened with song service as usual. The opening prayer was made by Grant McDonald.

The Credential Committee made its final report as follows: Ministerial, 82; lay, 209; total, 291. The report was accepted and the committee discharged.

The minutes of the last business session were read and approved.

The National Sunday School Association submitted its financial budget for the ensuing year. By prevailing motion the report was adopted. The report follows:

Ashland College, $2,000.00; College Library, $500.00; Ashland Memorial Endowment, $500.00; Kentucky Missions, $1,000.00; International Council of Religious Education, $100.00; Shipshewana Training School, $300.00; Secretarial Work, $120.00; Promotional Work, $500.00; Printing, Postage, Supplies and Miscellaneous, $230.00, which makes a total of $5,250.00.

The committee appointed to cooperate with the Washington, D. C. church reported that they recommended the third Sunday of May, also that notice be printed in the Evangelist of May third. The recommendation was adopted by proper vote of the conference.

Motion prevailed that the programs of the various organizations be submitted to the secretary of the Conference Executive Committee not later than April first.

Motion prevailed that the conference accept the generous invitation of the Goshen church and the Chamber of Commerce of Goshen to entertain the General Conference for 1930.

The following motions prevailed,—to leave the matter of time to the Executive Committee.

That the minutes of this conference be printed in the Annual in regular fashion.

That the Committee on Committees appoint a committee of 5 to bring in a constructive plan for a National Boys' work.

That the conference approve Miss Edna Patterson as a missionary to Africa.

That space be given in the Evangelist for the work of the Evangelistic and Bible Study League.

That the matter of financial objective for the Washington Church drive be left to the Conference Committee an work out in co-operation with a committee of the Washington church and to handle as they see best by means of the Evangelist and other propaganda.

To accept the report of the Finance Committee and that an offering be received at the eleven o'clock hour to meet the deficit.

That the resolutions from the Lord's Day Alliance be not read because of lack of time.

Song, "Till the Whole World Knows" was sung as the session emerged into that of the Foreign Missionary Society. The early part of the hour was devoted to a memorial service for the deceased E. L. Kilhefner. C. H. Ashman read the resolutions of respect which was voted by conference to be adopted and became a part of the minutes. Dr. J. A. Miller preached the memorial sermon for the occasion.

Dr. J. A. Miller and A. V. Kimmell were reelected as members of the Foreign Missionary Board and Carl H. Seitz was elected to fill the unexpired term made vacant by the death of E. L. Kilhefner.

A. J. McClain brought a very interesting report of the work of the Foreign Missionary Society.

After singing "The Old Rugged Cross," an offering was received which amounted to $27.53. The closing prayer was made by J. A. Miller.

At this time the conference enjoyed the fifth Bible lecture of Dr. A. I. Brown on "Jonah and the Whale; Noah's Ark and the Flood." The benediction was pronounced by S. C. Christiansen.

Saturday Afternoon

"My Jesus, I Love Thee" opened the song service for the afternoon which was devoted to the Foreign Missionary Society. The devotions were conducted by A. V. Kimmell who read from Rom. 10:9-20 and lead in prayer.

Chauncey B. Sheldon, Foreign Missionary on furlough, spoke concerning the work of Africa.

The conference was once more favored by special music. Young ladies of the National Home Finding Society sang two numbers. Mrs. C. B. Sheldon showed some very interesting curios from Africa. Prayer by Homer A. Kent closed this session.

"The Way of the Cross" was sung before Dr. A. I. Brown very graciously consented to give an extra lecture entitled "The Wonders of the Human Body." The final benediction of the afternoon was pronounced by E. L. Miller.

Saturday Evening

"Day is Dying in the West" was sung to open the evening session. Invocation for the evening was said by C. A. Bame.

W. E. Ronk led in the Devotional Bible study, using the first chapter of Hebrews.

"Rock of Ages" was sung prior to an impressive ordination service for Everett Nieswonger who was recommended by the Dayton, Ohio, church.

Motion was made that the matter of locating the 1930 conference be left to the Conference Executive Committee.

The minutes were read at this time and approved.

Miss Buzard of Ashland, Ohio, rendered a vocal solo at this time.

The closing sermon of the evening was preached by A. J. McClain on the subject, "God of History," 1 Samuel 31:3-4; 1 Chron. 10:1-4. Benediction, A. J. McClain.

J. L. GINGRICH, Secretary.

Sunday Morning, September 1, 1929

The Sunday school session of the National Conference of the Brethren church was opened by music from the Nappanee band followed with opening remarks from Prof. M. A. Stuckey. Rev. Eppley led the congregation in the singing of "What a Friend we have in Jesus," and Brother W. I. Duker offered prayer. The lesson was read in unison, after which a beautiful Marimbaphone solo was rendered by Miss Arlene Stuckman. "We're Marching to Zion" was sung and the opening session closed with music from the band while classes were being assembled.

The morning session was opened by singing the well loved song "Rock of Ages" and prayer by Dr. Bell. "Rescue the Perishing" was sung. Rev. G. W. Rensch read the second Psalm and led in prayer. Following this a brief consecration service was conducted for the outgoing Missionary, Miss Patterson, by Rev. R. P. Miller, A. V. Kimmell and A. J. McClain. Miss Patterson gave a brief but spiritual message to the conference members.

Rev. Kimmell announced that the Nappanee band would play at one-thirty.

The morning message was forcefully given by Dr. Bame, after which the song, "Let the Lower Lights Be Burning," was sung. Rev. Dyoll Belote gave the Sunday school attendance and offering report as follows: Adult attendance, 714; Offering, $340.02; Young people, 211; Offering, $49.40; Total present, 1049; Total Offering, $419.33; Morning offering, $169.22; Combined total offering, $588.55.

The afternoon service was opened by the moderator. Rev. Eppley led in the singing of songs, "Since Jesus Came Into My Heart" and "The Solid Rock." Rev. Frank Gehman offered prayer. "Rock of Ages" was sung; the offering received and announcements made. The moderator expressed appreciation in behalf of the conference for the services of Dr. Brown. The concluding address on "The Second Coming of Christ" was delivered by Dr. Brown.

Afternoon offering was $423.35.

The evening session was opened with a song service led by Rev. Eppley. Songs, "Since Jesus Came into My Heart" and "I Love to Tell the Story" were sung. Rev. W. I. Duker read the Scripture lesson from Isaiah and offered prayer. Rev. N. V. Leatherman delivered an able message upon the topic, "Seeing Jesus."

The moderator in his closing remarks, expressed his appreciation for the service of all having a part in making the conference a success, and declared the conference of 1929 at an end.

"Blest Be the Tie that Binds" was sung and Rev. McClain led in the closing prayer.

FLOYD SIBERT, Assistant Secretary.

A GREAT POET'S CHALLENGE TO INFIDELITY

Blatant and broadspread as are the preachments of rationalism and infidelity today, not one of the champions of unbelief has been indiscreet enough to accept the challenge of James Russell Lowell, which he voiced in the following lines. Lowell's challenge is unsurpassed, as a brief defense of Christianity: "When the microscopic search of skepticism, which has hunted the heavens and sounded the seas to disprove the existence of a Creator, has turned its attention to human society and has found a place on this planet, ten miles square, where a decent man can live in decency, comfort, and security, supporting and educating his children unspoiled and unpolluted; a place where age is revered, womanhood defended, and human life held in due regard; when skepticism can find such a place ten miles square on the globe where the Gospel of Christ has not gone and cleared the way and laid the foundations and made decency and security possible, it will then be in order for the skeptical literati to move thither and ventilate their views. But so long as these very men are dependent upon the religion they discard for every privilege they enjoy, they may well hesitate a little before they seek to rob the Christian of his hope and humanity of its Savior.—Western Recorder.

"Purge me with hyssop, and I shall be clean; wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow." (Ps. 51:7).

There are trials in life which may be compared to the burning of a fiery furnace. Bereavement is such a trial; disappointment is such a trial; above all, temptation itself is such a trial. From these things no child of God may be exempt. He must consent to be cast into the flame. But if he is strong, if he is true, he will not be alone in the hour of his spiritual suffering; he shall be conscious of a more than human presence, consoling, inspiring him; the breath of fire shall not pass upon him to scathe him; for "the form of the fourth is like the Son of God."—J. E. C. Weldon.

lion dollars, inspires more of the support given to the opposition of the Eighteenth Amendment than many realize.

Just as a sober, honest man has a better chance of making and saving money than a drunken debauchee, so Mr. Bower points out that the economic waste of sin checks our national prosperity to a degree realized by few of our citizens.

Sunday School Notes

are easy to give, but they do no good. Such words as are quoted are but wind.

17. Faith ... not works, is dead in itself. It is a body without a soul. It is no better than a statue of a man. The words of sympathy might better be read from a printed page. There would be as much comfort, and less disappointment.

The Necessity of Works

A note that we must never fail to sound is the importance of works. Faith is absolutely essential, but it is not real faith that does not express itself in works. There is a popular kind of faith so-called that gives assent to everything and practices nothing, but that is not genuine. The only kind of faith that is worth while is the kind that is alive and active, the kind that seeks to cooperate with God in bringing about the reign of righteousness in the world. If a man says "I believe," but does not set about to fulfill the requirements of righteousness, his belief amounts to nothing. A faith that is not accompanied by works is a mere pretense, a dead thing.

"An ounce of help is worth a ton of sympathy. Feelings without action harden the heart. Beneficent action without feeling does little good. But the perfection of both is when every throb of pity is incarnated in a deed, and a wise head plans and a swift hand executes what a loving heart prompts for the help of a neighbor."

"The Church need have no fear of the social awakening if we but apply ourselves in the spirit of the Bible to the weightier matters of the law. He that doeth the will of God shall know the doctrine. The solution of our ecclesiastical and religious problems will come not through argument but through action. As we step forth upon the highway of justice and righteousness, the perplexities of today will vanish, a new epoch will dawn for faith, and the church will enter with joy upon a more abundant life."

"If men, steeped to the eyebrows in orthodoxy, think that they have done enough when they have set their hands to a confession of faith, and that they are Christian because they can say, 'all this I steadfastly believe,' they need to remember that religious truth which does not mold and transform character and conduct is a king dethroned; and for dethroned kings there is a short step between the throne from which they have descended and the scaffold on which they die."—Alexander MacLaren.

"The faith of a Christian hath no significance at all but obedience and charity; if men be just and charitable and good and live according to their faith, then only they are Christians; whatever else is pretended is but a shadow and the image of a grace; for since in all the sects and institutions of the world the professors did, in some reasonable sort, conform to the rules of the profession, ... it is a strange dishonor to Christianity, that in it alone men should pretend to the faith of it and do nothing of what it persuades and commands upon the account of those promises which it makes us to believe."—Jeremy Taylor.

OUR LITTLE READERS

THE MOON PRINCESS

By Emma Florence Bush

"Dorothy! Dorothy!" called Mother.

Dorothy was upstairs in her room playing Princess and trying so hard not to hear. It was no use. Mother's voice came again:

"Dorothy! Dorothy!"

Dorothy knew it was wrong not to answer, but she was having such a lovely time standing before her mirror, dressed in her new best dress with a yellow ribbon about her forehead for a crown. She was pretending she was one of the Princesses in her book of fairy tales, with many Ladies-in-waiting to attend her.

Soon Dorothy heard Mother coming up the stairs, and as she turned to face her, her new best dress caught on the bureau handle and tore.

"Oh!" cried Dorothy. "My best dress!" Tears came into her eyes. "O, Mother, I'm so sorry! Will you be able to mend it for Sunday?" she asked eagerly.

Mother shook her head. "I am sorry, too, Dorothy. I am sorry because my little girl sometimes tries not to hear when I call her, and because she did not ask me if she might play in her new dress."

Mother's voice was gentle and kind. It made Dorothy feel more sorry.

"I called you, dear, to come to supper, but you did not answer. I think you had better go to bed instead. Then next time you will remember."

"Go to bed!" Dorothy was ashamed and sorry and hungry too. When mother brought up a cup of milk and a slice of bread and butter Dorothy put both arms around her neck and kissed her.

"Mother, dear, I am so ashamed and sorry. I'll try never to disobey you again."

After mother tucked Dorothy in bed, heard her say her prayers and gave her a good night kiss, Dorothy gazed out of the window and began to count the stars in the blue sky. Presently they began to grow pale and she saw the big, round, yellow Moon smiling down at her.

"I wonder if there are people living in the Moon," said Dorothy to herself.

"Of course there are people living in the Moon," said a soft voice.

Dorothy wondered where it came from. Then she saw a little fairy with silvery wings standing on the window-sill. Dorothy sat up in bed very quickly, her eyes opened wide.

"Who are you?" she asked. "I never saw you before."

The fairy smiled as she replied, "I am one of the people who live in the Moon. We are looking for a Princess. Would you care to come and live with us?"

Dorothy's heart leaped with joy and excitement, for she had always wished to be a Princess.

"Will you really and truly let me be your Princess?" she asked eagerly.

The Fairy nodded her head, and touching her with her silvery wand, said,

"You are now the Princess Dot. We must hurry to Moon Land at once. Come."

In a minute Dorothy found herself on the window-sill beside the fairy, and saw that she was no bigger than her companion.

"How do we get to Moon Land?" she asked eagerly.

"On a shooting star, of course," answered the fairy, "My Magic Wand will do the work." She waved it and immediately a shooting star stopped before the window. Before she realized what had happened Dorothy found herself seated on it beside the fairy and she was being shot right up into the sky, through the clouds until she reached Moon Land. She found herself standing on a street of silver before a silver Palace.

The gates of the Palace opened and out trooped many Pages and Ladies-in-waiting to welcome their new Princess. Looking around Dorothy found her fairy friends had disappeared.

Then the Pages and Ladies-in-waiting led Princess Dot into a beautiful room of silver, with many looking glasses of polished silver, and chairs and tables and couches all of the same metal. The Ladies-in-waiting dressed her in a beautiful gown of silver lace, with stockings and shoes of the same silver tint, and they placed a silver crown upon her head.

"The feast is ready," they said.

"Oh, I am so glad," said Princess Dot "for I am very, very hungry."

The trumpeters outside the door blew a peal, and a very handsome Page came to lead the Princess Dot to the banquet hall. Here everything was of silver too. The Page led the Princess Dot to the head of the table and all the Ladies-in-waiting seated themselves too and began to eat. There was indeed a great feast. All kinds of fowls and meat, vegetables, cake, candy, fruit and ice cream,—the Princess Dot and her Ladies-in-waiting were served with a large portion of each. They all began to eat, all except the Princess. She sat staring at the food with tears in her eyes. What could the trouble be?

Poor little Princess Dot. When she tried to eat the food she found that it too, was silver. Her Ladies-in-waiting could eat their fill, but alas she could not eat a mouthful for she was a child of the Earth and could not eat the food of Moon Land.

Suddenly her face brightened. She would ask for some milk. Surely she would be able to drink that. She beckoned to the handsome Page and told him what she wanted.

But alas! when he brought it in a silver pitcher and poured it into her cup, the poor little Princess found it was silver too and she could not drink it.

The Page was sorry for his beautiful Princess and wanted to help her. Suddenly an idea came to him. Leaning toward the Princess he whispered in her ear, "If you don't like it you can go back to Earth you know."

"How?" asked Princess Dot eagerly.

"Jump off," said the Page. "Come with me I will show you the way."

Princess Dot and the Page slipped out of the banquet hall and hurried along the path that led to the edge of the moon. But just as they reached it they found themselves surrounded by all the Court who had missed their Princess and hurried after her.

"You must come back," they cried, "into the Palace, this is no place for a Princess. You must always stay in the Palace, and never, never go away from it."

Poor little Princess Dorothy did not know what to do. But the Page whispered in her ear again. "Now," he said, and gave her a push right over the edge of the moon and she found herself going down, down, down through the sky, past the tiny, twinkling stars, through the downy white clouds, down, down, down until she opened her eyes and she was in her own little white bed, and Mother was coming in the door to give her a good-morning kiss.

"Oh, Mother," she cried, putting her arms around her mother's neck and hugging her. "I am so glad I am a little girl again and not a poor Moon Princess. And I never want to be even a make-believe Princess again. I will always be just your own little girl."

Boston, Massachusetts.

THE TIE THAT BINDS

MILLER-HEPPARD—At 9 in the morning of September 11th occurred a beautiful church wedding at which John Allen Miller, son of Dr. and Mrs. J. Allen Miller of Ashland, Ohio, and Miss Gaynell Heppard, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Heppard also of Ashland, were pronounced husband and wife. It was in the First Brethren church, and immediate families and relatives of the couple were all witnesses of the single ring ceremony, which was performed by Dean Miller, the groom's father. Preluding the ceremony Mrs. Quinter Lyon played "Liebestraum" by Franz Liszt, after which the officiating minister entered the church followed by the groom. As the organist opened the Lohengrin Wedding March, the bride, beautifully gowned and unattended, entered the church by another door, carrying a huge shower bouquet. During the ceremony the organist softly played "To a Wild Rose" by Macdowell, and at the close played Mendelssohn's Wedding March, while the bride and groom proceeded up the aisle to the rear door of the church where they received congratulations. Immediately following the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Miller left for a short wedding trip. The bride, since her graduation from Ashland College, has been teaching in the Ashland high school. The groom is also an Ashland College graduate and has taken his M. A. degree from Ohio State University, in which institution he is now employed as instructor in the department of Zoology and Entomology. After October 1, Mr. and Mrs. Miller will be at home in an apartment at 3 Clifton Avenue, Columbus, where they have newly furnished their home.

Reported by George S. Baer.

MOORE-THOMPSON—Miss Aneta Thompson, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Thompson, and Merrill Moore, youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. Byrd Moore, of Hays, Kansas, were united in marriage at the Brethren parsonage on (date omitted by the writer—Ed.), by the undersigned. Mrs. Moore was a graduate of the Pacific high school and had taken manual training at Hays Teachers' College and for several years was our choir leader. These worthy young people will make their future home near Hays, Kansas. Our best wishes go with them in this new venture.

S. LOWMAN.

GRISSE-BRAY—On September 2nd, Mr. C. Lowell Grisse and Miss Catherine Jane Bray were united in marriage by the undersigned, father of the groom. The ceremony was performed in the First Brethren church in Warsaw in the presence of a few of the immediate friends of the contracting parties. They will make their home in Indianapolis, Indiana. May the Lord graciously bless this union, in giving them a long, useful and happy life.

C. C. GRISSE.

IN THE SHADOW

HOOPER—Mrs. Calla B. (nee Reese) was born at Mt. Eaton, Ohio, December 24, 1855; departed this life September 12, 1929, at the age of 73 years, 8 months, and 12 days. On April 12, 1881, she was united in marriage to Benjamin Hooper, of Smithville, Ohio. To this union were born seven children—5 daughters and 2 sons. After having spent a number of years in the vicinity of Smithville, Ohio, as farmers, Mr. and Mrs. Hooper decided the West offered better opportunities for resting a family and making a home, so accordingly they came to Sunnyside in 1901, purchasing a small land north of Sunnyside. This has been their home for the past 26 years. In September, 1926 Mrs. Hooper suffered a slight stroke of apoplexy from which she never fully recovered until September 12, 1929, when she again suffered a severe stroke, ending in death four days later. When a young girl Mrs. Hooper united with the Methodist Episcopal church, in Ohio, but after a few years in the West she affiliated herself with the interests of the Brethren church of Sunnyside, of which her husband was a member.

Surviving to mourn this loss, are Mrs. Maud Antles and Mrs. Belle Dolensky of Sunnyside; Mrs. Camilla Rowley, of Benton City, Washington; Roscoe and Lindell Hooper, of Seattle; Mrs. Angie Zorn, of Shasta, Calif.; Mrs. Mrs. Bennetta Roark preceded her mother in death in 1920, at that time living in Ellensburg, Washington. Fifteen grandchildren also are among those who witness the passing of their grandmother.

Services held in the Sunnyside Brethren church, and interment in the Sunnyside cemetery, conducted by the writer.

FRED W. KINZIE.

BROWN—Mrs. W. R. Brown (Georgiana Larkin Brown) was born in Augusta County, Virginia, November 20, 1850. Removed to Eastern Virginia with her parents in 1870. Was united in marriage to W. R. Brown, December 23, 1880. Four children were born to this union—Homer L., Lauretta Russell, and Roland H. She moved to Lanark, Illinois, with her husband and children in May, 1886; came to Sunnyside, Washington, in December, 1899. Passed away August 12, 1929, following a long illness. Mrs. Brown was survived by her husband and son, Roland in Yakima, Wash. ington, and two grandchildren, Harry and Ray Brown; three sisters and one brother in the East.

The above, with the exception of date of death, was written by Mrs. H. R. Brown, widow of the deceased. She was one of the old pioneers of this Yakima valley and long affiliated with the Sunnyside Brethren church, her husband serving as deacon.

The writer conducted the funeral service from the Sunnyside Brethren church, using the twenty-third Psalm, the choice scripture of the deceased. Brother Earl Reed assisted. Interment in Sunnyside cemetery. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord." FRED W. KINZIE.

KENNISON—Della Kennison, daughter of James and Mary Whitman, was born in Jackson County, Ohio, July 16, 1867, and departed this life, September 1, 1929. She was united in marriage with Samuel Kennison, who was a civil war veteran and preceded her in death thirty years. They were blessed with six children—three sons and three daughters—all of whom are living. Mrs. Kennison was a member of the Disciples church, but in late years attended the Brethren church. The pastor, Rev. R. E. Gotschall, preached the funeral. She had many friends because of her kindness and generosity, and will be greatly missed in the community.

Mrs. E. J. HORNE.

REID—John W. Reid, son of Lafayette and Amanda Reid, was born September 4th, 1859, in Charlestown, Lee County, Iowa, and departed this life, September 12, 1929. He was one of 69 years, 11 months and four days. The Reids came to Portia, Kansas, about 1885 and endeavored themselves to the community in a fine way. On December 16, 1916 Brother Reid, along with his wife, was baptized by trine immersion and became a member of the Brethren church, to which he was faithful until death called him home. Mr. Reid seemed as well as usual on the morning of the day of his death and before the day was done he had passed over to await the resurrection from the dead. The funeral service was conducted from the Brethren church by the undersigned, his pastor.

S. LOWMAN.

PHILIPS—The passing of Sister Mable Phillips on September 15th was quite a loss to the Miami branch church and Sunday school. Sister Mable spent thirty-one days in the Miami Valley Hospital at Dayton, Ohio. All was done for her recovery that possibly could be had, including five blood transfusions. Mable Catherine Phillips was the daughter of Brother and Sister Elwood Phillips, was born August 15, 1911, and died at the age of eighteen years and one month. She was a member of the Brethren church and proved her ability as secretary of the Sunday school. She was loved by all who knew her and leaves to mourn her passing her parents, one brother, Raymond; five sisters, Alberta, Golden, Helen, May, Hazel, and many other relatives and friends. The funeral took place at the Brethren church, a crowd being present to pay their last respects to her, and the services were in charge of the writer, assisted by Dr. Beacher. Her last wish was to be laid to rest in the cemetery of Springfield, Mo. The text was from John 14:2—"I go to prepare a place for you."

H. C. FUNDERBERG.

RANDALL—Monroe Randall of Los Angeles passed from this life July 12, 1929. Brother Randall was an attorney-at-law and practiced for many years successfully. He was a native of the state of Nebraska where he followed his chosen profession for many years. Finally the lure of the West took him to this city, where he resided to the end of his earthly career. Some few years ago some physical infection set in and in consequence he had to submit to the amputation of one of the lower limbs. This greatly handicapped him but he continued to do office work as a Notary Public. He was a brilliant conversationalist and his pastor's visits in his home were not dull and merely perfunctory but bristled with worthwhile subjects. Under Brother Jennings' pastorate he united with the First Brethren church of Los Angeles, which he retained to the time of his home-going. Funeral by the writer, his pastor.

A. B. COVER.

ICEKNOWER—Joseph W. Iceknower went to be with his Lord August 3, 1929. In the pastime of our brother we felt a distinct loss personally and the church has sustained a loss that she keenly feels. At the time of his homegoing, he was superintendent of our Sunday school. He was elected to this office last year and he was developing into an efficient officer. Brother Iceknower was one of those unassuming persons who did not need to assume for he possessed the qualities of character that urges into leadership. He had the happy way of lowering the state from a state of Iowa. Here he met wood and won Edna Zern, a fine young Christian girl of this congregation, who survives his early departure from this earthly pilgrimage. He is also survived by his aged parents, brothers and sisters, and a host of friends who shall live better, because he died, and know his sterling worth. God bless them all. Funeral was held from the church with one of the largest floral displays witnessed here. Rev. Wall, an ordained minister of the Presbyterian church, and a life-long friend of the departed brother, preached the funeral in the absence of the writer, who was away from the city.

Voices from Laymen on Laymen's Day

Dean C. L. Anspach

We have within the churches of our denomination one of the greatest possibilities for good, for the advancement of the church, imaginable. For some reason, which has never been explained, we have permitted this giant to remain in a state of inactivity. We have administered sleep potions, and have gone about the business of the Church on tip-toe, fearful that he might awake. Why we have failed to develop the latent possibilities of this greatest of resources is difficult to explain. Many phases of our church activity have been developed, but the "GREAT GIANT" sleeps on.

National Conference has given one day a year for Laymen activities, and yet many of our pastors have failed to take advantage of the possibilities of developing the "Great Giant." They have been derelict in their duty. It is now time that we, as many other denominations, recognize the necessity of a Laymen's Organization for Men. START THIS YEAR WITH A PROGRAM FOR LAYMEN.

Prof. R. R. Haun, Ashland College

Out of tiny, invisible atoms the powerful walls of every structure are built. But when a comparative few of these are carried away by air and rain, the walls are weakened and soon totter and decay.

So the structure of the church is built upon the laymen as individual units and her strength depends upon how we resist the tendencies which draw us imperceptibly away. In the name of Christ and his church, let us stand together.

President E. E. Jacobs

If the annual observance of Laymen's day will serve to awaken and arouse what the sociologist calls "class consciousness," that is, bring this part of our people to recognize their station, their privileges, and their duties, the day will be well spent. For no group of people can do much until they recognize who they are, what they need to do, and how to do it. This recognition must arise from within, it can not be well superimposed from above.

Dr. L. L. Garber

As does every war, the Great War strongly augmented the tendency to autocratic control, a control that has checked or reversed many promising movements. Along with other organizations, the church has suffered from the tendency to "pass everything up to the autocrats," when the growing interdependence of the parts of organized social bodies makes it more and more necessary that each unit be a dynamic power-generating unit. In the church as elsewhere, the inactive member becomes moribund, contributes nothing, but likewise absorbs energy contributed by other live members. If the church is to regain her old-time power, the laymen must awake to the necessity of his aggressive, persistent cooperation. He must refuse to be somnolent or ignored. Without his democratic participation, the cause cannot go forward.

Signs of the Times

Alva J. McClain

WHY are the Pews Empty?

A newspaper writer, Robert W. Quillen, in a syndicated article, makes a remarkable diagnosis of the situation. He says:

"Clergymen quit preaching the old-time religion and tried to compete with modern entertainments. . . . The common people are soul hungry. . . . They want something solid under foot. . . . And they stay away from church because scientific lectures, discussions of mortality and admonitions to obey the law cannot satisfy their soul hunger or give them a faith to live by."

Mr. Quillen, the layman, knows more than some preachers. At that, perhaps the man who sits in the pew should be heard from time to time. Why wouldn't it be a good thing for the preachers to invite some thoughtful layman, from time to time, to come before their meetings and tell us what is wrong?

THE Brevity of Human Life

Two letters, written by Cecil Rhodes, the Empire builder of South Africa, have been made public recently. In one of them, written three years before his death, he gives some instructions regarding his great scholarship foundation and urges that these instructions be carried out without delay, giving as the reason for this urgency the following rather pathetic thought:

"The temporary nature of human life is very depressing, and as soon as you have drafted kindly post to me for signature, or some hidden devil may whip me off before my worldly despoitions are signed."

One might easily suppose that, if it were possible for an individual to extract satisfaction from the brief span of human existence, Cecil Rhodes would have been one such individual. He crowded more into that "brief span" than a hundred ordinary men. But not so. Man, the creature of the dust, here today and gone tomorrow, has yearnings and aspirations which only eternity can satisfy. God "hath set eternity in their heart" (Eccl. 3:11 ARV.) And the strange paradox of human existence is that the more men get out of its brief day the less satisfied they are to have it end. Only the superficial and thoughtless can laugh and say, Let us eat and drink, for tomorrow we die. Sober-minded men will tell you that "The temporary nature of human life is very depressing."

Jesus Christ came that we might have life, and might have it more abundantly. "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life." There is no gloom in the evening of this earthly life, if you know him and are trusting him. In him we have a life which never had a beginning and which will never have an end.

A PRAYER of Ignatius Loyola

The founder of the Jesuit Society was a better man than the organization he fathered. Here is a prayer of his which I ran across in my reading. It is incomparable for the utter consecration which it breathes.

"Teach us, Good Lord, to serve thee as thou deservest;

To give and not to count the cost;
To fight and not to heed our wounds;
To toil and not to ask for any reward save that of knowing that we do thy will."

Such consecration, when laid at the feet of Jesus Christ, is the most precious thing in the Kingdom of God. But when made subservient to an earthly Pope, it has almost infinite possibilities for evil. It produces such a society as the Jesuits, who teach that if the Pope says black is white, or white is black, it is to the moral glory of the order to repeat the lie.

MAN'S Reverence for Relics

The University of Virginia has made a shrine of the modest dormitory where, half a century ago, Woodrow Wilson labored that he might some day rise above the ranks in political leadership. In the room that he once occupied one may see the bowl and pitcher, the clock, the oil lamps, the open fireplace with tongs and duster, and a picture of Wilson the college student. The number of the room is 81, and to this room thousands will come, some reverent and others merely curious.

What would happen if archaeologists should uncover the very house in which Christ lived at Nazareth, restore the room in which he worked as a carpenter, place on exhibition the tools he used and samples of his workmanship, and hang there a picture painted during the so-called "hidden" years of his life? Nations and churches would fight over the coveted ownership of such a shrine, newspapers would give it columns of front-page space, and people would travel around the world to behold it.

Provisionally, I believe, God has permitted all the material things associated with the Life of his Son on earth to perish. He would have men turn their eyes toward a living, risen Christ in heaven; He would have them form their ideas about him from the Holy Scriptures. After all, it is better to have a living Person than some dead relics; better to have an infallible revelation of him than the conception of some human artist. And, don't forget this, some day he will come back to earth. Then we shall see him as he is.

Impressions Made by President Hoover

Bishop James Cannon, Jr., Chairman of the Board of Temperance and Social Service of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in a report which he sent to the Church Press, concerning the work of the several international religious conferences in Europe which he attended as an official delegate, among other things, says:

"The impression which President Hoover made upon these European leaders was the thing which struck me most forcibly in my contacts with them in the great social and religious gatherings. Their estimate is that he has a constructive mind of the first order, highly developed by study and experience. With such ability joined to his high conception of duty and patriotic purpose they expect him to make one of our greatest Presidents. They think that his impact upon national and international questions in the short space of six months has been tremendous and unparalleled.

"A striking example of the Hoover method of handling important subjects is found in his reply to the statement of Senator Howell on lack of Prohibition Enforcement in the District of Columbia. In this statement which should receive the hearty, enthusiastic approval and active support not only of all true friends of prohibition but of all genuine supporters of constitutional government, the President most significantly declares: 'It is the intention, not only to secure the fullest enforcement in the District possible under the organization of enforcement agencies as provided by law, but to make it a model in this country.'

"This declaration is the climax of a statement bristling with facts; asserting that Senator Howell's statement seriously impugns the good faith and capacity of the District Officials, calling them by name; that the President is glad that the question has been raised, expressing a natural confidence that such charges would not be made on the floor of the Senate unless they were based on facts, and declaring positively that if such facts are forthcoming the President himself will have the matter thoroughly investigated.

"With President Hoover's life record of successful achievement in whatever he has undertaken these cannot be regarded as idle words or as an exaggerated statement issued under sudden pressure, but as a thoroughly considered and carefully worded expression of the President's fixed determination to do a certain definite thing, namely, to give to the country and to the world a demonstration of the kind of prohibition enforcement which is possible under existing laws and agencies as a 'model' of what can and what ought to be done, in other cities and sections of the country whenever the responsible heads of government are sincere and vigorous in their purpose to enforce the prohibition law.

"As the Congress of the United States—the Senate and the House of Representatives—is the legislative body which passes all laws for the District of Columbia, the people of the country have a right to expect their Representatives in Congress to give sympathetic and practical cooperation to the President, the Chief Executive of the District of Columbia, in his expressed purpose to make the District a 'model' of the enforcement of the prohibition law. And if it shall be found that additional enforcement legislation is necessary for the District, the people will expect it to be promptly forthcoming.

"Model enforcement resulting in model conditions cannot be secured in a day, but those who have followed the amazing achievements of President's Hoover's career know that if he has indeed put his hand to the plow he will not turn back until regardless of opposition and obstacles of every kind he has plowed the furrow to the end."

"What Do Parishioners Read?"

This heading is the title of a very thoughtful as well as timely editorial just published in The Presbyterian Advance, and we feel that it will prove to be of such worth to Evangelist readers that we are reproducing it in large measure. Naturally we are greatly concerned about what our parishioners read and we believe it worthy our effort to attempt to stir up greater concern in regard to the matter on the part of our pastors. There are some who show a real interest in what their people read, one evidence of it being the effort to put their own church paper in every home of their parish, while there are some who seem to give the problem very little thought. It is not a merely selfish interest that is ours, that is, we are not simply concerned about the circulation of the Evangelist, though we consider that very vital to the spiritual welfare of the individuals and to the progress of the church. We are concerned about what our people are feeding their souls upon—whether on the husks of this world or on the things that are of eternal worth. That, of course, is the concern of every true pastor, but some do not seem to realize how largely the printed page enters into the matter. Our contemporary says in part as follows:

A common subject for discussion among ministers and in church papers is "The Minister's Reading." ... But what about the parishioner's reading? Do ministers ever meet to discuss that subject? If so it appears that they never request the publication of the leader's paper. ... There have been numerous studies concerning the reading habits of adults and the results of many of these studies have recently been gathered together and classified in a book by William S. Gray, dean of the College of Education of the University of Chicago, and Ruth Monroe, formerly assistant librarian in the Cleveland Public Library.* The general impression left by this 300-page volume is that the reading habits of American adults are mainly bad habits, suggesting that it is high time that ministers who are supposed to give time and effort to the cultivation of good habits, should seriously consider the question "What do parishioners read?"

Do the people at large really read at all? "Of course," comes the reply, and the authors of the volume in hand state bluntly that "interest in reading has increased very rapidly during recent years and America is rapidly becoming a nation of readers." One may question whether such a judgment is well founded; although the issue depends upon just what is meant by "reading." Two facts are relied upon as the basis of this judgment and both are worthy of careful consideration.

In the first place we are reminded of the immense increase in the number of newspapers and periodicals published. Such an increase is not to be questioned. It is shown, for instance, that in 1921 the morning newspapers had a circulation of 10,144,260 and in 1925 a daily circulation of 12,365,215—an increase of almost 22 percent, while the population of the country increased only six percent during the same period. These figures are supposed to indicate that "an increased percentage of the people read the daily newspapers." It is certain that more people at least look at publications called daily newspapers, but has there been any real increase in the amount of serious reading given to worthwhile news?

It is worth remembering that from 1921 to 1929 in a single metropolitan area the tabloid newspapers increased from 200,000 circulation to almost 2,000,000 circulation—1,000 percent. But, is looking at the sensational pictures in a tabloid to be regarded as "reading the newspaper?" The gain in newspaper circulation seems to have been largely a gain made by the tabloids. Indeed, a careful editorial in The New Republic of May 25, 1927, showed that during the preceding six years the tabloids in New York City had gained over 1,500,000, while the standard newspapers had lost 175,000 circulation. In addition it must be remembered that very many people purchase several newspapers each day not in order to read in any proper sense, but only to get certain bits of information like stock exchange prices, sport scores, etc.—which might be had from a bulletin board just as readily were the bulletin board conveniently at hand. Is that reading?

Again, an increase of interest in reading is assumed because of the increase in the number of books published and read. Of course there has been a great increase in the number of books published, though the peak was reached about 1910 and the number has been declining since. Moreover, library statistics show a great increase in the number of books removed from libraries and presumably read. All this, however, in the light of other facts, hardly proves that interest in reading that is worthwhile has actually increased. Libraries are much more numerous; books are more accessible. Hence it is very easy for the people who do read books to read many more books—especially of the kind which can be seen in the hands of working girls on any suburban train. If it be a fact that there is much greater interest in reading, then the minister's problem is greater by virtue of that fact, for it is quite clear that the increase is of material which may be described as trashy—not necessarily bad and certainly not good, but as inane as the typical picture show and produced apparently for the same purpose—just to pass the time away. Putting the matter in a nutshell, the apparent increase of reading may mean merely that people in general have more time to dispose of because of shorter working hours and are killing more time than they used to kill.

Whether or not there is more or less of what in fairness might be described as reading, the question of real importance relates not so much to the amount of reading as to its quality and effect, and the book in hand confirms practically every other study on this subject and goes to show that people in general are not interested in the kind of reading which really develops the finer qualities of life. Magazine reading has increased very greatly, for instance, but the increase has been with magazines of the "True Story" type. The cultural magazines have small circulations. One of the studies in the book under review sought to determine why people read during periods of recreation. There were 3,323 answers, and it should be noted that about 80 percent of these answers came from students, teachers and professional men. Out of the total only 35 answers gave "for spiritual guidance" as a reason. In a grouping and analysis of all the answers only 313 of the 3,323 are grouped as indicating a desire for culture of any kind. Over half of the answers indicated that reading was done either for relaxation (just to pass the time away) or to satisfy curiosities. With reference to the reading of newspapers, the book under review frankly admits that "the parts most frequently read relate to sports and sensational news." The authors wisely point out that "in this connection those interested in adult education face a problem of great magnitude." So they do, and are not ministers among "those interested"?

Here is the significant thing about these studies: It is made quite clear that they do not represent returns from the average citizen, but from a selected class, far above the average in education. The cases selected in Chicago, for instance, were connected with the Y. M. C. A., the Eleanor Club for young women (similar to a Y. W. C. A.), two large churches and a typical public school. Note that it is people of this type who give more attention to the comic section than any other part of a newspaper and whose book reading is mainly the reading of lighter fiction. Doubtless many of the persons making reply to the questionnaire were church members. Does that mean anything to ministers? Another table makes it clear that most people "read largely what their friends are reading and whatever book happens to be available" and still another conclusion from the studies is that, "To a very large extent children read the newspapers and magazines that are found on the library table or secured from friends. Studies made of these magazines reveal the fact that they are not desirable in a surprisingly large number of cases."

In view of what precedes, what ought the minister and church sessions to do about it? If anybody on earth is interested in adult education and even more interested in the proper development of children and the formation of right habits, it should be the Christian minister. What is he doing to see to it that the reading material found on library tables and secured from neighbors is of the kind that will help him in his work rather than the kind which undoes all that he attempts to do? ...

We submit to every pastor and church leader that it is a matter of vital concern what the people of their church read, and the leader who is indifferent about it is remiss in his duty. If there are those who have not thought this to be a real problem, it might be well for them to do a little personal investigation in their own parish as to what the people read and what effect it has on them. We are positive that the results would be convincing as to the importance of seeking to direct the people's reading into higher and more worthwhile channels.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

The Second Sunday in October is Laymen's Day. Its aims are worthy and the movement deserves your encouragement and support.

Dr. Charles A. Bame leaves Ashland this week to begin a union evangelistic campaign at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, which is the home of Brother George T. Ronk.

It is hard to explain why some of life's heaviest sorrows should be brought upon the righteous and devout, but they do very often have the effect of softening and elevating the heart. Perhaps they are necessary to the soul's testing and refining.

Brother Homer A. Kent, pastor of our church at Washington, D. C., announces a regular Sunday night radio program put on by members of his church, broadcasting "old fashioned Gospel Song" for fifteen minutes beginning at 9:30 in the evening. That kind of program ought to be encouraged.

Dr. G. W. Rench and wife of Shipshewana Lake, Indiana, recently shared in an all-day program at the Brighton church, in company with the pastor, Brother C. D. Whitmer, of South Bend. Brother Rench gives an interesting historical note concerning this staunch little congregation of Brethren people.

"Put on therefore, as the elect of God, . . . bowels of mercies, kindness, humbleness of mind, meekness, longsuffering," says the Apostle Paul. But such virtues are not to be put on as clothes are put on, to suit the occasion or the fancy of the individual, but rather as the plant puts on the green leaf, then the flower and then the fruit. They grow out of the life one possesses.

Ministers and laymen alike are invited to send questions to be answered in Dr. Miller's column. This department does not appear this week, but we are assured that it will be present next week. You can help by sending in questions that you would like to have discussed. Send them either to Dean J. Allen Miller, or the Editor.

Christian Endeavorers will find on their page a message from the new editor of that department, Brother Thomas Hammers. You will enjoy his messages from time to time, as well as those of others whom he may enlist to write. We hope those who may be called on to assist him will give prompt and faithful cooperation. Let Endeavorers come to the front.

On Sunday morning, September 29 word reached Ashland, by way of a telegram to Dr. J. Allen Miller, bringing the sad news of the passing of Brother Charles Sensenbaugh, the young and successful pastor of the Ardmore church of South Bend, Indiana. He had undergone an operation for acute appendicitis and had seemed to be getting along nicely.

Dr. G. C. Carpenter, the capable pastor of the church at Hagerstown, Maryland, writes of the busy fall program facing that church. Where Brother Carpenter serves the program is usually crowded and the people and pastor are active. We are in receipt of a novel Rally Day announcement which features Brother John Locke as the special speaker of the day. Their evangelistic campaign is to begin October 22 with Brother R. Paul Miller as the evangelist.

Brother C. C. Grisso writes of the closing weeks of his pastorate at Sunnyside, Washington, of the sight-seeing trip of himself and family across the country to General Conference and back to Lanark, Illinois, where he is now established as pastor and has been well received. During his pastorate at Sunnyside God used his preaching at that place and other points in the state to turn nearly one hundred souls from sin to the light of the Gospel. Other evidences of progress are noted. Just before their leave-taking from Sunnyside, Brother and Sister Grisso were given a celebration of their silver wedding anniversary. We congratulate them on this happy event and extend to them the felicitations of the Evangelist family.

We have an interesting message this week from Dr. C. F. Yoder, superintendent of our mission work in the Argentine. At Rio Cuarto they have been suffering from an epidemic of the "flu," and other contagious diseases, that is, they were during the month of August. Notwithstanding that hindrance, the Lord is blessing their work. Growth and increased activity are reported at practically all the mission points. It is interesting to note that at Laboulaye the women of the church are undertaking at their own expense a new mission on the other side of the town. This would seem to indicate that the devotion and aggressive endeavor of the women in the Argentine compare very favorably with that of the splendid women of the home church, whose mission activities have been more than a challenge to the men. A new work has been opened up at Rio Tercero, which is a railroad center and a place of much promise.

Dr. Martin Shively, bursar of Ashland College, reports what is likely the final on the Educational Day gifts, though we do not doubt but that, if some of that very considerable number of churches that failed to get in on this most important cause should yet come across with an offering, he would gladly make an additional report. We do not believe that seventy-three congregations, the total making an offering, represents the limit of real interest in the support of our church's educational program. The fact is that a goodly number of congregations were not given an opportunity to give what they would. This fact speaks of a neglect, or carelessness, or something else, on the part of the leadership that ought not to be. But, thanks to some generous individual gifts, the goal set for the Educational Day offering was reached, and we have confidence that the college authorities will succeed in leading Ashland College through to victory in the matter of securing recognition.

Miss Elizabeth Tyson, one of our faithful missionaries in Africa, writes interestingly of some experiences gathered on an itinerating trip in company with Miss Emmert. One remarkable thing is the way God used their medical skill and their prayers for the healing of the sick and the maimed. The way these needy people brought their sick and helpless out to be healed by these noble missionaries, reminds us of similar occurrences in the life of our Lord during his earthly ministry. And why not? Did he not commission his disciples to heal the sick as well as to preach the Gospel? And shall we marvel at these modern miracles? Did not Jesus say that the works that he did would be done by those who should believe in him? And even greater works? We imagine the hardest thing to face in all their trip was the challenge of the young man of the Ali tribe, who said, "We want to hear about God as much as the others." That is the cry, not only of this neglected tribe, but of the non-Christian world. If every professed Christian in the homeland could be brought face to face with this challenge, as our missionaries and others are, the story of the world would soon be very different.

PRAYER REQUESTS FOR THIS WEEK—

Pray for our mission work in the Argentine.

Pray for the soul-saving campaign to begin at Hagerstown, Maryland, October 22, under the leadership of Dr. G. C. Carpenter, the pastor, and Brother R. Paul Miller, as evangelist.

Brother C. C. Grisso says, "We covet the prayers of the Brethren" for his work at Lanark, Illinois.

Miss Tyson: "Pray that there may be a deeper conviction of sin in the hearts of our so-called Christians" in Africa.

Pray for the evangelistic campaign at Roanoke, Virginia, under the leadership of Brethren Frank Coleman, evangelist, and H. E. Eppley, pastor.

"Pray for an unnamed sister who is seriously ill."

Our Unclaimed Opportunity

By Loren T. Black, Professor of Mathematics in Ashland College

The old adage that opportunity knocks but once is a statement devoid of much truth. If such were true most men would be living examples of lives impoverished, barren, hollow, empty,—for many of us do not grasp opportunity as she knocks and seeks entrance to our lives. Men who would be great embrace their opportunities; those who would be greater, both create and embrace them.

There is a very wonderful opportunity that will knock at your church door in a very short time. It will be a selective one,—men only, being permitted to accept and enjoy it. The purpose and theme underlying this choice privilege will be distinctly spiritual. Its acceptance will result in a profound increase in Christian comradeship. The church atmosphere will be charged with invigorated missionary, evangelistic and educational activities. The sense of a local brotherhood feeling will be enlivened and life will be viewed from the side having the silver lining. The promised joys of Christian living will become a reality—all these attributes, and more, will characterize those who accept this largely unclaimed opportunity.

The men of the Brethren church have been missing a very real blessing that other churchmen have been enjoying for these many years. Our men have lost heavily because we have not claimed the opportunity of bonding ourselves into local fraternal groups. This is our UNCLAIMED OPPORTUNITY. Membership in such a group should be limited to those who esteem it a privilege to take the Christ as a comrade and guide in daily living. On this foundation no local and consequently no national organization can do anything but succeed. We lay members can pursue successfully any definitely Christian project to a worthwhile end if we but start. It is altogether possible for a strong local brotherhood of consecrated laymen to promote local projects and to exert a greater influence for good locally than all the ministers combined.

The time for action is at hand. A day has been set aside for the sole purpose of giving the men of the congregation a chance to take part in a service. Out of each men's class there ought to arise a Moses who will lead the brethren to organize a local brotherhood and then to affiliate with the national organization of the church. The logical and practical way to start any great movement is first to counsel the greatest of all moving forces,—therefore pray. No praying group of men ever failed to achieve their loftiest objective. We have the scriptural promise of success.

There is nothing in a name; however, there can be exceptions. For instance, a name might serve to perpetuate an honor and memory which should be kept alive through the centuries. Perhaps for this reason this name might be chosen: The Brotherhood of Alexander Mack.

A Layman's Sermonette

The Meaning of My Church Membership

My church is not a club, organized for the welfare of the members. It is a body of baptized believers, banded together for the extension of Christ's kingdom. Its spirit is unselfish and its purpose spiritual. My church being founded by the Son of God and purchased by his own blood, I regard the humblest place in it as the highest honor and privilege. My membership, I firmly hold, involves the following points:

1.—It means praying. Jesus prayed habitually. "God soon fades out of the life of the man who ceases to pray." The early church was a powerful church because it was a prayerful church. "Humaneness plus prayer equals mighty achievements." I will pray daily.

2. It means paying. God gave his only begotten son; Christ gave his life. My church needs my gifts. I need to give. It is one of the Christian graces in which I should grow (2 Cor. 8:7). It being more blessed to give than to receive, I want to know the greater blessedness (Acts 20:35). My church covenant binds me to help spread the Gospel. Therefore my giving shall be cheerful, regular and proportionate to my ability (2 Cor. 9:7; 1 Cor. 16:2). I will pay.

3.—It means plodding. William Carey, the father of modern missions, said: "I can plod; and to this I owe everything." He plodded his way to immortality. I do not ask any easy or conspicuous place, I am willing to toil wherever my Lord may need me. I may not have unusual talents, but I do have the kind of genius that plods and that counts. I will plod in my study of the scriptures, learning a little each day. I will plod to the house of God and in the house of God. I will labor with unrelenting industry, and with the enthusiasm of patience. I will plod.

4.—It means persevering. I will hold fast and keep sweet. I will not take offense, climb the fig-tree and quit. I will not imitate Bunyan's character, Mr. Shortwind, who began earnestly and ran quickly out of breath. I have enlisted for life. I recall my Lord's solemn words: "He that endureth unto the end shall be saved (Matt. 10:22). Through his grace I will persevere.—By a Layman, in Church Chimes, Louisville, Kentucky.

It seems to be fundamentally sound that the local organization be built around a project. Experience points out that an organization without an immediate objective is like a wagon without wheels. In the light of the true Brethren doctrine of spreading the gospel certainly no better project could be undertaken than to make possible the preaching and teaching of the Good News. Those souls who have vision and farsight suggest that each local brotherhood engage wholeheartedly in encouraging some youth to achieve his aspirations in the Christian ministry. This word encourage is used unreservedly. It means to supply all that a youth needs,—from prayer down to money. As laymen we shall fulfill our Christian duty of teaching and preaching if we help to prepare a personal representative to be an ambassador of Christ. Those of us who are already supplying in a measure the needs of those who are in training are now experiencing a joy which is limited only by the amount by which we can help.

This abounding joy which cannot help but follow, will overflow and will find expression in the support of a strong national organization. Indeed very few local organizations have survived for any period when they have not united into a larger unit. In unity there is strength. Power and usefulness are the fruits of unity. Consequently each local unit will desire to enter the larger group so that larger and more far reaching results may be achieved.

May Laymans' Day be a success in your brotherhood. To this end, men, let us embrace our Unclaimed Opportunity.

Favorite Bible Verses Named by Famous Men and Women

(EDITORIAL NOTE: Our readers will be interested in the following article about the remarkable symposium recently organized by the Bible Guild for the purpose of demonstrating that the Bible plays an important part in the lives of famous men and women. 70 leading Americans of both sexes, all laymen, have written in response to a question, "What is your favorite Bible passage?" These opinions are now being published in detail by a large group of daily newspapers. It may be helpful to think of these along with your plans for Laymen's Day observance).

While Books of the Month and Books of the Year come and go, the Bible holds its place among successful Americans as the Book of the Centuries. Fresh proof of this statement is furnished by the replies of seventy or more famous men and women to the question, "What is your favorite Bible passage?"

The choices of these laymen—governors of states, United States senators, business men, judges, authors, artists, actors—now being published in the daily press, reveals a wide variety. Many of the less familiar passages from both the Old and the New Testament are quoted, besides the general favorites. The accuracy with which they are quoted indicates either a good memory or a copy of the Bible on the writer's desk.

The most general choice is the Twenty-third Psalm, named by seventeen persons. Among them are Dr. W. J. Mayo, Secretary James J. Davis, Gov. Roland A. Hartley of Washington, Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler. The Beatitudes were named by eleven as among their favorites, while the Sermon on the Mount is designated in whole or in part a total of twenty-five times by such men as Henry Ford, Booth Tarkington, and Col. Edward M. House. These three chapters, Matthew 5, 6, and 7, may therefore be taken as the most universally appreciated of the longer passages.

Thirteen persons found their verses in the Gospel according to St. John, and six of these from the beginning of the fourteenth chapter: "Let not your heart be troubled."

Four Governors quote the Golden Rule as their favorite verse: Gov. Clyde M. Reed of Kansas, Gov. R. C. Dillon of New Mexico, Gov. William Tudor Gardiner of Maine, and Gov. Harvey Parnell of Arkansas. "The Golden Rule," Gov. Parnell comments, "fits admirably into the life of every one almost every moment of every day. The very fundamentals of our social and business standards are based with a psychological effect upon the true meaning and intent of this wonderful passage."

The famous "Charity Chapter," 1 Corinthians 13, is quoted by "Pussyfoot" Johnson, prohibition lecturer; Zona Gale, novelist; U. S. Senator Arthur R. Robinson, of Indiana; and Roger Babson.

Besides these few general favorites, the verses chosen show surprisingly little duplication. Many choices are highly individual. Some are colored by a man's profession, by his hobby, or by some personal recollection. A famous woodsman likes best the verses with an outdoor setting. A juvenile court judge refers to this verse as an inspiration to him in his work: "I delivered the poor that cried and the fatherless, and him that had none to help him." A leading woman psychologist recalls that, when she was thirteen years old, the bishop preached her confirmation sermon from the text: "Thy shoes shall be of iron and brass, and as thy days, so shall thy strength be." All her life, she writes, this verse has been her guide.

"Choosing a favorite passage from the Bible," writes James J. Corbett, "is almost like looking for something better than the best. The Bible is a marvelous history of the times and has never been duplicated or excelled. Every passage carries a thorough moral lesson."

"Every time I pick up the Bible, and I pick it up frequently in the course of a busy life," writes William Allen White, editor of the Emporia Gazette, "I find some new quotation which I use until I pick it up again. The Bible is to me an eternal spring of wisdom and joy. Its English is beautiful and helpful and its philosophy is comforting."

As one who often has to speak in public, Mrs. John F. Sippel, president of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, says she is thankful that a part of her early education was the memorizing of many portions of the Bible.

Hamlin Garland is one of numerous writers who acknowledge their debt to the Bible. He says, "Without doubt the noble simplicity of its English has been of very great help to me as a writer, for as a boy I heard it almost daily uttered eloquently by my two grandsires, the one a Methodist, the other an Adventist. Both loved the poetry of its psalms and the splendor of its prophecies. Grandfather McClintock rejoiced in the visions of John and Grandfather Garland in the lamentations of Job!"

"I don't see how any one can be called educated who is not profoundly read in the Bible, both the Old and the New Testaments," writes Mary Austin. A similar conviction is voiced by Dan Beard, scouting expert and writer: "I could get along better without a dictionary than I could without the Bible, but of course its greatest value to humanity is its spiritual quality."

Faith to Cry

By Dr. C. F. Yoder

*They were two men of Jericho,
Blind beggars by the way.
One only thing the two possessed,
They had the faith to pray.*

*The Master passed with motley throng;
They cried with all their might.
Yet not for pardon did they pray;
They only asked for sight.*

*But Jesus saw their deeper need.
More than they asked he gave.
Both healed and cleansed he sent them forth
To tell his power to save.*

*And Jesus knows our deepest need.
The things we do not ask.
We ask for sight; he gives us power
To do our every task.*

*We ask for health, for things of earth;
He opens the door of Heaven.
He sends us forth to freely serve
With gifts that God has given.*

*O blessed spot and happy day,
When Jesus passes by.
He always meets us by the way
When we have faith to cry.
Rio Cuarto, Argentina.*

The Soul's Defenses

A Sermon by the Late Rev. J. H. Jowett, D.D.

TEXT—Psa. 91:10. "Neither shall any plague come nigh thy dwelling."

We move amid moral pestilences. Plague-stricken people are all around us. We are daily in contact with men and women who are afflicted with moral and spiritual diseases. The diseases are highly contagious. How are we to escape them? "Evil communications corrupt." Is that true always? "He went to be guest." Was he corrupted? Was he smitten? Did the evil contagion find lodgment in him?

Evil communications do not always corrupt. Contagion demands prepared conditions. If the conditions are absent, the contagion is impotent. "The prince of this world cometh and hath nothing in Me." There were no appropriate conditions. There was no congenial soil. The devil could find no footing. The evil microbe could discover no sustenance. The secret of healthy living consists in the exercise of care, lest we lapse or degenerate into conditions which will be congenial to the germs of moral and spiritual disease.

We have now had twenty-five years of bacteriological investigation. Profound research has been devoted to the infancy and growth of disease. The preparatory conditions in which the microbes find their sustenance have been laboriously studied, and some fruitful conclusions have been established. Now, the flesh is more than a vesture. It is a literature. It is an assembly of parabolic hints. It offers suggestion as to the creation of a well-ordered soul. Here, then, are two or three of the prepared conditions which offer a foothold to encroaching disease.

Physical Exhaustion. The natural forces are reduced. The energy is spent. The army is recalled from the walls. The gates are left undefended, and the enemy has an easy access. Our physical defenses are constituted out of the natural resistance of the body. Impoverish these, and our security is gone. Let me change the analogy. In the physical life our income must be a little above our expenditure. Physical exhaustion means that the emphasis has been changed. We have got an inlet with a one-inch bore, and we have got an outlet of one and a half.

How is exhaustion to be interpreted? Some sources of income have ceased. Some correspondence has been severed. Perhaps the correspondence has been broken with the restoring realm of rest. We have gone on grinding and grinding until the energy has been spent. Then comes along the microbe and settles itself in the congenial conditions of weakness, and extends the insidious distribution of some most crippling disease.

How is it with the soul? Its defenses are its resistances. If the soul is strong and powerful and energetic, the microbe of evil will gain no footing. But the soul can become faint, its defenses may be straitened, and the stronghold may be easily taken at the first besiegement of the evil one. How does the soul become exhausted? By the breaking of the correspondence with the land of rest. "Why art thou cast down, O my soul?" "Return unto thy rest." We are made to hold communion with the restoring centers of rest. By prayerfulness and by spiritual meditation the communion is kept established. But if the communion is broken, the soul sinks into spiritual weakness and exhaustion, and the microbe "Return unto thy rest." We are made to hold communion of temptation or suggestion, finding us defenseless, fattens on our weakness, and holds us in the bondage of a foul and appalling disease. Men easily capitulate to the devil when, by prayerlessness, they have reduced themselves to spiritual exhaustion.

Dieting Body and Spirit.

Diet is not altogether an indifferent matter in reference to the advances of disease. Some foods are the friends of our foes. They encourage the plague. They prepare its way. They arrange congenial conditions. It is not otherwise with the spirit. Diet is not a matter of indifference. What kind of food do we give the mind? Is it possible we may be predisposing the mind to easy surrender to moral disease? How about our reading? Is the food good, or is it unsound meat? Can we honestly expect our minds to be healthy with the kind of food we give them? "God gave them bread from heaven to eat." "I am the Bread."

The Master's bread is not all to be found within the province of one book. He has given his bread to his disciples, and they distribute it to the multitudes. He has given his bread to poets, to singers, to artists. My counsel is this: Pick your bread; do not eat whatever comes. Be even more careful in dieting the spirit than in feeding the body. "This is the bread of which if a man eat he shall not die."

Undisciplined Emotion. The investigations of the last twenty years have revealed this as one of the predisposing conditions of physical disease. Excessive grief and worry have exhausted the body and thrown its gates open to the invading germs. Little griefs can despoil the body. It is the dropping tap which empties the cistern. Little by little men get run down, and make themselves easy victims of any plague that may be prowling about.

How is it with the soul? Is not undisciplined emotion one of the predisposing conditions of spiritual collapse. Unregulated emotion impoverishes the spiritual defenses. It becomes our enemy rather than our friend. The devil likes to get our emotions well stirred, and to make us pleased with our emotions, and then behind the action he carries on his nefarious work.

It is one of the perils of great evangelical missions.

A YOUNG MAN'S PRAYER

By Harlan G. Metcalf

God make me a man—
When other folks have left the fight.
Give me the courage of the man
Who knows that if he wills he can.
Teach me to see in every face
The Good, the Kind and not the base.
Make me sincere in word and deed,
Blot from me all sham and greed.
Help me to guard my troubled soul
By constant, active self control.
Clean up my thoughts, my speech, my play
And keep me pure from day to day.
Oh God, make of me a man!

Mere emotionalism weakens our defenses, and leaves us more disposed to the devices of the devil. Emotionalism has often proved the forerunner and helpmeet of the plague and has provided conditions which have been converted into domains of wide-spread spiritual disease.

Uncleanness. Perhaps this is one of the greatest discoveries of the realm of surgery during the present generation. We have come to see, as never before, the absolute necessity of the most scrupulous cleanliness. Microbes love dirt. Our surgeons are, therefore, exactingly careful that all their operations are performed with sterilized instruments, and under the severest conditions of cleanliness. The smallest remnant of dirt gives an advantage to disease.

How is it with the soul? There is need of a similar scrupulousness. Do we exercise the same scrupulousness? Do we not treat small scruples lightly? Do we not label them as puritanical? Do we not compromise in the matter? Many of us become the victims of the plague because at first we harbor, not deliberate or intentional wrongs, but little biases toward the evil one. We make little compromises in his favor. We retain a dirty little prejudice, or some mean little policy which we persuade ourselves can not be called wrong, but only expedient; and these retained uncleannesses afford occasion and opportunity to the evil one, and through the entrance thus obtained he leads on his forces of darkness. If we are to defeat the enemy, we shall have to attend to the scruple. One defilement, deliberately treasured, may ensure the absolute triumph of the plague. "Create in me a clean heart, O God."

Let me add one or two closing words. Here is a suggestive sentence from a text-book of science:—"The most universal and active and economical agent of sanitation is the sun." The worst enemy of the microbe is the sunlight. It is the room that gets but little sunshine which becomes fusty.

And is all this not true in the regions of the soul? Our light is our defense. "The Lord God is a Sun;" and, therefore, "a shield." Let us put on the "armor of light." "Walk in the light." It is the light that burns up the destructive invader. "Our God is a consuming fire."—Christian Herald.

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

TREND OF HOME LIFE IN OHIO

Surveys made by the Department of Commerce of the United States are revealing as to differences in the several States and the trends therein of the home life. Figures for Ohio reveal an alarming situation as a whole, but the recent rate for marriages and divorces is at a practical standstill. The rate of marriages per thousand of population in 1928 was 8.7, while in 1927 it was 8.8; the rate of divorces per thousand of population in 1928 was 2.15, while in 1927 it was 2.18. The total number of marriages performed in 1928 was 59,339, an increase of 43 over 1927. The number of divorces granted in Ohio in 1928 was 14,643, a decrease of three over 1927. In 1928 there were sixty-four marriages annulled, or thirteen less than in 1927. On July 1, 1928, there was an estimated increase in the population over 1927 of 116,000. Surely there is no economic reason for these divorces, for the State is enjoying a very high degree of prosperity, and years of prosperity are normally years of domestic peace. It is impossible to accurately state the reason for this unstable condition, but there is every need for the increased effort on the part of the churches. As goes the home life, so goes the Nation and the world.—Religious Telescope.

WHERE DO PREACHERS' WIVES COME FROM?

There was a conference—not long since—of Methodist preachers' wives. Some inquiring speaker—interested in the rural church—put a series of questions to the ladies. How many of them, he asked, had been reared in churches with more than 800 members? Not one arose. How many had come from churches of from 300 to 800 members? Two arose. Finally, how many had come from churches with less than 300 members? The entire company stood.—Selected.

A BAPTIST VIEW ON UNION OF BAPTISTS AND DISCIPLES

In the discussion of union with the Disciples there are certain Baptist attitudes to take into account. One of them is expressed by Charles Branson in the Western Recorder, in the following words: "Even dabbling with union with the Freewill Baptists or the Hardshell Baptists is likewise objectionable. Neither of these are real Baptists. But both of them are nearer the Baptist doctrine than the followers of Alexander Campbell. Suppose the Campbellites have been drawing nearer the Baptist doctrine for fifty years. The fact remains that for over fifty years before they were fully as heretical on the design of baptism as any creed in the world. That would unchurch their organizations forever, so that the only way one of their members could ever get valid baptism would be to come to a regular Baptist church, and tell an experience of saving grace, and on such a statement get baptized into that Baptist church. To take all the Campbellites as they are into the Baptist fold would be to take into the Baptist fold that much unbaptized material. Also it would be to take in a great lot of un-Baptistic belief as to doctrine. We have too much of such stuff already."—The Baptist.

TOLERATION!

A recent issue of The Christian Century publishes the text of a decree issued by the president of Peru on the teaching of the Catholic religion. The decree says:

"In the educational establishments which function in the republic, public as well as private, no doctrines may be taught which are in any sense opposed to the religion of the state."

The "religion of the state" is Roman Catholic. According to this decree, it will be a crime to give Protestant religious instruction even in private schools.

No one can tell what the Roman Catholic church would do, if it had the power, in America. Incidents like these, however, make us wonder.—Robert P. Anderson in C. E. World.

MEXICO'S LITTLE RED SCHOOLHOUSE

A big and increasing crop of rural schools is sprouting all over Mexico. In July, 1928, there were only 3,392 such schools. In July, 1929, the number had increased to 6,073. And Mexico's farm boys and farm girls—who had scant chance before—are trudging, barefoot, to fill them. The enrollment grew from 499,853 in 1928, to 841,000 in 1929. The government—and in particular President Gil—is back of this movement. Among other things the state publishes a newspaper which is a sort of an educational first-aid kit. It contains information for young and old on current events, household items, health data, farm hints, songs, pictures, poetry. One edition of the paper is made poster size, and displayed on the village bulletin board. Another edition is printed for schoolroom and family use. Open-air, rural theaters are another educational innovation. More than half the country schools of Mexico have such open-air theaters which provide community entertainment and serve to supplement the school work.—Christian Herald.

NEW PRESIDENT FOR CHICAGO THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

Rev. Albert W. Palmer, five years pastor of First Church, Oak Park, Illinois, announced to his congregation, Sunday, September 15, that he would at the annual meeting of the church, a week later, formally offer his resignation as pastor of the church to accept the call of Chicago Theological Seminary to the presidency, as a successor of Dr. Ozora S. Davis. Dr. Palmer will take up his duties January 1, 1930. "The Congregationalist" congratulates Chicago Seminary on calling such an outstanding leader to this important position; and at the same time congratulates Dr. Palmer on this recognition of his achievement in pulpit and pastorate. The ministry is honored in the fact that one who has pursued his course as preacher and pastor without regard to any other field or honor should have been called to so conspicuous a place in the training of the ministry and in the leadership of religious thought.—The Congregationalist.

MAKE WASHINGTON A MODEL CITY

The well-known Negro magazine, "Opportunity," believes Bishop Cannon is on the right track, and so declares itself ready to support him in a campaign to make Washington, D. C., a model city, in law enforcement and faithful observance of the constitution. Read what it says:

"The Right Reverend Bishop Cannon, belligerent prelate of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, is highly desirous, according to press dispatches, of making Washington, D. C., a model city. Since Washington is the capital of these United States, it should be, this distinguished churchman avers, the city perfect. In order to bring this to pass he suggests that the so-called Blue Laws, dealing with the observance of Sunday, as interpreted by the Protestant Evangelical churches shall be rigidly enforced. He contemplates a Sunday devoted to religious meditation and worship; a Sunday when all work ceases, when motion pictures, theaters and baseball games shall offer no temptation to those whose spirit is willing but whose flesh is weak.

"One may be less sanguine than the Bishop in his hope for a return to the customs of an earlier age. But one can easily agree that the capital of the nation should represent all that is best in American life in practice as well as in theory.

"We agree that the model city of the nation should be one in which the spirit of the Constitution should be observed and the laws of the land enforced. Therefore, we hope that in addition to his propagation of the Blue Laws the fighting Bishop will take up his cudgel against the flagrant violations of the Constitution which are rife in the capital city. For there American citizens are discriminated against because of race, color and previous condition of servitude. There, race prejudice manifests itself in the public schools, the public playgrounds, the Y. M. C. A., the Y. W. C. A. and the church. Aye, in the very government itself, discrimination in violation of the spirit of the Constitution is widely prevalent.

"We have always been of the opinion that Washington should be the model city of the nation—a city which is the ideal toward which all other cities might grow. We will gladly join the Bishop in his crusade to that end."

MONDAY

John 5:10-16—"A Little Bit of Love." The Jews, in this incident, evidence the most amazing lack of sympathy and love. Had there been the slightest trace of either of these qualities, they would have rejoiced at the great good fortune that had come to this sufferer on the Sabbath day. "Do you know the world is dying, For a little bit of love?" asks the old song; in the big industrial centers of the land and also in the more remote sections the world is crying for a little bit of love just as truly today as ever. They will find it only in him who is Love, or in those who have been filled with love by him. "Go, then, saying, Here am I, With a little bit of love!"

TUESDAY

John 5:17-18; Phil. 2:5-11—Equal with God. There are those who would pose as "Christian" teachers today, who say that Jesus never claimed deity, but that any such claims were only the presumption of his ignorant followers. His claim here, however, is as unmistakable as it is in numerous other places; he repeatedly claimed to be the very Son of God, coexistent with him, and sharing his power. May the same mind be in us which was in Christ Jesus! For our meditation this morning, and throughout the day, let us consider what it means to have the "mind of Christ."

WEDNESDAY

John 5:19-25—Perfect Union. In this passage we have some insight into the perfect union, understanding, and love between God the Father, and God the Son. It is humbling to realize that this perfect union was broken that we might be saved! As a result of this so great salvation, we may, in answer to our Lord's prayer, be one with God, even as he is one with God. And in that day we shall also know—know HIM, know all things—as perfectly as now he knows us!

THURSDAY

John 5:26-35—Precious Promises. Here we have some of the most precious promises Jesus ever made to dying, sin-cursed men: Because the Son of God is also the Son of Man, and knows our frame, he shall be able to judge with love and mercy. He promises the resurrection from the dead, and a future life that may be what we choose to make it. It is well to dwell often upon the precious promises that make life worth living; but it would be impossible to "count them one by one!"

FRIDAY

John 5:36-47—Witnesses. There were many false "Christs" in Jesus' day. Even in our day the "long-looked-for Messiah" is frequently heralded to the world. All have been accepted or rejected according to the proofs they have been able to offer. Jesus says that HIS claims depend on no testimony of his own, but cites John's testimony, and the testimony of the wonderful works which he did; many other proofs were given later. But today, as ever, the greatest proof of the power of Jesus lies in the changed lives of saved men and women. WE are witnesses to the truth of his claims.

SATURDAY

John 6:1-13.—Much from Little. We rejoice anew at the power of Jesus every time we read this story; yet why should we be amazed at such an incident when we remember that he created all things? I like, rather, to think of the way in which the Lord blesses and uses even little things, when they are yielded fully to him. May we, our Father, place our whole lives in thy keeping, to be used as thou wilt, for thy names' honor and glory!

SUNDAY

John 6:14-21—Mistaken Honor. These men would have honored Jesus, but in their own mistaken way. Through all the world, on this, thy day, may we honor thee aright. Do thou come into our lives, yea, even into the storm and strife of this old world, and bring peace and safety as thou didst in days of old, beside the sea. Even so, come, Lord Jesus.—T. C. L.

The Primary Department

ITS ORGANIZATION AND EQUIPMENT

By Mildred J. McArdle

MEMBERSHIP—The Primary Department of the Bible school includes the children of six, seven and eight years of age. The grades of the Primary correspond to the first, second and third grades of the secular school. The six-year-olds are promoted from the Beginners' Department or class and enter the Primary the first Sunday of October.

GRADING—The pupils of the Primary Department should be graded or grouped according to age. The first of October should be considered the beginning of the school year and the first of April the dividing line for birthdays in placing children in their proper group.

For example, if a child enters the Sunday school in August and was seven years old before the first of the previous April, he would be placed in the second year class; if after that date he would be placed in the first year class.

Circumstances often modify this grouping. If the new pupil is one whose age would place him in the second year group but who is entering for the first time the first grade of the secular school it would be better to place him with the first year group; unless his friends, his mental or physical development or home environment make grouping with the second year desirable.

If the new seven-year-old pupil is in the third grade of the secular school, and his playmates are children of eight years of age, he should be placed with the third year group.

And, there is the exceptional child, whose mental or physical development makes it advisable to place him in an older group. Thus while age is nominally the standard for grading, other influences enter in and should be considered.

Unless the Primary superintendent or classification secretary is familiar with these facts relative to the new pupil it is usually best to enroll him as a visitor for a few Sundays until his proper grade is determined.

The proper grading of pupils is important in order that the means used to develop the spiritual life may meet the needs of the pupil. The lack of interest and the failure to respond on the part of a pupil is often due to improper grouping.

CLASSES—The three large groups should be divided into smaller groups, or classes of six or eight children. In a very small school where the number of children of Primary age is not more than ten the grouping should still be recognized. The groups, according to age, can be assigned different tasks relative to the work of the class. For example, in the matter of handwork the youngest group can paste pictures, the middle group can color a given outline or be required to trim the edges of the pictures they are to paste and the oldest group can have a verse to write. The amount of memory work required can be graded according to the grading of the class, the youngest memorizing less than is required of the older groups. The older children can help the younger with their work. Thus by requiring of each group only that which is within the ability of its members, they respond and even the youngest feels the joy of accomplishment, while the oldest is not asked to do that which he considers "babyish."

THE OFFICERS OF THE PRIMARY DEPARTMENT—The number of children enrolled will determine the number of officers needed. There should be enough workers to care for the work of the department in an orderly manner and thus insure an atmosphere of reverence.

There should be a superintendent, a secretary, a pianist, class teachers and such other helpers as are necessary for carrying out the department program as planned. A large school will require assistants for the superintendent and secretary and a greater number of assistant teachers. A small school will combine the work of two or more offices. The secretary will also be the pianist. The class teachers will have departmental duties other than those pertaining solely to their own classes. Assistant teachers can be at the door or doors of the department room to greet visitors and new pupils and see that neither these nor the tardy pupils interrupt the work of the department.

WORKERS' CONFERENCE—There should be regularly held a workers' conference where the work of the department is carefully planned and each worker made familiar with the part she is to have in the program. The organization of the Primary Department is the banding together of a number of workers having a definite common aim and each worker having a definite task to perform towards reaching that aim.

EQUIPMENT—If the Primary workers are to realize the aims of the Primary standard they must have tools with which to work; efficiency demands the proper equipment.

ROOM—The department should meet in a separate room or if this is impossible, a screened space should be secured. The room or screened space should be large enough to prevent crowding. It should be dry, well lighted and have proper ventilation. This is essential both for religious teaching and as a precaution against the spread of disease. The room should always be clean and in order. The children should be taught house beautiful. At least three class rooms, for the grades of the department, in addition to the assembly room, are desirable. If these cannot be had the classes can be separated by burlap screens. The screens should be of three or four parts, the parts measuring about one and a half by four feet. The burlap covering should harmonize with the other furnishings of the room.

The walls should be of a restful color. Around the walls should be a dado of burlap, from two to three feet wide, the width depending upon the height of the ceiling of the room. On this, pictures for lesson and song illustration, and seasonal decoration are fastened. The center of the dado should be on the level with the eyes of the children.

There should be two or three good pictures in plain dark frames, hung low. Such pictures as "Infant Samuel," "Christ Blessing Little Children," "The Angelus," and the Madonnas are suitable. Pictures of child life or of nature can be found in magazines or obtained in inexpensive photographs and prints. These should be mounted on cardboard with a piece of tape or a suspension ring pasted on the back. A few are used to give the seasonal touch needed or in the development of the lesson or other story.

An American and a Christian flag of equal size should be correctly hung and the salutes to each used frequently.

If the windows are unattractive, fresh, dainty curtains should be used.

FURNITURE—There should be a desk or a table for the superintendent and a desk or a table for the secretary. The half hexagon or half-circle is the best shape for the class tables. They should be about twenty or twenty-two inches high. Folding sewing or game tables can be used if impossible to obtain the others or if it is necessary to conserve space.

The chairs should be three heights, eleven to fourteen inches, and the seats narrow. They should match the tables in finish. There should also be several chairs placed near the doors for tardy pupils and visitors.

If there are no closets for the wraps, there should be movable racks or costumers. These can be placed behind a screen. If the wraps must be hung upon a wall of the assembly room screens should be placed in front of them.

There should be a cabinet or cupboard for holding the supplies. A bookcase or several drawers or files known as library transfer cases and made of inexpensive wood, can be used. A carpenter can build a cupboard in one corner of the room. In this cabinet or cupboard is kept:

Reference books for the Primary workers.

The Teachers' Manuals for the three grades.

The Pupils' Leaflets—Those to be used and the leftover ones.

Music books.

Pictures—The Primary Graded Set for each grade. Others used in lesson or song or seasonal work.

Models and objects for story work.

Missionary curios for story work.

Material for handwork.

Material for posters.

Material for pre-session work. Such as material for making scrap books for gifts, puzzles of pictures and large type verses cut into a number of pieces. (Each puzzle in a separate envelope). A number of cards with words printed on them to form memory verses.

An extra supply of pencils, crayons, paste, scissors, etc.

Objects of nature.

There should be a blackboard low enough for the use of the children. Blackboard paper can be fastened to the wall.

There should be a piano (kept in tune).

The small (boudoir) piano of six and a half octaves is inexpensive and can be used.

The song roll can be purchased or white window shades can be used. The fixtures for the shades can be fastened to the wall, blackboard or a movable standard. Gummed letters can be purchased for printing the words of the song, or a set of rubber type can be used. Or the words can be printed with a pencil or crayon.

On the superintendent's desk or table should be a Bible, the offering baskets, the basket or bank for the birthday offering, and a vase, basket or jar for flowers.

On each class table there should be a Bible, in large type which is easily read by the children, and a strong and attractive box, large enough to hold the teaching material needed each Sunday. In this box should be:

Envelopes or folders for holding the pupils' leaflets.

Envelopes holding all handwork material needed for the lesson.

A jar of paste and wooden "spreaders" or brushes.

A cloth and blotters to protect the hands when pasting.

Scissors. (Blunt-pointed if to be used by children.)

Pencils. (sharpened, and one for each pupil, and several additional for emergency.)

Crayons.

A small pad for writing names of absent pupils or other memoranda.

Report cards.—Taken from "The Workers' Manual, by Ida M. Irvin, Christian Board of Publication.

Keeping Fit for the Sake of Others

(Lesson for October 13)

Scripture Lesson.—Dan. 1:8-20; 1 Cor. 9:19-27; 1 Tim. 4:7-12; 2 Tim. 2:1-5.

Printed Text.—Dan. 1:8-20.

Devotional Reading.—Psa. 66:1-4, 16-20.

Golden Text.—Know ye not that your body is a temple of the Holy Spirit, which is in you, which ye have from God? and ye are not your own, for ye are bought with a price: glorify God therefore in your body.—1 Cor. 6:19, 20.

Introductory Note

We have in Daniel a man of intense religious feeling and a pure patriot; one possessed also of great ability and a powerful mind upon which numerous and weighty influences were brought to bear. Can we wonder that he viewed the world with a different eye from that of the exiled priest, Ezekiel, living in penury among the poor Jewish colonists on the river Chebar? Or from that of Jeremiah, struggling against all the evil influences which were daily dragging the feeble king Zedekiah and the decaying people of Jerusalem down to ruin? Or even that of Isaiah whose rapt vision, spurning this poor 'earth, soared aloft to the spiritual glories of Messiahs' reign, and sang how the sucker springing up from Jesse's cut-down lineage, and growing "as a root in dry ground," should by its wounds owing to the world healing and by its death purchase for mankind life? But each of these had his own office and his special message; and Daniel's message was to show that the Christian religion was not to be an enlarged Judaism, but a Judaism fulfilled and made free. Its outer husk was to fall away, and instead of a church for the Jews, there was to be a church for all mankind.

—Excell. But, thank God, the race of Daniels has not altogether died out. There are still those with us who live for God and humanity, who live for a purpose and with a purpose, and all the inducements the world can offer do not suffice to swerve them from the line in keeping with their conscience and character.—The Illustrator.

How They Were Tempted

These four captives were tempted (1) to do that which was debasing and degrading; (2) to disobey the law of their God; (3) to deny their religion and God, and yield to the popular idolatry of the day; and (4) thus to be recreant to their country, and their nation, and all the promises and hopes which belonged to them.

What Made These Things a Temptation

What was the attraction which made doing these things a temptation? These men were tempted (1) by appetite, the love of the king's luxuries and wines. (2) By their ambitions and hopes of success. How could they expect to succeed with a heathen king, when they were so set in a religion which condemned him and his conduct? (3) By the king's command. Why should they not yield as to an inevitable necessity—their very life might depend upon it. (4) By the love of popularity. Their course would make them appear odd, and subject to ridicule, sneers, and taunts, and bring them into many troubles.

Excuses They Might Have Offered

The excuses for yielding were essentially the same as those that present themselves to modern youths that are tempted to intemperance:

My natural appetite craves these good things, and why should I oppose nature?

But they wisely perceived that the higher life is to be won only by subordinating the lower desires, keeping the body under.

How can I get on in the world if I set myself up against common customs and the wish of influential men?

But they knew that it is safer and more prosperous to "get on with God" than to "get on in the world."

Why should I make myself singular and unpopular?

They knew that one smile from God is worth more than all the applause of men, and counterbalances all men's sneers and ridicule.

How can I help yielding, any way? My livelihood, my very life depends on it.

These four youths had learned that he who finds his life loses it, if he finds it through compliance with evil; and that he

Christian Endeavor at Ellet, Ohio

It is certainly a privilege to report some of the excellent work of the young people of the First Brethren church of Ellet, Ohio. During the three months' vacation time, both Norman Uphouse and the writer were privileged to share in the work of the above church. Both people and pastor did all in their power to make our work most enjoyable and helpful. We would take this opportunity to publicly acknowledge the fine treatment that we received. Briefly, we could say that the experience was most profitable, the fellowship, enjoyable; and the eats well, they certainly were good.

I would report this work among the young people under several heads and the first will be:

Organization

The age range of this group is from eight years to sixteen, making it somewhat difficult to combine all in one organization, but due to numbers, it was deemed advisable to attempt but one organization. Consequently, an Intermediate Society of Christian Endeavor was organized with the following persons as officers: President, Lucy Orban; Vice President, Charles Orban; Recording Secretary and Corresponding Secretary, Virginia Gaston; Treasurer, June Kastle; Pianist, Doris Mishler; Assistant Pianist, Carrie Allen; and Society Counselor, Mrs. Markey. All of the officers are from the young people of the society age, with Mrs. Markey as adult counsel, this being the proper plan for organization. Twenty-five members constituted the society at the time of organization.

Spiritually

A marked development was noted in the manner in which the youth of the church were growing spiritually. At the beginning of the work, few of the Endeavorers could be heard in public prayer, but after three months it was noted that many were taking part in this form of worship. A Pre-Prayer Service, a necessity in every society, was instituted and this meets fifteen minutes prior to each service. Excellent talks, bearing on the youths' Christian growth, are being heard. Several of the young people have also made the confession and definitely aligned themselves in the service of the Master.

Socially

No society is carrying out a full program that does not include the social aspect of life and this society did not fail in this respect. Being summer, hiking was in vogue and one Saturday, even though the clouds hung quite low, a group of the Endeavorers hiked several miles into the woods and enjoyed some time in playing games, taking pictures, eating a picnic lunch, toasting marshmallows and singing. At another time, the group enjoyed a cornroast. Such events are refreshing and helpful and it is an excellent manner in which Endeavorers may learn to know each other.

In closing, it is predicted that this society is going to grow, and offer some real reports at intervals and other societies are encouraged to report their activities that the young people of the brotherhood may become acquainted with each other in a bigger and better way. TOM HAMMERS.

Itinerating with the Gospel in Africa

Yaloke par Boali Par Bangui,
 Oubangui, Chari, Afrique Equatoriale Francaise.

Dear Friends:

It was just a little more than three weeks ago that Miss Emmert and I left for our first itinerating trip since August of 1927, and although we would have rather taken one of the brush roads, yet we were not permitted, but instead took the main automobile road between Yaloke and Bangui. We always found it rather hard to itinerate along this road perhaps because it is traveled by so many people from all tribes and the villagers seem to be more indifferent to the Gospel message but this time we found it so different.

From the very first we found the people very anxious to hear the Gospel. The Victrola still serves as an excellent means to draw the crowds. It makes no difference how often they hear it they still sit in awe of this wonderful machine of the white man that can sing and talk.

The first night out on the road we had the opportunity to minister medical aid to a chief that had been badly beaten. We could not see how he ever would survive, but gave him what first aid we could with our limited road supplies and then instructed him to go to the station where he could receive the necessary help and treatment. Through letters we learned that Dr. Gribble had very little hope, humanly speaking, for his recovery, but now on our return trip we were caused to rejoice in our God, for as we saw the man coming to greet us, we could only exclaim, "See what God hath wrought!" For it surely is nothing short of a miracle that he is living today.

Again at Bosomebele a young man came with his little infant son. The father's heart was broken, for the little chap had not been able to take any nourishment for three days. His lungs were so congested that each breath seemed as if it might be its last. How anxious the parents were that we might be able to save their little one. The mother was too sad to even speak but again we just did the best we could and then told them that they should pray to God, in the name of Christ, who is the Great Physician, that he could touch the baby and restore it to health and to them, and could do it immediately. We promised that we too would pray, but before they left we had to tell them that humanly speaking their baby was past help. We inquired whether they were Christians and the man, who was a soldier, said that he was a Catholic, that he attended mass regularly when in Bangui but that he would pray as we had told him and they went away seemingly encouraged.

The next morning before we left they came again asking for more medicine, saying that the baby was just a little better and that during the night he took a little nourishment.

Upon our return trip we asked to see the little tot, and he was just as bright as he could be, and again we were made to rejoice in our God, who heard and answered prayer.

Everywhere the lame, the sick and the helpless were brought to us for help and we had to turn many, many suffering ones away, for we never could have cared for all, but each one was given an invitation to come to the Yaloke Hospital where they would be cared for gladly and freely. They promised to come but many will not be able to do so because of the work in the villages.

At another place we had found a young man who had carried rubber to Bangui and on his way back to his village his foot began to swell and in a few days the whole instep was one large ulcer, and inside of twelve days he was nothing but skin and bones. He was placed in a hammock and was sent to the station but before he ever reached the station he died. He was a baptized Christian, and though we could not help him much physically we were glad that we at least met him and were able to encourage him spiritually.

After passing the government poste at Boali we have the Ali Tribe. There is no Protestant missionary among them and in many of their villages they never had heard the Gospel. In the village of Sen after the message was given one young man stepped out of the crowd and said, "Why is it that you white people of God come into Bangui, pass through the Ali Tribe, and then go to the Banou, the Karre and the Baya, and never a one stops with us? What have the Ali done that you treat us thus? We want to know about God just as much as the others. We are right along the road and yet—you pass us by! When the white man first came to Bangui, yes, we did fight them, we did not want them, but now we want the white man, we want the message of the white man of God!" What could I say? Well the answer had to be the same that we must always give to these who are "still WAITING"—Some day perhaps we will have enough workers to stay with you. We told them that Mr. Rossenau of Fort Sibut had been granted a concession eight kilometers from Bangui (which is in the Ali Tribe) and when there are enough workers they will occupy it. Everywhere we hear the same story and yet how little we can do for them for the tribes in which we are now working are too much for us.

On our return trip we entered the village of Shindou and the chief soon came to greet us but he was so intoxicated that he even could not talk properly. He began speaking in a mixture of French, Sango and Ali and when we asked him to speak Sango, he was highly insulted and said, "Why, aren't you a white Madame, and should I not speak French to you? Do you not understand French?" We had to inform him that we could not understand HIS French!

He then told us that they were mourning in the village, that one of their women had died the day before and that according to Ali custom, they had fixed up the corpse beautifully. We asked him when she died and he replied the day before we arrived she died but "you have buried her, haven't you?" "Oh, no," he replied, "She is still sitting on the chair that the Ali make for their dead." With his permission we went to see the affair and what a sight it was! There we found the woman tied to a rudely constructed chair, her face was whitewashed and decorated with red paint. Over and back of the chair they had palm branches so arranged as to form a canopy and here sat the relatives and mourned the loss of their loved one. Around all of this was a large circle of dancers and it was indeed pathetic to hear the doleful drumming and the wailing of the dancers. We asked the chief if he did not think he had better bury the woman, but he said that they would do so the next day. Before the white man came to their country they never buried the dead before four or five days after the death. All that day they stayed there mourning and dancing. A heavy rainstorm in the afternoon did not stop the mourning nor hasten the burial, but throughout the entire night they remained there with the body which already was decaying. Oh, the dense, dense darkness which we witnessed everywhere and even sometimes felt. What a hold the enemy does have on these people!

As has been said, it seems that Africa must be very near the seat of Satan for he surly reigns everywhere and holds these people in chains which only our Lord Jesus Christ can break and set free the captive.

Just yesterday again we heard of three women who had recently been buried alive because they were supposed to have had evil spirits causing the death of a man. We see so much sin and darkness and yet we do not know half of all that goes on in these villages which are controlled by Satan himself. The thirty-three percent of five hundred ministers and the eighty-two percent of two hundred students in the Theological School mentioned in the Literary Digest in answer to the question "Does the Devil exist as an actual being?" should come to Africa, and they very likely would change their answer!

We found Bangui changed a great deal since our arrival there four years ago. We found that a hotel had been opened, the dining room is already in good running order but the other rooms were not quite finished. While at lunch we were entertained with music of a VICTOR. The first record played was "Girle, Where Have You Been all the While?" Suppose we must have had the appearance of coming from the backwoods! At least our boys were told they were bushmen, and they were too "gentil" to tell us the same thing but evidently they thought so. Must admit there was some difference between us and the French Madams!

Tomorrow we expect to reach the station and get back into our routine work. Dr. Gribble writes that the medical work is getting heavier day by day. One day she had one hundred patients at the dispensary, every bed in the hospital was occupied and the kitchen was turned over for the overflow.

Perhaps our greatest need now is a deepening of the work of the Holy Spirit in the hearts of our so-called Christians. We have so many professors, and oh, so few possessors! They want to go hand in hand with the things of the world and yet think they are saved. Pray that there will be a deeper conviction of sin, that they shall truly realize what sin is! They talk a lot about sins but they do not really know what SIN is and how it will separate from God, how it has already separated them and cast them into this awful darkness in which they live.

We certainly do praise the Lord that we have had this opportunity to again carry the WORD to the villages, but as we return our hearts are sad for what does one hearing of the Word accomplish? For it is line upon line, precept upon precept, here a little and there a little, but all that we are asked to do is to sow the Seed in faith and God will water the Word and bring forth the increase, for as we have reaped where we have bestowed no labor, so others will reap where we have sown.

Yours until he comes,
ELIZABETH S. TYSON.

Argentina

The month of August is considered here the most dangerous of the months because the dry weather with wind and dust usually brings many diseases. This year the weather has been dry for six months and contagious diseases have multiplied until there are few homes that have not had sickness, and in the most of them nearly every member has been ill. The "grippe," as they call "the flu" here, has been the most prevalent and has taken a heavy toll through the complications and relapses. The public schools were closed for an entire month and even yet a great many scholars are absent.

The attendance at church and Sunday school has naturally been affected also, but in no case have we had to close, and in some cases the attendance has been on the increase.

The Bible coach is following the railway lines to the south and west and is having good success as usual, but Brother Yett will write the details of this work.

The new building in Laboulaye is nearing completion and we hope to have the dedication by the end of this month. The sisters in Laboulaye have at their own expense opened a branch mission on the other side of the town and are there having large attendance at the meetings which are held twice a week.

In Alejandro there has been an advance in the activity of the church and Brother Reina has again visited neighboring towns with the Gospel.

In Cabrera, Deheza and Perdices also the members are taking renewed interest in the work and in the latter place, which is a new work, there is now a very promising Sunday school directed by Brother Sotola.

In the absence of Brother Yett from Tancaha we have been taking care of his work from Rio Cuarto, preaching in Almafuerte on Thursday evenings and in Tancaha over Sunday. As Rio Tercero is between the two places we pass through this large and growing town on Fridays. We had planned years ago to make Rio Tercero our center and reach out from there to the other towns, as the railway center is there. We were already helping a Sunday school started there by a lay worker and were ready to begin preaching services when a Pentecostal pastor from Norway opened a work. We did not like to have an opposition work and tried to "teach him the way of the Lord more perfectly," but it has seemed to him that it is he rather than we who is preaching the Whole Gospel. However, the work he began is not prospering. The believers already there will not attend his meetings and insist upon us preaching for them. The "Free Brethren" from Cordoba are ready to begin a work if we do not and that would make the confusion worse. There are already several families there from our work in Deheza and Rio Cuarto and Tancaha and we feel it our duty to care for them. Brother Gallardo has a nice and growing Sunday school in his home and we are now holding meetings there on Friday evenings. Last Friday a converted priest from Cordoba preached. This new center is now adding to our expense as we must go there anyhow. The offerings in Almafuerte usually pay our extra expense in going there, and we are going to try to teach the people from the start to do their part in the support of the work.

I will probably go soon to dedicate the new hall in Rosario and hold a short meeting there.

C. F. YODER.

The other event was the final farewell reception at the parsonage when 200 friends met to give us a last farewell. Songs, readings and addresses by Rev. F. V. Kinzie, Attorney W. A. Funk and the pastor, were features of the program. Before our leaving we were literally showered with valuable presents and some good cash, all of which was characteristic of the love and devotion of the givers throughout our pastorate. May God's choicest blessing be upon all. If they remain true to the Word God will use them mightily in the future as in the past. We assure you all, dear Sunnyside Brethren, that you shall have our continual prayers as your new pastor Brother Fry, shall take up his labors among you.

Our first stop on our eastward journey was at Walla Walla to take lunch with some former Warsaw parishioners. Here we visited the Washington State prison where near 1,200 men and women are "paying the price" for sin. Oh how beautiful this old world would be, and how much sorrow would we be relieved of if only sin were put out. How faithful we ought to be preaching him who alone is able to break its power. Hurrying on through Oregon and Idaho we came after three days to the great Yellowstone National Park, where three days were spent viewing the mighty handiwork of God. After two hundred miles of driving within the park, we turned toward the Rockies and the sage-brush of Wyoming, and on to the great plains of alfalfa in Nebraska and of corn in Iowa and Illinois. A few hours' chats with future parishioners at Lanark, and we were off for a few weeks' visit with friends and relatives in Indiana and Ohio. It was a privilege and a joy to preach in the "old home town" at Mexico on a Sunday evening in the Church of the Brethren. Here is where the writer was ordained to the ministry, and where I found my wife twenty-five years ago. Winona next, to the best conference ever, after which a day's drive brought us to our new home in the beautiful little city of Lanark. So here we are, all settled down and hard at our job. We found the Brethren with open arms to receive us. They were not strangers to us for we had previously spent a brief time here in evangelistic work. If first impressions of the Lanark church and community are not deceiving we are anticipating a very pleasant stay among them. Splendid audiences have greeted us at every service thus far and the Bible school is around the 200 mark each Lord's Day. The various auxiliaries of the church are alive and at their respective tasks in a very commendable manner. As far as we are able to discover the membership is ready to follow our leadership. Here many of God's choicest men and women have labored earnestly for many years in a cause that was dearer to them than life itself. It is a pleasure to enter into the Lord's work with them. Time and space forbids us to mention these, save one, that is that veteran of the Cross, Elder Z. T. Livengood. Though not as young in years as he once was, his interest has not abated in the church, and I find him constantly by my side to help and encourage wherever needed.

A reception for the pastor and family in the church parlors brought over 200 members and friends of the church, with other pastors of the town, to bid us a welcome to the church and community. Indeed, we feel very much at home, even so soon.

Our program for the next few months is full. Promotion Day, Rally Day and Home

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

Our Lord's Greatest Apostle
was a great correspondent

LANARK, ILLINOIS

On August first, myself and family bid farewell to our many friends at Sunnyside, Washington, and turned our faces eastward. We are glad to say that those few years among this goodly people were not in vain, for it pleased our Heavenly Father to bless our labors in many ways to the building up of his church and kingdom. While we were in the Northwest it was our privilege to conduct one evangelistic meeting in Spokane, and likewise do considerable preaching and visitation at Harrah. In these fields and at home nearly one hundred souls were added to the body of believers. At Sunnyside the various auxiliaries of the church witnessed some very marked changes. The W. M. S. was reorganized and became a part of the national organization, and was able to report as a banner society for its first year. It also reported a very large number of family altars established in the church. Four Christian Endeavor societies were maintained. All of them were doing splendid work. They are blessed with a great group of young people that were ever faithful in their attendance to the services and to the support of the work in every way. If the church holds them the future of Sunnyside is assured.

The last few weeks of our pastorate were a continuous round of farewells for the pastor and family. One of these was when on July 19th nearly one hundred friends gathered at the home of Brother and Sister Ed. Rose in honor of the pastor's 24th wedding anniversary. Rev. F. V. Kinzie solemnized the marriage in a very unique fashion, while "little Eddie Rose" acted as ring-bearer and Mrs. John Turner as flower girl. The "newly weds" received several beautiful pieces of silverware. Again, the Intermediate C. E. sponsored a well-arranged social evening in honor of Vera and Mrs. Grisso who was their Superintendent.

coming, District Conference, Communion, and last but not the least, of our plans for our evangelistic campaign which is to begin on December 1. The pastor has been asked to be the evangelist, and we will be assisted by the Richers of Peru, Indiana, as song leaders.

All in all, we are much encouraged with the outlook for the church here. The future is as bright as the promises of God. We believe in God. We believe in Jesus Christ. We believe in his church. We believe in the power of the Gospel. In the strength of this faith we face our task without a thought or fear of defeat. We covet the prayers of the Brethren. May this year with our forward steps in evangelism and our Home Mission program witness the mightiest years for the progress of the church we love.

C. C. GRISSO, Lanark, Illinois.

HAGERSTOWN NEWS

Conference over, vacation ended, work resumed!

The conference at Winona was harmonious and worthwhile. The spirit of the conference was good and the outlook for the year is promising in many ways.

Our program for the fall at Hagerstown is full to the brim. Rally Day is at hand, when our friend and neighbor, John Locke, is to be the speaker of the day. Plans are laid for a great Sunday school rally in the morning and a Young People's rally in the evening. At the latter he will tell us about his recent trip to Palestine. On our invitation card appear the following lines:

"The Day of Days of All the Year
Our Rally Day—Four Hundred here
Both young and old, John Locke to hear
From Palestine he comes to Cheer."

Then the fall communion will be on October sixth. That is always a day of blessing to this church. May it result in a richer and higher spiritual life for the whole congregation. It always results thus when the people come humbly and sincerely and prayerfully to the Lord's table to do what Jesus by word and example directed his followers to do.

Then the evangelistic campaign follows, October 22 to November 10, with Brother R. Paul Miller as our evangelist. Preparatory services are being held each week and the church is expecting a season of great inspiration and awakening and soul-winning. Will those of our readers who count it a privilege to pray for others please remember to pray for this soul-saving campaign.

While in Indiana we enjoyed the privilege of preaching at the Ardmore and South Bend churches, both of which we call our home churches. At the close of the service in the South Bend church a good sister came to us saying that she was the first convert to make confession under our ministry. As we recall it was our third sermon. She is still a faithful member. Both of these churches are moving forward under the faithful shepherding of Brethren Leatherman and Sensenbaugh.

On the eastward journey we performed a wedding ceremony for a cousin at Mount Eaton, Ohio. On our way howe we came by way of Berlin and Meyersdale, our first sight of these two clean and beautiful little towns nestled in that rich valley. Each of these churches has a splendid church building and equipment for service, for which much credit doubtless is due to former pastors, Brethren Benshoff and Beachler, as well as some who served before them. The present pastors, Brethren Lantz and Ronk, enjoy a decided advantage in having such splendid material plants with which to advance the Lord's work.

On our arrival home our hearts were saddened by the announcement of the sudden death on that day of Mrs. Rosa Long, the faithful wife of one of our deacons. She had suffered ill health for several years. She is greatly missed in her home and in her church. She was 57 years of age. May the blessed Holy Spirit bring comfort to the bereaved hearts of the husband and daughter and other relatives.

Soon after landing in the "Gateway" a pleasant surprise came in the form of an invitation to a "squirrel potpie dinner" at the home of a Brethren hunter. We will not give his name but he "gets 'em." He had six that trip, not far from the limit. And what a feast! This is only one of the very many kindnesses shown the pastor of this church, and my ministering brethren know how much God's servants appreciate these countless expressions of Christian love and goodwill.

May the Lord make this year the best yet in his church here and in every place.

Yours to hasten the Coming of the King,
G. C. CARPENTER.

BRIGHTON, INDIANA

This congregation of Brethren is off to the northeast part of the District. Brethren Retreat, at Shipshewana Lake, will prove a good connecting link between this splendid people and our larger congregations. Brethren Kilhefner and Summers in the 80's were the guiding stars of this work, while Dr. Miller, then pastor at Elkhart, held some fine evangelistic meetings. The first attempt at a like effort was held by the writer soon after moving on the field at Milford in 1892. Strange to say, the church seemed to survive that effort. Last Sunday, the 22nd, was rally day at this church and it was my privilege to be present. The pastor, Rev. C. D. Whitmer, of South Bend, Indiana, picked up Mrs. Rench and myself in their "Studebaker Sedan" to enjoy the day with them; and what a day we all had together.

After the worshipful session of their Bible school, the pastor preached a fine sermon to his people. Neither congregation nor pastor need be ashamed of an effort like that. Then followed such a feast of good things to feed the physical man, such as the Brighton ladies are famous for. One little girl at our table was heard to say in her childish glee, "I took everything of a little." After feasting and recalling the good traits of many who are beyond the storms and sins of a pleasure-mad age, and congratulating those upon whom the mantle of leadership is fallen, we repaired to the church once more for worship. Thus, amidst flowers, good music, good singing, splendid fellowship in the service of God the day was spent. The congregation, never very large, has always held the torch of God high, and its influence in the community has been worth while. I am not forgetting that this is the home of Rev. Be-lote. G. W. RENCH.

OFFERINGS FOR THE EDUCATIONAL BOARD

My last report was submitted for publication on July 23, at which time I reported a total in gifts to the amount of $2340.09. Since that time, churches have reported as follows:

Goshen, Indiana .....	$ 28.25
Morrill, Kansas .....	8.21
Waterloo, Iowa, additional .....	25.00
Waynesboro, Pennsylvania .....	53.70
Mansfield, Ohio .....	1.00
Campbell, Michigan .....	5.60
Vandergrift, Pennsylvania .....	5.35
Cedar Rapids, Iowa .....	34.50
Ashland, Ohio, additional .....	10.00
Calvary, New Jersey .....	12.00
Matthias, West Virginia .....	2.00
Individual gifts:
L. L. Garber, Ashland, Ohio .....	1.00
Anonymous gifts .....	3,005.97

A total of .....$3,192.58
Previously reported .....$2,340.09

Grand Total .....$5,532.67
Of this amount, 73 congregations have contributed a total of $2,215.21. Fifty-six former students contributed $235.72. Gifts from twelve individuals furnished the remainder of the total. The amount thus contributed by individuals is $3,081.74.

A glance at the foregoing will at once show the reader that the percentage of congregations contributing is far too small, and he cannot help seeing that if all congregations in the Brotherhood had observed Educational Day, and given their people an opportunity to contribute, the total would have been far larger than has been reported. All congregations which sent in a report, have done well, and some of them exceptionally so, though I am sure that in none of them has the local treasury suffered, nor have the gifts in support of other causes fostered by the church, been less because of their participation. As the record now stands, the largest gift is to the credit of the church at Long Beach, with a total of $292.28, and the First church in Philadelphia stands second on the list, with a gift of $200.00. Ashland stands third on the list, with a gift of $106.10, but Waterloo is a close second to her, with a gift of $102.00. In singling out these congregations for special mention, there is no disposition to minimize the gifts of any, for as has already been said, all congregations contributing have done well, and your servants here at the college are heartened for the heavy tasks you have assigned to them by such tokens of your interest in the work they are doing in your name. And all the more so because they know that your gifts are an outward, tangible expression of the fact that you are praying for them, that they might not fail in this great cause to which they have dedicated their lives.

SENATOR CAPPER URGES DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION

Washington, D. C.—"Establishment of a Federal Department of Education, with its head in the President's Cabinet, is proposed in the national interest and in the interest of the children of America," states an article written for Universal Service by Senator Arthur Capper of Kansas, author of a bill similar to the Robison Education Bill. It is the Senator's belief that such a department should have been established years ago and he expresses the wish that it will be provided for in the coming session of Congress.

"The measure I have introduced, the same as that sponsored by Vice President Charles Curtis while he was in the Senate from Kansas, does not propose in any way to curtail or limit the activities of the several States and Territories, without regard to race, creed or color and will thereby work toward the abolishment of illiteracy.

"The measure expressly provides," the article continued, "that the creation and operation of the separate department neither impair nor infringe upon the laws, rights, duties, authority or responsibilities of the several States, Territories and the citizens thereof, 'with respect not only to public educational agencies and institutions, but likewise as to the private educational institutions and agencies in the several States and Territories.'

"The department would collect facts and statistics showing the progress of education in the several States and Territories. It will be invaluable to the States and Territories and local school subdivisions through furnishing reliable and accurate information as to educational programs and advanced methods of educational instruction. As a separate government department its opportunities for real service to the country, and particularly to the children of the country, will be enhanced many fold.

"Accurate and up-to-date information is necessary for the successful functioning of any enterprise. There is no enterprise in America today in which the country is more vitally interested than in the proper education of its youth. Equal opportunity for all is dependent upon equal educational facilities for all.

"Creation and operation of a separate department will make available to every school district in the country the information and plans and accomplishments of the best equipped and managed education systems of the world. It will be even more than a clearing house; it will be a guide and an inspiration in education.

"The children of America certainly are entitled to this much attention and guidance from the Federal Government. It will be especially valuable to the children in rural districts. It will stimulate educational progress in the urban districts as well.

"I am satisfied that every thinking parent feels, as I do, that education should continue to go forward, and should be recognized and made more effective and far-reaching by a place at the council table of the nation.

"Such recognition should no longer be withheld. The present Bureau of Education, while functioning to the limit of its capabilities, is a step in the right direction, but only a skeleton of what the Department of Public Education should be.

"The question involved in this proposition is not whether the Federal Government shall have a part in education. That policy already is established.

"This bill merely provides that the part the Government takes shall be more efficient. It will give a better basis of cooperation and guidance—not control, which in my judgment would not be desirable—on the part of the Federal agencies dealing with education."

THOUGHTS AND WORDS

There is an old saying that "a thing may as well be said as thought," which, like a great many old sayings, is not true. We are far less able to decide what shall come to our minds than we are to determine what shall find expression on our lips. Many an unholly thought has died of suffocation in the mind where it was conceived because it was not given the birth of utterance. It was a man of wide experience who said: "I have often regretted my words—never my silence," and the brother of our Lord wrote, "The tongue is full of deadly poison." The cruel word that cuts and burns and lacerates leaves a scar that never quite heals. The only assurance of clean, wholesome, enabling speech is to be found in a Christ-filled heart, but even if, in an unguarded moment, an unwelcome thought finds its way into our mind, we can make sure that it gets no farther by refusing to give it access to the light of day.

The recent announcement of the National Broadcasting Company that Biblical dramas were to be taken off the air met with many protests by telegraph, air mail, and special delivery letter. The answer to thousands of protests is to the effect that Biblical dramas will continue on the air.

who loses his life finds it, if he loses it in obeying God.

Their Indomitable Courage

"That which impresses me most deeply about these young men is their indomitable courage. Theirs was moral courage, which is the highest kind. For there were many things that might easily have been pleaded to make them yield, and do that which their consciences condemned. In the first place, they might have said, 'Why did God let us be taken captive, and be brought off to this idolatrous land? If he cared so little for us, we do not see any good reason why we should try and obey the laws of our religion.' Since their day there are many who have yielded to temptation to do wrong on less excuse than this. Or, again, they might have argued that since they were in Babylon, they might as well do as the Babylonians did. Many Christians even in these days act on that principle. When they go to Paris they do things, and go to places that they would never do or visit were they in their own homes. To this temptation many yield in the immoral cities of Asia, and so they make shipwreck of what little faith they ever had. On this account travel is dangerous, and many a fine young man 'on the road' has been ruined by the easy yielding to arguments like this.

"Still further these four young men might have argued, 'This Melzar has been good to us, and loves us. If we stick to our principles he may suffer death on our account. That would hardly be fair on our part.' Yes, if they had wanted to shirk duty, they could have found many plausible excuses. But they did not want to shirk duty, but to do it, cost what it might. So they laid their plans, and stuck to their point. And the result we see."

Passion or Reason?

Strong drink is one of the most powerful and most visible of temptations; but temptation appeals to every bodily appetite and every wrong feeling of the mind. The question with every young person is: "What shall rule? What shall be king and sit on the throne of my heart?" Shall passion and appetite control my nature, subdue my conscience, guide my life, and decide my future? Or shall conscience, and reason, and love to God and man control my body, and govern my whole lower nature? What rules the soul decides its quality and its destiny. The only way to be safe against the temptation to strong drink is to subdue all the bodily appetites, and make God our King, and his love our life. To yield in one point is to harbor a traitor within the camp.

"Remember you are in the body, and it is the lodging-house; and you may not, without offending the Lord, suffer the old walls of that house to fall down through want of necessary food. Your body is the dwelling place of the Spirit; and therefore, for the love you carry to the sweet Guest, give a due regard to his house of clay."—Samuel Rutherford.

Golden Text Illustrated 1 Corinthians 6:19, 20.

Years ago, the venerable Dr. Chas. Cullis of Boston went abroad, and on one occasion was invited to give a Bible reading in a mansion in London. He tried to close at nine and again at half past, but the Holy Spirit held him, and it was ten before he stopped. Then came the English supper where several kinds of wine were served. When asked to have some he declined. Some one said, "Don't you drink wine?" "No," was the answer, "I belong to the Lord wholly." About midnight there was a tap at his door and the unconverted son of the family entered and begged him with tears to pray with him. He was converted while they knelt. When he had gone, the father came seeking a deeper religious experience and healing for his body and he, too, received a blessing. The doctor returned home to Boston, and picked up a morning paper and read how that same gentleman had emptied the entire contents of his wine cellar, a hundred dozen bottles, into the sewer in front of his mansion. If we plant the incorruptible seed and water it with the Holy Spirit of a living example we need not fear but God will give the increase.—Selected.

A KNIGHT'S QUEST

Jack wanted a book, Sir Thomas Mallory's tales of the days of chivalry and knight-hood. Uncle Roswell promised to give it to him on condition that he would do a deed of chivalry every day for a week.

Jack objected that it was impossible. "There aren't any dragons to slay nor princesses in distress to rescue now-a-days."

"There are plenty of people in distress, and some of them are princesses in disguise," replied Uncle Roswell. "You will have to discover your princesses before you rescue them."

The end of the week came and Uncle Roswell was wondering if Jack had failed, when he heard voices in the hall—

"Lean on me, grandpa," Jack was saying. "Lean hard when you step on your bad foot."

"You're a sight better than a cane, youngster. How did you come to think of it?"

"Oh! I'm discovering princesses, and you're my seventh," said Jack with a laugh, and grandfather went into his room wondering what nonsense the boy was up to now.

A little later Uncle Roswell said, "I overheard one grateful princess' thanks."

"Well," said Jack eagerly, "grandpa doesn't look like a princess, but you noticed he had the right manners."

"It is much to a knight's credit," answered his uncle, "to recognize a princess in the disguise of an old man. How about the other six quests?"

"There was Miss Bell the first day," began Jack; "I knew at once she was a princess, for she has golden hair and white hands and is fair and stately. And she was in distress, for crossing the field, a cow followed her, expecting to get something to eat. Then Miss Bell ran—and the cow ran, too!"

"And what did you do?" asked Uncle Roswell.

"Oh! I ran towards them and hollowed, and the cow stopped to look at me, and Miss Bell got out into the road. She thanked me in words just like real princesses used."

"The next day there was the fruit woman. She had just piled a lot of fruit on her stand when down came the awning, and all you could see was kicking feet and rolling oranges," and Jack laughed as he recalled the scene.

"Then you pranced up on your cream-white steed," suggested Uncle Roswell.

"I pranced up," said Jack, "frowning at some jeering knaves, and pulled off the awning and helped the princess to get up and to gather the scattered fruit. Then she said, 'You be a gentleman! May God bless you.' So I knew that she was a princess herself."

"I am not so sure about some of the rest, but they all had the right manners."

"Were they in distress, and did they give you hearty thanks?"

"One was a yellow cat with a tin can tied to her tail," answered Jack.

"Golden hair again," said Uncle Roswell under his breath.

"She purred her thanks for my unfastening the tin," Jack went on. "There was a clerk in the store who wanted a drink of water, but couldn't leave her counter, so I brought her one. Blind Tom was feeling for the penny he had dropped, so I found it and, to make it a real deed, gave him another. Then the Miller baby was crying for a dropped ball, and I picked it up for him and he smiled his thanks. Do they all count?"

"Of course they count," said Uncle Roswell; "I dub thee knight, Sir Jack, and here is the book. Continue your quests. In whatever disguise they may be, you will know they are real princesses if they return you hearty thanks by look or word or act."—Expositor.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

FOR EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS

My congregation having granted me permission to go out to hold one evangelistic meeting during the winter, I shall be glad to correspond with churches desiring such services.

W. S. BAKER,
Lydia, Maryland.

OPEN FOR REVIVAL WORK

I will be able to do some revival work this year, if there are those who wish my services. Any churches interested in old-fashioned Gospel preaching may write me as follows:

R. E. GOTSCHALL,
2650 Riverside Drive, Columbus, Ohio.

LYDIA, MARYLAND

The Brethren church of St. James, Maryland, will celebrate the Holy Communion on Sunday evening, October 20th at 7 o'clock. All neighboring Brethren are invited.

W. S. BAKER, Pastor.

ASHLAND, OHIO

The Brethren church of Ashland will observe Holy Communion on Sunday evening, October 20th, at 7 o'clock. Visiting Brethren as well as other Christian people who wish to observe these ordinances with us are welcomed. G. S. BAER, Secretary.

EVANGELISTIC ITINERARY

My itinerary for the next three months is as follows: October 1st to 20th, Winchester, Virginia. October 22nd to November 16th, Hagerstown, Maryland. November 12th to December 1st, Washington, D. C. December 3rd to 22nd, Masontown, Pennsylvania. This will give the required information to anyone who may be interested in the work so as to pray definitely, and also provide addresses for any correspondence. Sincerely yours in Christ Jesus,

R. PAUL MILLER.

GOSPEL MELODY TRIO BROADCASTING

The Gospel Melody Trio, composed of three members of the Washington, D. C., Brethren church, Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Hartman, accompanied by Miss Mabel Donaldson, regular church pianist, broadcast over W J S V (1460 Kilocycles), Washington, every Sunday night from 9:30 to 9:45. You will be interested in this service of old-fashioned Gospel Songs. Tune in. If you appreciate the Trio, drop a card to WJSV. It helps. HOMER A. KENT.

XXIV—WHAT WE NEED

Melvin A. Stuckey, Professor of Religious Education in Ashland Seminary

What Christianity needs everywhere is a fresh baptism of the Holy Spirit of God, more holiness, less pagan behavior; more Biblical and doctrinal preaching, less catering to popular whim and individual opinion; more meditation, less running after the hares and hounds of society; more of the impressiveness of sober speech and godly living, less of the wiles and guiles and benumbing power of the Devil; more of knowing "nothing among men save Jesus Christ and him crucified," less dependence on other gospels; more orthodoxy, less heterodoxy, in teaching and every day living; more education which is really Christian and recognizes the place of revelation and the supernatural in the plan of redemption, less collegiate training which is based on naturalistic philosophy, mechanistic biology, behavioristic psychology, positivistic sociology, and utilitarian ethics; more true and factual science, less dogmatic and hard boiled scientists; more informed and ready minds, less spiritual lethargy which is to be found, strangely enough, among the higher-ups and the elite in denominational circles; more God-centered and Christ-centered theology, less criticism of the same theology by those who have not seriously investigated this queen of the sciences; more evangelism and intercessory prayer, less diagnosing the social ills of the century with the aim and sole intent of setting up other corrective programs than gospel preaching and individual salvation from sin; more tithing and missionary zeal, less spasmodic, uncertain, and haphazard giving of substance, service and self; more Christian courage and heroism, less semi-pagan indifference and perilous gravitation toward the world; more large-heartedness in service, less destructive, pernicious, and petty criticism of the well-meant efforts of fellow brethren; more quiet, dignified, and powerful church officials, less ecclesiastical bosses and mealy-mouthed politicians; more tolerance, less ungraciousness; more of Christ and less of men. This, among other things, is what we need.

AND the Devil that deceived them"

Norman Angell, international journalist and personal friend of Premier Ramsay MacDonald, writes his opinion as to the cause of wars. He says,

"Wars are not made by mad men intending evil, but by good men defending what they believe their nation's rights. And the other fellow is equally convinced he is defending his rights. Each usually fails to see he is claiming for himself what he is denying others."

Some will find it difficult to believe that "good men" make a practice of killing each other in defence of hypothetical rights. Nevertheless, there is a great deal of truth in what Mr. Angell says. Most wars, at least in modern times, have been kept going by lies and deceit. We are just now finding out how many lies our own government told us during the late war to keep us aroused to the proper pitch of hate. Even government officials are now frankly admitting that they lied to us. But all this will be forgotten when the next war comes, and people will believe the same old lies. The memory of man is short, and he learns very little from history.

It is also historically true that more than one war began because well-meaning men misunderstood each other. Bismarck once deliberately lied to start a war of misunderstanding. But there is a greater than Bismarck who makes it his business to deceive rulers and statesmen. Read Revelation 20:7-8 for a glimpse of his activity in the last battle of man:

"And when the thousand years are expired, Satan shall be loosed out of his prison, and shall go out to deceive the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth, Gog and Magog, to gather them together to battle; and the number of whom is as the sand of the sea." The Devil is loose today. Don't forget that.

AN old "new religion"

Headlines in the newspapers inform us that a "New Religion" has been launched by Dr. Charles Francis Potter of New York City. In this "new religion" there is no God, no sin, no salvation, no atonement, no supernatural, no prayer, no heaven and no hell. The founder calls his religion "Humanism" because man, not God, is the center of it.

All this is interesting, but not new. Auguste Comte, French philosopher of Positivism, in 1854 proposed the same thing—a religion in which Humanity would take the place of God. It failed, of course.

Most of the religious errors of today can be found in the human philosophies and religions of the past. The Devil is a very wise spirit, but his program is strictly limited. He has very little that is really new. Most of his propaganda is old stuff revamped under new names. You can find most of the errors of Russellism, Eddysism, Theosophy, etc., in history. One would suppose, therefore, that a careful study of history would put men on their guard. But it takes something more than this to protect men against the wiles of the Devil. Only the power of the Holy Spirit working through the Word of God can keep us back from the pit of religious error.

Arthur Brisbane, noted editorial writer, is right when he says concerning this so-called new religion, "Whoever leaves the supernatural out of religion leaves out the only thing that makes religion interesting."

MANY that are last shall be first

An editorial in the leading daily newspaper of Long Beach, now a city of 165,000, says that Long Beach is "now the permanent convention headquarters for three of the major denominations." The editor then names these three major denominations as the Christian Church, the Methodist Episcopal Church, and the Brethren Church!

Due allowance, of course, should be made for editorial "license" in evaluating the above classification. The newspapers like to please their constituents. Nevertheless, there is something here to which other Districts of our denomination can afford to give some attention.

This Long Beach editor doubtless does not know that the Southern California District has only seven congregations. But he does know that for the past several years the Brethren churches have been holding highly successful and well attended Bible Conferences in the city of Long Beach. He knows that this Conference has become an established institution, offering to the public each year speakers, not only of the Brethren church, but also outside speakers of national and international reputation. He knows that this Conference has gradually built up a constituency even among Christians outside the Brethren church. And he has estimated the importance of the Brethren denomination on the basis of their successful Conference.

More numerical size need not be the measure of the Brethren church, anywhere. What has been done so easily out here can be done a great deal more easily by any of our larger eastern districts. All that is needed is the adoption of a definite policy, the sinking of all petty self-seeking and self-importance, and then prayer, patience and work. There is no better way to give our church and our message the publicity it deserves than through the Bible Conference method. The transaction of business is necessary, but the general public will not flock to hear the reading of financial reports.

Alcohol and Human Life

(Review of "Alcohol and Human Life" by Courtenay C. Weeks, M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P.; H. K. Lewis & Co., Ltd., price three shillings, sixpence.)

By Ernest H. Cherrington, LL.D., Litt. D. Director of Department of Education, Anti-Saloon League of America

An indictment of beverage alcohol in the cold terms of exact science is drawn by Dr. Courtenay C. Weeks, M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P., in "Alcohol and Human Life," newly off the press of H. K. Lewis & Co., Ltd., London. Dr. Weeks thus describes the characteristic effects of beverage alcohol:

"Alcohol numbs the cortex, dethrones, be it ever so slightly, the crown of evolutionary progress, dulls the pain, stills the conflict—but the cause remains. While the alcohol is at work the unfortunate sufferer is possessed by the euphoria which he calls

'stimulation.' The 'stimulation' is but the temporary and dearly bought relief from the consciousness of disharmony, it is but the other side of the paralysis of the higher. It is, in a sentence, simply the result of a deadening of the power of appreciation; it has secured a flight from reality into the illusion of narcosis. Alcohol does nothing, absolutely nothing, to remove the cause, although it deadens the power of appreciating the result. If its action be sought continuously or frequently, then deeper draughts are constantly called for, until at last, and indeed only too often, the euphoria ends in an anaesthesia to all that is highest and best."

Pointing out that judges have often drawn attention to the close connection between certain kinds of crime and alcoholic indulgence, Dr. Weeks reminds us: "Then too, alcohol, far short of the production of drunkenness or disease, is only too often the enemy of morality. It must be borne in mind that alcohol is an aphrodisiac, and because of its effect on sexual desire, and its power to blunt conscience, it is one of the chief buttresses and supports of prostitution in every part of the world. Alcohol probably does not cause prostitution, although it may lead to the first fall, but once prostitution is established 'drink' is its most powerful ally." And also, "One of the most difficult features of the effect of alcohol to present statistically is its influence upon degeneration and disease of the nervous system. How far alcoholism is a cause or result of mental degeneracy is a constant source of argument. One thing is clear, and it is that mental degeneracy of all kinds and alcoholism are found in the closest association."

The rise and fall of alcoholic psychoses with the figures for consumption of alcoholic beverages for Great Britain and Ireland is discussed by Dr. Weeks who also points out the increase in alcoholic psychoses in Germany where the consumption of more strongly alcoholic beer has increased since the war. He finds that "there seems no doubt that alcohol can, either through nature or nurture, either through hereditary conditions or environmental, produce perpetuate, or precipitate a condition of feeble-mindedness." That alcohol is a racial poison is asserted by Dr. Weeks who says: "Alcohol may poison the race through the germ-plasm in two ways, and these two ways must always be kept distinct. First it may do through what Forel, Bertholet, and Mjoen have termed its BLASTOPHTHORIC ACTION. By this they mean, that alcohol taken in excess, or freely and continuously, has the power of breaking

A Singular Example of Christian Giving

There is no time in the year when Christian giving is not a timely topic, because the gifts of God's people are an ever present need and the spirit of giving is inextricably woven into every phase of Gospel truth. But at this season of the year it is more than ordinarily fitting that we should consider this subject. A majority of our churches have just entered upon a new fiscal year and the problem of finances is still being wrestled with by vast numbers of our church leaders. The fact that church finance is such a perplexing problem is evidence that the light of Gospel truth needs to be turned with fuller force upon it. And there is no more remarkable example of Biblical treatment of this great theme than that found in the eighth and ninth chapters of Second Corinthians. Practically every principle and motive of consecrated giving are here set forth and singularly illustrated by these Macedonians. It should stir our hearts to consider them somewhat in detail.

In the first place, it should be a source of encouragement and inspiration to know that these Macedonians gave not out of the abundance of their wealth but of their poverty. Paul tells us that "their deep poverty abounded unto the riches of their liberality." They were poor people, but they gave generously. And the church needs to keep in mind today the fact that the obligation of Christian giving rests not merely, nor primarily, upon the rich, but upon the poor as well. And happy and wise is that church that does not depend on those who have wealth to finance its portion of the kingdom's interests, but depends on the sacrificial giving of even the poorest of its number. Thank God for those who have wealth and have the consecration to use it for the glory of God, but may the church be saved from a feeling of dependence on and an undue deference to those who have wealth. It has been the enthusiastic giving of the devoted rank and file of God's people that has set the church forward with aggressiveness and power through the centuries rather than the indifferent giving of the wealthy few.

Second, we are told concerning these Macedonians that their willingness to give exceeded their ability. They were wanting to give more than they were able. We occasionally find people like that in the church today, but they are not many. As a rule people are able to give more than they are willing to give. "Beyond their power," says Paul, they gave unto the Lord. They gave not stintedly, but freely; they gave "hilariously." In this they set us an example, and it is the Christian ideal.

Third, they begged to be allowed to give and were urgent in their pleading, while those who received the gifts did so reluctantly because they knew how deep was their poverty. It is a strange sight—men pleading to be allowed to give and those receiving, protesting against it. That is not the way it is usually done, rather the situation is generally turned about. When the time comes for making gifts to the church or taking pledges, the customary thing is for the solicitors to do the begging and pleading while those who should be giving protest that they are not able, or are unable to give as much as they ought. But here, says Paul, they were "praying us with much entreaty that we should receive the gift." What a different story would be told about church finances, if that spirit were prevalent today! How much we need to be reminded that we should give, "not grudgingly, or of necessity, for the Lord loveth a cheerful giver!"

Fourth, they gave themselves first and then gave their money. That is the right order and the right method. The most important thing with regard to giving is that men shall consecrate themselves to God, for once that is done, the gift of every other thing of value will come as a natural course. Paul understood the importance of it, and in his Roman epistle he besought the brethren to "present their bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God." That is the biggest gift that one can make, and the hardest to make. Many people are willing to give of their money but not of "their own selves," but that is cheap giving and is not acceptable to the Lord Jesus. The man who will give his life, will give his money also, and will do so continuously, while he who withholds himself will withhold his substance also except when he seems forced to give.

Fifth, the value of the gifts of these people was reckoned by the degree of willingness back of the gift rather than by the amount given. "Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give." That voluntary, purposeful attitude of mind is far more important than what a man gives. One may be very poor and able to give but a very small sum, but he can give that small sum willingly, and if it represents an earnest desire and honest purpose to give his very best, it will be accounted as a very precious gift. "For if there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that a man hath not."

Sixth, paradoxical as it may seem, we are taught here that when we give generously we have the more and when we withhold we have the less. It is not so hard to understand in the physical realm, in seed-sowing, for example. In fact, it is perfectly reasonable that "he which soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly; and he which soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully." The man who skimps the sowing will get a thin harvest. It is just as true in the spiritual realm. To give the life to Christ is to save it unto eternal life, and to spend it in service is to receive it back multiplied many fold. And the giving of money, if it represents an act of the heart, if it is truly a spiritual service, will mean the enrichment of life and the enlargement of the fruits of righteousness. If God's people could but more generally realize that truth, what a difference it would make in their giving! The trouble is that we give of our money as if we were parting with a dear friend, never to meet again. And usually when we give in that spirit, we are parting in very truth with much that we ought to be saving—our self-respect, our generous impulses, our nobler selves, and we have left a smaller, selfish character of which we are not proud. But when we really give—give generously and heartily—we find coming back into our lives riches that are infinitely more valuable and a sense of satisfaction with which nothing can compare.

And finally, the crowning joy of these people was that they might give. It was a privilege rather than a privation. It was something to be desired and courted and not to be dreaded and shunned. Though they were people of poverty—these Macedonians—and might conceivably have excused themselves because of that, yet rather than allowing their poverty to produce stinted gifts it redounded to their more abundant liberality. Giving was an opportunity and they rejoiced in it, and in this they gave us a remarkable example. And why should they not, and why should not we, count it a privilege to give to the support of the church of which Christ is the Head, when we consider what sacrificial giving he has shown in our behalf! Possessing the eternal glory of heaven, he laid it aside, concealed it, took upon himself our humanity and poverty, and despised the suffering and death that awaited him that he might bring us into eternal life with the Father. We should be base ingrates, if, realizing all this, we should not thrill with gratitude and count giving to his cause a glorious privilege.

Keep your heart right with God and you will have little trouble with your neighbor.

There is far more power and possibility in the intimacy of the fireside than in all the good fellowship of the club.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

A note reached the editor's desk giving us word that the Bethel church of Osceola, Indiana, has decided upon plans for their new church building and building operations will start soon. Rev. Walter Gibson of Milford, Indiana, has been elected pastor for the coming year.

From Dayton, Ohio, comes a word concerning the reception of Rev. R. D. Barnard into the work of that pastorate. A special reception program was arranged and it proved to be quite an elaborate and enjoyable affair. His leadership has been accepted with much confidence and his interest in Christian Endeavor is especially appreciated.

President E. E. Jacobs gives us another installment of college news this week. From various items it is evident that the various faculty members provide a fine type of leadership along numerous lines, for the local church and community, as well as for the student body. Such a splendid body of men and women are worthy of our confidence and support.

A note is at hand from Brother O. C. Starn, who informs us that he is now doing school work in Yale Divinity school, further equipping himself for service in the church. Brother Starn served a successful pastorate at Gratis, Ohio, since his graduation from Ashland College and also was for several years secretary of General Conference. His home address is Monroe, Connecticut.

Ohio churches that have not paid their state mission apportionment should send it in immediately to Brother R. A. Hazen, Ashland, Ohio, the secretary-treasurer. Of course you will not want your church to be shown up "unpaid" at the conference, so please settle promptly in order that you may be credited on the printed report that will be distributed.

We should perhaps call the attention of Ohioans to the fact that the Ashland church will furnish the delegates to the coming district conference with lodging and breakfast free, which is the customary thing. Last week at the conclusion of the conference program, it was stated, "lodging and entertainment free," which is a little more than is promised. Dinner and supper will be served by the ladies of the W. M. S. in the basement of the church at the customary prices. Don't forget the dates—October 22 to 25, and the ministers' sessions begin the day before.

A note from Brother Albert Lantz, pastor of the church at Berlin, Pennsylvania, says, "We are moving forward. The services are well attended. A splendid spirit of love and fellowship is being manifested, for which we give God all the glory. ... We have also had the joy of adding three new members to the church this year, and there are considering casting their lot with us." He also informs us that they are planning on observing Laymen's Day on October 13th by giving the morning service over to the men, while the women will take charge of the evening service.

Our good correspondent from the Pittsburgh church gives us an installment of interesting items concerning the work of that church. Brother Claud Studebaker has gotten his work as pastor of that church well started and is being well received. His Bible studies on Wednesday evenings seem to be especially well appreciated. The Sunday school is reorganized under good leadership and the Christian Endeavor, recently organized, is receiving faithful support. Mention is made of the death of Brother and Sister Studebaker's little granddaughter. We extend to them sympathy in behalf of our Evangelist family.

A note from the Office Secretary of the Foreign Missionary Society informs us that some of our people are not as careful as they should be in wrapping and mailing packages destined for Africa to our missionaries. Please read the instructions which she passes on from Montgomery Ward and Company, Chicago, who take care of the actual shipping for us. All who wish to send packages should see to it that those packages are properly wrapped, properly addressed with sender's name and address plainly written on wrapper, the contents should be carefully itemized and the weight and value should be given. If you don't see the value of all this, just take the word of those who know and who have to meet the complaints when it is not done properly. Besides being annoying, carelessness in these matters is expensive. So do it right.

Brother I. D. Bowman reports his work in Delaware, where, in spite of hindrances, he hopes to be able to build a new church building during the year. Though the members are widely scattered, the building will likely be erected in or near Millsboro. He has also been continuing his preaching in Philadelphia, near the site of the old Second Brethren church. He and his good wife recently celebrated their fiftieth wedding anniversary, having home for that occasion eight of their nine living children, and twenty grandchildren. It was a happy occasion, greatly enjoyed by Brother and Sister Bowman, and we extend the greetings and good wishes of the Evangelist family to them on this completion of a half century of happy married life, most of which time Brother Bowman has given in service to the church.

We are always glad to get words of appreciation of the work being done by those faithful individuals who are conducting departments in our various publications, and we wish to say that all those who are maintaining departments in THE ANGELUS and THE EVANGELIST are doing it without pay. All they get for it is the joy that comes from faithful service, willingly and freely done. They therefore deserve the encouragement of an expression of appreciation now and then. And we are glad to have received a good word from a Philadelphia Endeavorer on behalf of the Christian Endeavor notes being written by Brother C. D. Whitmer. She says, addressing Brother Whitmer, "I gain a lot of pointers from your writings on C. E. Page" and says his notes "mean much to her personally and to her society." Any time a reader wishes to say a good word to some writer of our columns, he will find the Editor ready and willing to pass it on.

Dr. Charles A. Bame tells of the closing of his pastorate at Ashland, Ohio, where he has accomplished a splendid work during his six years of service. Under his leadership a new and beautiful church building has been erected and financed by the local people. Though there is a considerable debt yet on their hands, yet during these few years they have done remarkably well in cutting down the indebtedness. The church has been built up in numbers and in spirituality during Brother Bame's stay, and the city of Ashland has also benefited by his leadership in moral and spiritual affairs. Brother Bame will continue his home in Ashland and will go out from there in evangelistic work, for which he is so well fitted. We believe the brotherhood ought to keep him busy, as well as others who have signified their intention to engage in evangelism. This is a type of work that we need to stress more, for this is one of the most important keys to the larger future of our church. Rev. Dyoil Belote was installed as pastor of the Ashland church on October 6th, his good wife and his household goods arriving in Ashland during the week following.

It may be of interest to other towns represented in our brotherhood about to entertain or hoping to entertain conferences to know that on the occasion of the meeting of the Pennsylvania district conference at Meyersdale during the first week in October, the chamber of commerce had printed a card of welcome to be distributed among the delegates. On the reverse side of the card containing the message of welcome was printed a number of interesting facts designed to appeal to business men. As we read this, another related thought occurred to us: Why would it not be the part of wisdom for our churches located in centers of population to prepare printed matter, or encourage local organizations to prepare it, designed to interest people who are contemplating changing location in considering their city as a future home. Our people are continually moving, the same as people of other churches are moving, but there are so many places where we do not have churches. Why not encourage our people to move, when they do, into communities where we have churches? If some means were taken to acquaint them with the advantages of towns where churches are established, they might in many cases be influenced to move to a Brethren church rather than away from one.

PRAYER REQUESTS FOR THIS WEEK—

Pray for the evangelistic meeting now in progress at Winchester, Virginia, with Brother R. Paul Miller as evangelist and Brother E. J. Rohart as pastor.

Pray for the evangelistic campaign now in progress at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, under the leadership of Dr. Charles A. Bame and Brother G. T. Ronk.

The Problem of Evolution

By President Edwin E. Jacobs, Ph.D.

I have yielded to the persuasions of some of my former students, and others, to offer to the readers of the Evangelist, the gist of the outline of a series of lectures which I have been giving to some of my advanced students upon the above topic here at the College for the past five years or more. The outline as here given is the very briefest and covers what in the class-room would well call for a full semester's work, together with the assigned readings. I have omitted the arguments from the Bible standpoint entirely for I am dealing only with the scientific side of the subject.

Scope. Everyone familiar with the subject, of course, knows that the general doctrine of evolution covers three distinct fields and may be subdivided as follows; cosmic evolution, organic evolution, and social evolution.

Cosmic evolution. Here should follow the various theories, the chief of which are associated with the names of Lucretius, Aristotle, LaPlace, Kant, Buffon, Chamberlain Moulton, and others.

Social evolution. Herbert Spencer, who has been called the "father of the doctrine of evolution", (not the founder of the theory of evolution) and many others, may be consulted here. Extreme evolutionists include here the evolution of government, religion, domestic institutions, education, all forms of the family, economic institutions, ceremonial law, customs of birth, death, etc.

Organic evolution. This is called by various names, such as, biological evolution, the theory of descent, etc.

This outline will deal only with Organic evolution.

Theories of the Method of Organic evolution, include Natural and Sexual selection of Darwin; Use and Disuse of Lamarck; Mutation of Devries; Chemical "action, reaction, and interaction", of Henry Fairfield Osborn; Adapted Creation theories of Dawson and others; Theories of "crossing over", etc., of Chromosomes, lethal factors, etc.; Struggle and Survival power of Spencer; and many others.

Common Arguments favoring Evolution. I shall content myself here with a bare enumeration.

1. The argument from Paleontology, or the geological argument.

2. The argument from Geographical distribution of life forms.

3. The argument from Comparative Anatomy.

4. The argument from Embryology, i. e., "ontogeny recapitulates phylogeny."

5. The argument from the so-called blood tests.

6. The argument from the origin of new species within the memory and under the hand of man. Lamarck's Wild Evening Primrose is a case in point. (Much disputed)

Arguments against Evolution. Here I shall elaborate briefly.

1. The theory of evolution, as ordinarily put forth and elaborated, lacks teleology, telic control, aim, end, and purpose. It would seem to stagger all human ingenuity to conceive that this whole cosmos could constantly come forward without some controlling and guiding force. And let it be remembered that there can be no effect in nature without a related and SUFFICIENT cause. This force may be called the vital elan, creative evolution of Henri Bergson, or the principle of integration of Spencer, yet all these are only empty words. It must be clearly borne in mind that an expression in rhetoric does not serve to explain a fact in science.

2. We speak of natural law. How there could be law without personality, seems hard to understand.

3. How does the inorganic become the organic, or to put it in other words, how did matter come to possess potentialities? Evolution at its best does not offer a satisfying answer.

4. Superior position in point of place and time, does not NECESSARILY imply causal relationships. The fact that one event happened before another, does not prove, or even imply with any certainty, that the former event was causal to the latter. Here is where the word "hypothetical" may well be applied to the Geological argument. The fact that one horizon of fossils occurs beneath a certain other horizon, is far from PROVING that the former was related and sufficient cause of the latter.

We speak of the evolution of the type-writer, but is anyone so stupid as to believe that the old calligraph invented, brought together, and assembled, the more advanced machines? Certainly no one would be so foolish as that when speaking of the evolution of the type-writer. So also with all other inventions, as the radio, etc. That there was an evolution of these inventions, no one can deny, but the evolution was in the mind of the makers and these conceptions only showed in the creations which from time to time appeared. So reasoning from purely human progress, it would seem that the theory that fossils hold a causal relationship to those above, is far from proven.

5. The biogenetic law, that ontogeny recapitulates phylogeny, needs restating. It would seem as if, at best, it should be said that ontogeny is a very imperfect and abbreviated recapitulation of phylogeny. There are many gaps in this argument.

6. There is no force or set of forces known to man, which are capable of bringing about all the intricate changes necessary to produce all the millions of species of plants and animals now living, to say nothing about those extinct forms of a remote past. Here we rely upon environment, chance variations, hybridization, survival power, etc., as the most likely and yet they do not seem of themselves to supply the means necessary for the above noted changes.

7. All the organic changes within the memory or

MY FATHER'S WORLD

*This is my Father's world;
I rest me in the thought
Of rocks, and trees, of skies and seas—
His hand the wonders wrought.*

*This is my Father's world.
From the shining courts above
The beloved One, his Only Son Came—a pledge of deathless love.*

*This is my Father's world.
Now closer to heaven bound,
For dear to God is the earth Christ trod,
No place but is holy ground.*

*This is my Fathers' world.
Should my heart be ever sad?
The Lord is King—let the heavens ring, under the hand of man, have been within exceedingly narrow biological limits. They do not of themselves seem sufficient upon which to base a valid argument.
God reigns—let the earth be glad.*

8. Similarity of structure does not NECESSARILY PROVE identity of origin. This is to be set opposite the so-called comparative anatomy and bloodtest argument.

9. The problem of the beginning of life. It is urged that this is not a point which organic evolution must face, as it only begins with life after it is once here, but this does not seem to satisfy. One's mind is left uneasy, and the whole question is left hanging in the air, if one treats this problem thus. I do not see how one can answer a question by the method of avoiding it, as avoiding is not answering. The various theories of the origin of life leave one with a feeling of uncertainty and disquietude, as the following will show; the theory of Crystals, by Oswald; Foams by Quincke; Life from interstellar space, by Richter, Lord Kelvin, and others; the KCY molecule, by Pfluger; Spontaneous generation, by Haeckel and others; Biogens, by Verworn; Plasomes, by Weisner; and so on. None of these satisfactorily explains how life originated on this planet. They have some value as mechanics of thinking, but they do not explain.

It is sometimes said that a bit of intimate matter began to show signs of life, viz., slime. But let it be remembered that there is a greater gap between the amoeba, which is generally taken as the simplest living animal cell, and the speck of mud by its side, than there is between the amoeba and man, for one is alive and the other is not alive. I am confident that no one knows just what he means when he says that something is alive, but still with our profundity of ignorance, and it is colossal, we may safely affirm that there is an unbridgable gap between the bit of mud and the living amoeba.

10. In the case of man, at least, there is nothing in his supposed ancestry which would sufficiently account for his rather (a) sudden appearance or for (b) his mind. I am wholly aware of the more than 160 finds of human remains, so-called, and yet with them all, there does not seem to be sufficient evidence to warrant the conclusion that he definitely had animal ancestry. From the standpoint of science alone, his origin is not clear and is much disputed. He seems like "a bolt from the blue."

11. There are, therefore, from the standpoint of science, four great gaps, viz., the origin of matter, the origin of life, the origin of man, and the origin of the soul.

Conclusion. Leaving the Biblical argument out of the question, (I recognize its validity, but I am not dealing with it here) it would seem as if the whole evolutionary scheme is only a theory, and that at present, there is not sufficient evidence to make it conclusive, while on the other hand, there are many problems which it leaves totally unsolved. This, then, throws us back upon a theistic interpretation of the world and of life, all of which must be dominated and controlled by forces other than what we commonly call natural and impersonal.

Ashland, Ohio.

The joy of friendship is much more in being a friend to another than in having a true friend. It is in the spiritual realm that giving becomes more blessed than receiving in its richest measure. Friendship is usually one-sided. Jonathan seems to give much more love than David does, but Jonathan is the happier and gets more out of the friendship than David can. Jesus wants us to be friends to him that we may also have this more heavenly joy. He is that kind of a Friend and how sadly one-sided his friendship love has been in most cases!--Selected.

Things By the Way. XXII

By A. D. Gnagey

The Worst Thing and the Best Things

Some one said to a wicked man: "You do not look as if you had prospered by your wickedness," to which he replied, "I have not. I have met with all manner of misfortunes. I have twice been in State prisons; but I tell you, my worst punishment is in being what I am." That is a very profound truth stated in a very simple way. The worst thing about the sinful life is that the sinner must live with himself. Sin is its own punishment. Judas hung himself and "went to his own place,"—the place he had prepared for himself. On the other hand, the greatest reward of goodness is not an angel's harp or a crown, or to walk the golden streets, but to be like an angel, to have the heavenly character. Just as truly as a Judas slips into his own place, so surely does a heavenly, angelic character find its own place. Hence the worst thing about wickedness is a wicked character, while the best thing about blessedness is a heavenly character. The one makes hell what it is, the other makes heaven what it is. The attraction of heaven is a blessed life.

Fishers of Men

There are four essential qualifications for becoming a successful fisher of men: The first qualification is faith in Christ and a conviction of the necessity of saving the erring. The second qualification is a strong desire to fish—an eagerness to save men. The writer knows men who are experts as fishermen, they can catch fish, literally. But they are far from experts as fishers of men. The third qualification is a willingness to learn from Jesus how to fish for them. A fourth qualification is common sense and tact. The place to fish is where the fish are plentiful. Jesus told them where that place was and obedience to his word on the part of the disciples brought a large draught of fishes. Obedience to the Master always spells success.

A Cigarette or a Song

A writer in the Homiletic Review says: I overheard the following conversation between a printer and a customer. The man was overlooking a proof and while thus busily engaged was humming, "When I survey the wondrous cross." The printer lighted a cigarette and said, "Does it make you happy to find our mistakes?" "No," the man said, "what makes you think so?" "Well," said the printer, "I see nothing to sing about on a gloomy day like this. I have already started my second box of cigarettes." "That's just the difference," said the man, "Your habit is smoking and mine is singing. On days like this I cheer my way with a song while you cheer yours with a cigarette. It's the difference between a tonic and a stimulant. You take a sedative while I take a song." Next to the liquor business, the cigarette is the greatest menace to the human race. Both serve as a narcotic to the will. The persistent smoker of the cigarette has lessened his efficiency in every activity of life to a far greater degree than he is willing to acknowledge. The bootlegger is responsible for a goodly number of automobile accidents; so is the persistent cigarette smoker; the public believes the former but not the latter. Both statements are true.

Living a Skimped Religion

Dr. Louis Albert Banks tells us of a Christian he once knew who seemed to have a very meager religious life while strictly moral. Meeting him several years later Dr. Banks says: "I was amazed and delighted at the change in my former acquaintance. He was not only a much older man, but evidently much happier, and his greatest happiness was in the very things which had not seemed to interest him when I had first known him. I remarked to him on the change. I have never forgotten his reply": "Oh, I did not know what religion was then. I lived a sort of skimped and half-starved religion, but I have found the better way. My religion is no longer a side-show to my life. It is the main thing. I fairly swim in it, day and night, and I am infinitely happier." That is the experience of all who have made a fair test of the religion of Jesus. Most of it is "a sort of skimped and half-starved religion." What is yours? A little religion makes one miserable; an abundance of it fills life with an unspeakable happiness. When this man took his religion seriously, he found the life more abundant.

Food and Faith

Church suppers often are ridiculed and condemned, and some of them justly so; they deserve to be condemned. Yet a common meal may be of great value. Very meager would be the home life and spirit of the family where each one ate by himself. Eating together had an important place in the early Christian church,—even though it was abused by the Corinthians,—and in many churches today should be more prominent. It is significant that the most distinctive and conspicuous Christian sacrament takes the form of eating and drinking together. Food often is the guide that leads from faith to fellowship. This thought furnishes the one and only basis for the Brethren so-called full meal preceding the sacrament of bread and wine. And even in this we are losing out, for we no longer follow the apostolic example, that of making it a fellowship supper. The meal has been reduced to the minimum, and as for the fellowship,—is there any? We sit quietly, eating our bit as if we were the only one at the Lord's table. What becomes of the Christian fellowship for which the meal stands or symbolizes? Why should there not be carried on, softly, of course, conversation during the meal period, between neighbor and neighbor, telling of the delights of Christian experience, and the blessedness of the life everlasting which is ours, not only in anticipation but in reality, here and now? Let us think on these things.

The Upper Room

By Albert Lantz

Text: And he shall show you a large upper room furnished: there make ready. Luke 22:12.

Scripture Lesson: Luke 22:1-27

This is a timely subject. It is worthy of our consideration. The time you and I spend in the UPPER ROOM with our Lord and Savior is time well spent.

In the city of Jerusalem, there was furnished an upper room for the greatest banquet ever held in the history of the world. At this banquet Jesus was present and instituted the Christian Sacrament at the Passover table. This three fold service should be given its rightful place in the church, and we, God's children, should DEEM it more than a privilege to gather around the table of our Lord and in so doing, signify that we have become part-takers of his divine nature.

To me there is no service in the church fragrant with more holy memories than that in which we gather around the table of our Lord to fulfill the upper room teachings of Jesus.

It has been said "There is a beautiful home in which there is a room that has not been occupied for years. It was the room of an only child, the joy of her parents.

One day she was taken from them, and, as there was no one else to occupy that room they have left it just as it was when she was there. Her chair is before the grate, and her books are in the shelves. Her pictures are on the walls, and her treasures are scattered here and there as they were twenty years ago when she went out to return no more. In many of our homes there are hallowed spots endeared to us by memories too deep for tears.

Time will not permit us to enlarge upon the important events that occurred in the upper room in the city of Jerusalem, but I wish to present them for your consideration and meditation.

1. It was in the UPPER ROOM Jesus instituted the three fold service, "The Christian Sacrament" at the Passover table, namely, the washing of the Saints' feet, the supper, or Love-feast, and the Holy Communion.

2. It was there Jesus washed the disciples' feet.

3. It was there that he said to Peter, "If I wash thee not, thou hast no part with me."

4. It was there that he said to the disciples "Know ye what I have done to you?"

5. It was there that he said unto them, "Ye call me Master and Lord and ye say well: for so am I. If I then your Lord and master have washed your feet, ye ought also to wash one another's feet."

6. It was there that he said unto them, "I have given you an EXAMPLE, that YE should do as I have done to you."

7. It was there that he said unto them, "If ye know these things, HAPPY are YE if YE do them."

We dare not deny these New Testament truths. THEY ARE THE UPPER ROOM TEACHINGS OF JESUS, and we must accept them as VALID, or else cast aside the fundamental principles and teachings of the Bible and of the Brethren church, Which will it be?

8. It was in the upper room that he offered his last intercessory prayer in behalf of the disciples. (John 17).

9. It is well for us to observe that in his intercessory prayer he shut the world out, and prayed especially for his disciples (John 17:9).

10. It is well for us to notice too that Jesus testified in behalf of the disciples as well as prayed for them.

"They have kept thy word" (vs. 6). "They are thine" (vs. 9). "I am glorified in them" (Vs. 10). "They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world" (Vs. 16). Can Jesus bear henceforth such a testimony in our behalf?

11. It was there also that the apostles gathered after the crucifixion, and there the Holy Spirit came on the day of Pentecost.

The Upper Room is a Room of Gospel Story as well as a Room of Important Events

It happened that on their way to the upper room the disciples had been quarreling as to which was the greatest. Undoubtedly when they reached the upper room they were resentful with one another, and perhaps took their places at the Passover table like a lot of sullen school boys. Then came the embarrassing moment. The washing of the feet without which the feast could not proceed. Why? At an eastern feast the washing of the feet of the guests was an important part of the ceremony. In the homes of the wealthy this menial service was performed by a slave. Among the poorer classes it was performed by the men themselves. Taking each his turn. On this occasion there was not one of them who would offer to do it. No doubt Jesus waited a moment—just like he has to wait on us. Then, QUIETLY, he laid aside his garments, took a towel and girded himself. After that he poureth water into a basin, and, going from one to another, he undoubtedly unbound their sandals, and began to wash the disciples' feet, and to wipe them with the towel wherewith he was girded (John 13:2-5), while the disciples looked on in shame and wonder (vs. 6-10). This designates to us the OMNISCIENCE of the Savior; and also the unwillingness on our part to do what he asks us to do.

John says that Jesus (verse 3), knowing that the Father had given all things into his hands, and that he was come from God and went to God, he took a towel and girded himself, designating that Jesus knew that he had all power (HE WAS CONSCIOUS OF THAT POWER). He therefore scorned to notice the petty distinctions the disciples made so much of, but he does not overlook the SINS INDULGED IN; HE REVEALS THEM—AND WE ARE CONSCIOUS OF THEM. Judas was there, for we read that after he (Judas) had received the sop, he immediately went out, and it was night (John 13:30).

After Judas had departed Jesus proceeded with the supper, saying as he gave to them the bread, "THIS IS MY BODY WHICH IS BROKEN FOR YOU. Likewise also the cup after supper saying, THIS CUP IS THE NEW TESTAMENT (or covenant) IN MY BLOOD, WHICH IS SHED FOR YOU; this do in remembrance of me" (Luke 22:19-20). We do no violence when we say that a covenant is a promise. This covenant is a double promise. The bread they had broken with him was his promise, and theirs, (and is ours) that they would be faithful till they met again. The fruit of the vine he gave them was HIS PLEDGE that THEIR sins should be forgiven and blotted out as though they had never been.

In closing may I say: We look out into the world and we see great cathedrals erected to his memory. They interest us, but they leave us cold. Then we come and see the bread he broke and the cup he drank, and the heart grows tender, and we know why he said, "DO THIS IN REMEMBRANCE OF ME." But what of them who are not doing this in remembrance of him? It requires a public confession and profession to come to the Lord's tables, AND MANY ARE NOT COMING. They say, "I can be as good a CHRISTIAN without it." CAN THEY?

If your father were to die leaving you one last request, could you disregard that request and look him in the face when you should meet him again, and say that you were just as good a son or daughter as if you had kept his request?

The call has gone forth. Have we met him in the upper room so that we can grant to him his last request?

Our hearts should be prepared and filled with JOY overflowing, knowing that in a few hours we will be permitted to sit at HIS TABLE and fulfil his last request, "This do in remembrance of me."

Berlin, Pennsylvania.

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

NEGRO MAYORS

Sixty-nine towns in the United States are reported as having Negro mayors with all elective municipal offices filled by Negroes. The distributions of these municipalities is interesting: Alabama has six; Arkansas, three; California, four; Florida, two; Georgia, six; Illinois, two; Iowa, one; Kansas, one; Kentucky, one; Maryland, two; Michigan, two; Mississippi, three; New Jersey, three; New Mexico, one; North Carolina, one; Tennessee, two; Texas, six; Virginia, five; and West Virginia, one.—The Baptist.

THEN IT MUST PROCEED TO IMPROVE THE MECHANISM

Bishop Fiske complains in Harpers that in the present order of civilization Christianity not only is not Christian or trying to be Christian, but that it is so constituted as to have no mechanism for the practise of Christianity. The idea is that under the present order of society it would be impossible to carry on a Christian business or Christian politics. Such an indictment is no new discovery, but there is an advantage in repeating it occasionally in terms as bald as the reality. Remember, however, that Christianity was planted in an un-Christian world and designed to work in such a world. It is a creative force operating in a chaos, a message of truth in a world of falsehood, the voice of God in a godless society. Witnessing is the primary function of the gospel and the church is a sufficient mechanism for that. The vital question is whether the church is telling people the truth about social ethics. If so, its duty is done. If not, regenerate the church itself or start a new one.—The Baptist.

THE MAN WHO MADE THE YOUTH'S COMPANION

The world is not entirely "gone to the dogs" as long as newspaper writers can still be sentimental over the passing of the old "Youth's Companion," or rather its absorption by or merging with the "American Boy." We were much interested in what was said in the press last summer about that century-old magazine so beloved by us when we were growing up and later.

Originally it was a Sunday school periodical, but in 1857 it was sold to Daniel Sharp Ford and branched out into a more popular field. Ford was a poor man when he bought it, and he bought it for a song, and not only a poor man, but a business failure as we recall his story. But he was a devoted Christian man, and when he started his new enterprise, he dedicated it to God and pledged an ascending scale of all his profits to his service. He kept his word, and he found God faithful. When he died in 1889, he left the magazine to the Baptist church with a provision that a group of its departmental heads be given the right to buy it for $1,000,000.

Ford's name might well have been added to those mentioned in the sermon in our September issue, entitled, "A Plea for Church Benevolences," for in Boston where he lived he was an outstanding witness to the truth of the divine promise, "He that soweth bountifully (with blessings) shall reap also bountifully (with blessings)" (2 Cor. 9:6).

We often preached in the Ruggles Street Baptist church of which Mr. Ford was a member and which he chiefly sustained by his munificence. We can testify to his fidelity to the gospel and the emphasis he laid upon evangelism while also seeking in other ways to relieve the social and physical ills of his fellowmen. He was a good man, who out of the good treasure of his heart brought forth good things (Matt. 12:35), and we are glad of this opportunity and occasion to lay a flower of grateful recollection on the grave where his body lies awaiting a happy resurrection.—Editor of Moody Monthly.

REFORMED CHURCH RECORDS STEADY GAIN

The statistics of the Reformed Church in America (often called Dutch Reformed), which have lately been issued, show that there has been a continuous advance throughout the last quarter of a century. In 1900, the communicant membership of the denomination stood at 109,899. In 1929, the figure was 159,662. During the same period, the Sunday school membership has gained 17,000, so that the present enrollment is 141,629. The total contributions to denominational benevolences are now $1,300,000, in round numbers, and the local congregational expenses are somewhat in excess of four million dollars.

KAGAWA HONORED BY JAPANESE GOVERNMENT

Toyohiko Kagawa, the outstanding Christian of Japan, if not of the whole continent of Asia, has lately been appointed Honorary Advisor to the Social Bureau of the Government of Tokio. A few years ago, Kagawa was being viewed with grave suspicion by the Japanese Government because of his views on social questions, but now he is considered one of the bulwarks of the Empire against communism.

Often described as the modern St. Francis, Kagawa is known in Christian circles throughout the world for his sacrificial labors in behalf of the poorest classes of Japan. He has been the leader in the development both of the labor movement in Japan and also of the peasants' unions, as well as in the organizing of social settlements.

Combined with this great interest in social welfare is an intense passion for evangelism. At the present time, Kagawa is leading the "One Million Souls" movement, a remarkable effort to build up the Church of Christ in Japan.

SCOTCH PRESBYTERIANS GET TOGETHER

October 3, 1929, will stand as an historic date in the history of the Presbyterian Church of Scotland. That day marks the consummation of the reunion of the Church of Scotland and the United Free Church. The main division in Scotch Presbyterianism took place in 1843 and was precipitated by a conflict over the relation of Church and State. The changes which have since been made in the constitution of the Church of Scotland make it free from state interference, so that the occasion for the disruption no longer exists. It is understood that a very small group in the United Free Church still declines to get into the union.

The representation of the United Presbyterian Church of America at the impressive reunion service was Dr. John McNaughton, the Moderator of the General Assembly of that body. The representatives of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A. were Dr. Henry Sloane Coffin, of the Union Theological Seminary, and Dr. John H. Finley, Associate Editor of the New York Times.

SOUTHERN BAPTIST SURVEY

There has been given out recently a survey of the religious situation in the South from the viewpoint of the Southern Baptist Convention. It is reported that there are 6,635,811 Baptists in the South. All other denominations in the same area number 10,546,581, which gives the Baptists an overwhelming majority. The survey further reveals that in the area covered there are 22,667-726 persons who are members of no church. This means that the churchmen of the South are vastly outnumbered by those having no church affiliation. It is a vast task for the church, and the Baptists are desiring that their people shall feel a proportionate responsibility for it. A similar situation, no doubt, exists in other parts of the country, and is presenting a problem about which we should concern ourselves more. The ministry might do more than it is doing, but it can never cope with the situation. It is finally a task for every layman and should challenge each one of us to our best efforts.—The Herald of Gospel Liberty.

MONDAY

John 6:22-27. Seeking Jesus.—These people wanted to see Jesus, and were willing to sacrifice their time and physical comfort in order to do so. Yet when they found him, our Lord—who seeth all—told them they had sought him from unworthy motives: "for what they could get out of it." It is so easy, even today, to lose sight of the real reason for seeking Jesus, that we do well to pause occasionally for real heart searching. "Search me, O God, and know my heart: try me, and know my thoughts; And see if there be any wicked way in me, and lead me in the way everlasting." Psalm 139:23, 24.

TUESDAY

John 6:28, 29; James 2:14-26. Work—Believe.—"This is the work of God, that ye believe on him whom he hath sent." Jesus knew that a man cannot believe without doing. The practical world insistently claims that the Christian is impractical because he places the primary emphasis upon belief; but Christians know, with James, that faith without works is dead. Father, increase our faith in thee, and may we show our faith by our works, doing each day the work of God.

WEDNESDAY

John 6:30-35. Starving.—These people were expecting bread from heaven, and earnestly desired it; they were spiritually hungry. Yet here when they were offered the bread of life they refused to eat! In this we see one of the greatest tragedies of life: so many good people in the world today are hungering and thirsting for the things that he alone can give; yet when he offers to satisfy their hunger and thirst, they refuse to accept. O God, we pray that eyes may be opened everywhere, that men may find in thee the Bread of Life for which they have been starving!

THURSDAY

John 6:36-40. The Father's Will.—To the believer this must ever be one of the most precious and comforting passages, and we cannot help but reverence a God who makes such loving promises to his people. There are those who see in verse 39 a promise of the restitution of all things, that nothing of all God's vast creation shall ever be lost. Whether this be true or not, we may KNOW that we are his, and that we cannot be lost, but that he will raise us up again at the last day.

FRIDAY

John 6:41-51. Live Forever!—When Daniel went before the king, he cried: "Live forever, O King!" Scientists and doctors have done much in our day to prolong the average span of human life, and some have dreams of being able, eventually, to prolong human life indefinitely. We know that all such foolish dreams must perish, but we also know that "If any man eat of this bread, he shall live forever." Praise his name!

SATURDAY

John 6:52-58. How?—Jesus had just promised the people everlasting life through his atonement in offering his flesh for the life of the world. "How?" asked the Jews, and refused to accept until they knew how. There are still many who refuse to accept and believe because they do not see HOW Christ can offer his flesh for the life of the world. Thank God that even though we do not know HOW, we still know that his promise is TRUE!

SUNDAY

John 6:59-71. To Whom?—Discouraged at the difficulties of following Jesus, many turned away. But Peter, by his answer to Jesus, implied that there was nowhere else to go. God's Spirit must have spoken to Peter then, for there IS no one else to whom we may turn, that has the words of eternal life. The solemn responsibility of knowing that! Dare we fail to proclaim it to those who know it not? May we ever be faithful stewards of the gospel, and may many be turned unto thee this day. Amen!—T. C. L.

The Junior Department

By Hazel A. Lewis

Ages 9, 10, 11 (12 optional)

ORGANIZATION—The Junior Department is properly organized when the pupils are in their right places, when the officers and teachers understand their duties, and when all are working together in a true spirit of cooperation to accomplish worthy aims. Stated briefly these aims are: an interest in the Bible and knowledge of it, an appreciation of the fact that it is God's Word, resulting in right attitudes and conduct, in the intelligent worship of God, and the acceptance of Christ as a personal Savior. Organization built around any other ideals would be unworthy of a place in a school conducted by a Christian church.

The Junior Department may consist of any number of persons, from one class of pupils and their teacher in a small school, to a large number of classes and a complete corps of workers, superintendent, assistants, secretary, pianist, teachers, and special officers. Whenever there are more than two Junior classes there should be a department superintendent and such other officers as are necessary.

It must be remembered that the teachers and officers are to work with the pupils and not for them. Methods in the class or department that do not include the active cooperation of the boys and girls will accomplish little.

Let us think of the organization of a Junior Department in three ways: First, the organization of the workers; second, of the pupils; and, third, of the department in operation.

The Junior superintendent should direct the session on Sunday, conduct frequent conferences of teachers and officers for discussion and study, weld the work of the different grades into a constructive whole, confer with individual teachers about their work, be on the lookout for potential teachers, and be responsible to the general superintendent of the school, making at least a monthly report. When the school is large enough, the teachers should specialize in one grade, sending their pupils on each year. In small schools teachers may be obliged to teach two years' lessons.

The pupils should be grouped in classes numbering eight or less and because of the shortness of the class period and their natural division of interest, the boys and girls should be in separate classes. As the desire for class organization becomes evident, it should be directed along lines of simplicity and effectiveness. The pupils should never get the idea that officers and committees are ends in themselves. Class names, verses or psalms, songs, etc., may be chosen by the pupils. An excellent plan is that of allowing the pupil having the highest grade each quarter to become the president of his class for the following quarter. If two or more have the same grade, the neatness of handwriting or the quality of extra honor work may decide the matter. On a similar basis of merit or by appointment, a department president may be chosen from among the pupils.

In the Sunday session of the Junior Department there should be a twenty minute program of worship and fellowship, planned with the interests, needs and vocabulary of the pupils in mind. Hymns, Scripture, special missionary and temperance instruction, Bible drills, recognition of birthdays and new pupils may be included in a carefully prepared program. The department president, or class presidents, may assist in conducting the program, making reports, announcements, taking the offering, etc.

There should be a thirty-five minute lesson period and five minutes for a closing period or for changing to the church service.

The credits and grades of the pupils may be marked in the class under the direction of the teacher or by the department secretary, as the pupils come in. A credit card should be used for this, and sent home at the end of the quarter, a copy of the totals being kept by the department superintendent.

The activities of the department may extend into week-day meetings conducted under the same supervision as the Sunday session, the teachers and mothers assisting. The additional meetings offer an opportunity for missionary and community work. They should consist of directed expressional work rather than instruction. Stories would be a delightful feature of such week-day meetings.

Promotion from grade to grade should take place within the department the first Sunday in October, promotion cards being given the pupils who have reached a certain average or attained some other established standard. The pupils graduating from the department should take part in a public promotion service with the other departments of the school. Certificates should be given these graduates. Honor seals should be placed upon both cards and certificates according to the grade or standard reached by the pupil.

Above all, the spiritual climax that comes at the close of this department should be used. In many cases the pupil's decision for Christ will come at the time of promotion from the Junior Department, if it has not been reached before.

Read 2 Timothy 3:14-17 and you will be deeply impressed by the importance of this department. These words are the last memory verses of the Junior course.

EQUIPMENT

The program of worship and fellowship, to which at least twenty minutes should be devoted, each Sunday morning, affords the opportunity for teaching Junior boys and girls to worship. The hymns which we ask the Juniors to memorize should be the best, as thus a taste for good music is cultivated.

JUNIOR HYMNS AND SONGS—Edited and compiled by Elizabeth McE. Shields is in every way an adequate hymnal for the Junior Department. The great hymns of the church and other music needed in building the department program of worship and instruction, are provided in this book. There are nineteen programs in the back of the book, general themes suited to the understanding and appreciation of Juniors. This hymnal in the Bethany Edition may be secured from the publishers of this Manual for 65 cents, postpaid, per single copy, $50 a hundred, not prepaid.

Junior Church School Hymnal by Florence E. Norton and a committee is another excellent book for use in the Junior Department. It offers a wide range of suitable hymns and songs, together with instrumental music and orders of service. The Teacher's Edition is $1.25; Pupil's Edition 90 cents.

Junior Hymns and Carols by Leyda, is a collection of very fine worship selections, including prayer songs, prayer responses, praise songs, offering songs and selected psalms, most of which may be easily learned by the use of the blackboard. Price, 50 cents.

This Junior Pupil's Credit Card is arranged specifically for the Junior pupil. Junior workers everywhere agree that the pupils in this department should be graded on these seven points. The scale of credits should be arranged by the superintendent and teachers and may be changed from time to time for the purpose of emphasizing such points as need to be stressed. A suggestive scale is as follows: Present 25%, on time 15%, Bible 10%, offering 10%, church attendance 10%, home work 25%, and memory text 5%. By the use of a pin, the pupil may punch his own card at the direction of the teacher. The Sundays in the quarter are numbered and there are no extra squares. At the end of the quarter the totals should be copied in the Superintendent's Permanent Record and the card should be sent to the parents as a report card.

The Junior Superintendent's Permanent Record is an individual record for the pupil's quarterly credits for the entire time he is in the Junior Department. The information at the top of the card is copied from the enrollment card and is such as the superintendent should have at his or her disposal. This blank is punched to fit the loose-leaf cover No. 33 so commonly used in schools of methods.

The ideal arrangement of space for a Junior Department is an assembly room with adjoining classrooms. If this is not possible, an assembly room which can be divided into classrooms is a good arrangement. If neither of these plans can be followed, an assembly room at least should be provided. In buildings where no separate assembly can be arranged a section of the general assembly room should be set aside for the Junior Department and so designated. If it can be separated from the rest of the room by curtains or screens, it will be possible to conduct a department program with all of the features except separate music.

The department should have identity in order to emphasize the idea of progression from grade to grade and from one department to another.

The equipment of this room or rooms will be considered under two heads: first, that for the department; and, second, for the classes.

Editor's Select Notes on the Sunday School Lesson

(Lesson for October 20)

Useful Work a Christian Duty

Scripture Lesson—Gen. 2:15; Ex. 20:9; Neh. 6:3; John 5:17; 9:4; Acts 20:33-35; 2 Thess. 3:6-12; Eph. 4:28.

Devotional Reading—Psalm 81:9.

Golden Text—If any man will not work, neither let him eat. 2 Thess. 3:10.

Introductory Note

Happy are those who find congenial work, for the very act of work gives a satisfaction at once profound and pure,—safe from remorse or regret. But vast numbers of people, perhaps the majority, never find congenial work. They regard all work as a necessary evil, as an immediate nuisance, and as merely a means to an end. And generally the end is modest enough, for they are not always successful in their work.—Bennett. Few persons look with reverence on their work. Many do not even look on it with respect. Not a few despise the calling or profession upon which they have entered. Others consider the work they are doing merely as a means of support. But work is sacred, not only because God has ordained it as a means of supporting life, but also because he is in the work and is bringing out of it grand results. God is a worker. He is now working together with every toiler. "We are workers together with God." 2 Co. 6:1.—Sel. However, any kind of work done without prayer is work done without God. Spiritual work that is not steeped in prayer has no business to be done. Indeed, it is falsehood to call it spiritual; the power of God does not beat at the heart of it, only the impotence of man. It is as we pray that power from on high is poured into our lives wherewith to do the work of God upon the lives of men.—Mursell.

God a Worker

"My Father worketh hitherto, and I work," John 5:17.

The thing that should impress us most is, that God is at work, and that the laborer must be larger than his task and the job worthy of the man. The world's notion of work has been revolutionized. The old Greek idea was that work was ignoble, to be done by everyday folks who didn't amount to much anyhow. Their notion of the gods was that of a group sitting at leisure with somebody fanning them.

I call you to witness that if work is noble, Christ made it so. He is the great God of working men. Not Caesar, nor Homer, nor Plato, nor Socrates put in the festal days of honest labor, but Christ.—Bishop W. A. Quayle.

The Blessing of Work

Activity, well-directed and constant activity, is one of the unending springs of health, and happiness, and peace.

Hard work at any honorable task is a glorious remedy for worry. The mind in pursuit of a worth-while result ceases to pursue the will-o-the-wisps or to run panic-stricken from hobgoblins. The back that is carrying any worth-while burden has no room for an old man of the sea. If at the end of the day you can survey any sound achievement, whether it be a cornfield ploughed, or a dress made, or a fence built, or some loaves of bread baked, or a beautiful poem written, or a beautiful picture painted, you cannot look upon that sight with clouded eyes and a heavy heart.

If you would not let your heart be troubled, do not let your hands be idle. The mischief that Satan finds for idle hands is very often the setting up of men of straw to worry over.—Caleb Cobweb.

Work or Starve

"If any will not work, neither let him eat."—2 Thess. 3:10.

"Work or starve" is nature's motto,—and it is written not only in the Bible but on the stars and the sod alike,—starve mentally, starve morally, starve physically. It is an inexorable law of nature that whatever is not used, dies. "Nothing for nothing," is her maxim. If we are idle and shiftless by choice, we shall be nerveless and powerless by necessity. The German proverb, "If I rest, I rust," applies to people as well as to the key. If water stands still it stagnates. If the tree ceases to grow, it dies. If the lungs cease to breathe, the breath of life goes out. If the heart ceases to throb, we die. Another has said, "What is true living but loving? And what is loving but growth into the likeness of God. Work is the mission of mankind on this earth."

Laborer Worthy of His Hire

Paul was a learned Jewish rabbi, but he had learned the trade of a tentmaker and plied his trade in the cities where he went to do missionary work, and tent-making, was, they say, very poorly paid. A Jewish saying was that "he who taught not his son a trade, taught him to be a thief." Many are feeling this to be true today; that they who simply inherit riches, or receive the profit from investments, without laboring themselves to earn their bread, are merely stealing from the real workers. The danger is, however, that the necessary work of the head is forgotten or ignored in the advocacy of the rights of the hand.

Paul himself claims the right to receive reward for his work of preaching. It was merely a question of how he could obtain the greatest influence for good. If these people, just come out of heathenism, where each of the priests was so far as he could be so a grasper after wealth, thought the preacher of Christ was another such, the cause of Christ would suffer. The missionary of today is not supported by his heathen neighbors, or even by his converts.

Whatever our attitude in this connection, we must be sure not to judge for others. If we are willing and able to give our time to Christian work, without remuneration, let us be sure not to misjudge the paid Christian worker. The Christian minister is most "worthy of his hire" in larger measure than now in many cases. On the other hand, no Christian worker ought to demand more than a comfortable living, a living which will provide not only the necessities of existence, but also food for the mind,—Books, lectures, concerts,—and the removal of fear for a needy old age. Clergymen should be enabled to educate their children without, as often now, depriving themselves and the rest of the family of necessities in order to do so.—Illustrated Quarterly.

Plans for Junior Committees

Read the Gospels

(For Quiet Hour Committees)

One of the aims of the Quiet Hour committee is to get the Juniors to read the Gospel story. The various Bible societies sell at a low price single copies of the Gospel of John, the Gospel of Matthew, and so on, and a good plan for the committee to follow is to give one of these Gospels to each member of the society. Then have the whole society read one chapter of the Gospel each week, and have the superintendent conduct each Sunday a five-minute quiz on the contents of the chapter read the week before.

A Trip around the City

(For Lookout Committees)

The society should be divided into two sides, or into more than two if it is a large society. Give to each side or group the name of a bus—for example, Royal Blue Line, Royal Red Line, Yellow-Peril Line, and so on. The idea is to have the various sides try to secure as many points as possible in a contest, one group with another. Give points for being present, for being on time, for bringing a non-member, for winning a new member, and so on. Give twenty points to the side or group that has every member present on any Sunday.

The prize may be a taffy-pull, given to the winning group.

The points count miles. Outline a route around the city, naming well-known places, before you start. Keep a chart, and pin on it pictures of buses, showing the position each week of each bus or group.

A Stormy Sea

(For Prayer Meeting Committees)

This is a contest plan. Points may be given to two sides for being present, for being on time, for bringing a non-member, for reading the Bible every day (this involves a weekly roll-call), for offering sentence prayers, for giving a short talk, for giving a recitation, and so on. The side that has the most points each week keeps its boat afloat on a stormy sea. The side that has fewer points each week has its boat capsized for that week. To help the interest a colored chart may be used, showing the sea with waves on it, and boats cut from pasteboard may be pinned on this chart. The contest may last for four or six weeks, and a supper may be given by the losers to the winners.

Gathering Missionary Items

(For Missionary Committees)

To each member of the missionary commitee a definite missionary country may be assigned, and the members of the committee should be asked to collect information and pictures dealing with the countries assigned to them.

This information and these pictures should be pasted into scrap-books, one scrap-book for each country. All the members of the committee, of course, will help all the other members. If one member finds an item of information about China, let him give it to the person who is collecting facts about China. Do the same with pictures.

Index the books. These may be used for missionary meetings dealing with the countries about which the books contain information. If this plan is kept up, in the course of a year or two a great deal of valuable information may be gathered.

A Shelf of Books

(For Good Literature Committees)

Establish a shelf of good books for the use of members of the society. This is easily said, and it is not so hard to do after all. The members of the society may be asked to secure books from members of the church. There are many homes that have books suitable for such a Junior bookshelf.

Then the Juniors themselves may take collections in the society for funds with which to buy books. Second, they may hold a book social, and the money that comes in may be used to buy books. One feature of the book social might be to write the names of different books on slips of paper, and pin these slips to the backs of the Juniors. The duty of each Junior will be to guess the name of the book pinned on his back. He will be able to do this because of remarks made to him by other Juniors.

Another thing the good literature committee might do would be to subscribe for a good magazine for children.

Birthday Social (For Social Committees)

No matter what kind of social you decide to hold in the society, it is possible to work in the birthday idea. If you have a social each month, and most societies have, then sometime in the course of the evening the members whose birthdays occur in that month should be honored in some way. The society birthday hymn may be sung. The members who have birthdays that month may be called to the front, and the superintendent may speak a few words in connection with their birthdays.—R. P. Anderson in Junior C. E. World.

tage of special types, like mass evangelism, religious retreats, and other more modern fruitful methods. God has given Cheng and Kagawa the vision, and the missionaries are getting behind them in these plans.

7. We should help in an unhurried and thorough evaluation of the mass movements. In India ninety percent of the present Protestant church membership are products of the mass movement. This mass movement has become so widespread that it is now influencing the castes. More than 10,000 of the upper castes have become Christians, and over 9,000 are in process of preparation. Some of the outstanding Christians and preachers of India today are converted outcasts.

8. Another important thing which we must do is to advance the solution of the Christian literature problem. The amount of available literature for the clergy and educated youth is inadequate and untimely in virtually every field. We should discover the ablest writers and secure their release for this kind of work. There is also the problem of getting literature distributed and used. We have allowed the initiative to be taken over from the Christians into the hands of the non-Christians in this matter of literature in India, China and Japan. This is alarming. I trace the cause to our divisions. There is enough brain and enough money among us to make a plan and enlist the cooperation of scholarship to meet this tremendous need. I am speaking of the great body of Christian literature that is needed. The bookstores in Japan are well stocked with non-Christian literature, and scarcely any Christian literature is in evidence. We have the leaders, but we must release them, and the work must be done interdenominationally, with co-ordinate thinking and planning.

9. The next concrete thing is to augment the leadership of the Christian forces. There is a desire and need for more missionaries, expressed by nationals as well as missionaries, in every country. I do not know of a national who in a large group or small one said that he did not want more missionaries. They said, "We must have missionaries of the highest possible preparation and qualification." It is of the greatest importance that they be those who have experienced the divine call. We must enormously augment the number of national youth who will give themselves unto death. We ought to let no second or third-class men through the lines as missionaries, even if we have to send much smaller numbers. The matter of their preparation should be studied from top to bottom. We ought to re-think this whole matter of preparation in the light of Jerusalem. I suppose it means a review of the curriculum of almost every theological seminary we have.

10. Again, we must liberate a vastly greater lay force. I sensed this on the Mount of Olives. Again in Asia. We must mobilize the strongest laymen in this country, making them aware of their unique responsibility. We have to be supplemented in our world mission by laymen to whom Congressmen will listen in the matter of treaties, etc. The missionaries alone are not enough.

11. We must have some way of illustrating the conception of Jerusalem that was summed up in the word "sharing"—sharing between the East and the West, between the older and younger churches, between different nationals, individuals of various schools of thought and of various

Dr. Mott's Twelve Points for the Mission Fields

Dr. John R. Mott is one of the foremost Christian statesmen of the world and as an expert in missionary experience, his counsel is sought and valued by missionary leaders of every denomination and read with interest by all who are intelligently concerned about the evangelization of the world.

Within a week after Dr. Mott's arrival in the United States, he met with a score or more of American missionary leaders and suggested the following twelve projects which to his mind should be of concern to every statesman:

1. That we continue the process of co-ordinating our thinking on the World Mission of Christianity as envisioned at Jerusalem with the thinking of the leading minds throughout Asia. There could be no more serious loss than for us to lose step with each other—we of the West and the leaders of the Christian forces in the East in this world mission. Coordination will not come about as a mere matter of magic, but only as discerning church leaders familiarize themselves with what trusted missionaries and nationals are yearning over as a result of Jerusalem. If they are right and we wrong in some cases it is important that we know it.

2. That we press the advantage that has come to us with the sounding out of the Christian message at Jerusalem. This message was a work of God, a divine deliverance. It explains our unanimity, despite our differences. This message seems to have given a new sense of direction to Christian leaders in every land. We ought to multiply the number of apologetic lecturers and authors who will take this message with its tremendous implications and prepare lectures and volumes and articles that will guide thinking and further investigation in every form of world-wide missions.

3. We must carry into the churches the Jerusalem ideas and ideals in religious education. Our first line emphasis should be on religious education that is highly Christian.

4. Let us render the assistance to the Christian educational program on missions in India and Japan that we have so well rendered recently in China and the Near East, not to mention other fields.

5. In the realm of relations between the younger and older churches we must press on to realize and further the ideals of Jerusalem days.

6. Everywhere I went I heard a summons to a larger evangelism. All the troubles missions and churches have been passing through in almost every great mission area may be regarded as the precursor of the greatest religious advance we have ever known. We have a great opportunity if we not only see it but seize it. In China the churches have united in an effort to double their membership in five years, this on the initiative of Dr. Chang Yi, chief executive of the National Christian Council, and also moderator of the Christian church in China, which includes about one-third of the Protestant Christians in China.

In Japan, Kagawa has announced the Million Souls Movement. Missionaries want him to be released and to move freely throughout Japan where today he is a flame of fire. In this summons to a larger evangelism there must be continuous, vital effort, and qualitative and intensive plans. We must have a larger adaptation of means to ends, especially in regard to literature prepared for special classes taking advan-ecclesiastical backgrounds. We must share our money, our personalities, insight, experience, burdens, the deepest things of life, as well as all those things that come from revelation from the divine source.

12. It is necessary that we strengthen the hands of the National Christian Councils, near and far. There are now fourteen of these Councils in what we call the sending countries. There are fourteen in the so-called receiving countries. After Edinburgh 1910 there were only two in the world. There was no international body. Now we have our International Missionary Council which rests officially on these twenty-eight national bodies.

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

The Saturday enrollment taken last Saturday was satisfactory and indicates that the enrollment will be as large as we desire. The figures will be given later.

Saturday, October 5 the writer attended the Huron County Teachers' Institute at Norwalk, speaking in the forenoon, while Dean Charles Anspach attended in the afternoon. This way we were enabled to take the Saturday enrollment and at the same time speak at this important institute. Dean Anspach spoke along the line of the Parent-Teachers' work.

I also addressed the School Masters' club of Mansfield last Wednesday evening.

Homecoming will occur this year on October 12, on which date we will play Slippery Rock (Pa.) State Normal College. A beef barbecue will be given to friends and visitors.

The local Sunday school has been reorganized for the coming year. Several of the college teachers have been chosen as teachers. I have the College Girls' Class, which has an enrollment of some 30 or more. Professor DeLozier teaches the young married people's class, and Dr. Miller the women's class. Professor Monroe last year taught the college men's class.

Professors Haun and Black were ordained as deacons last Sunday. Dean Anspach is a deacon, thus we are able to supply help to the local church.

Dr. Ullman, professor of Psychology, addressed the Lions' Club at their last weekly luncheon, on the topic "The Difference Between Popular and Scientific Thinking."

It was with sadness that the College learned of the sudden death of Charles Senenbaugh recently. In speaking to one of the men here who knew him, he said, "Well, he was a real man." And that is about all that needs to be said, for he had a place in our hearts. The loss to the Purple and Gold is after all a gain as an example of honor, right Christian character and living. The Men's Gospel Team held memorial services for him last Monday evening.

The weekly Wednesday meetings of the Seminary men and women are inspiring and enthusiastic. I do not know when we had a finer group in that department.

The Y. M. C. A. and the Y. W. C. A. both started off well this year. At one of the first meetings, Mrs. Miller addressed the Y. W. and Dean Anspach the Y. M.

The Faculty Club will meet the middle of the month when Professor Stuckey will read a paper.

Dr. Charles Bame preached his farewell sermons a week ago last Sunday to a well-filled house. In the morning he used the general topic of "Present your Bodies a Living Sacrifice," and in the evening "The Kind of Religion Ashland Needs."

In the first football game of the season, Ashland defeated Defiance College, 31 to 7.

It was a great pleasure to have Mrs. Marie Lichty Shaver call on the College one day last week.

EDWIN E. JACOBS.

FROM AN ITINERATING EVANGELIST Dear Evangelist:

It has been quite a while since I have written for our beloved paper. I have been very busy, having my work scattered so that I have been unable to concentrate my heart and mind upon the Delaware work as intensely as I would like.

We have some as noble brethren there as I have ever met, but the membership is scattered, and we have been hindered by having to preach wholly in private houses, and also by their leader having left the Brethren church about eighteen months before I entered the field. He still contends very earnestly for the first principles of the Doctrine of Christ and out of possibly three hundred that he baptized, there are still a few, about twenty-five or thirty, who stand with him; but he has forsaken the spirit of the Gospel and sticks to the letter only, and unchristianizes the Brethren church and all other churches. Having once been a Brethren, it is natural for the community to associate the Brethren church with him and his work. But most of his relatives and friends and many in the neighborhood are beginning to understand the situation and are friends of ours.

Second. After having cleared the whole matter up with the District Superintendent of the M. E. Conference, and after the M. E. Conference had granted the privilege for the said District Superintendent to dispose of the St. Thomas's church near Millsboro, and after they had agreed that we could buy or rent it, the M. E. Conference changed District Superintendents before the promise was consummated, and he decided to try again to build up a Methodist congregation.

This unexpected turn knocked us out of the use of this church, so we have been unable to organize a Sunday school or to have a building to preach in. But we are thinking that it was a blessing in disguise, as all seem enthusiastic to buy a lot and to build a church within the next conference year. We have appointed a committee and they have decided definitely to purchase a lot and build as soon as possible.

While somewhat handicapped financially I feel very sure that we will be able within the next twelve months to build near Millsboro. We have some just as noble members at Ocean View and Bethany Beach, over twenty miles from Millsboro, but they are unable financially to build at the present time, but hope in a year or two later to be able to do so. But all have agreed to build but the one house near, or at Millsboro now. The failure to get St. Thomas's church has delayed our work a little, but we believe in the end it will prove the best, as we will have a new church, and possible at a better site than the one we had the promise of.

We have some excellent meetings near Millsboro. Every member, old and young, testifies at every public service. We always have testimony meetings at the close of the services. It makes one's heart glad to hear their bright testimonies.

If possible this coming year I want to give these good people more of my time but I have been cramped financially, but in a most unexpected way the Lord has answered prayer, by giving me over $200 for preaching every other Sunday in Philadelphia this summer and fall within one block of the Whole Gospel Mission Brethren church. I am still preaching there.

This has enabled me to carry on my business the better, and has resulted in a God-send financially. Therefore we expect to be able to give more time to the Lords' work this fall and winter.

If we can be sufficiently supported so as to enable me to push the Delaware work for two or three years until we get two church buildings there, I hope they may be able to get a good pastor on the field and that I may then be able to retire, as I have longed to do.

This field has cost me money, time, much prayer, and anxiety; but the dawn of a better day is coming. A great field has been wrecked by radical fanaticism on the part of leadership but praise the Lord the wreck will be repaired. We have some real Brethren here earnestly contending for a whole Gospel. Pray for this field.

We had our fiftieth wedding anniversary on the 28th of August. Eight of my nine living children were present. They came from widely scattered homes. Including grandchildren there were thirty-three present. They brought many gifts, precious tributes of love and sacrifice. Besides the nine living children, we have twenty grandchildren and one great-grandchild.

No one can express how our hearts burned within us as they expressed their love for their parents, and especially for their mother, to whom they owe double honor as she had to be both father and mother more than half of these fifty years while I have been away from home preaching the Gospel.

THE FIRST BRETHREN CHURCH OF PITTSBURGH

Greetings from the Pittsburgh church! Our last report was one forwarded by Brother Claud Studebaker in July, about one month after Brother Studebaker and his family had arrived from Leon, Iowa, to take charge of the work at this place.

Things are organizing in good shape for the work of the coming fall and winter. The new Sunday school year began October first, and a new corps of officers has been elected by that body. The Sunday school is now in charge of Brother Cronice K. Koontz as General Superintendent. Brother Koontz was General Superintendent of our school several years ago and was very successful in his administration. He is an aggressive young business man, and of fine Christian character, a combination of ideal qualifications for the head of any Sunday school.

A Christian Endeavor was recently organized here. The attendance at these meetings has been acceptable; the young people seem very much interested, and are supporting the society in a creditable manner. We feel that it will grow.

The attendance at the morning church services has been quite good, while that at the evening services has only been mediocre. We are hopeful of improvement with the coming of fall weather.

Our prayer meetings and Bible study on Wednesday evenings are well supported. Brother Studebaker is devoting the Wednesday evening services to Bible study and Bible teaching. He, being an excellent Bible student, makes a remarkably good Bible teacher, for he knows the Bible thoroughly and is capable of reading large portions of it from memory.

Brother Studebaker has acquainted himself with our members, having visited all of them since coming here in June, and we look for a successful future. The work is being planned in an aggressive manner and, to say the least, we are very optimistic.

Five members of the Pittsburgh church, including, our pastor, received the benefits from attendance at the late National Conference. The Pittsburgh Brethren journeyed one afternoon and evening from Winona Lake to Flora, where we visited the Brethren Home at that place. One of our members from Pittsburgh, Brother B. F. Cloyd, is a guest at the Home, and would have been very much disappointed had the Pittsburgh people not gone down to the Home. It was a joy and a pleasure and a blessing for us to make the trip. Brother Studebaker cheered them with songs and prayer. We were made to feel right at home by those in charge, and they insisted upon us staying for supper. I sometimes feel that a member of the Brethren church cannot be a real Brethren until he has paid at least one visit to three places; viz., Winona Lake and our National Conference; our own church college at Ashland; and our Home at Flora.

Rally Day and Promotion Day was observed under the auspices of our church school last Sunday, September 29th. The day was successful both from the standpoint of attendance and interest. The committee had arranged a promotion program entitled: "The Gateway to Tomorrow." This was carried out very beautifully, and not only gave consideration to the promotions from department to department, but the whole theme throughout the program was to get those to Sunday school who do not now come.

Our hearts were saddened in learning last Sunday that Brother and Sister Studebaker's little granddaughter had fallen asleep in Jesus. They left immediately to return to Leon, Iowa. Our hearts go out in deepest sympathy to them in this sad hour.

We expect a goodly number of our people to attend the Pennsylvania District conference at Meyersdale next week.

We are eagerly looking forward to our coming Love Feast and Holy Communion the last Sunday this month.

G. M. GARLAND,
Recording Secretary.

DAYTON, OHIO

It has been some time since we last made a report concerning our work at Dayton. We are still very much alive and making progress under the able leadership of our faithful new pastor, Rev. R. D. Barnard, who, with his family, came here about the first of August. Soon after their arrival, we held a reception for them in the social rooms of the church. It was a very delightful affair and was attended by about 300 people. A very fine program was prepared for the occasion, which was enjoyed by all present. The speakers of the evening were Hon. A. C. McDonald, mayor of our city, Dr. Brownlee, president of the Council of churches, our own Attorney, Byron Murr, president of the Board of Trustees and our pastor, Rev. Barnard, all of whom gave very interesting and instructive talks. After the program a light lunch was served by the good ladies of our church.

Brother Barnard has come up to our expectations as pastor, and, being a leader in Christian Endeavor work, he has taken quite an active part with the live-wire young people of our church.

Our Sunday school has recuperated from the summer slump, and has taken on new life, the attendance last Sunday being 606.

Here's hoping and praying the rest of our churches are doing as well.

RALPH KLINE, Secretary.

TRAVEL FLASHES Leaving Ashland

The time to say goodbye has come to this preacher once more, as he leaves his fourth charge. In a ministry covering more than a quarter of a century, it has been mine to have but four charges, counting Dayton but one, which it really was, having served the same people there in two different periods briefly separated. Some of my partings have been quick and easy; this one was not so. So many times I have been commiserated and consoled for my leaving that it became a painful process. These have been years of growth and trials, alike. I have not in all the six years, given a full-time service. For the sake of easing the burden, I have been holding three revivals a year thus relieving the congregation of paying a preacher but three-fourths of the time, making possible the fine record they have made in the general offerings of the denomination as well as in the reduction of the church debt, both of which are most encouraging.

Never having had a full-time pastor nor a church home other than the College Chapel, they heretofore labored under handicaps which are now things of the past. The first two years we worshipped on Sunday evenings in a down-town theater which gave us a wide acquaintance which has accrued to the value of our leadership all these years. In last night's paper, the editor said, "It could hardly be expected that Rev. Bame would omit in his farewell message, some reference to the Sunday Movie fight that has been waged in Ashland for the past two years. . . . Dr. Bame led the fight against the proposed change at the primary election a year ago." In my final message to this church I said: "I have not been given to figures in my ministry. I do not know how much I have received for salary for these years, nor how many I have baptized, nor married nor dismissed. The completion of this beautiful church building, the solidifying of the various groups into a more compact whole, the influence for good I have had in my city-wide ministry, the receiving into the church fellowship of splendid people and the fellowship of many members of other churches in our services, are all in the inerascible records of heaven and fresh in the memory of all who desire to recall them. . . . To their long home have been called some of the most loyal and faithful whose places can never be filled in memory nor active service." . . . It is my conviction that the last year has been our best. The gain by letter and baptism was twenty-five; the church debt was reduced $4,000, and altogether this struggling group with heavy burdens at college and otherwheres raised more than $10,400, an achievement under God for which we need to be thankful and which is altogether praiseworthy. Our offerings to the outside work of the denomination has been 100% in effort if not in amount but we are glad to note that we stand among the 15 givers of largest amounts in the brotherhood.

We now pass on the tasks to Brother Dyoll Belote who has been called to full-time service and under whose leadership we pray the work may go forward to greater triumphs and deeper Christian experiences.

And let it once more be said that I am entering the field of evangelism for the year and I hope to be kept busy in our brotherhood at this needed task. Before this is in your hands, I shall have begun my first meeting at Cedar Rapids, Iowa with Brother G. T. Ronk and a group of our people together and a group of the Church of the Brethren. We ask the prayers of God's people, continually.

CHARLES A. BAME.

THE "TRAGEDY OF QUITTING THE CHURCH"

The church seems sometimes to be the easiest of all things to quit. A social ripple, a fancied inattention, a difference of opinion, or a decrease in interest becomes an occasion for the surrender of membership. Disagreement with the pastor or a dislike of his style brings up the question of non-attendance upon the services. When political campaign years come around, many churches nearly always lose some members. Defense of a national party becomes to a few people a thing more to be observed and cherished than continuance in a church. Sometimes there is a man who will stay in his bank or company or firm or association whatever the heat of discussion among its members, but let his church brethren oppose his views and he is in a rage. He shows he holds his religious contacts cheaper than others. The life of his spirit, which he should regard above all other things, falls into neglect, and he becomes embittered, prayerless, and sometimes profane. He has fallen out with his church, and the moorings of his soul are loosened. He may be aware that his case is tragic, but he blames not himself. The traditions of family religion are violated, the sweet ties of neighborliness are severed, memories of holy hours at the altar are hushed, and the agitated man takes his way into strange associations. The only certain thing in his mind is that he is quitting his church and leaving the shelter which has blessed him through the years. Where he can ever find more harmony, more affection, more sympathy, more charity, and more responsive helpfulness than he has had in his church he does not know. He deserves the pity and the prayers of his longtime friends as they behold him button his coat against the storm that strikes him as soon as the church doors and the warm lights of the altar are no longer his protection and blessing.—Sel.

CIGARET SMOKING

"Nowadays no gentleman thinks of helping himself to a cigaret without offering a cigaret to every lady present," is the delightful statement of Rupert Hughes, whose wife recently went abroad and committed suicide, and whose doctrine of nudity and freedom from restraint in sex matters caused him to be jeered and hissed by the delegates of the Women's Clubs of America, not long since assembled in Los Angeles. Rupert Hughes is the most popular movie writer living. His novels are as widely read by the youth of America as the novels of any living writer. His baneful influence is without limit. And yet, the above statement made by Hughes on a feature page of the Los Angeles Examiner should not be charged up too fiercely to him, since the actual facts declared are possibly true, that is if you are to refer to the males and females described as gentlemen and ladies. It may be sad, but it is sure that the cigaret habit is now on at high tide among the flappers and society dames of America, call them what you will. There may be a question as to the "ladies." There can be no question as to the cigarets. Hughes is an Atheist, an evolutionist and a modernist in all lines of his thinking. His philosophy may damn the world but it is certainly up to date.—Shuler's Magazine.

It is time that instead of criticizing we really did something for the undergraduate in the American College. He is rapidly becoming the stepchild of our higher educational system. It is not for either of us to rock the academic boat now that the college weather is so squally, but I do think it is time that we tried to see the problem of the American college in its historical perspective. That it has persisted at all is a testimony to some inner principle of vitality.—Dean Christian Gauss, of Princeton.

"Did the Minister Joke with You?"—One of the brainiest young ministers in our days of serious business was thus inquired about when one member remarked to the other that her minister had recently called upon her. No one doubted his intellectual gifts, no one questioned his deep sincerity of life, and no one discredited the truths of the gospel as he proclaimed them. This splendid young ambassador of Christ had come to mistake lightness for brightness. He knew that life around him hid many heartaches and that his community had been visited with sweeping sorrows. It was his hope to spread sunshine in these saddened places and bring relief from this oppression of grief. He forgot that comfort is more essential than cheer and is itself the parent of cheer and that much of the mere frolic of life is not one millimeter below the surface. Thus he went from home to home, carrying the latest jokes from the funny pages to act as a tonic to jaded nerves and to revive faith and hope and love in hearts surfeited with life's oppressive cares. It was all so human that it was at first welcomed, but the assumption that these men and women had no deep foundations of desire within them that he must help them realize in holy experience galled these very ones who first laughed with him and then came to laugh at him. He had forgotten the motto: "Rejoice with those who do rejoice and weep with those who weep."—The Presbyterian.

ALCOHOL AND HUMAN LIFE

through all the defensive barriers and producing the most profound effect upon the sex glands and consequent interference with the sperm or germ cells. In such cases the alcohol causes degeneration of the protoplasm of the germ-plasm, interferes with what is called spermatogenesis (that is to say, the formation of mature sperm cells), and if the germ-plasm is not actually destroyed, its architecture may be so interfered with as to cause imperfect offspring in the next, immediate generation, although the conditions induced does not necessarily become hereditary and thus transmissible to successive generations. This blastophoric effect of alcohol must clearly distinct from the second, the hereditary effect, because the former is absolutely clear and definite—the second is held by some to be debatable."

Those who attempt to persuade the American people that drunkenness is rare in Great Britain or on the Continent, should read these figures from Dr. Weeks: "Under Section 40 of the Criminal Justice Act, 1925, there were during 1927 1,438 convictions of persons for drunkenness whilst in charge of mechanically propelled vehicles. These were disqualified from holding a license for 12 months. In 1926 there were 804 such convictions. In the light of these convictions, we may note that since 1918 there have been 1,000,000 street accidents in Great Britain, and of these 40,000 proved fatal. Approximately 250,000 of the casualties were to children. The causes of accidents were stated to be: state of roads, 6 percent; mechanical failures, 7 percent; weather, 4 percent; and the remaining 83 percent to errors of judgment on the part of pedestrians, cyclists and motorists. Naturally a pair of legs or a pedal machine needs as much control in their way as the Rolls-Royce."

The economic phase of the alcoholic problem is not ignored by the author although naturally his discussion is from the standpoint of the physician rather than from the industrialist. This is worth quoting: "It is difficult to present the full picture of the effect of alcohol on industry, because of the changes in industrial life since the War, and the laceration of money and other values. There are, however, certain points worthy of record. Mr. F. G. Creed, to whom we are indebted for his figures up to date, managing director of Creed & Co., electrical engineers, Croydon, decided some years ago to run the works on total abstinence principles. He says: "In these days in the ordinary engineering trades the amount of lost time averaged about 10 percent, whereas in our case the amount of lost time averaged half of 1 percent—one hour out of two hundred instead of twenty out of two hundred." During the War the total abstinence rule could not be altogether maintained, but even then "we had remarkably good results—our lost time amounted to 5 percent, but other firms doing similar work rose to 15 percent."

"If total abstinence makes a difference of only 3½ percent, along this one line alone, we can easily see what a charge upon industry drinking habits might involve; because, there is not only loss of time through actual sickness or accident, but there is the coincident dislocation of services and most probably a consequent lack of efficiency."

The educational campaign against the use of alcohol in Great Britain seems to have had an astonishing success with the mass of the people according to Dr. Weeks who says: "The great industrial classes have, to an enormous extent, emancipated themselves from the thrall of drink. They are the classes who have come under the influence of systematic teaching in school and societies; on the other hand, in those upper classes where definite education in this matter has been so neglected, the toll of drink in disease and death tells its own sad tale. It calls for an educational campaign throughout our public schools and the ranks of upper class society, even if the chief stress is thrown on the price of alcohol as deterrent rather than on education."

"Alcohol allies itself only too easily with all the things which undermine the moral and physical integrity of national life. It is still responsible for a vast amount of broken life, which can never be stated in any statistical form. Modern science is constantly revealing the danger of even small doses of alcohol—the so-called physiological dose. Is there really such a thing? Is not its action always in a pathological rather than a physiological direction? For many of us the evidence accumulates, until we hesitate to say that it is ever physiologically harmless."

The danger of the use of beverage alcohol in our highly complex modern life is remarked by Dr. Weeks who quotes on this point one of the leading experimental physiologists, Sir Maurice Craig, the mental and brain specialist, to this effect: "The pressure of business life under modern conditions is very great; no time for mid-day meal, no time for rest, and, unfortunately, there is nothing which in certain persons is so rapid in removing a sense of fatigue, or feeling of depression as alcohol. It acts by desensitizing the nervous system and in consequence removes the disagreeable sensations; and herein lies the danger, as most men estimate the value of a thing by its immediate and manifest benefits, and seldom stop to weigh any ultimate and may be permanent disadvantage. I am always seeing splendid fellows who have either crippled themselves or their future prospects by thoughtlessly indulging in alcohol in early life, or have turned to it to flog a fatigued nervous system into further action, with the sequel that they ought to have foreseen. Watch your sleep, as this is the only thing that repairs fatigued tissue, but never rely upon alcohol to get sleep. It is the worst form of sedative, for the dose requires to be constantly increased."

Dr. Weeks has charged his book of less than 200 pages with some of the most important thought provoking data which has been presented by any scientist in recent years. Sir Thomas Barlow, Bt., M.D., F.R.S., in a foreword of the book, commends it to his medical brethren and vouches for it as being accurate, comprehensive, candid, moderate in statement and lucid. Those who open the volume will find that Sir Thomas has not exaggerated.

There is nothing like life's drudgery to make men and women of us. You chafe under it. You sigh for leisure, to be freed from bondage to hours, to duties, to tasks, to appointments, to rules, to the treadmill round. Yet this is God's school for you. It may be a cross. Yes; but all true blessings come to us hidden under the ruggedness and heaviness of a cross. We do not grow most in the easiest life. Accept your treadmill round, your plodding, and your dull task—work, and do all well, do always your best—and you will grow into strong, noble characters.—J. R. Miller.

THE SOUL-WINNER'S SECRET

Every soul-winner is in the secret of the most high God, and has a definite knowledge of the new birth and the baptism of the Spirit, which brings him into peculiar friendship with the Redeemer of man. If God has hid his face from our sins, and blotted out all of our iniquities, and given to us the joy of his salvation, then we are in a position to teach sinners the way of salvation. We must see that before we can be a soul-winner and teach guilty men the way of salvation, that our own sins are blotted out, we must be clean throughout and within, then we can testify the gospel of the grace of God to a dying world.

He must pray in secret; he must cry mightily into his heavenly Father's ear with intercessions, if he would be a real soul-winner. We must be wide-awake, and waiting upon God for the outpouring of the Holy Ghost. Then he will give us wisdom, hope and faith and a burning message to deliver unto men.

Our prayer must be to the point. The great multitudes are like Bartimeus, who sat by the wayside, and when he heard Jesus was passing by, he began to say: "Jesus thou Son of David, have mercy on me," but that praying was not definite, it was too general. Jesus knew what he wanted, but Jesus wanted him to state exactly what he desired. Then the blind man prayed a definite prayer. "Lord, that I might receive my sight." Then the Lord answered his humble cry. A definite prayer, always receives a definite answer.

We have all the resources of Heaven at our command, in this warfare against the devil, in our hands to save the lost and to enrich heaven.—Robt. Carl Meyer in Gospel Banner.

OUR LITTLE READERS

MARY AND THE BABY SWIFT

"Run and get a match, dear, and I will light the fire."

It was the first really chilly day of autumn. And it was a Saturday. So Mary was helping her mother dust the sitting-room.

"Oh, Mummy, let's. It will be so jolly," Mary said, as she ran to the kitchen for a match.

"Please let me light it, Mummy," Mary coaxed when she came back.

"Very well, dear. It is ready set."

Then Mummy looked at Mary, and Mary looked at Mummy. They had both heard a queer scratchy sound that seemed right in the fireplace.

"What can it be?" whispered Mary.

"Perhaps a field mouse," Mummy said. "It may have come in when the wood was brought."

"Or perhaps a squirrel," said Mary, as her mother moved the wood to one side, and found nothing there.

"Scratch, scratch," came the sound again. "In the chimney," both said together. Then Mary whispered: "Mummy, we can't light a fire. It would smoke the little thing to death."

"No, dear, no fire until we get it out. But how are we to do that?"

"Scratch, scratch," came the sound. It was much higher now.

"I know," said Mummy, "We'll get the ladder and see what we can do from up above."

So with the tall ladder Mary and her mother went outdoors, climbed up to the flat roof, and walked over to the chimney to listen. The noise was still there. Perhaps they could do something. Mary's mother was so small, however, that her head just reached the chimney top.

"If only I were taller," she said, quite disappointed.

"Hold me up and I can see," said little Mary, jumping up and down in glee. So Mary stood on Mummy's shoulders and peeked inside the chimney, while Mummy held her two feet tight between her hands.

"Can't see a thing. It's dark," whispered Mary, disappointed.

"Close your eyes a minute till you are accustomed to the dark," advised her mother. So Mary closed her eyes quite tightly.

Immediately she felt something brush her cheek, and felt her mother give a start. Of course her eyes were opened then.

"It was a chimney swift," her mother said. "It's wing just touched your cheek. See, here it is again," and the fluttering bird flew down the chimney once again not a foot away from Mary and her mother.

"Look down now, Mary," said her mother in a minute.

Mary hid her eyes from the light for a while, and then looked again. This time she saw the bird quite well. She even saw what the bird was doing.

"Mummy, she's a tugging at a nest as hard as she can. The nest is turned side up."

"Is it near the top?"

"I could reach it, Mummy, if I tried."

"Perhaps you can help Mother Swift then. Pull gently so she will not be afraid. That may make her think she is doing it herself." So as the swift tugged madly at the nest, Mary gently put her finger in behind, and pushed it toward the struggling bird.

With wings always moving Mother Swift raised her nest of twigs up to the end of the chimney, never knowing that Mary helped her do it.

"Oh, Mummy," whispered Mary, still peeking in one corner. Hanging down from the nest, attached to it by a thick hair, was a struggling young bird.

"Baby Swift has his foot caught," Mary whispered once again. Then she gently drew the long hair up with baby struggling on the end.

Then Mother Swift flew about her heads with joyful thanks, and gave her little son his first flying lesson before their very eyes. For he was not a very tiny baby after all.

"Do you know what it all means, dear?" asked Mummy as they watched.

"Do tell me, Mummy."

"All the other swifts went south a month ago. They never stay so late as this. This baby, somehow, had his leg caught at that time, and his mother would not leave without him. Now she's teaching him to fly. For they will have to fly thousands of miles to meet their friends again."

And true enough, Mother Swift and her son, whom Mary had made happy, flew off one night while Mary was asleep.—Alice Wetherell, in The New Outlook.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

WAYNESBORO, PENNSYLVANIA

Holy Communion will be observed by the First Brethren church of Waynesboro, Pennsylvania, Sunday evening, October 20. All members of the church are urged to attend this service and brethren of like faith are invited to enjoy this Christian fellowship with us.

W. C. BENSHOFF, Pastor.

MUNCIE, INDIANA

The Muncie Brethren church will hold a Rally Day and Homecoming service Sunday, October 13. This will be an all day meeting with basket dinner at the church. There will be special speakers at all three services. All former pastors are extended a special invitation to attend. All former and present members are urged to come home for the day.

M. L. SANDS, Pastor.

ARDMORE CHURCH, INDIANA

The Brethren at Ardmore, due to the death or their pastor, desire to correspond with a young, unmarried minister who is in a position to take up the work immediately. Address A. Glenn Carpenter, R. 3, South Bend, Indiana.

BANDAGES FOR AFRICA

We did think that it had all been said in a recent issue, but here comes a letter from Montgomery Ward & Co., Chicago, which says:

"Relative to the merchandise we received from various sections of the country to be included in the shipments going to your missionaries in French Equatorial Africa, if we are to accept these shipments further, we must insist that the senders comply with the customs regulations, also when they mail the merchandise, to send it to the proper department (Missionary Bureau, Export Dept.), and send us a complete itemized list of the contents and value. In French West Africa, we are compelled to show an itemized list of the contents and value of each article; we are also compelled to show the material—wool, cotton, silk and wool, or nickel plated steel, whatever the material may be of which the article is based. We are also compelled to show the weights in kilos and grams. We will convert the pounds into kilos, but we must have the weight in pounds and ounces.

"Furthermore, we are in receipt of a parcel from ... and another marked for Florence N. Gribble, bearing no sender's address. We assume that it will be satisfactory to send you our statement covering this merchandise along with the other shipment, but we have no way of determining the contents unless we open the packages and have our man list them in detail. Such a practice is too expensive for you and for Montgomery Ward & Co., and it decreases any saving you might hope to accomplish."

So, please, all Sisterhoods and women's societies who are making and sending bandages for Africa, send a memorandum in voice to Montgomery Ward & Co. at the time you send the package to them, giving detailed statements of contents, value, weight, etc. ALICE B. LONGAKER, Office Secretary Foreign Missionary Society.

THE BRETHREN EVANGELIST

Heart Throbs of Our Church Leaders

XXV—"COME YE OUT FROM AMONG THEM."

By Frank G. Coleman

Cruelly subtle has been the alienation of the Church's affection. No period of the church is comparable to the first two hundred years of her history, during which time Christianity swept the world like wildfire. This wonderful conquest, for her risen, ascended Lord, was only halted when she became the recipient of the benefactions of Constantine. Here her decline set in. True, intermittent fires of evangelism have burned within the Church, but during the first two hundred years it burned continuously. "Each one ran to tell his neighbor."

We are facing some gigantic problems in church life. It is becoming increasingly difficult to finance the Church. On the other hand we seem to have more money for the things we want, and that our selfish desires demand. Stewardship is almost unrecognized by the professed followers of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Again the voice is heard in Ramah, lamentation, and bitter weeping; the cry goes up from a thousand pulpits, "Where are our young people?" I am not so much concerned about our young folks as with the parents. Our young people will be what our standards of living make them. Church members have been sucked into the vortex of worldly pleasure. Parents with their children pour out of our churches at the close of Sunday school, off for the rest of the Lord's Day pleasure seeking. The morning sermon is rapidly becoming a sort of appendage (not at all necessary) to the Sunday school.

The Church has interested herself with worldly affairs. Knowingly to do so makes her an enemy to her Lord. She has stooped (we use the term advisedly) to fostering moral reforms. She is guilty of lobbying to promote moral legislation. Using the time that otherwise could have been used in preaching the "Gospel of his grace." That men might come "to know him and the power of his resurrection." Do not misunstand; "We believe in a 'done' salvation and in a doing religion. The first produces the last, and the last is not genuine without the first."

The pole star of the Early Church was the belief in the imminent return of her Lord. Do we longer expect him? Do we really want him to come? The world cries, "On with the dance," and the Church yields herself to the world's wooing embrace and stills her accusing heart as she gives ear to the tantalizing strains of the jazz.

*"Can I take part with those who nailed him to the tree?
And where his name is never heard is there the place for me?"*

Nay, world, I turn away, though thou seemest fair and good.

That friendly outstretched hand of thine is stained with Jesus' blood."

Alva J. McClain

WHEN GOD turns out the Light

This month the world will celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of the invention of the electric light by Thomas A. Edison, and men are casting about for some fitting way to remind the world of the great debt owed to his remarkable genius. The world forgets easily, and takes much for granted. Emil Ludwig offers a suggestion. Let all the electric lights in the world be turned out, he suggests, for one minute. Give the world one minute IN THE DARKNESS to think about how much we owe to the great inventor. Ludwig's suggestion is startling, but not new.

Some day God himself will turn out the lights of the world, and leave the world in darkness for a season, in order that the world learn to appreciate "light" and give glory to God as the Source of all light.

All the spiritual light of the world came from God through his Son Jesus Christ. "I am the Light of the world," he said. And that glorious Light, since the ascension of Christ, has been perpetuated in the church through his Spirit. But the world has never acknowledged this; and today the "wise" are telling us that the spiritual and moral light of the world is the product of man, not of God. Solemn-visaged professors will tell you that civilization produces its own light. They will learn better some of these days when God removes his church from the world, and leaves the civilization of man in the midst of its spiritual darkness.

But this is not all that man needs to be taught, and shall be taught. Read Revelation 16:10: "And the fifth angel poured out his vial upon the throne of the beast, and his kingdom was darkened, and they gnawed their tongues for pain." When the light of sun, moon and stars is turned out, and the world sits in Stygian darkness, it will learn there is a God in heaven who gives to men "every good and perfect gift."

THE Troubles of Mrs. McPherson

At a convention of the "Four Square Gospel" ministers, John Goblen, assistant pastor to Mrs. Aimee McPherson and superintendent of her various organizations, demanded a "show down" on the financial affairs of these organizations. The woman pastor responded by firing Mr. Goblen. Declaring that he is fighting for "Christian principle" and not for "his job," Mr. Goblen calls for a conference of the ministers. But Mrs. McPherson has the last word, wiring the various ministers not to attend the conference, and most of them will obey.

Mrs. McPherson is an able dictator. Some of her workers chafe under her rule, but none of them thus far have been able to successfully dispute it. They flare out in a few newspaper reports, then disappear like shooting stars, and are forgotten. The head of Angelus Temple knows how to handle the kind of men who work under her direction. But dictatorships never last forever. Don't forget that.

The Apostle Paul, who wrote a large part of the Bible used at Angelus Temple, had his way of dealing with such situations.

"I suffer not a woman . . . to usurp authority over the man" (1 Tim. 2:12).

THE Cult of "The Great Eleven"

Southern California is the home of many strange cults, and every little while one of them oversteps the bounds of civil law and gets more publicity than it wants. The latest is known officially as "The Divine Order of the Royal Arms of the Great Eleven."

This cult has a weird and rather ridiculous ritual, keeps a room fitted up waiting for a coming "Messiah," sacrifices mules, holds dances in the nude about the grave of the mules, and buries seven puppies with a dead priestess. The leader, as usual, is feminine. All went well until the police discovered that the young woman-priestess, whose body has been preserved in salt and ice for thirteen months awaiting the resurrection promised by the cult's leader, had died without medical attention and was buried clandestinely without a death certificate.

The Apostle Paul predicted the coming of a time when men would refuse to "endure sound doctrine," when "they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables" (2 Tim. 4:3-4).

THE Wisdom of Mexico

Recently a new penal code became effective in Mexico. The imposition of fines, under this code, will be graduated according to the income of the convicted person. And why not? Some of the laws in our own country are ridiculously unjust. Instead of fining men so many dollars for infractions of the law, Mexico will fine them each so many days' income. Rich men will not like that.

Questions & Answers

Conducted by
J. Allen Miller

Readers are invited to send in suitable questions, which will receive consideration as space permits.

50. Is it commendable or objectionable for Brethren to commune with other denominations in their public communion services? M. A. S.

The answer to this question will depend upon the circumstances of the individual. If to do so were to deny the Brethren belief and practice in this matter one could certainly not do it. For two years the writer was a student in a denominational college, and a regular attendant upon the services of the denomination held in the college town. This was the only church in the place. For almost the entire length of that time he taught a large Sunday school class of college men and women. He was often called upon, in conversation and contacts with fellow students to defend his theological and doctrinal beliefs and practices. This he felt able to do at least to his own satisfaction. At the communion services of this church he did not participate, as did nearly all the students. To have done so would have made his position untenable and his defense of his own beliefs impossible. There may be entirely justifiable circumstances, as in isolation or lack of opportunity to attend your own church, where participation in such service may be not only proper but even a duty. However Brethren should see to it that as frequently as possible they attend a Communion service of their own church.

51. One of our young men, who is married and well started in life, feels the call to the ministry, he says. But his early education was neglected, he speaks English badly; he has no money saved to pay for his schooling and his local church greatly needs his service and work. What would you advise? X.

It is hard to advise another where the whole life of self and others is involved. A married man has obligations to others,—his wife and, if there are children, to them as well. In God's will for a man's life and his life work there certainly can be no conflict of duties. And if a man finds himself in a position, as in the marriage relation, where obligations are normal and of divine imposition he can not escape these obligations by pleading others as having prior rights. Such a position would cause endless moral confusion and would make possible the escape of an unpleasant duty by assuming another perhaps less onerous. What I am here saying means that a married man's first obligations are to his wife and children. I doubt seriously the right of any man, or woman, taking time and money for his own education when he ought to be saving it to help his own children who are just across the threshold of College or High School. A man ought not to be a father unless he is willing to pay the cost of a genuine fatherhood by personal self-denial and even deprivation. Such a father should forego personal ambition for the sake of his child; for unless he gives the child of this day an education at least half way decent he cripples him for his whole life.

On the other hand, if a man has good health; if his wife is in thorough sympathy with her husband's convictions; and if he is not past thirty, let us say,—then he might seriously consider entering upon a period of preparation for the ministry. All this to be sure if he also finds himself capable as a learner. I am only saying this to encourage those who have real ability and a fine Christian experience. Such would

Is the Martyr Spirit Gone?

Has the spirit of the martyrs disappeared from among the disciples of our Lord Jesus Christ? Has the church left none of that old time devotion to Christ that caused men to be ready to make any sacrifice necessary, even that of life itself, for his sake? We are prone to grow discouraged about the situation. It seems sometimes that our age has grown soft and pampered and timid, and greatly concerned about self-ease and personal safety and is lacking in those strong, heroic qualities that inspired such lines as, "Faith of our fathers, living still; In spite of dungeon, fire and sword." And truly that intrepid spirit and fearlessness of venture that made men ready martyrs of the faith in the early centuries is not as prevalent as one might wish.

But the quality of heroism has not altogether died out. Ever and anon we read of an inspiring example in some line of endeavor. We just recently read that science has added another name to its long list of martyrs. Dr. Auguste Marie of the Pasteur Institute in France, at the age of thirty-eight, has died a martyr to the cause of medical science. He was investigating the bacillus botulinus, to which is due the most deadly form of food poisoning. He was hunting a serum that would counteract this bacillus and accidentally a drop of the liquid touched his left eye. Within three days symptoms of fatal poisoning appeared. He kept the situation a secret from his friends and devoted himself constantly and with meticulous accuracy to an account of the disease in his own system. Two weeks later the account ceased.

Such an occurrence is at once reproving and challenging—reproving to the ease, softness and indifference that characterizes our average Christian discipleship and challenging to the noblest and most courageous endeavor possible. And shall we not expect such devotion and fortitude on the part of those who are engaged in the cause of Christ? Shall we not expect to find in them such readiness to sacrifice, such willingness to devote soul and body to the advancement of the kingdom of God, and to give even life itself, if necessary, out of loyalty to him? Such expectation is in accordance with the principles enunciated by our Lord Jesus, for he said, "Whosoever he be of you that forsaketh not all that he hath, he cannot be my disciple" (Luke 14:33). Again he stresses the necessity of self-denial and of sacrifice when he said, "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow me" (Luke 9:23). That truth was considered of such importance that it was recorded, as Jesus spoke it, by all three of the synoptic Gospels. And essentially the same principle is again repeated in Luke (14:26) and also in John's Gospel (12:25): "He that loveth his life shall lose it; and he that hateth his life in this world shall keep it unto eternal life." The great Apostle Paul not only got hold of the truth, but gave it his most hearty approval and had made it the motivating center of his life. He said: "But whatsoever things were gain to me, those I counted loss for Christ, yea doubtless, and I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord: for whom I have suffered the loss of all things, and do count them but dung, that I may win Christ" (Phil. 13:7, 8).

That is the martyr spirit,—the spirit that is expressed by the cross of Christ, and Paul possessed it in a most wonderful degree, as did many of the early disciples. That is the spirit that is at the foundation of all true chivalry and all true greatness. Exemplifying it we think of Antigone dying rather than desert the body of her dead brother. We think of John Brown, his flesh pierced with bullets, stopping to kiss the colored child on his way to the gallows. We think of Livingstone on his knees in prayer and dead, in the heart of Africa, and with the open scroll before him on which was written in letters of blood and blotted with tears, "Oh, God, when will the open sore of the world be healed?" We think of George Atley, a young Englishman in the Central African Mission, with the instincts and heart of a hero. The story that has come to us tells of his being attacked by a party of natives; he had with him a Winchester repeating rifle with ten chambers loaded; he had the party completely at his mercy; calmly and coolly he summed up the situation. Finally he concluded that if he were to kill them, he would do more harm to the mission, than if he were to let them take his own life. So as a lamb to the slaughter he was led, and when his body was found in the stream the rifle was also found in his pocket, its chambers untouched. And we think of James S. Gribble who possessed the martyr spirit and who, once he found his way into the will of God, would not be moved from that way but pressed perseveringly on, in spite of African fevers, jungles, opposition, discouragements and the death of members of his party, until he succeeded in planting the Gospel at the very heart of the darkest portion of the Dark Continent.

The cross of Christ is inevitable to the sincere Christian. Jesus left no option as to cross bearing to those who would be in very truth his disciples. Whether there be many or few in your congregation who accept their obligation, they still must bear the responsibility. They may accept their cross willingly and take it up readily, or they may seek to push it off. They may look upon it as an imposition and a hardship, or they may consider it as a privilege and find satisfaction in the fact that they are to enter into fellowship with the sufferings of Christ, and are being made conformable to his will. Marcus Dodds once said, "To share in the benefits of Christ's sacrifice is most truly to sacrifice ourselves. Whatever his sacrifice expresses we desire to take and use as the only satisfactory expression of our own aims and desires. Did Christ perfectly submit to and fulfil the will of God? So would we. Was there on his part a meek resignation of every desire which would run counter to God's will; was he led as a lamb to the slaughter, guileless, as little thinking of evading God's will as if he knew not what was before him? So would we obey, yielding ourselves without reserve to God." That is the spirit of which martyrs are made, and though we pray that we may not need to pay the price of loyalty and fidelity with our lives, yet we would have the spirit that would cause us to make any sacrifice willingly that might come in the line of duty.

"Must Jesus bear the cross alone,
And all the world go free?
No, there's a cross for ev'ryone,
And there's a cross for me."

Have You Any "Church Tramps"?

Have you any church tramps? Or don't you know what church tramps are? Of course you very likely do, though it is possible you have not called them by that name. Church tramps, of course, do not refer to ragged folks who go about begging for food, clothing and a night's lodging. On the contrary, they are often quite well-to-do and are well-fed and well-clothed. Moreover, they are often very splendid people, cultured and sociable. They have one peculiarity, however, that attaches to the ordinary tramp, and that is, they are a detached, wandering class of people, ecclesiastically speaking. They have no church home, and they do not seem to want any. They are to be found in all kinds of churches—rich and poor, big and little, aristocratic and the very common sort. But just read this, from a prominent publication:

There is a habit among church members which is rapidly becoming a scandal. There are thousands of church members who have been living, let us say, in New York, Borton or Philadelphia, for a quarter of a century whose membership is still in Ohio, Maine or Virginia. These people float from church to church, they enjoy a sermon here and there, but they have no church home. They have become "church tramps," having no sense of obligation to attend any church in particular. Often they stay away from church altogether. They claim that the little "home church" from which they come needs what money they can afford to give. Often we have wondered if "the little church at home" really gets much from the members who have lived away from it, and who have neglected their Christian obligation for many years. If that little church "at home" gets much money from such people we are greatly mistaken. In many instances these absent members have ceased to communicate with the home church, their names have been erased, and they have been lost to the denomination. Pastors who hold on to the names of their absent members are in part to blame for this state of affairs, but whoever is to blame, it is a shameful state of affairs. If this paragraph comes under the eye of those who have a loved one living far away from home we trust that it will be the occasion of a letter in which this paragraph will be enclosed.

Catholic Rural Life Conference

It is worthy of note that the Roman Catholic church is taking a very active interest in the problems of the rural community, as they are related to the church. This week their Seventh Annual Rural Life Conference is in session at Des Moines, Iowa. "America," a leading Roman Catholic weekly, describing the efforts that are being made in behalf of the rural Catholic church, says:

"A comprehensive plan for the Catholic rural parish has been steadily built up. Step by step, concrete objectives have been sought and attained. The vacation school, spreading through most of the more scattered dioceses of the United States, has led to the plan of the seminarian catechist. The parish credit union will be a particular subject of this year's discussions. The role of the Catholic farm woman in reaching the core of the rural life problem, by inspiring the farm family with hope and by raising the standard of living to a normal American plans has become increasingly evident. Friendly relations with the non-Catholic environment have been a matter of careful study."

This serves to remind us that the Brethren church, which is a distinctly rural church, ought to be giving more serious attention to the rural church problems. We have lost already in many ways by our failure to give any really serious attention to this matter, and the end of our loss is not yet, unless we promptly bestir ourselves. It is encouraging to note that the Ohio conference is planning to study the problem, and other districts ought to follow suit. It will be better to act intelligently and according to some worked-out plan than to drift along and work haphazardly.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

"Beware of substitutes" needs to be taken off of patented medicines and inventions and placed on proven moral standards.

"Personal liberty" is just another name for individual selfishness, and no prohibitionist should be deceived by it.

We have known people to become impatient with prayer that was too long drawn out, but we never knew of any one to become annoyed by some one's faithful continuance in well-doing.

Christian Endeavorers will find a message this week from their National Quiet Hour superintendent, Brother Klingensmith. You will want to read it and then think more seriously about the privilege of prayer.

Ohio Conference at Ashland, October 22 to 25. Churches should send full delegation. Every church is required to pay twenty-five cents for each delegate allowed whether delegates are in attendance or not.

Brother C. D. Whitmer writes us that he is still serving half time as pastor of the church at Brighton, Indiana, and would consider a call to another conveniently located church for the other half time, as he would like to devote all his time to church work. His address is 217 East Dubail Avenue, South Bend, Indiana.

Brother R. I. Humbert tells us of a recent evangelistic campaign conducted at Brush Valley. Seventeen made the great confession. The work in general is in a favorable condition. Brother Humbert mentions again the distribution of tracts and Scripture portions, which is such a favorite method of spreading the Gospel story.

The Washington, D. C., church has begun the publication of a weekly bulletin, edited by the pastor, Brother Homer A. Kent and we learn from the announcement on the bulletin that one of the faithful members who is a printer has undertaken to print the folder free. This helpful brother seems to be just one of the many of like spirit with which the pastor has surrounded himself. We congratulate Brother Kent on this evidence of progress.

From Elkhart, Indiana, we have another report of progress under the leadership of Brother W. I. Duker. Several special days in the church calendar are reported to have been observed, Rally Day and the special offering day. On the latter day, their quarterly offering to apply on the building debt was lifted and a total of $994 was raised. By this means they are cutting down their indebtedness in a splendid way.

Dr. W. H. Beachler writes a much appreciated letter from his new pastorate at Gratis, Ohio, where he is located among long-standing friends, his old home being only a short distance away. Brother Beachler compliments his predecessor, Brother O. C. Starn, for the constructive work he did there. The Gratis congregation have a splendid membership and a beautiful church plant, and with its splendid leadership, we may expect the church to do a fine piece of work in the coming days.

A most interesting letter we have this week from Dr. Florence N. Gribble, of Africa, and it is encouraging to learn of the progress that is being made in the preaching of the Gospel in or near the various stations, and also in the erection of new buildings. Dr. Gribble is being kept very busy with her medical work, but she does not allow this to obscure the great work of giving the Message of Life to the famishing souls. So do all the missionaries keep clear in mind the supreme thing, in the midst of the many other accompanying duties.

We do not know when the death of a young minister has had such a profound effect on the other ministers of our group as has the recent passing of Brother Charles Sensenbaugh, late pastor of the church at Ardmore. He had made his way through school against odds and was always willing to do his share and more of whatever he was connected with. The same industrious, sincere spirit that characterized him in college was taken into his first pastorate and the one brief year of his ministry was marked with success and the building up of a strong attachment between pastor and people and between pastor and fellow-pastor. We shall miss him, all who knew him and the good influence of his life will continue on. Again we bespeak the sympathy of the Evangelist for his sorrowing home folks.

Brother S. M. Whetstone writes of his closing of his pastorate at Nappanee, Indiana, where he served faithfully for five years and accomplished a splendid work, and where Brother B. F. Owen is now located as pastor. Brother Whetstone has been well received in his new charge and the work is starting off nicely. We were pleased to look over a copy of the congregational program that he mentions in his letter. The program is good and comprehensive challenge to the people and much good ought to result from conscientious effort to attain. It would possibly be well if more of our congregations would lay out definite programs so as to have something definite to work to and to measure achievement by. And better still would it be if the various districts and the national brotherhood would adopt a program and work unitedly towards it. We have not made such progress in many years as we did during our old Four Year Program.

PRAYER REQUESTS FOR THIS WEEK—

Brother J. S. Cook writes that he is on his way to Limestone, Tennessee to conduct an evangelistic campaign and wishes the prayers of the brotherhood on behalf of the meeting.

Brother S. M. Whetstone asks for prayer in his behalf as he labors in his new field at Waterloo, Iowa.

Pray for our mission work in Africa.

Distinctive Denominational Doctrine

(Editorial in "The Gospel Messenger")

(This excellent editorial, whose publication was requested by Dean. J. Allen Miller, has also very favorably impressed the Editor and he gladly gives it space in these pages.)

You have not forgotten the question that the speaker at the ministerial meeting was supposed to answer. It was whether our church message is different enough from that of others and important enough to justify separate existence. Whatever the speaker may have said about it we have our own notion of one thing that he ought to have said. And that is, that our message is exactly as different and as important as we make it. And it depends on that, whether we are worth the extra space we occupy.

We mean that if our difference is a difference on paper mostly it doesn't amount to much, but if it is a difference in the character of our religious life, it is very much worth while. That is to say, if the difference is in our statements of doctrine, our profession of principles and our practice of rites it may be of little value. If it is in the superior quality of the character and life built up in a people, who hold these doctrines and practice these rites, our right to a separate existence is vindicated. Still more concretely, the answer depends on whether we actually do love more than others, or whether the other differences actually result in this difference.

What do ye more than others?" was the Master's challenge to his own disciples and by doing more he meant the practice of more love, as the context plainly shows. Unless they did that, they had no right to claim to be his disciples. Unless they did that, they would forfeit all such claim on the day of judgment, as his picture of the judgment plainly shows (Matt. 25). Unless they did that, they would be unfit to serve in his church, as his final charge to his rock-apostle plainly shows (John 21:15).

The church rites which are distinctive of our practice have this for their aim and justification. They call attention to the need of more love in service to our brethren, in service to the world of humanity at large. They urge us to greater diligence in the practice of it. They are a constant sermon to us on this one great theme. It is well to have the sermon but it will avail us nothing unless we heed it. To call the worlds' attention to the fact that we observe certain institutions which others do not or in a different way because we hold our method to be more scriptural will not be convincing and ought not to be, unless we also produce a more scriptural practice of the great love principle which in some form is symbolized in all these ceremonial observances.

Here is an opportunity for denominational distinctiveness that will really count for something of eternal value. It is the sort of doctrinal emphasis that the heart of the whole world is waiting to see. We frequently hear it said that the religious groups who have some outstanding doctrinal characteristics and come out strong for them are the ones who succeed best in winning converts. There is a lot of truth in that. Conviction and courage are qualities which command the admiration of all. And it is an interesting fact that no matter how contrary to all reason and well established knowledge a man's position may be, if he preaches it with sufficient vigor and persistence he can get a following. There are mental types ready to respond to all the fads and fashions that may come along, and there is considerable percentage always ready for the newest one if backed by earnestness and a winsome personality. But the appeal of all such is limited. Deep down in the universal heart of mankind is the yearning for love and the recognition of it as the supreme factor in a satisfying religion. The religious opportunity of our time and of all times awaits the church that senses this need and sets its system of faith and practice to functioning vitally around that center.

The Church of the Brethren has an excellent chance to be that church. Its smallness would not cut much figure. That "handicap" would not be serious in the face of a great determination to take Jesus in earnest and put his religion to practice. It would not be a small church long. The question of separate identity or merging with others could be trusted to take care of itself in due time. That is the way to challenge the Methodists and Baptists and all the other big ones and little ones, not to a finish fight but to a friendly race in which there would be plenty of glory for all with no bitterness to live down or heal over. Our rich heritage of principles and doctrinal symbols with their emphasis on simplicity and brotherliness would make a fine vantage ground from which to launch out in this contest. But this advantage would be lost if we should depend on these differences of creed and ritual to justify our right to exist and would point to these as the principal basis of our claim to be a New Testament church. We must make these differences contribute to the most important difference, a difference in love. Apostolic Christianity, New Testament Christianity, the Christianity of Christ is the Christianity that loves more. That distinction must be our justification and the basis of our claims.

"Is our message sufficiently different and important to justify separate identity?" It is, if we make it so. If we don't, it is not. It is, if we love more. If we don't, it is not.

"It Is I"

By Dr. J. H. Crofford

The subject of this article is the language of Jesus as recorded in the 20th verse of the 6th chapter of St. John. The occasion was this: The disciples of Christ have been with Jesus enjoying his associations and sharing his blessings, when they assembled on a mountain with five thousand anxious persons to see and learn of Jesus. The time had come when they hungered for food to sustain physical life, but the disciples lacked the "wherewithal" to purchase the quantity necessary for the multitude. Jesus knew what he would do, and, after they were seated on the grass, he fed them to their satisfaction from five barley loaves and two fishes.

After this great miracle, the disciples leaving Jesus, went to the sea and embarked on its waters. The winds began to blow after they had rowed out for some distance, and the water became turbulent, and fear filled their hearts, when, looking out over the water, they saw a man walking on the water who said: "It is I; be not afraid." Their fears subsided and their hearts were comforted because Jesus was with them.

In childhood and youth, when in our innocent and unaccountable state, we are associating with Jesus, who supplies our needs, cares for us, and protects us, unconscious of danger. After feeding on his love till we arrive at the age of accountability, we leave him to row our boat over the sea of life with our associates. Everything moves along smoothly until we encounter the winds of opposition, and the sinfulness of this world rises in billows on life's sea, and fear fills our hearts. We yield to temptation; we sob, conscious smitten, on our pillows, as we lie down on our beds of rest, feeling and knowing we have done something dreadfully wrong; destruction looms up before us and we see no hope of escape. Then we look out over the turbulent waters and we see, by faith, the approaching form of him who said: "It is I; be not afraid." Receiving him in our little bark, our fears subside and we make our voyage, "Leaning on the everlasting arms."

"What have I to dread, what have I to fear?

Leaning on the everlasting arms.

I have blessed peace with my Lord so near;

Leaning on the everlasting arms."

Martinsburg, Pennsylvania.

Prohibition and the Home

By Homer W. Tope, D.D., State Superintendent of the Pennsylvania Anti-Saloon League

From the days when skin-clad men and women gathered with their children about the fire in a low-hung, smoky cave, the hearth and the home have been the centers of our racial life. Here are given the first impulses to budding childhood. Here youth has the opportunity to profit by the experience of age. Here those ripe in years make their provision for the continuity of life, passing on the torch to generations which succeed them. All human society rests upon the permanent foundation of the home. There is no other institution with which humanity has yet experimented which has even a minor fraction of the influence, value or significance of the home.

Here religion has its largest opportunity. The time is past perhaps, when great religious leaders can write like Paul to Philemon, "Greeting to the Church in thy house," but unless the Church has entered the house, then the Church outside the house is cribbed, cabin'd and confined in narrow limits of influence.

As Henry Ford recently reminded us, "Prohibition began at home with women who wanted better home conditions. They got it and the better home conditions with it." This was not accidental. It is merely what has happened in social and moral movements without end. Society begins its renewal in the smallest and yet the most significant of its units—the individual home. As the new spirit passes from family to family, like a torch passed to light the flames on hearth after hearth, the progressive social movements of the world take their form, eventually to express themselves through larger organization, to eventuate in necessary legislation and, ultimately, to become a part of the accepted social practice of the age.

It was in homes, first, long before prohibition dawned upon the United States, that hostility toward beverage alcohol first was felt. Even in those far distant days when mothers made Nazarites of their sons, pledging them to total abstinence for a period or for a lifetime or with those sons of Jonadab who early became apostles and examples of total abstinence, on down through the ages it has been in the home that antagonism to the destructive forces of alcohol has had its birth and from the home there have gone forth those who have sought the salvation of their fellows from this curse.

Probably there have been few more cynical suggestions ever made than those which are frequently set forth today by the foes of the Eighteenth Amendment who, recalling the bitter population opposition to any return of the old-time licensed saloon, now suggest the sale of beverages, not to be consumed in some inn or tavern, but to be drunk at home. The pollution of this shrine, the desecration of the primary unit on which civilization is based, the prostitution of the earliest temple of childhood and the cradle of the race seems to weigh less with these bitter foes of civilization's new crusade than does the satisfaction of their own appetite or their greed for the unholy profits to be gained from the traffic in alcoholic beverages. If this is the best alternative these can suggest to our "noble experiment of prohibition" then the fight is well nigh over and the enemy have confessed defeat.

The home has altered greatly since prohibition came. There are exceptions, of course. The word "home brew" has a tragic significance which we dare not and must not underestimate. The sad example set the younger generation by those who should have profited by the experience that is the fruit of years, will not be without its evil effect upon those not yet arrived at the age of citizenship. There is tragedy there. But tragedy is always the exception and not the rule of life. Nor should we ever forget such tragedies are not the result of prohibition. Nor are they so frequent as the countless tragedies that resulted from the licensed sale of intoxicating beverages. There is, however—let us not undervalue this truth—a revolution in the American home since the adoption of the Eighteenth Amendment. The old-time slum has vanished. The crowded alley tenement is gone. The vilely dirty rooms in which the whole families crowded for lack of other lodging have been cleared out. When the saloon disappeared all these vanished with it. They were a part of its shadow. They could flourish only under its wings. Now they are gone and instead of these disgraces to our great cities one finds new homes, clean homes, hopeful homes springing up by the uncounted thousands.

The tremendous boom in home building and in home owning which has characterized the decade since the adoption of the Eighteenth Amendment is without parallel in our history. The money which once went over the bar, is now buying cottages or paying rent for proper dwelling places in which children may be reared. Not even the rage to own an automobile, a radio, or a fur coat seems to have affected this passion for the proper setting for a new home life under prohibition.

There is an economic value to all this, of course. Not alone our building trades, but our furniture stores, our retail trade and the whole category of those who provide the raw material out of which a home is built, have felt this new impulse. There is a deeper significance also. A new spirit of hopefulness, a different attitude toward life, the dawn of finer ambitions and that "noble discontent" which makes each generation seek finer things than its predecessors knew or dreamed of, have been among the secondary fruits of this resurgence of the old home building impulse. Out of this has come the desire for a larger education which is driving to the doors of our colleges multitudes of youth who before prohibition would have been doomed to the factory at an early age, limited in their outlook on life, hemmed in hereafter by petty tasks, ill paid and without future. One cannot easily estimate just how far reaching is the influence of those new and higher standards of living made possible for the masses by the Eighteenth Amendment. They permeate our national life so fully and so widely that their effect is incalculable.

The reciprocal relationship between the home and organized society is so intimate that either of these institutions must respond to much that affects the other. Since the Christian home originally developed in a pagan civilization, it was more or less colored by that civilization. Eventually it altered the color in which it was born so that the Mediterranean world was forced to adopt, nominally at least, a faith utterly alien to its own traditions. The sole alternative to this would have been the extinction of Christianity and its replacement by some philosophic system based upon heathenism such as that suggested by Julian, the Apostate. Inevitably the home and organized society must react upon each other while the stronger influence must dominate the weaker one. Homes where ideals are regnant, where self-control is instinctive and where self-reverence is assumed as normal, cannot help producing those leaders whose influence reaches far beyond the borders of their own communities.

But there is another side of the picture. A society whose ideals as formally expressed in its legislation are low and which assumes that evil is inevitable and panders to the baser appetites as though these were entitled to the same consideration as man's loftier impulses, will, despite all barriers one may erect, temper the quality of the larger number of homes in such a community. When by law, under the license regime, we were giving to the beverage liquor traffic a quasi-respectable standing, we were by that very act minimizing the effect of all our preachment of Christian doctrine. Our social conduct was the negation of our Christian theory. We were forgetting what Emerson so keenly phrased when he said, "What you are shouts so loudly that I cannot hear what you say." Between our practice as a social order and our preachment as a religious group, there was a gulf fixed as great as that between Lazarus and Dives.

Much of the evils which accompanied the pre-prohibition period and its overindulgence in alcoholic beverages were, questionless, due to this false stamp of respectability which we accorded the liquor traffic by our license system. We are heirs today of much of that evil influence. It is lessening. Thank heaven, it is becoming "small by degrees and beautifully less." A great deal of our present trouble is due to this "hang-over" from our past misconduct on this question.

Today the whole atmosphere is different. Liquor once legalized is now clandestine. Once challenging, it is now furtive. Once reaching out its sinister hand even toward the ermine of the bench, while it corrupted voters, office holders, administrators, it today is on the defensive, its back to the wall, its cry, no longer a defiance but a pleading call of "Kamerad." Because there is a bounty on the wolf's scalp, he is seeking to don sheep's clothing and would persuade us of his own sheeplike harmlessness. The influence of the Christian home has conquered.

How long this victory will be maintained depends upon how thoroughly we inform the younger generation of the real issues hidden behind the smoke screen of propaganda issuing steadily from the brewers, the vintners, the liquor group. Eternal vigilance is as much the price of liberty today as when Curran first uttered his immortal dictum. In Pauline phrase, we must stand and "having done all to stand, united, alert, fearless and resolved."

Standing in the Gap

A Challenge by the Great Commission Prayer League

"And I sought for a man among them, that should make up the hedge, and stand in the gap before me for the land, that I should not destroy it: but I found none." Read Ezekiel 22:23-30.

At it was in the days of Ezekiel, so it is today in the Church. The people (church members), the prophets (pastors and teachers), the priests (intercessors), and the princes (church officials) have neglected the things of God and turned aside to the things of the world. Love of money, love of pleasure, love of praise, love of ease, and love of self have crowded out the love of God. As a result the Church on the whole is void of the presence and power of God. "A gap,—a breach" has been made and the enemy is coming in like a flood.

Who Will Stand in the Gap?

Abraham stood in the gap when God revealed his purpose to destroy Sodom and Gomorrah because their sin was very grievous. Every prayer was answered. When Abraham stopped praying the judgment of God fell upon the city. Even then God remembered Abraham and delivered Lot. In judgment God remembers mercy because his children pray.

Moses stood in the gap at a time when God's wrath was kindled against Israel because of their idolatry, and again when they murmured against God's servants. As a result "the Lord repented of the evil which he thought to do unto the people", and again the Lord said, "I have pardoned according to thy word."

Samuel stood in the gap many years when the people lost the ark of Jehovah; and afterwards turned away from God and desired a king like the nations round about them; and again when king Saul disobeyed God and spared Agag and the best of the sheep. It was then that Samuel "cried unto the Lord all night."

Elijah stood in the gap caused by the worship of Baal on the part of king Ahab, his wife and the people. For three and a half years Elijah stood alone in the breach until God answered by fire and his enemies were destroyed. Then his people fell on their faces, crying out:—"The Lord, he is God; the Lord, he is God."

Job stood in the gap for his whole family when they spent their time feasting. He rose up early in the morning and offered burnt-offerings unto the Lord according to the number of them all; for Job said, "It may be that my sons have sinned, and cursed God in their hearts. Thus did Job continually."

Where is an Abraham, or a Moses; a Samuel, or an Elijah, or a Job who will stand in the gap today? "The eyes of the Lord run to and fro throughout the whole earth to show himself strong in the behalf of them whose heart is perfected toward him."

Battling in the Gap

In Ezekiel's day, God said of his foolish prophets:—"Ye have not gone up into the gaps, neither made up the hedge for the house of Israel to stand in the battle in the day of the Lord" (Ezek. 13:5). Shall he say the same today? The battle is on,—the battle between truth and error, between the right and the wrong, between God and Satan. Who among us will stand against the wiles of the devil and withstand in this evil day? God is taking out a people for his name (Acts 15:14), and therefore is looking for those who will firmly stand with Christ by faith in the midst of Jordan (the victory of Calvary) until all the people are passed over (Joshua 3:1-17).

The Holy Spirit helpeth our infirmity. He takes the faintest prayer of the humblest saint and amplifies it, like a radio broadcasting station, until all heaven hears nothing else. The Holy Spirit so operates in and through the true Church on earth that he is restraining the mystery of iniquity and the manifestation of the lawless one, the man of sin, until the body of Christ is made ready for his glorious coming (2 Thess. 2:5-10). This restraining power of the Holy Spirit depends upon God's armoured servants who are "praying always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit" (Eph. 6:10-18).

May God Depend on You?

The great majority of professing Christians in our churches today cannot be counted upon for this "fight of faith" against the powers of darkness. They are not able to "stand in the gap." Says the Watchman-Examiner of New York:—"J. Campbell White declares that Protestantism in North America, judged by fair tests, is not more than ten or fifteen percent efficient. What are fair tests? The following have been agreed on by groups of pastors and laymen: (1) Supernatural living—living a life that only Christ makes possible; (2) personal work—individual effort to make new disciples; (3) stewardship of life and property, acting as trustees of life and possessions instead of as owners; (4) prayer-power, illustrating the reality of prayer as the mightiest force outside Omnipotence itself; (5) world vision and purpose, sharing Christ's passion to save the lost everywhere."

If this statement is substantially true, and we believe it is, it shows the imperative need that every soldier of Christ Jesus should Stand boldly in the gap, clad in the whole armour of God, and wrestle against the powers of darkness until we all hear the shout, the voice of the archangel and the trump of God. This may mean the greatest revival the world has ever seen.

A Doctor's Surprising Prescription

(We reprint the following from "The Lutheran." It was written by the late Mrs. H. E. Monroe.)

Some years ago a lady, who tells the story herself, went to consult a famous physician about her health. She was a woman of nervous temperament, whose troubles—and she had many—had worried and excited her to such a pitch, that the strain threatened her physical strength and even her reason. She gave the doctor a list of her symptoms, and answered the questions, only to be astonished at this brief prescription at the end: "Madam, what you need is to read your Bible more."

"But, doctor," began the bewildered patient.

"Go home and read your Bible an hour a day," the great man reiterated with kindly authority. "Then come back to me a month from today." And he bowed her out without a possibility of further protest.

At first, his patient was inclined to be angry. Then she reflected that at least the prescription was not an expensive one. Besides, it certainly had been a long time since she had read the Bible regularly, she reflected with a pang of conscience. Worldly cares had crowded out prayer and Bible study for years, and though she would have resented being called an irreligious woman, she had undoubtedly become a most careless Christian. She went home and set herself conscientiously to try the physician's remedy.

In one month she went back to his office. "Well," he said, smiling as he looked at her face, "I see you are an obedient patient and have taken my prescription faithfully. Do you feel as if you needed any other medicine now?"

"No, doctor, I don't," she said honestly. "I feel like a different person. But, how did you know that was just what I needed?"

For answer the famous physician turned to his desk. There, worn and marked, lay an open Bible. "Madam," he said with deep earnestness, "if I were to omit my daily reading of this book, I should lose my greatest source of strength and skill. I never go to an operation without reading my Bible. I never attend a distressing case without finding help in its pages. Your case called not for medicine, but for sources of peace and strength outside your own mind, and I showed you my own prescription, and I knew it would cure."

"Yet, I confess, doctor," said his patient, "that I came very near not taking it."

"Very few are willing to try it, I find," said the physician, smiling again. "But there are many, many cases in my practice where it would work wonders, if they would only take it."

This is a true story. The doctor died only a little while ago, but his prescription remains. It will do no one any harm to try it.

You see it is literally true what Isaiah says: "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on thee, because he trusteth in thee."

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

GREAT SCIENTIST ALSO A MYSTIC

Professor Arthur S. Eddington, the Professor of Astronomy at the University of Cambridge, England, and the best-known English-speaking exponent of Einstein's theory of relativity, delivered the Swarthmore Lecture to the British Quakers this year. Professor Eddington is himself a member of that body. His lecture has been printed in a little volume entitled "Science and the Unseen World." In this lecture, he develops further the point of view which he earlier outlined in his famous volume, "The Nature of the Physical World," concerning the relation of science and religion. He holds that the older physics, which emphasized materialism and mechanism, is out-of-date. He also insists that man's intuitive experience of moral and spiritual values is just as truly a part of reality as his sense impressions.

PRIORITY OF MONOTHEISM IN EGYPT

Those interested in Egyptian research in the field of archaeology have long felt that the religion fostered by the peoples of the Nile Valley was monotheistic, although on the surface there are to be found many indications that polytheism was recognized. Nevertheless, the farther back and the deeper the scholars penetrate into that life, the more they find indications of belief in one God. Now Prof. James H. Breasted, director of archaeological research in the University of Chicago, announces that he is convinced that he is warranted in claiming that monotheism existed in Egypt eight hundred years before Hebrew history began. It is at least confirmatory of our faith that beyond polytheism lies the practice of the worship of one God. Christianity, of course, has always stood for this. Polytheism was not first; it was second in the development of the religious idea.—The Western Christian Advocate.

RAMSAY MACDONALD'S APPRECIATION OF THE MISSIONARY

In view of the visit of J. Ramsay MacDonald, the Prime Minister of Great Britain, to this country, his glowing tribute to the work of the missionaries in Africa has a special timeliness. Speaking at the Congo Jubilee Exhibition, he said:

"As soon as the missionary appears, slavery is doomed. I do not say that it is doomed in twenty-four hours; but I do say that the presence of the missionary has this effect, explain it as you may, that from the moment he becomes a part of the atmosphere of a race, slavery dwindles and education begins. Men whose lives have been long lived in the atmosphere of ignorant superstition and mortal terror are enabled to lift up their heads and to discover that there is something giving them power, enabling them to walk about with heads uplifted, obedient to the law, but not victims of the law, enabling them not only to look out on the world but within themselves. There begins responsible care, which at last emerges into a conception of the responsibilities of usefulness, lending them the idea of responsibility to the universe. I think the missionary requires no further justification. We, who have been called to the secular affairs of life rather than the spiritual, will never fail to be grateful, I hope, to the missionaries who have carried into effect the gospel of human justice as well as of spiritual power."

DETROIT'S CIGARETTE VICTIMS

There are those who are disposed to discount the commonly reported danger of destruction by fire caused by cigarettes. They are wont to say that these statements are the result of the over-wrought imaginations of radicals and cranks on the subject. But here comes a report, not from an anti-cigarette worker, but from the fire-chief of a great city. The Michigan Christian Advocate recently carried the following item:

Detroit's night-world registered a terrible tragedy last week. A cabaret fire, three blocks from the Advocate office, at 1:30 A. M., cost the lives of nine men and seven women and injured 50 others. Amid the cries and grief of the homes afflicted, with the doctors and nurses working hard to save the lives still in danger, the fire marshal issued his report:

"I can find no violation of the fire laws, and I cannot see that this was a set fire. It was not caused by a bomb. I have gone over the building carefully and think that the fire was caused by some careless smoker, whose match or cigaret was thrown into the highly inflammable decorations on the walls. There are big fans in the place, designed to blow the cigaret and cigar smoke out of the room. These caught the fire and whisked it about the room like a flash."

But we haven't had quite enough disasters from smoking to cause us to give serious attention to combating it. We must let the tobacco trusts make a few more millions and pile up destruction and death through accident and through tobacco poisoning a few more years before we will do anything about it.

EDUCATION WEEK TO BE OBSERVED

Plans have been launched jointly by the American Legion and the National Educational Association to observe American Education Week each year during the week that includes Armistice Day. It is to begin on Monday and end on Sunday, and a program centering around certain cardinal objectives has been worked out for the guidance of those who will participate. It follows:

Monday, Nov. 11—Armistice Day: Education for Faithful Citizenship.

Tuesday, Nov. 12—Home and School Day: Education for Worthy Home Membership.

Wednesday, Nov. 13—Know Your School Day: Education for Mastery of the Tools, Techniques, and Spirit of Learning.

Thursday, Nov. 14—School Opportunity Day: Education for Vocational and Economic Effectiveness.

Friday, Nov. 15—Health Day: Education for Health and Safety.

Saturday, Nov. 16—Community Day: Education for the Wise Use of Leisure.

Sunday, Nov. 17—For God and Country Day: Education for Ethical Character.

This is a good program and will give preachers a great opportunity.

This affords the minister an opportunity to set before the people what "faithful citizenship" really means. And judging by the recent action of the American Legion at Louisville, Kentucky, against efforts to promote disarmament and to encourage peace sentiment, we imagine that ministers will need to have some say as to what "faithful citizenship" really means, if the proper conception is to be given forth.

Our Worship Program

Daily Readings and Suggestions

(Keep with your Bible)

MONDAY

John 7:1. He would not walk in Jewry! We have chosen but one verse for our devotions today, because of its deep suggestiveness. For example, if we refuse to give the Holy Spirit his rightful place in our lives, we grieve him until at last he ceases to strive with us, giving us over to do things which are not fitting. Again, Jesus represents himself as standing at the door, waiting; if we invite him in and make him welcome, we receive the untold blessings of fellowship with him, but if not—then he walks "in Galilee," and troubles us no more. Let us ever make him our honored Guest, and Lord of our lives!

TUESDAY

John 7:2-9. Alone! How completely our Lord humbled himself in taking upon him the form of human flesh, and how lonely must have been his life, mocked even by his own brethren! If the world failed to understand him, and hated him, we need not expect to be greater than our Lord. Let us not then complain when misunderstood or derided, but let us rather, like him, find our strength in communion with our Father in heaven, knowing that we have not an high priest who cannot be touched with our sorrows and burdens.

WEDNESDAY

John 7:10-24. Perhaps it was after another period of communion with the Father that Jesus changed his expressed intention, and did go to the feast. There he found everyone expecting him and discussing him and his ministry—some favorably, others with murderous hatred. But ALL were concerned, and every man must sooner or later answer the question: "What think ye of Christ?"

THURSDAY

John 7:25-31. "When Christ cometh will he do more miracles?" Yet this was still early in Jesus' ministry. How entirely without excuse are we, in view of the many miracles which he did later, finally sealing them all with his resurrection from the dead. Then the miracles wrought in his name by the early church, and lastly the miracles wrought in the lives of men and women about us today. Truly this man is the very Christ!

FRIDAY

John 7:32-36. Thither ye cannot come! No truer words were spoken in the entire ministry of Jesus. While these words were spoken before all the people, they were undoubtedly directed especially to the officers that had been sent to arrest him. As enemies of Christ, they could not follow him into heaven, nor can anyone enter there without believing on his name. May all members of the Church of Christ strive daily to reconcile to God, through Jesus Christ, all those who are now at enmity with him!

SATURDAY

John 7:37-53. Dissension. It has often been said that Christ is the bond that makes us all one. In another sense, it is just as true that he is the cause of dissension; read Matthew 10:34-36. Hasten the day, our Father, when love for thee shall no longer cause dissension among brethren, but thou shalt be everywhere hailed as the Prince of Peace, and men shall say among themselves, "The Lord reigneth!"

SUNDAY

John 8:1, 2; Psalm 122. After the discussion of the previous chapter, every man went unto his own house. But we read here that Jesus went unto the Mount of Olives, and early in the morning he came again unto the temple, and taught. With these few words Jesus' long night of prayer is passed over! After such preparation, it is little wonder that Jesus taught with such force and conviction. May all those who teach in thy name today, and every Lord's Day, learn the method and secret of Jesus' preparation, that their ministry may be more fruitful, and their lives more like the Master's! Amen.—T. C. L.

The Junior Department

By Hazel A. Lewis

Ages 9, 10, 11 (12 optional)

DEPARTMENT EQUIPMENT—

A rack or place for wraps.
 One good blackboard.
 Table for the department superintendent.
 A desk. Placed near the door for the transaction of all business such as records, reports, etc.)

A cupboard or cabinet in which books, curios and materials for work may be kept.

Two copies of Junior Hymns and Songs by Shields, Bethany Edition (by Leyda.) (These are for the leader and pianist.) Church hymnal.

Song rolls of white paper or muslin, upon which the words of songs may be written with a large pencil.

Credit cards.

Department Superintendent's Permanent Records.

Two packet envelope for class cards.

Class report cards.

Department report blanks.

One or more good pictures (large and well framed) such as:

"The Boy Christ," by Hoffman; "The Angelus" by Millet. These may be secured in large colored artotypes for $2.50 from Taber-Prang, Springfield, Mass.

Junior motto, "Be Ye Doers of the Word."

Badges for the pupils. (An open Bible with the words HEAR and DO.)

An American flag.

A Christian flag.

An honor roll. (Changed monthly or quarterly and bearing the names of the pupils reaching a required standard or grade. It may be made of cardboard and have seasonal decorations of crepe paper or other designs.)

Birthday roll. (Made as the honor roll above and bearing the names of the birthday pupils each affixed to the name of those who bring their birthday offerings.)

Stereographs and pictures. (For class use but should be the common property of the department and used by different grades. Such pictures as the Perry, Brown, Cosmos, and Tissot pictures should be mounted and filed in the cabinet according to subject.)

A bulletin board.

CLASS EQUIPMENT—

A table. (A half hexagon or rectangular, is best adapted for this purpose.)

Substantial chairs about 16 inches in height.

Quarterly and Pupil's Book for each teacher.

Memory requirements leaflets by grades. (For the teacher.)

Handbooks for the pupils.

Class boxes. (Handwork material such as paper and pencils may be kept in these.)

Bibles. (These should be owned by the pupils and used both at home and in the Sunday session. The best plan is for the school to provide these for the pupils when they are promoted into the Junior Department.)

A map (suited to lessons being taught.)

Class blackboards.

An outline of requirements for promotion by the quarter.

A sand table (two tables are sufficient for average sized department.)—Taken from "The Workers' Manual," Revised Edition, 1929, by Ida M. Irvin, pp. 41-44, Christian Board of Publication, St. Louis, Mo.

The Home Department

By Mrs. Phebe A. Curtiss

No school should be satisfied to minister merely to those who can be in attendance upon the school and those who can really take an active part in the work. There are those who are too young to be active members of the school.

Provision has been made for them through the Cradle Roll Department; but there are many others who can not be engaged in the active work, who should really be a part of the school. Some there are who, on account of the weakness of great age, cannot be there. Others are detained at home because they are sick, or crippled or in some way disabled; but it is not only those who are too old or too sick to come to Sunday school who should be reached.

There are many who are deprived of attendance upon the service on account of the work they do or responsibilities which they have, such as railroad men, firemen, messengers, nurses, maids, busy mothers—many classes of people should be reached in this way. Then, too, in every community there are those who are careless. They have fallen gradually into the habit of staying away from the Bible school and often they may be interested through this department.

The Home Department makes it possible for a school to reach every life it has a right to touch and make it a part of the school.

WHAT IT IS—The Home Department is that department of the Bible school which includes all of those persons who, for any reason, cannot engage in the active work of the school, but who will agree to study the lesson for at least thirty minutes each week in the home.

THE ORGANIZATION—The Home Department is an integral part of the school and should be carefully organized. There should be a superintendent of the department and he should be appointed or elected in just the same way that all other officers of the school are appointed. This superintendent should be a consecrated, earnest Christian with energy, tact, patience, courage and perseverance for he will need all of these qualities if he makes a success of the work.

There should be as many visitors to assist the superintendent as are required in order to cover the ground. Each member will be visited at least once a quarter when he will be supplied with a quarterly which will assist him in the study of the lesson, and which, when the report of the work he has done, will be taken and his offering received. The superintendent should make complete reports, regularly to the school.

TO MAKE A BEGINNING—The superintendent should first study his field, which is the whole parish of the church. Select the names of all persons in any way affiliating with the church who are not already in the Bible school and seek them as members. After that the field is without limit and all who are not attending any church or school may be invited to join.

Anyone is eligible to membership, regardless of age or conditions.

ASSIGNING THE WORK—These prospective members should be arranged in groups according to their location and each group should be placed in charge of a visitor who will be responsible for that group. It will help greatly if, just as the work is starting, the pastor will preach a fitting sermon in which he makes a thorough explanation of the work and points out its advantages.

THE SCHOOL ITSELF INTERESTED—It is very important to have every member of the school enlisted to help in building up the Home Department. Even the children in the lower grades may give great help by telling father and mother and others about it and urging them to join the Home Department. Many times their influence is the strongest one that could be brought to bear upon the home.

WHAT IT WILL ACCOMPLISH—It will interest the home in the school and it will interest the school in the home. It will increase the school, promote regularity of attendance, and improve the quality of the work done in the school through the increased interest which members of the Home Department will take in the boys and girls in their own homes, to see that they prepare their lessons more carefully.

It furnishes activity for many people who may be willing to do that particular kind of work. It makes it possible to gain entrance to homes which may be reached in no other way. It is a means of cheering up the "shut-in."

EVERYBODY MAY HAVE A PART—The boys may share in the work as messengers to carry papers, materials, messages and the like to the members. The girls may help by making visits to special ones who may be greatly blessed by their coming. They may read to them, sing for them, entertain them in different ways and use their ingenuity in planning little reminders of birthdays and in doing all sorts of things which will communicate some of the strength and sunshine from their own young lives to the others.

Ambition always pulls; an unselfish ambition pulls up while a selfish ambition pulls down.

LESSON LIGHTS

(From Illustrated Quarterly)

Matt. 11:16-19. Jesus here speaks of the games the children played in the streets and the open places in the city. He compares that generation of the Jews to a set of sulky children who would not join in any of the games. The others called to them "We played 'weddings' and you would not join; we played 'funerals' and you still kept away. We cannot please you." These were among the favorite games of the children. Then he goes on to say that John came and lived a very ascetic life, not like other people, and the Jews said "He hath a devil." Then Jesus himself came living among men and doing as they did in all innocent things. And they called him "a winebibber, a friend of sinners," and therefore their partner in crime.

Mark 2:18. Were fasting at the time, so that the banquet was held on a fast day, and the contrast between the feasting of Jesus and his disciples and the fasting of the hungry onlookers naturally called out the question, Why do the disciples of John ... fast, etc. Why are your disciples less religious?

The Social Christ. By his very presence Jesus showed the spirit that animated him. It was a very different spirit from that which animated John the Baptist. John was an ascetic and withdrew from human society. This was all well enough for John, but it was not the best spirit for others. To do the most good in the world we must not withdraw from it and so try to escape temptation and live holy lives. Men have tried this thousands of times. In every religion there have been (and still are) men who think that to be holy they must separate themselves from their fellowmen, and go to the desert to live. The result has been that men have lived in cells alone, or have gone to monasteries, and women to convents, so as to be truly holy. The results in many cases have been most pitiful. The abominations of ascetic life have been the scandal of the church, and so bad did these abodes of men become that in many countries they had to be suppressed by the strong hand of the law. In this connection it is well to note the celebrated St. Simon Stylites, who lived in the fourth century. He was an ascetic and at first lived in a hut, but later on had a pillar built that was 70 feet high. To this he climbed, and there he lived, never coming down for 30 years. Crowds assembled at the foot of this pillar to hear what he had to say. I much fear that this stimulated his pride. His example was followed by others who wanted to be specially "holy," and one man actually lived for seventy years on the top of this pillar, without coming down once. But all this was mere folly, and these men would have done much more good in the world if they had followed the example of Jesus, and had mingled with their fellowmen, living goodly lives among them. It was in this way that our divine Master lived, and this is one reason why his influence has been so strong for good. Not by going out of the world, but by living godly lives in the world can we best influence it for things that are Christlike and holy. God wants us to be happy in this life, and that is the truest happiness which tries to help its fellowmen and goes among them in the spirit of him who "went about doing good."

"There is little danger with any of us that we shall be too ascetic. Our danger lies in so mingling with the world that we are contaminated by its evil spirit. Against this we must be on our guard. Ours is to try and purify that which is impure, and make unselfish that which is selfish. If in this way we try to copy the example of our blessed Lord, we shall be doing the greatest amount of good possible."

Fast Days. Christ does not condemn fasting. He sees in it the inevitable and natural expression of sorrow, and an aid to the conquest of temptation and the purification of the soul. He knew his disciples would have ample time and occasion for it, and he would strengthen them for their trials by filling their lives full of joy while joy unmarred by grief and persecution was possible for them. But he did not advocate definite fast days whatever one's feeling, merely to show others that the law was being kept.

The Play Spirit. Play the game! Do not be so ready to criticize those who are either more joyous or less joyous than yourself. Those who reject Christianity for either reason are without excuse; for it sings joyous strains and mournful strains, presents a bright side to win and a dark side to warn, calls to repentance and welcomes to faith, offers heaven and threatens hell—and they find fault still.

"You cannot take Christ's yoke upon you, or bear his burdens—and therefore you cannot prove them to be easy and light—till first of all you have entered into this rest which he so freely gives. If you are first perfectly rested, then you can work. I have before told you how the change, which our Lord has made in the Sabbath, is indicative of the change which he has made in our life. The law says, "Work six days, and then observe the seventh as the Sabbath"; but, under the gospel, the arrangement is, "Rest on the first day before you have done a stroke of work. Just as the week begins, take your rest, and, after that, in the strength derived from it, and from the grateful motives which arise out of that one blessed day of rest, give to the Lord the six days of the week." There is a change from law to gospel indicated in that very change.—Spurgeon.

The Sabbath of the Soul

"Work is not all, however much we need The stress of toil, the sobering hand of care, Compulsion strong, enforcing us to bear The heavier burden with the lesser need. Shall work be all? Shall man no longer heed

The whisper of the help from elsewhere Of vibrant strength the weakest soul may share?

"Shall toil-dimmed eyes God's promise fail to read?

The soul must keep its Sabbaths and renew The inner life that makes the outer strong, By finding in the Infinite its rest. Let not the good obscure the best, its due; The hours of work if they be not too long Are good. The Sabbath of the soul is best."

Fullness of Joy.—"The Master is always giving something better. As the taste is being constantly refined, it is provided with more delicate and ravishing delights. The best of earth will be far below the simplest fare of heaven."—Rev. F. B. Meyer, D.O. If we live with Christ here, and rejoice in the recreation he appoints and approves, we shall find our joys ever increasing till they reach the perfect and unending bliss of our celestial home.

Why I Don't Pray More

Ray J. Klingensmith, National Quiet Hour Superintendent

I have asked this question in reference to other folks too often. Last month I decided for once to do some thinking for myself. So I am now solving my own problem and at the same time assuming that others are like me in this respect.

In the first place, I don't pray so extensively because I haven't time.

Now I'm not at all equipped to prove how busy I am by bringing forth my accomplishments for display. I fear they might not substantiate my statement. I merely state truthfully that I'm busy all the time. If I consider taking an hour for prayer each day I will have to miss a Radio program, a sermon study, or an hour's "keeping posted" with the papers. In fact, I would have to re-arrange my schedule. This of course would be absurd as I am doing too much for the Lord to pause for an hour without being apparently active! So as I reasonably and calmly excuse myself for not praying more. I perhaps intentionally forget that there are six individual emphatic arguments against my assumption. In the first place there is that man of prayer known as Baxter. Then there is another statue to prayer known as Luther. Then there is another known as Whitefield. Then there is Wesley, Finny and John Knox. Every man of them disproves my reasoning. These were heroes of faith and men who wielded prayerful convictions. They carried burdens and problems so infinitely above mine that I am embarrassed when I say I am too busy to pray. These were so busy that they couldn't help praying; I am so busy that I can't pray! These were busy for God. I think I am! So, if I say I am too busy to pray, I merely venture some of my conceit as to my tremendous importance. Why I'm even busier than John Knox was.

Well, my second reason for not praying more than I do is that I don't have enough to pray about. I feel that since things are working out my way I shouldn't have need of an hour with God. Of course if I am in trouble that's different. But why should I spend an hour with God when seemingly I don't need it? I guess I forgot though that God's Word says that the strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak. And likewise Jesus, when Satan greatly desired Peter, prayed for him. And St. Paul made mention daily of the churches in his prayers. According to some of these implications, if I am so strong that I don't need prayer for myself, why I'm just the one who ought to be praying for the rest. Such men as were more successful as to the mastery of little things were just the men who were concerned about the unsaved and the weak and the maimed, etc. So I am very shallow if I say I don't pray because I don't need to.

Finally, if I can't say that my barriers to prayer are lack of time and lack of need, I must find some other solution. So I'll call it this: Too nervous.

As to what makes me nervous, I just say I'm too busy. I have too much on my mind, etc., etc. I think in the final analysis I am compelled to remember that Satan has tried to win and keep man from God since man has been on this earth. He failed to prevent the birth of Christ; he failed to prevent the life of Christ; he failed to prevent the sacrificial death of Christ. Now the best and most effective piece of work he can do with us Christians is to temporarily keep us from God. And so he sees to it that we are busy, and he sees to it that we become self satisfied, and he takes care of the restlessness too. He starts as a subtle serpent and gets as bold as a roaring lion. If he can't trick me into believing I'm too busy, or that I don't need it, he roars around with impossible worries and problems that never should trouble me. So there are a few reasons why I didn't pray more; and all of them are that I never before got down to serious thinking about it; I didn't think through Satan's trickery.

dence. Two more residences of brick will be needed at Yaloke in order to properly house an adequate station staff.

On June 6th, curtains had been hung, native-made floor mats laid, etc. We regret greatly that while we enjoy this house of brick, Mr. and Mrs. Foster are still dwelling in a mud house.

On June 9th was celebrated Mrs. Foster's birthday. It was a time of rejoicing and fellowship.

During the month of June we were also favored with a call from Mr. Ajax, former administrator, now a merchant.

Lus Bissan, our faithful medical assistant, has returned to Yaloke after a vacation. He traveled for days to procure the necessary goats, hoes, chickens, knives, etc., with which to purchase Yambourou, his future wife. On his return Yambourou ran to greet him, took his head in her hands, and blew gently first in one ear, then in the other. Is she not sufficient reward for his trouble?

On June eleventh, Mr. and Mrs. Foster left for an extensive itinerating trip along the automobile road between Yaloke and Bassai, and the brush road between Bassai and Bellevue. They report blessing in the villages and find the people interested in the gospel. They then made a visit to Bellevue, where Mrs. Foster remained until the close of the Conference, after which time they returned to Yaloke.

Yama and Voloungou and Jodiwan are now full time evangelists and visit the nearby villages to bring in the old people to the special service. Recently, because of forced labor, the old people have not been able to attend, therefore the evangelists teach them at their work.

At the daily dispensary where as many as 140 patients are treated daily Yama and Voloungou are efficient soul winners, taking the names of converts, and becoming real undershepherds to them.

Many of the evangelists are attending evening classes to learn to read. Some of them are making excellent progress. Voloungou reads the Word in French and Sango and others are close to him.

The Christian schoolboys preach at the Christian Endeavor meetings.

We are expecting Mr. and Mrs. Hathaway and Miss Bickel to arrive soon upon the field. Mr. and Mrs. Kennedy, Miss Emmert and Miss Tyson will depart soon after their arrival. We do not have exact information as to the time of the coming forth of Miss Ethel Myers and Miss Grace Byron. We shall welcome them gladly also.

Mr. Bouquet, our administrator, made two visits during the month in the interest of the industrial school. His visits to the Poste are of course opportune times for him to visit us also.

The school will soon need a teacher. We are looking to God to provide, and praying that he may bless Miss Emmert on her homeward journey.

We are on the verge of admitting a new class into our school—a class of girls! Not until girls are educated will evangelists have capable wives, and homes efficient mothers.

Our evangelists and church work at Yaloke is carried on at present under difficult circumstances. The people are working seven days a week and twelve hours a day, so that little time remains to present the gospel to them. The evangelists are able to reach them to some extent at their work, or during the weary evening hours, but naturally we pray for a day of better things.

A Message from Africa

Yaloke, par Boali, par Bangui,
Afrique Equatoriale Francaise,
July 23, 1929.

Dear Evangelist Readers:

It has been long since I last wrote, and during that time news has accumulated.

A recent trip has been made to Bassai and Bellevue and before recounting the happenings at Yaloke, Station we will endeavor to depict present conditions at the other Stations. The first brick house is now under contemplation at Bellevue, the foundation being already laid. Bricks are being made and other material prepared for its speedy erection. The store house of brick is a valuable addition to the Station's security and convenience.

The new hospital building has three rooms, with broad verandas and sanitary drain. We look forward to the time when a nurse shall be supplied and the building shall be occupied.

The church building, a temporary structure of mud, is yet capacious and well-built.

Manioc, native beans, kaffir-corn, peanuts, sesame, etc., are planted upon thecession. A young orchard is developing.

The Sunday morning attendance is about four hundred. Several evangelists are in training. A women's class has been taught weekly by Mrs. Kennedy. These women also accompany her to, and assist in, the preaching services in the village.

There is no school at Bellevue, therefore no one can read, but the boys are being taught the Bible orally.

Mr. and Mrs. Kennedy are leaving Bellevue Station September first, and after brief visits at Bassai and Yaloke will proceed to America on furlough.

Mr. and Mrs. Foster will replace them at Bellevue. They recently made a trip to Bassai and Bellevue, being absent from July 11th to July 18th, preaching en route.

At Bassai, another unit of the dormitory has been begun. Some are sawing, others are bringing in logs. Chief Mamadou continues to be very ill.

A series of special meetings have been held at Bassai. Many were strengthened in the faith. Those backsliding were returned; some were converted. The meeting was concluded with the baptism of converts. The Lord is giving more grace. After the series of meetings closed, the evangelists who had come in from the outstations to attend the services, returned to their posts, Paul and wife to Baloa, Etienne and wife to Kora. Jean preaches at Batara chapel on Sundays.

The new bell at Bassai stands high upon a rock and is employed for church services only—a drum being used for other calls. During Mrs. Foster's visit, she and Mrs. Jobson preached at Delabais, while Miss Myers preached at Zolegues.

Mr. Kennedy, Mr. Foster and I arrived at Bassai July 6th. The Conference commenced the following day. Conference week is universally a full week, with four prayer sessions daily, but many events combined to make the hours of Conference at Bassai especially crowded.

The serious sickness of Aaron Yamapi who died at Bassai during the Conference, and with whom the doctor and nurse spent two hours daily, the illness of Roger Jobson, the observance of the love feast on Sunday, combined to make the Conference Week one of the busiest on record. The next Conference will be held October 8th at Yaloke, or as soon thereafter as possible.

On June 7th, at Yaloke, Dr. Gribble, Miss Tyson and Miss Emmert moved into the brick house. Each have a bedroom, and there is also a small dining room and a large living room. It rained heavily on moving day, and efforts to bring over the furnishing between the showers were in vain. We praise God for this brick resi-

Meanwhile the dispensary is the only means of grace (at the present time) which extends beyond the limits of our concession population.

The church and its activities, the industrial work and the school are all limited to the concession population and do not at present reach the villagers. But every day brings long weary lines of people—suffering in body and in soul to the hospital and dispensary. Even the soldiers come in large numbers for treatment, bringing the prisoners in their charge. While fractures, sprains, ulcers, venereal diseases, yaws, etc., are cared for, the evangelists are preaching to the patients not actually receiving treatments. It is one of the many instances in which God is able to make a way where there is no way in order that his Gospel may be preached.

Numbers are accepting the Lord Jesus daily at the dispensary. Our time of influence over them, especially over those who are not hospital inpatients is brief indeed, for once cured or helped they must return to their villages and their work.

May God multiply his workers, medical, industrial, and educational, and may each one remember as he heals a suffering body, teaches an ignorant native to minister to the necessities of his own and the missionaries' physical existence, or teaches a boy or a girl to read French, in order that some day he may read in his own language a Story beyond human comprehension—that each and every department necessary as it is, is subservient to the greatest work that a human being can be privileged to do, the preaching of the gospel. Each and every missionary is an evangelist in a very real sense of the word, all missionaries, whether men or women, are pastors, bearing upon suffering hearts their anguish for souls unborn, their solicitude for those who have but recently experienced the new birth; every missionary weighs his results not by houses built, nor lessons taught, nor bodies healed, but by souls saved. And so until we are absent from the body, but present with the Lord, we labor on, not despising to do and to teach the necessary labors and pursuits of this life, but remembering that if, "in this life only, our converts have hope in Christ, they are of all men most miserable."

Let us labor on, and let laborers be thrust forth increasingly in answer to prayer.

F. N. GRIBBLE.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

Our Lord's Greatest Apostle
was a great correspondent

FROM INDIANA TO IOWA

On September first we closed our work as pastor of the Nappanee church and took our departure to "The State where the Tall Corn Grows." We cannot say too much in praise for the Nappanee Brethren. For nearly five years it was our real pleasure to labor with these splendid people. A finer lot of folk cannot be found anywhere in the brotherhood and we never expect to be treated better by any congregation than we were at Nappanee. It was not an easy thing to just pick up and move away from this field, especially when we were urged on every hand to remain. We are happy to leave this people in the care of Brother B. F. Owen and will expect to hear some splendid reports within the near future. May the Lord bless both people and pastor.

Following the close of our National Conference we said fare-thee-well to our native state and started for Waterloo, Iowa. Our goods had preceded us by a few days and when we arrived everything was in place and we just needed to walk in and be at home. We have found here another splendid class of people who are ready and anxious to get down to work and we have reason to expect some results before long. We have offered a very definite program which includes the Bible School, Church Attendance, Prayer Meeting, Young People, Finances, Evangelism, Missions, and Personal Visitation; which was very enthusiastically accepted by the church at our business meeting. We are planning to hold our evangelistic meetings sometime in February, the pastor doing the preaching and Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Richer in charge of the music. We are looking forward to this meeting with a lot of prayer and planning and willing to leave the results with the Lord. We ask the faithful of the Lord to remember us in this field in your devotions. May our Lord graciously bless the Brethren church with many souls during this year.

S. M. WHETSTONE.

ELKHART, INDIANA

There are days in our church history which mark periods of growth and the accomplishment of certain achievements. Sunday, October 6 was one of these days.

This was Rally Day—the Sunday school rooms and auditorium were filled to overflowing. The spirit of earnestness was manifest and the determination to make this year's work best of all years.

This day was great. It was our quarterly cash offering day and this offering turned into our building fund $994—a good summer's work. This offering surely shows that no vacation has been taken in the Lord's work.

At our business meeting the various organizations reported steady progress and the keeping up of their obligations.

The church extended our newly elected pastor and wife, W. I. Duker, its heartfelt appreciation for their seven years' service and accorded them a hearty welcome as they enter upon their eighth years' work.

The hearty handshake between the pastor and his people after seven years of work meant more than any previous year. May God so direct the church through their leadership that his work may be done in his own way.

MRS. EDNA NICHOLAS.

BRUSH VALLEY, PENNSYLVANIA

September 9 we began a meeting with my Bible charts at the Brethren church of Brush Valley, Pennsylvania. The meetings lasted three weeks. During most of the time the Lord blessed us with perfect weather. The audiences were large, many walking as far as three miles to church.

In response to the invitation, that whomsoever will may come, seventeen came forward. On the last Sunday afternoon a baptismal service was held along the Allegheny River.

Brother Samuel Adams faithfully feeds this flock of God over which the Holy Ghost has made him an overseer (Acts 20: 28). Brother Adams and his good wife are both excellent singers and cared for the music of the meeting in a very acceptable manner. Brother Adams is young in the ministry, this being his first pastorate, and we feel that he has a bright future before him. God went to all of the bother of inspiring the Bible so his ministers could be thoroughly furnished unto all good works (II Tim. 3:16). Many today think they must be "fed up" on the speculations of men of past ages, thus I count it a privilege to be able to spend a few weeks with a man who takes the Bible as his rule of life and practice.

Brother Adams is also pastor of the Brethren church at Kittanning, and members from that place paid us many visits and rendered special music, for which we were very thankful. On Sunday afternoons Brother Adams preaches at a couple of school houses where his people conduct Sunday schools.

I made my home with Brother and Sister J. M. Johns and Parks Crismons and everything was done to make my stay as happy as possible. Surely the Lord, who takes note of the cup of cold water given in his name will not overlook these kindnesses to me.

The Brush Valley Brethren have a nice church building and have it equipped with an electric lighting system of their own. In response to the call to be ever abounding in the work of the Lord, some ten thousand tracts and several hundred Gospels of John were purchased for distribution, knowing that if they go forth bearing precious seed they will come again with rejoicing, bringing their sheaves with them.

Surely the Holy Spirit well knew the terrible enmity against the Word of God when he said that evil men and seducers would wax worse and worse. In recent months it seems to me that this hatred to the Bible is becoming more open. People have been killed in Italy for giving out the Scriptures and it may not be long until such a thing will be known in this country. While riding on trains I pass out Gospels. I know so much depends on the manner and expression of the face that I prayed earnestly that the Lord would give me a "good face." He answered my petition for I found little opposition among the passengers. But at one time just as I had finished a train and was returning to my seat a conductor caught up with me and gave me a piece of his mind. "What business do you have doing this? Where did you get your authority? Let me see your authority? etc. etc."

"Yes, sir," I said. "I have authority for doing this."

"Who from?" he demanded.

"From the owner," I answered.

"Owner? Owner of what?"

"From the owner of everything," I said, bringing out my New Testament.

He did not have so much more to say as I showed him that the Lord who owns everything told us in Matt. 28:19 to go everywhere with the Gospel. May the Lord have this man's soul before he takes a leap into a Christless eternity.

To God only wise, be glory through Jesus Christ for ever.

R. I. HUMBERD.

GRATIS NOTES

After a very busy summer, full of variety, and good, because of a genuine sense of freedom, we are now comfortably and happily located at Gratis, Ohio as pastor. Gratis is in the county west of my home county, and just a nice, little run from Dayton, Eaton, Richmond, Indiana, and Middletown, and not far from Hamilton and Cincinnati.

Other larger and inviting fields were open to us, but we chose Gratis. We were governed in the main in our choice by the fact that there is work to do here for the Kingdom as there is in every field. Moreover, Gratis is in Miami Valley where we have some interests from which we do not want to be far removed. And yet again, we have known most of the Gratis people almost as long as we have known the people of any of our congregations; and comprising of the most splendid and substantial people of the town and vicinity, the Gratis congregation has an enviable record for its splendid, decent treatment of its pastors through the years of its history. Besides, Gratis can boast of a very attractive, commodious church property and parsonage free of debt. What a hallowed and blissful state! No debt stalking among us like a ghost to haunt us and disturb us. This was one of the many achievements of Brother Starn during his pastorate here. As his first successor I feel disposed to call him "blessed." Then too, Gratis has displayed fine foresight and statesmanship through the years in choosing only people for places of prominence and leadership of sound, unquestionable life and motives, and she has successfully kept her doors closed against a certain modern organization which is at once a flat contradiction of the sublime and loving spirit of Jesus Christ, and which has brought most serious and almost irreparable harm to the church through recent years. And finally, Gratis being somewhat old fashioned, has kept alive in her midst the fires of democracy—something of which the Brethren church in her earlier history used to make considerable boast. The majority still receives recognition at Gratis and has a voice. She is most happily free of that pernicious thing known as minority rule. May she, under God, ever remain so!

And so, we are settled at Gratis and we are happy and ready for a big, full winter's work. Our friends will always be welcome. The latchstring always hangs out on the Gratis parsonage.

As for my successor, Brother Starn, he has done a sound, constructive work here, and he and his good wife have left a host of friends behind, both in the church and in the community. I am sure I shall enjoy to follow him. Because he is fearless, straightforward, and fairminded I expect to inherit nothing undesirable that he has left me—no "bucks" passed to me; no dirt swept in some dark corner; no skeletons behind the door. The things that belonged to him to face, he has faced, is my happy conviction. Should any pastor do less?

Gratis is at peace. There is unity and a willingness to go forward. We have a good church school under the careful leadership of Albert Flory and Lurt Zimmerman. We also have many fine young people who shall receive the very best care the pastor is able to give to them. Our plans are rapidly taking shape for the winter. We hope, by God blessing and help, to accomplish much here for the promotion of the Kingdom and the glory of God.

WM. H. BEACHLER.

In Memory of Charles R. Sensenbaugh

C. R. Sensenbaugh—Obituary

Charles Russel Sensenbaugh was born May 19, 1902, died September 28, 1929, at South Bend, Indiana, after undergoing an operation for appendicitis.

He is survived by his father and mother, one sister—Ruth and one brother—John, all of near Hagerstown. He united with the Brethren church at St. James, Maryland, at the age of 16, under the pastorate of Rev. W. R. Ronk.

In 1924 he entered Ashland Seminary to prepare for the Christian ministry, graduating from that institution in June, 1928.

In December, 1927 he was ordained to the ministry by Drs. J. M. Tombaugh and G. C. Carpenter.

On October 1, 1928, Brother Sensenbaugh entered upon the pastorate of the Ardmore Brethren church near South Bend, Indiana, where he labored faithfully until the Master called, "Come home."

At the close of National Conference at Winona Lake, he came to his home to spend a few weeks, visiting his parents and other relatives and friends. On Sunday morning, September 15, two weeks before his death, he preached to a very large and appreciative audience in the home church at St. James.

Funeral services were conducted on Thursday, October 3, from St. James church. Besides the pastor, Revs. G. C. Carpenter of Hagerstown, W. C. Benshoff of Waynesboro, Pennsylvania, and Homer Kent of Washington, D. C., were present and assisted in the service.

In the passing of Brother Sensenbaugh the church has sustained a very great loss. And may the influence of his short ministry bear much fruit.

W. S. BAKER.

The Passing of Brother Sensenbaugh

The readers of the Brethren Evangelist can be no more grieved and surprised by reading of the passing of our good brother, Rev. Charles R. Sensenbaugh, pastor of our church at Ardmore, South Bend, Indiana, than were those of us who were near his side at the time. His death came very suddenly. He became ill on Tuesday evening, September 24, with the doctors pronouncement of appendicitis and received the necessary operation the following day at noon. Apparently he was getting along nicely. Friday evening he seemed restless. Saturday morning the physician gave the information that he was not so well and his folks should be sent for. Early Sunday morning he passed away as a result of the havoc wrought by peritonitis. Friends in the church and relatives living near South Bend tried to aid his stricken parents and brother who had driven over six hundred miles only to find their loved one gone.

We are in a position to know that Brother Sensenbaugh was meeting his calling faithfully, acceptably and successfully as pastor of the Ardmore Brethren church. His life was held in high esteem by those with whom he lived. He was loved by all our pastors who knew him. He was loved as well by the pastors of the city of South Bend as is evidenced by the fact that he was elected to the office of secretary of the Saint Joseph County Ministerial Association, in which office he was privileged to function at only one meeting, and evidenced as well by the expression of tribute in the resolutions from that body, appended hereto. A preparatory service was held in the Hay Funeral Home, South Bend, before his journey homeward to his last resting place in the silent halls of death. At this service Rev. E. A. Duker, preceding pastor of the Ardmore church, spoke briefly in appreciation of his life; Dr. J. W. Lake, president of the County Ministerial Association, also spoke words of appreciation. The writer sought to direct the thought of the bereaved by asking them to remember him as one who had set his face towards Jesus Christ; his heart centered on doing his will; and a personality made graceful by the Spirit of God.

N. V. LEATHERMAN.

Resolutions Adopted by the St. Joseph County Ministerial Association in Session, September 30, 1929

Whereas God in his wise providence has called from his earthly service, our friend and brother, Rev. C. R. Sensenbaugh, pastor of the Ardmore Brethren church and secretary of this Association, Be it resolved: That we express our appreciation of his fellowship, his kindly Christian spirit and his deep interest in the work of the Association.

That we express to the members of the family, and to the church, our heartfelt sympathy, commending them to the God of all comfort, who comforteth us in all our tribulations that we may be able to comfort those who are in any sorrow, with the comfort wherewith we ourselves are comforted of God.

That Dr. J. W. Lake represent the Association at the funeral service.

That these resolutions be recorded on the minutes of the Association, and copies transmitted to the family and to the church of which he was pastor.

Signed by the Committee,

J. CLYDE FORNEY,
J. A. BURNETT,
G. S. LOZIER.

A Tribute to a Fellow Workman and Brother

It is not without difficulty that we try to pen these words given as a tribute to our brother and friend, Rev. C. R. Sensenbaugh. It was at National Conference in 1928 that we first learned to know him. The writer was then planning to leave the pastorate of Ardmore (South Bend), Indiana. This acquaintance soon ripened into a rich friendship which although death has broken the association, we believe will be enjoyed through the ages to come.

Having remained close to the field in which Brother Sensenbaugh spent his one year of pastoral and ministerial work, we met him often, both in a social way and in conference pertaining to his new work. It was through this contact that we learned to know him. Often it was our family pleasure to have him with us in the home, and his absence will be noted with personal regret.

In all our knowing him, we found him to be truly a Christian man, and I can pay no higher tribute to any man than to call him Christian. As a minister he was indeed devoted and serious in his work. This I know, that when a young man of his ability will spend the days he did in training and is then willing to go into the field of the ministry with the small material remuneration that it gives as compared to other fields of a same amount of training, it is the "Well done" of his Lord that satisfies rather than material pay.

We shall go on through life just a little stronger and with more devotion to our Lord, because we have been touched by his life.

E. A. DUKER.

An Appreciation

When I think of the life of Brother Charles R. Sensenbaugh I think how like it is unto that of our Lord's—many years of preparation, but only a short public ministry. And like the ministry of our Lord, Brother Sensenbaugh served well. Faithful was he and true to his high calling. During the twelve months, which mark the extent of his pastoral work, he endeared himself to the Ardmore Brethren and to the people of the whole community. He not only preached the Word, but he lived it daily; and it was this consistent Christian example that won the love of his people for whom he served. It was hard to have his face taken from us, but God will take his few months of earthly ministry, fraught as they were with kindly deeds and pastoral ministrations, and will make them a perpetual message to us, inspiring us all to serve the Christ whom he served so well. So while our hearts are sad, yet we rejoice that Brother Sensenbaugh did not live in vain. May God bless his sorrowing parents and friends, and may we all trust and serve and fear God more, for so often "He works in a mysterious way his wonders to perform."

A. GLENN CARPENTER,
Ardmore, South Bend, Indiana.

Rev. C. R. Sensenbaugh—An Appreciation

We were greatly shocked, recently, when word came of the sudden death of Brother Charles Sensenbaugh. It is no our purpose to indulge in empty eulogies, but it was our privilege to serve as pastor at his home church (St. James, Maryland), for several years; there we came to know him rather intimately, and we feel constrained to express something of our appreciation for his life of service.

Brother Sensenbaugh was attending the Seminary at Ashland while we were at St. James, and before we ever met him we had learned to know his parents, and found them as loyal and faithful servants of Christ as it has ever been our privilege to know; we bespeak your prayers for them in this time of sorrow. When Brother Sensenbaugh came home for his first vacation, we found him all that we might have wished—a worthy son of consecrated parents.

In many ways it was no easy matter for him to complete his work at Ashland, but he persevered under conditions that would have caused many to give up in discouragement, graduating only in June of last year.

For just about a year he was pastor of the church at Ardmore, Indiana, and the record of his work there, as reported from time to time through the columns of the "Evangelist," tells its own story of hard work and consecrated work for the Master.

Truly, God's ways are not our ways, and we cannot understand why God should have called him so soon; even so, we are constrained to remark that during this short period of full time service he accomplished more for the Kingdom than many do in the course of a whole life time.

His influence on his home church is one that will not soon be forgotten; and it is the prayer of the writer that more of our ministry and laymen might be willing to lay down their lives daily in the same spirit of humble and unassuming service—not for gain, or personal honor and glory in a prominent place, but for the glory of Christ and the advancement of his Kingdom.

MORAL DISTINCTIONS

In the Authorized Version of the New Testament, Philipians 1:10 reads, "That ye may approve things that are excellent." Dr. J. Newton Davies of Drew University, in his recently published volume of "Rightly Dividing the Word," tells us that a valid translation of the Greek may be, "That ye may appreciate moral distinctions." Fundamentally there is little difference between these two translations, but the latter presents a different aspect of the great truth than the former translation so impressively set forth.

Moral distinctions are not always easily made. We become so used to things. Much that is degrading and evil and unclean passes by without detection. In our modern cities the billboards scream at us, and the headlines of the sensational portion of the daily press flaunt the immodest and the lewd and the indecent so constantly that we almost get used to it. Vice at first was "a monster of hideous mien," but finally we become so "familiar with its face," until we pity and then endure, even if we do not go so far as to embrace it. We let it pass by unrebuked, and at last we come to the place where there is little aversion.

This is the peril of the kind of frankness of which we have written above. It drags everything out into the light until finally it gets used to everything and there is no clean and no unclean, no moral and no immoral. Paul writes of this loss of the power to make moral distinctions in the last portion of the first chapter of Romans. The pagan world got so used to evil that it "changed the glory of the uncorruptible God into an image made like to corruptible man, and to birds, and four-footed beasts, and creeping things," and hence, "God also gave them up to uncleanness through the lusts of their own hearts, to dishonor their own bodies between themselves."

It is the failure to make moral distinctions that makes puritan movements necessary. Evil has become so blindly tolerant that there must be a counter intolerance to restore the balance. No peril besets the modern Christian as the peril that he will lose the power to make moral distinctions; and there are few prayers that we need to pray for ourselves and each other more than the prayer that Paul prays in this verse.—California Christian Advocate.

FINDS CHINA CHURCH IN PERIL

In an address to missionary leaders assembled in the New York offices of the Foreign Missionary Conference of North America last month, Dr. C. Y. Cheng, moderator of the United Church of China and secretary of the China National Christian Council, stated that the church in China has been much affected by the difficulties and unrest of China during the past few years. The political changes, the activities of the communists, the intellectual changes and the anti-Christian movement especially among the younger student classes have all left their mark on the church. Some of these are of course good. There is less self-complacency and more of the attitude of an humble seeking after improvement and for guidance as to the next steps. There is a realization as to wherein the church has failed. There is also an increased emphasis on essentials. On the other hand the disturbed conditions of the country have been unfavorable to religion. Some among the younger element have even gone so far as to advocate discarding the church and organized religion, while still affirming their allegiance to Christ. There is also a general lack of spiritual growth which gives cause for concern and a sense, in many places, of futility. Many feel an uncertainty growing out of this sense of failure that is paralyzing to progress. If the church does not quickly do something to help this situation, Dr. Cheng believes its very life will be threatened. The Five-year movement is the answer to the universal need on the part of native Christian leaders and missionaries as expressed in the regional conferences recently held in nearly all parts of China. The aim of the movement is to build up the membership of the church, but at the same time to make sure that each new member really understands what it means to be a follower of Jesus Christ.—Christian Century.

SHADOWS HERE

Let a man get but one glimpse of the King in his beauty, and then the forms and shapes of things here are but the types of an invisible loveliness,—types which he is content should break and fade. Let but a man feel the truth that goodness is greatness, and there is no other greatness, and then the degrading reverence with which the titled of this world bow before wealth, and with the ostentation with which the rich of this world profess their familiarity with title, all the pride of life, what is it to him? The love of the inward, everlasting, real, the love that is of the Father annihilates the love of the world.—Rev. F. W. Robertson.

find the way opened to them very definitely I believe. To all others I would say that either the way will not be open or if even apparently it does seem to open, circumstances will disclose oftentimes that the whole step was a mistake and that one had better serve God and the church well as a layman. Perhaps the very fact that the man referred to in the question has a large place to fill locally should be sufficient proof that that is the very place God desires him to serve.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

WELCOME TO ASHLAND

To the ministers and laity of the Ohio Brethren churches, Greeting:

The Brethren church of Ashland will be your host at the State Conference, October 22-25. We wish to extend to all a hearty welcome to be present. We will do our best to make your stay pleasant and we trust you will come. We will furnish lodging and breakfast free and the ladies of the local church will serve luncheon and dinner at a very moderate cost.

Come to Ashland when the College is in session. See us at our work. Come, too, to help make the Conference a success. Every minister should be here for the help he can render. Every church should be fully represented. Here in Ohio our churches are widely scattered and for that very reason it is difficult to have a large attendance. But Pennsylvania churches are just as widely scattered and yet in spite of that they have large gatherings at their State Conference.

Come on, Ohio! Let us awaken to our privileges and our duties. Ashland bids you welcome if you come. More we can not do. Let us hope that every church may be represented. All roads lead to Ashland next week. And the roads are good. May the Lord bless all who come and may he give us a good conference. The Ashland church through its Official Board invites you.

J. A. MILLER, Moderator.

WATERLOO, IOWA

The Brethren church at Waterloo will observe Holy Communion on Sunday evening, October 27th, at 7 o'clock. All of like precious faith are invited to enjoy this service with us.

S. M. WHETSTONE, Pastor.

SONG LEADER FOR EVANGELISM

When in need of a song leader for your special meetings write or wire

GLENN E. WAGONER,
206½ E. Lincoln Ave., Goshen, Indiana.

ASHLAND, OHIO

The semi-annual communion services of the Ashland City church will be held at the church on Sunday evening, October 20, at 7 o'clock. All members of the congregation and neighboring brethren are urged to avail themselves of this recurring opportunity to show forth anew the Lord's death "till he come."

DYOLL BELOTE,

Pastor.

TITHING EDUCATION MADE EASY

Any church may now put on a Ten Weeks' course of tithing education, right in the midst of its other activities, and at a ridiculously small cost.

The Layman Company, which has distributed many millions of pamphlets on the tithe, now announces an attractive new series, at so low a price that distribution to an entire church through ten weeks costs only two cents and a half per family.

A set of samples and full particulars will be sent free of charge upon request.

Please give your denomination, also mention the Brethren Evangelist.

THE LAYMAN COMPANY,
730 Rush Street, Chicago.

OHIO CONFERENCE

The Ohio State Conference is but a few days away, so plan at once to have a large delegation present. The program promises to be one of the best.

Every church should remember at this time these two sections from the Conference Rulings:

"Each congregation shall pay a fee of 25c for each delegate to which it may be entitled. This fee shall be paid to the Credential Committee when Credential is presented or if no delegations are chosen an amount equivalent to the delegate fees shall be mailed to the conference secretary. Such fees shall be used to defray the necessary conference expenses."

"All congregations shall be entitled to lay representation when properly accredited, on the basis of one delegate for each 25 members or fraction thereof above 15."

L. V. KING, Secretary.

THE TIE THAT BINDS

KLINE-WEEKS—Mr. Robert E. Kline and Miss Gwendolyn Weeks were united in marriage at the very beautiful Victoria M. E. church at 4:00 P. M. on August 3, 1929. This event brought together two of the prominent Christians of Dayton. For some years Mr. Kline has been the organist at the First Brethren church, Dayton. At present he is both organist and director of music. He is also organist at the N. C. B. Auditorium. Miss Weeks has always been very prominent in church and social circles, being one of the outstanding leaders in the city in the Girl Reserve work, as well as a teacher in the city schools. The ceremony was performed by the writer. R. D. BARNARD.

YINGLING-DEETER—At the study of the Dayton Brethren church on the morning of August 17, 1929, Mr. John C. Yingling and Mrs. Nora Deeter took the vows which made them man and wife. Mr. Yingling is a very earnest worker in one of the large United Brethren churches here, and is a man of sterling quality. Miss Deeter has for many years been a faithful teacher, member of the choir and general worker in the Dayton Brethren church. She is a sister of Miss Minnie Deeter who spent a number of years in Africa in our mission work, who was one of those in attendance at the wedding. The ceremony was performed by the writer. R. D. BARNARD.

DANIELS-WANDEL—Miss Gladys Wandel, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Forest Wandel of Homerville, and Mr. Daniel Daniels of Leroy, Ohio, were united in marriage at the home of their pastor, on September 20, 1929. Mrs. Daniels has had an active part in the work of the church at Homerville, having been superintendent of the Sunday school for term and now acting as pianist. The wedding was their home for the present with the groom's parents. May God richly bless this union and give them long years of useful service in his work. GEORGE PONTIUS.

IN THE SHADOW

RUFF—Mrs. Esther Ruff, daughter of Samuel and Catherine Dier and widow of the late Geo. A. Ruff, died at her home in North Georgetown after an illness of several years.

She lacked 3 days of being 88 eight years old. She was a good mother, the children she fostered and was a charter member of the Brethren church of North Georgetown.

Funeral services were conducted by the writer in the Brethren church of North Georgetown. ALVIN BYERS.

TROGDON—Joel P. Trogdon was born in Little Rock, Arkansas, November 17, 1851, and died at his old home, 15 miles south of Fort Scott, Kansas, September 25, 1929, at the age of 77 years, 10 months and 11 days. He was a son of a Methodist minister, the Rev. Ura Trogdon and wife, with whom he came to Kansas in 1861 and settled on the same place where he died, having lived on the place for 68 years.

He was married December 17, 1878, to Miss Susan Humphreys, who survives him. He is also survived by the following children: Walter C. Trogdon, Girard, Kansas; Mrs. Elsie McWilliams, Patee Station, Kansas; Wade Trogdon, Grimsaw, Alberta, Canada; Frank Trogdon, Arcadia, Kansas; Mrs. Bertina James, Arcadia, Kansas; Mrs. Alta Dial, Coffeyville, Kansas; one daughter, G. E. Texas, to which he leaves 15 grandchildren. All of the children were present for the funeral except Wade of Canada.

He was highly esteemed in the community where he had resided nearly all of his life. He was a good neighbor, ready to help in any time of need, and was very devoted to his home and family. The funeral was conducted by the writer in the Baptist church of Cato, Kansas, September 29, 1929, assisted by the Rev. G. E. Texas, and a host of friends who were saddened by her departure. Mrs. McPherson had been a member of the Baptist church for many

L. G. WOOD.

McPHERSON—Mrs. Elizabeth McPherson was born in Newton County, Missouri, March 27th, 1872, and departed this life September 26th, 1929, at the age of 57 years, 5 months and 23 days. Miss McPherson was married to George McPherson in Fort Scott, Kansas, March 25, 1892, to which union was born one daughter, Mrs. Nina Simpson. She deceased had resided in this vicinity about 40 years and was well known and respected.

There survive her, the husband and daughter, one grandson, Donald Simpson, and three sisters, Mrs. Dollie Christal, Fort Scott, Kansas; Mrs. Marcella Allen, of Chickasha, Oklahoma; Mrs. Ruth Stuntz, of Kansas City, Missouri, also one brother, Jesse Weddler, of Texas, and a host of friends who are saddened by her departure. Mrs. McPherson had been a member of the Baptist church for many years. She was very quiet and unassuming, and her many virtues, discovered in her life bear a character of the Christian life. Her funeral was conducted by the writer, who is so old friend of the family, at the home, 10 miles south of Fort Scott. May the beauties of her Christian character be cherished, and find expression in the lives of those who loved her. The body was laid to rest in the Pleasant View cemetery. L. G. WOOD.

BISHARD—Mrs. Wilma Bishard was born in Warren County, Ohio, April 23rd, 1876 and died at her home in Fort Scott, Kansas, September 29th, 1929, at the age of 53 years, 5 months and one day.

She was the widow of Dudley H. Bishard who preceded her in death by one year and a few days. When 2 years old she came to Bourbon County, Kansas, and the family settled in the Maple Grove neighborhood. She was married to Dudley Bishard on December 23rd, 1896, and had lived in Fort Scott for 27 years, was well father and highly respected by all who knew her. She accepted Christ as her Savior many years ago and was a member of the Baptist church.

Mrs. Bishard was a home loving mother, always interested in home and family, and made her home attractive by her beautiful needlework, and many other ways as only a true mother can do.

The funeral was held from the Bishard home in Fort Scott, Kansas, by the writer. Many beautiful floral offerings were made as an evidence of the esteem in which she was held. Burial was made in the family lot at the Evergreen Cemetery. L. G. WOOD.

KOONTZ—Paul M. Koontz was born February 13, 1894 and departed this life September 23, 1929, at the age of 35 years. The major part of his life was lived in Washington, D. C., where he was well known. Elder J. H. Koontz, was pastor of the Washington Brethren church, that he joined that church and he has always retained a lively interest in it, his presence being witnessed there a short time before he died. The deceased was married in 1917 to Helen A. Foote, and some time thereafter the two moved to Baltimore, where Mr. Koontz was employed as an engine man in the Fire Department. He became a member of the Evangelical church of Baltimore.

He leaves to mourn his loss, his wife, Helen A.; one son, Paul Monroe; a mother, Mrs. Anna; four sisters, Mrs. C. C. Dooley, Mrs. A. A. Hileman, Mrs. J. R. James, Mrs. J. H. McGuire; one brother, Wade C., and a host of relatives and friends. He was a faithful husband and father, a congenial neighbor, an upright citizen, a Christian gentleman. Funeral services were conducted by Rev. Warner, pastor of the deceased, with Rev. Teeter, pastor of the Protestant Episcopal church, and the assisting interment was made in Baltimore. HOMER A. KENT.

STOCKTON—Alex Raymond Stockton was born November 28th, 1861, in Paulding County, near Paine, Ohio. He departed this life September 19th, 1929, aged 21 years, 9 months and 21 days.

When he was one year old his parents and their daughter, Electa moved from Paulding County to Bryan, Ohio.

At the age of twelve years he made the great confession and united with the Brethren church where he retained his membership until death. He leaves to mourn his departure two grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. William Stockton of Flint, Michigan, his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Ray Stockton, a sister, Mrs. Electa Oxerider, and a brother, Victor Stockton, all living near Bryan. Besides these there are many relatives and a host of friends.

Just what was a kind and obedient son, a congenial friend and was held in the esteem of those who knew him.

Services were held in the Brethren church, with the pastor, the undersigned, officiating. Burial was in the Brown Cemetery. O. C. LEMBERT.

EBERLY—Mary Ann Lehman, daughter of Solomon and Nancy Eberly was born October 9, 1854, in Williams County, Ohio, and died October 10, 1929, at her home, September 18th, 1929, aged 74 years, 11 months and 9 days.

In the year of 1872 she was united in marriage to John A. Eberly. This union was blessed with six children, five of whom are still living. A daughter, Anna, preceded her mother in death nearly twenty years. Mr. and Mrs. Kerr spent their entire lives in Williams County. Mr. Kerr answered the inevitable call and passed on to his reward May 2, 1900.

In 1917 she was united in marriage to John A. Eberly. She leaves to mourn her departure one sister, Mrs. Hattie Hendricks, her husband, John Eberly, five children, four boys, Jesse, Melvin, John, and Harry, and one daughter, Mrs. Minnie Fisher, all living in or near Bryan. There are twenty-four grandchildren and four great-grandchildren. Besides these there are other relatives and a host of friends.

She was a devoted mother and a faithful wife about forty years ago and has remained faithful until the end.

Services were held in the Brethren church, with the undersigned officiating. Burial was made in the Brown Cemetery. O. C. LEMBERT, Pastor.

BEAL—Brother Asa R. Beal, third son of Daniel and Leah (Rhodes) Beal, was born in Richland County, Ohio, January 12, 1858, and died at his home, this life August 8, 1929, making the length of his earthly pilgrimage 72 years, 6 months and 24 days. He was united in marriage to Mary A. Leedy, daughter of David and Susan Leedy, February 18, 1883. To this union one son was born, who died in infancy.

Brother Beal united with the Brethren church at Ankenytown, Ohio, in November, 1883, and remained a faithful and valued member to the day of his death. During the writer's pastorate at Ankenytown, he was one of our most valued friends and has continued as such.

The deceased lived all of his life in Richland and Knox counties, with the exception of about one year which was spent in the state of Michigan.

The welfare and comfort of others was a greater concern to him than his own welfare and his life was one given in the service of others, this built for him a large circle of friends among whom he will be greatly missed. He was laid away in the very beautiful cemetery at Ankenytown, Ohio.

He leaves to mourn his home-going, a wife, three brothers: C. Beal of Ankenytown, H. B. Beal of Mansfield, and Dr. John Beal of Canton, one sister, Ida Weymiller of Belleville, Ohio, and many friends. R. D. BARNARD.

XXVI—LOVE, THE DYNAMIC IN WITNESSING

By W. A. Gearhart, Home Mission Secretary

God is love. God gave his most treasured gift in his Son. This he did because of his incomparable love for us. He continues to manifest this wonderful love by graciously and bountifully supplying the daily needs of his children.

God has a very definite plan for all creation, conceived in love. Man or Satan can not defeat it. Witnessing for Christ is an outstanding part of this divine plan, and love should be the impelling motive. Love is powerful and can never fail. Any other motive assuredly could not be ideal. The Great Commission given by our Lord before his departure for his heavenly home, was clearly a home mission task, but it also included just as clearly all races in all parts of the world, for our God is no respecter of persons. Thank him for that.

Speed, in our endeavor to witness for our Lord, has always been entirely too slow. Greater love will speed us up. Man is continually and zealously striving to travel faster and faster until we marvel and really wonder where the end will be. Why not speed up in carrying the most wonderful message given to mankind? Greater love will accomplish this.

The early disciples seemingly were too prone to stay in Jerusalem, when the commission was to go everywhere. Persecution speeded up the good work and kindled in their hearts, a more fervent love which was the dynamic in making their witnessing so effective. How wonderful it would be if God's children today would go or send in the power of love. An excellent opportunity is rapidly approaching—THANKSGIVING TIME. Will you go or send? Pray about it.

THE "Dogma" of Evolution

Science and religion are alike in some respects. For instance, both have their "dogmas," and in both you will find the "orthodox" and the "heterodox" the "true believers" and the "heretics."

One difference is that it doesn't take much courage to be a heretic in religion today. Heterodoxy here is rather the popular thing. Deny some fundamental truth of the Christian Faith, and the world will pat you on the back, call you a brave soul, and give to you a great deal of flattering publicity. But heterodoxy in the field of scientific theory is still somewhat hazardous.

Biological "evolution" is the fundamental dogma of orthodox scientific theory at the present moment, and those who question its finality are always liable to be thrust out into the outer darkness.

A former teacher of mine, Prof. J. H. Huxley, in a leading western college, a Phi Beta Kappa at Stanford University, the author of several books, and himself an evolutionist, used to say to his classes, "Evolution is not science, but rather a philosophy of science. It has never been proven, and by the very nature of the case it never can be proven. You must accept all the facts assembled by science, but you are not required to accept any particular philosophic theory which purpose to explain those facts." For his very fair attitude in this matter, this professor was criticized severely by the orthodox evolutionists.

If you want some valid arguments against the dogma of evolution, read the thoughtful article by President Jacobs in Evangelist of October 12th.

AND No Man can shut it"

The Reverend William St. John Blackshear, rector of Saint Matthews Protestant Episcopal church in Brooklyn, recently announced that negroes are not welcome in his church.

On a Sunday following the announcement, a body of Ku Klux Klansmen attended this church for the purpose of keeping negroes from entering the sacred precincts. "We are going to help keep this a white man's church," one of them said.

The Apostle Paul, who knew something about the Church of Christ, once described it as the place "Where there is neither Jew nor Greek, circumcision nor uncircumcision, barbarian, Scythian, bond nor free; but Christ is all and in all" (Col. 3:11).

But the colored people need not worry. Jesus Christ, who founded the Church, said, "Behold, I have set before thee an open door, and no man can shut it" (Rev. 3:8). Not even the Knights of Ku Klux Klan. Any church whose door can be closed to a single hungry soul is not the Church of Christ.

A UNIVERSITY of Atheism

The Soviets of Russia have opened with elaborate ceremonies the world's first University devoted to the teaching of atheism. There are three hundred students.

The Bolsheviks are very dumb about some things. They ought to know that only atheists will attend a University of Atheism.

Unbelievers in our own country have a much more efficient system. They let the believers found the Colleges and then insinuate themselves into the faculties, boring from within.

THE Problems of Christian Science

Devotees of Mrs. Eddy, the dead leader of a religion which says there is no death, find it hard to get around the stubborn facts of empirical experience. As President Mullins once wrote:

"You may call things by any names you wish and it will not affect experience. Christian Science says that all is mind, that a cobble-stone, for example, is simply an idea and not a real piece of matter. We will suppose that some one hurls it and it strikes your head and sends you off for relief. Then you have an experience in the realm of the ideal. You have an ideal stone, striking an ideal head, raising an ideal bump, producing ideal dizziness and pain, and requiring the application of an ideal liniment, which produces an ideal cure, and affords you an ideal satisfaction and peace of mind. But all this does not in the slightest degree alter the experience itself. And if you were going to rear a philosophic system on the principle deduced from sudden contact of cobble-stones with human craniums, you would be compelled to take this concrete experience to begin with."

Several years ago, while Mrs. McClain was working with one of the Los Angeles schools, a little girl about seven years of

Questions & Answers

Conducted by
J. Allen Miller

Readers are invited to send in suitable questions, which will receive consideration as space permits.

52. Give a working definition of what you consider to be the nature of the Christian Church. S. H. B.

This answer must of course be found in the New Testament. Jesus himself spoke of the Church only on two occasions. But both are significant. The first was upon the occasion of Peter's great confession at Caesarea Philippi. Here he said, "... Upon this rock I will build my Church; and the gates of Hades shall not prevail against it." Mt. 16:18. Here two inescapable characteristics of the Church appear. They are: 1. Jesus is the Builder of the Church; 2. The Church is an impregnable structure. To be sure this is a metaphor but it is a favorite one. Thus in 1 Tim. 3:15 we have the remarkable words, "... That thou mayest know how men ought to behave themselves in the house of God, which is the Church of the living God, the pillar and the ground of the truth." The Church is of Christ's own building and no power can prevail against it to make for its overthrow. It is well to remember this statement. The second reference which Christ made to his Church is in Mt. 18:17, where he lays down for all time the way of reconciliation between brother and brother. The Church, His Church, is the final arbiter of fellowship between Christian brothers.

The careful Bible student will note that immediately upon his great statement in each instance there follow identically the same words. Compare Mt. 16:19b and 18:1-8. But such a Church with such unlimited prerogatives bestowed by her Lord himself must be a Church Spirit-led, devoted to her Head and utterly responsive to his will. A third mark of the Church here appears, namely, that the Church is the meeting-place of saints; it is the place where Christ dwells and where he meets with those who have fellowship with him, "where Christ is." We read just a few verses farther on, Mt. 18:19-20, of the nature and spirit of this pure fellowship which may be had in Christ's Church.

When we come to the Acts and Epistles the references to the Church are numerous and we can not here enter upon anything like a full discussion of the whole teaching. Under a favorite figure the Church is described as the "body" of Christ. Christ is himself the Head of this body. Col. 1:18. The character of the Church is beautifully portrayed in Eph. 5:22-33. It is plain from all the teachings of St. Paul and others that the Church is a body of Believers in Christ with a complete and full organization. That there is a divine order in the Church in the way of appointments, that is, a body of belief and a fixed standard of rectitude, a group of ordinances to be observed and an order of worship to be followed, is all evident from a study of the Epistles and of Apostolic practice.

I wish to make a few observations in closing this most inadequate discussion in reply to the question. I believe it to be the highest prerogative of a man or woman or child to belong to the Church of Christ. I believe the Church to be the conservator and propagator of the Gospel, the TRUTH of God revealed in our Lord Jesus Christ. Accordingly I believe in the mission of the Church in the world as of divine appointment. I believe it to be my duty as well as my privilege to do all in my power to extend the influence and progress of the Church in the world. I have no right to malign or slander or traduce this "Ecclesia" which is the "Body of Christ." False professors I may attack, resist, and under certain conditions even denounce as perverse and destructive of the Gospel. But they are not and never have been of the Church. MY GREATEST INTEREST LIES IN ATTEMPTING A BIT OF CONSTRUCTIVE WORK FOR THE CHURCH IN THE LORD'S NAME.

What the Church Needs to Make It More Efficient

We are not indicting the church, nor calling in question its great worth and work. It is God's church and under his blessing it has accomplished a work of incalculable worth and has influenced human history for good as nothing else has or can. It is the greatest institution in all the world and it alone has come to men with the message and power sufficient to lift them out of the mire of sin and wretchedness on to a solid foundation of righteousness and true holiness. And the church is destined to succeed because divinity is back of it. The Lord Jesus, who established it, declared that the gates of hell should not prevail against it. His word is its assurance of final victory. His constant presence is the guarantee that it shall ultimately fully accomplish the work set before it. But God works through human agency. While the church is divine, it is also human, and the speed of its progress and the efficiency of its work depend on its human constituency. That human element being what it is, it is well for it ever and anon to be brought face to face with fundamental ideals and aims and made to consider the needs and requirements for its greater efficiency.

The following points of emphasis may not cover the whole ground of the church's fundamental responsibility, but they extend far. And we present them with the greater confidence because they are not original with us, but represent the basic elements of a new district conference program being studied this week by the churches of Ohio. The machinery by means of which the churches of this district may launch this program, if it is adopted, may not be of general interest, but the points here emphasized are of universal concern, for we believe they are among the things that the church needs to make it more efficient.

In the first place, the church needs to give itself very earnestly to the building up of a deeper, more vital, more intelligent spirituality. Its membership needs,—shall we not make it more personal and self-inclusive?—we need to grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. We need to cultivate a greater capacity for God; we need to know him more intimately and daily seek to grow into his likeness. This may seem too platitudinous and simple with which to begin the building of a challenging program, but, while we grant that it is not new, it is nevertheless a fundamental and timeless demand of the individual and of the church that would have power. A vigorous, vital spirituality is the one first essential to efficiency now as it was when the church was first commissioned, and now as then the first requirement is "Tarry . . . till ye be endued with power." Wait till ye get the mind of Christ, the spirit of Christ, the love of Christ. Tarry till ye come more truly to know him and his presence becomes a vital reality in your daily lives. That is the ever-present need of the church and in every age it is its greatest challenge. No ambition of the human soul is more worthy than that, and none needs stronger emphasis in the church today.

That deeper spirituality will come about most naturally if we can get our people to give more time to prayer and the devotional reading of the Word, and if the ministry will give itself more assiduously and wisely to Bible instruction. If the people are to have more of the mind of God, they must have more of the word of God and must have more fellowship with him in prayer. The church has no greater need than this. However it views its task it must approach it upon its knees. At the family altar, in the closet and in the church there must be more prayer, and more prayerful study of the word of God. Nothing will do so much as that to make the church efficient and powerful.

In the second place, the church needs greater zeal for evangelism and missionary endeavor. As the church grows more and more into the mind of Christ, it will inevitably become more evangelistic. The spirit of evangelism is one of the outstanding distinctive characteristics of Christianity. Religion before Christ came turned the eyes of the soul either inward or upward, that is, it was either self-regarding or God-regarding, seeking either the attainment of truth, holiness and peace, or the giving of worship and obedience to God. Christ came and imparted to religion a new ideal, which was to complete and to vitalize the other two, and was to turn the eyes of the soul outward. Another has said: "Our religion, to be Christ's, must needs be other-regarding as well as self- and God-regarding, and will find in the service of others the consummate way alike of glorifying God and of saving our own souls." A Christianity that is not evangelistic is not genuine and has no right to bear the name of Christ.

We have not always been as zealously and intelligently evangelistic as we ought, and herein lies a costly weakness and source of tardiness of growth. Our preachers have been somewhat evangelistic, but the spirit has not widely gripped the hearts of our laymen. Our churches quite generally have managed to hold one revival meeting a year, but we have not incorporated definitely evangelistic aims in our plans and programs for the twelve months. In this we are inconsistent. We have been very much concerned about who Christ is and about what he taught, and well might we, but our knowledge of him and of his word will not be very real until we come better to understand the passion of his heart for the lost. We have given much attention to correctness of forms and ceremonies, and that was entirely proper, but our forms will be empty and meaningless unless they are practiced with a heart throbbing with the passion of evangelism. We have been putting large sums of money into the building of beautiful church edifices, pipe organs, enlarged Sunday school equipment and the like, and we have needed them all, but these structures will become cold monuments of selfishness unless we make their chief aim the restoration of lost souls unto God. However well-ordered our church may be in every other line, if its life is not pulsating with evangelistic fervor it is not accomplishing its supreme aim and meeting the approval of the Master.

In the third place, our church needs more intelligent and devoted denominational loyalty. Denominations have had a great place in the economy of God. Under denominational zeal the truth of revelation has been preserved, a great variety and richness of religious experience have been accumulated and the kingdom of God has been extended with remarkable speed. It is true that denominationalism has shown itself at times in unchristian ways, and there are denominations that have no excuse for their separate existence, but on the whole these separate groups of God's people have been an undoubted blessing to the world and advantage to the cause of Christ. And where denominational loyalty has burned the brightest, there the kingdom of God has gone forward most rapidly. And the day of denominations has not passed. We together thank God for the passing of the bitterness and the antagonism that once accompanied denominationalism and for the unity of service and harmony of spirit that have come instead, but we believe denominations are as necessary in religion as parties are in politics. And we yearn for a more virile, intelligent and active group loyalty in our church. It is necessary for the largest success of denominational programs and for the proper support of all the general interests of the church. Our publishing interests cannot go forward without a larger support of our own publications. Our educational institutions must have our united and enthusiastic support, as also must our benevolent organizations and our mission enterprises. And at the same time it is important that there shall be built up a stronger faith in and more unswerving loyalty to our denominational beliefs and practices. Our uncompromising stand for a whole Gospel must continue to have our support and confidence, or we shall ultimately cease to have any excuse for a denominational existence. We do not advocate, however, a narrow, selfish denominational loyalty such as would exclude other groups of like precious faith. We have come to a happy day when the divided camp of the followers of Alexander Mack are beginning to realize the sin of division and to see that there is greater progress, strength and service in unity than in separate existence.

Fourth and last, our church needs a truer and keener sense of Christian stewardship. One of the most important evidences of growth that a Christian can experience is the consciousness that he is not his own, that he has been bought with a price and that henceforth he is not free to use his powers and talents, nor yet his substance, as he himself chooses, but must seek the will of Christ whose he is and whom he serves, and must also give an account of all things to his Lord. For it is required of a steward that a man be found faithful. That is indeed a real mark of progress, one that is all too infrequently seen. It is hard to frankly recognize and to practice the fact of stewardship. It goes against human nature. We like to think we are independent and are under obligation to no one. And even when we do acknowledge the principle of stewardship as a matter of theory, yet we find it difficult to bring ourselves to the practice of it. The tithe, which is the symbol of stewardship, is withdrawn because of our selfishness and unwillingness to acknowledge a plain obligation. We are willing to pay for practically everything else, but we want to take our religion free. We bear down heavily on the fact that salvation costs no man anything; it is free. And we are right, if we understand what that means. But it is not a screen behind which to hide to justify our selfishness and miserliness. Salvation is free, but it requires a tremendous amount to carry the message of salvation to those who know it not. Water as it flows from the spring in the hills and tumbles over the rocks is free, but it costs a lot to build filtration plants and to lay pipe lines to carry the water to our homes. The analogy is to be carried right over into the spiritual realm. And every man knows it without having it argued. He who will not pay his fair share of the cost of the propagation of the Gospel is simply trying to get something for nothing and is showing himself up cheap. Too many professed Christians are dealing tight-fistedly with God and the church is suffering from lack of aggressiveness as a consequence. In almost every community the church is close-run because many of those who ought to be giving it unstinted support are refusing to pay the tithe and less. And so we say, one of the most important things needful to make the church function efficiently is to get the professed people of God to recognize and to practice Christian stewardship.

The First Sunday School

We have become so accustomed to the presence of the Sunday school in our midst that it seems as though it must always have been here. But it was not so long ago that there were no Sunday schools as we know them, only a century and a half ago, and now we are about to celebrate their founding. The Baptist says:

The first Protestant Sunday school was organized 150 years ago by Robert Raikes, a little known editor of Gloucester, England. The school was not part of any church; Mr. Raikes' purpose was to take the working children of the city off the streets on the sabbath, and to teach them English and the Bible. Although at first this daring step met with much disfavor, six years later 250,000 children were attending similar schools organized by other influential men. In June, 1930, three continents will be represented in Toronto, Canada, to pay tribute to the memory of Robert Raikes and to celebrate the sesquicentenary of one of the greatest institutions in the world. A bronze statue of the founder, the gift of J. L. Kraft, a layman of the North Shore Baptist church, Chicago, will be unveiled in Toronto on this occasion.

The Christian world owes much to Robert Raikes for the founding of the modern Sunday school in 1780, and it will do itself an honor to gather together to celebrate his memory. It is doubtful if any other single institution founded by man has influenced mankind so profoundly for good. And celebrating its beginning, we do honor not to Robert Raikes only, but to all the noble line of men and women who have helped to make it what it has become.

Not to detract one whit of glory from Robert Raikes, but for the sake of accuracy, we would add that he did not establish the first of the modern Sunday schools, but thirty or forty years before, in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, in the village of Ephrata, the Brethren under the leadership of Lewis Hecker (Ludwig Hoecker) began a Sunday school that continued for some time. It is not known exactly when this Sunday school was established, but Hecker came to Ephrata in 1739, and it is presumed that he began it soon thereafter. "The materials for the building were furnished, as is recorded in the minutes of the society, in the year 1749."* Mr. Hecker was a public school teacher and at the discontinuance of the Sunday school was sixty years old.

---

The resolutions from the Mid-west district conference contains reference to a number of things worthy of mention if space permitted. Of outstanding importance is the interest expressed in the family altar. It is hoped that it will prove to be more than a mere resolution.

The Christian Endeavorers will find on their page a message from their citizenship superintendent, Brother Delbert Flora. Read it, and watch for a word from all your national officers and departmental heads. Also societies are invited to report.

Brethren W. E. Ronk and W. C. Benshoff write appreciatively of the recent Pennsylvania district conference. Some private comments that have come to us are also highly complimentary of the excellent program. The Meyersdale church was the entertaining congregation.

President Jacobs gives us another installment of College News and among other items he mentions the recent radio program given by the college entertainers, and we wish to say that we had the privilege of listening in and can bear witness to the high quality of the program. We were especially pleased with Dr. Jacobs' address.

We are calling the attention of pastors to the fact that it will soon be the time of year when we are accustomed to lift our General Home Mission offering. The Sunday preceding or following Thanksgiving is the day. The day is significant forasmuch as the cause is so vital and the situation is so critical. The time is at hand when we must begin to give in larger amounts if we are to do for the home church what is so necessary to make certain our denominational future. Building up the church in the homeland is a matter well worth our earnest prayer and sacrificial giving.

We have not heard from Brother G. W. Kinzie for a long time, but he favors us with a letter this week, commenting on the work he has been doing with the churches of the Clayton-West Alexandria circuit, which he has served as supply pastor for a year. Being otherwise employed through the week, he found it possible to serve them only on Sunday. But he did a good work during the time at his disposal and many appreciated his good messages. His successor is not yet decided upon.

Brother R. D. Barnard writes briefly of the work he closed at Mansfield last summer and of his entering upon his new pastorate at Dayton, Ohio. Brother Barnard accomplished a splendid service at Mansfield during his nearly six years stay there, remaining on the job there as long as he did at considerable personal sacrifice. But the people appreciated him and missed him when he left. He has already become well established at Dayton and the work is starting off in fine style. He is being assisted, until he gets acquainted with his field, by Brother W. A. Gearhart.

Dr. W. S. Bell, Endowment Campaign secretary, reports $4,000 this week added to the Endowment fund. This brings the total of the Fund up to $226,867.20. Brother Bell is now on the Pacific Coast, where he will continue the canvass of the churches in behalf of College Endowment. He stopped enroute to attend the Illiokota and Mid-west district conferences, to which programs he gave much appreciated assistance, representing the general interests of the brotherhood.

Interesting Incidents Concerning Hymns

By H. H. Smith

The value of the Church Hymnal as devotional literature, aside from its use in the service of song, has not been appreciated. The Psalms, which most of us think of solely as devotional reading, constituted the Hymn Book of the Jews. If we study the origin and history of our great hymns we shall be led to a greater appreciation of them. The following interesting incidents connected with some of our familiar hymns are gathered principally from "The Methodist Hymnal Annotated."

Many of our hymns convey important Scriptural truths, and in the hour of distress they have often brought profound comfort, as in the following instance:

"In 1831 James Martin, of Liverpool, a Wesleyan class leader of deep piety, was a passenger on the "Rothsaw Castle" when she was wrecked between Liverpool and Neumaris, when ninety-three persons perished and only twenty-one were saved. When he was floating on a plank from which several had been washed off by the tempestuous waves, he was heard singing above the roar of the sea,

"The God that rules on high,
That all the earth surveys,
That rides upon the stormy sky,
And calms the roaring seas."

"He was one among those saved, and after his rescue dedicated his life afresh to God. He became a leader of three classes and worked with untiring energy and holy zeal in the cause of God. Dying in his seventy-ninth year, after forty-five years of devoted service as a class-leader, he was heard to say in his last hours of consciousness, 'I know nothing of doubts and fears.'"

The hymn referred to above, which begins, "Come, ye that love the Lord," written by Isaac Watts, contains another verse that proved very helpful on a certain occasion, but in quite a different way:

"It is not often that a clergyman can afford to use a hymn to administer a rebuke to a contentious choir. But Dr. Samuel West, a New England clergyman, is said to have used this hymn very effectively for that purpose many years ago. A difficulty had arisen in the congregation which had extended to the choir, and it had been whispered around that the choir would refuse to sing if the pastor should announce the hymn. The pastor was quite equal to the emergency. He introduced the services by announcing this hymn. After reading it slowly and impressively, he looked up at the choir and asked them please to begin with the second stanza:

"Let those refuse to sing
Who never knew our God,
But servants of the heavenly King
May speak their joys abroad."

"It is needless to add that not only the choir but the congregation generally all joined in the singing of the hymn that day; and its use did much toward healing the strife."

The hymn with the opening words, "Come, thou Fount of every blessing," was written by Robert Robinson, who, it seems, afterward became somewhat skeptical. "It is said that a lady once quoted the hymn in his presence, and spoke of the spiritual benefit she had derived from the use of it. Robinson was deeply moved, for he was a man of quick sensibilities, and with much emotion said: 'Madam, I am the poor, unhappy man who composed that hymn many years ago; and I would give a thousand worlds, if I had them, to enjoy the feelings I had then.'"

The hymn beginning,

"Behold the Savior of mankind
Nailed to the shameful tree!
How vast the love that him inclined
To bleed and die for thee!"

was written by Samuel Wesley, the father of John and Charles Wesley, and emphasizes very impressively the grace of God in Jesus Christ. How this hymn was effectively used in the case of condemned felons awaiting execution, is related as follows:

"John and Charles Wesley made frequent use of this hymn in their evangelistic services. On July 18, 1738, Charles Wesley and Mr. Bray were locked in a cell at Newgate prison with some condemned criminals who were to be executed the next day. After praying and talking with these men who sat in the very shadow of death, Charles Wesley sang this hymn. This is the entry he makes in his Journal of that service: 'It was one of the most triumphant hours I have ever known.' The penitents were brought to know him in saving faith who had himself died between two condemned criminals and were thus made ready to face death and the issues of eternity."

"The Last Wish" is the title given to the last hymn that Charles Wesley wrote. After prolonged illness, but with "unshaken confidence in Christ, which kept his mind in perfect peace," he called his wife to his bedside and dictated to her "his last but sublime poetical utterance:

"In age and feebleness extreme,
Who shall a sinful worm redeem?
Jesus, my only hope thou art,
Strength of my failing flesh and heart,
O could I catch a smile from thee,
And drop into eternity!"

"For fifty years," says his biographer, "Christ, as the Redeemer of men, had been the subject of his effective ministry, and of his loftiest songs, and he may be said to have died with a hymn to Christ upon his lips."

A short while after the death of Charles Wesley, John Wesley preached at the Foundry church, and after reading the lesson he turned to the hymn as if to read it, but overcome with emotion he "buried his face in his hands and stood there in that solemn and impressive attitude for several minutes. Every eye was fixed upon him, and every ear listened as he then opened the hymn book and read in a most impressive manner his brother's hymn:

"Come, let us join our friends above,
That have obtained the prize."

John Wesley died with Isaac Watts' hymn of praise upon his lips:

"I'll praise my Maker while I've breath,
And when my voice is closed in death,
Praise shall employ my nobler powers;
My days of praise shall ne'er be past,
While life, and thought, and being last
Or immortality endures."

We are commanded to become fishers of men. To catch fish we must follow them to their haunts where they may be found. If sinful men will not come to church a good fisher will seek them out where they are.—Methodist Protestant.

Will Hell Freeze Over

By R. I. Humberd

Recently an editor of a western paper said that "Hell is vanishing." "As man becomes rich he sloughs off his belief in hell. Hell is needed by the poor as a place for the rich to fry in. Lazarus in the bosom of Abraham needed hell for dives." He then states that only 53% of 700 ministers believe in hell as an actual place and only 11% of students. He concludes by saying, "As religion becomes more and more the yearning in man's heart for self respect and a desire to live honestly and kindly, hell—the fear motive in religion—will disappear."

For many centuries men have believed in a heaven and a hell as an actual place. In so important a matter we want facts and since these things are beyond the reasoning power of man it must be a matter of revelation. Let us consider these statements in the light of the only source of information we have—The Word of God.

Forty-seven percent of the ministers and eighty-nine percent of the students say that there is no hell. Who says there is? Only one man has ever lived on this earth with authority to speak on this subject and he was a man of love and peace. Yet, because of the terrible reality of the condition of the lost he spake forth in the strongest language it is possible to use. Three times in the ninth chapter of Mark he utters the terrible words, "Cast into hell, into the fire that never shall be quenched," or the equivalent of these words and then he adds, "Where their worm dieth not and the fire is not quenched." These are the words of our Lord Jesus Christ and we know he never lied. In Revelation 20:15, we read, "Whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire." Surely if human language means anything at all, these words are enough to have us stop and consider where we will spend eternity.

Reference is also made to Abraham, Lazarus and the rich man as recorded in Luke 16. Again it is our Lord who speaks. This is not a parable—it is facts. There WAS a certain rich man and there WAS a certain beggar. The rich man died and was buried. That is the way they do with rich men—they bury them, have a funeral and some ministers come and tell what a good man he was. It also says that the beggar died, but it does not say that he was even buried. They may have cast him out to the potters field and let the dogs eat him. This is all we know of them, as far as earthly eyes can see, but Christ pulls back the curtain and lets us take a look into the great beyond.

One day the beggar took the last weary look at the dogs as they licked his sores. His eyes closed to earthly scenes and—what is that? What are those beautiful creatures? Oh! what a joy to fall asleep in Jesus—the angels carried him into Abrahams' bosom, into joy and comfort, into peace and contentment.

The rich man breathed his last and in hell he lifted up his eyes being in torments and seeth Abraham afar off. And that isn't all he saw for there in the bosom of Abraham he recognizes that old beggar who used to lay at his gate. Here we see that, although his body was buried on the earth, yet he could see, he could talk, he asks for water but is informed of an impassable gulf between them. He has memory and Abraham tells him to remember how he spent his life while on earth. As his mind goes back to earthly things he cries out in his agony, "I have five brethren." As, yes he well knew that they would soon come to the same terrible place. (What an awful thing to think of a father or mother bringing a child into this world and not bringing it up for the Lord.

No doubt many parents are in hell this moment with the painful thought that those innocent children that God gave them are coming to the same place of torment, and all because father or mother did not lead them to their Savior).

But Abraham informs the rich man that Lazarus will not go back and preach to the five brethren for they have "Moses and the prophets;" in other words, they have the Bible, let them heed its message. Let us remember that the rich man is not in hell because of being rich, neither do all the poor go to heaven. It is a matter of salvation through Jesus Christ, "In whom we have redemption through his blood even the forgiveness of sins." Col. 1:14.

The editor also speaks of religion as a yearning in man's heart for self respect, etc." But true Christianity is far from that. Man is a sinner and as such is lost, the wages of sin is death. (Rom. 3:23 and Rom. 6:23.) But Jesus Christ the Son of God died for our sins (1 Pet. 2:24) and the great question is, "What will you do with Jesus?" "He that believeth on him is not condemned; but he that believeth not is condemned already, because he hath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God." John 3:18.

May the reader of these words take warning and flee for safety before it is too late. "Boast not thyself of tomorrow." "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus and believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved." Rom. 10:9.

The Why of a Book

By Dr. L. L. Garber

"A good book is the precious life-blood of a master spirit embalmed and treasured up to a life beyond life," once wrote John Milton, poet and statesman. But there are books and books; books, good, bad, indifferent, so that one who is responsible for a book, feels that he ought to explain, or to make an apology for it. Recently there appeared under my name in connection with two others, Professor Carmichael, of Bowling Green State Normal College, and Professor Stuckey of Ashland College, a book, "The Creative Study of Literature." Is this "Just another Ford," or something different?

Since the ideas underlying this book are of so large and so vital importance to all persons interested in the best things,—to ministers, to Sunday school workers, to teachers, to Christian laymen and parents, alike, I am stating briefly for the readers of The Evangelist the significance and meaning of these ideas as they motivated and inspired this book and appear in it.

First, then, and generally, this book endeavors to explain, to embody, and to carry forward the new and coming stress in education. What is this new stress? Nothing less than a larger, more persistent, more effective stress or emphasis on the discipline and development of the emotional life in all education, character-building, and religious training. Of the necessity of such stress, to motivate conduct and to counterbalance the narrow, dangerous, and devitalizing over-stress on mere intellect in education, there is a growing and outspoken recognition.

When a famed university professor summed up in a brief way in a January, 1929 magazine, the chief or outstanding contributions of psychology for the year 1923, he wrote first and chiefly this:

"Psychology has shifted emphasis today from 'intelligence' to 'emotion' as the motivating force in human conduct." Notice, "as a motivating force." What a man does with his education, his power, his life, is a matter of "motivation." This motivation whether through religion or elsehow, determines whether he will become a clerk or crook, a bishop or bootlegger, a Parkes Cadman or a Charlie Chapman. "Further, the idea of the emotional makeup as an "inherited and fixed possession" has given way to an understanding of it as a more plastic natural status upon which beneficial impulses may be developed and harmful ones avoided." Hence the possibility for large and continuous development of noble emotions to motivate wise and righteous living.

This first general-fundamental idea of our book is echoed in significant statements made by many distinguished persons; as,—

Prof. William Mitchell: "The error of intellectualism is in substituting knowledge about good conduct and about beauty, for a subjective (emotional) experience with them."

Bertrand Russell: "Psycho-analysis is unquestionably right in the enormous stress it lays upon the emotional life. Given the right emotional development, both character and intelligence ought to develop spontaneously. It is, therefore, to the emotions above all that scientific education should direct attention."

Woodrow Wilson: "The world is governed in every generation by a great House of Commons made up of the Human Passions; and we should be careful to see that the Handsome Passions (emotions) are in the majority."

Prof. Robert Gay: "I believe with Emerson that the truth is not in the syllogism, but in the tragedy and the ode. The time may come when we shall conclude that pure intellect is a good tool, but a dubious master."

America's most effective criminal lawyer, in defense of the "poor little rich boys," intellectually educated murderers, said: "All teaching and training appeals not only to the intellect but to the emotions. I know that emotion is the most important part of life. I know that without it men cannot act with the rest. I know that they cannot feel the moral shocks that come to men who are educated and not deprived of the emotions."

That the outstanding disgrace of our civilization, its shameful record, is in large part at least, due to the failure to develop and discipline the emotions is evidenced by many facts. When one visits the English schools, when one observes the stress there put upon emotional elements, when one senses the atmosphere in which education moves, when one notices the reverence, the regard, the admiration the English and other Europeans pay to poet, sage, and artist, and to the great galaxy of those who have stressed and do stress the things of the spirit rather than the coldly intellectual and material things, one begins to understand why England has only one murder to our twenty and Switzerland one to our thirty-six, in ratio of population. In these countries, the "handsome passions are kept in the majority" both by a proper emphasis in education and by a serious social atmosphere which gives to the citizens a saner, safer and wiser emotional motivation.

The second fundamental idea of this book is that, next to the Bible, good literature, especially great poetry, is the most effective means of developing a right and wholesome emotional life,—an emotional life that motivates good conduct and creates that sense of kinship with an eternal order, that mysticism which is everywhere and always the foundation and accompaniment of the deepest religious experiences. Prof. Woodbury expresses this idea thus:

"The ways of the Spirit no man knows; but it is manifest that for the opening mind, whether of youth or of older years, the sense of eternity, however delicate, subtle, and silent in its realm, is fed nobly, sweetly, and happily in those poets in whom the spirit of man crying for expression unlocks the secrecy of its relation to the infinite. There, whosoever will, shall open the book of all the world, and read and ponder, shall avail himself of its wisdom and absorb its energies into his own, and become one with it in insight, power, and hope, and ere he is aware, shall find himself mingling with the wisest, the holiest, as his comrade and peer. He shall have poet and sage to sup with him, and their meal shall be the Bread of Life."

Arthur Me, the most noted writer for young people, in discussing the effects of literature in creating sentiment and building character, wrote this of the great literary men:

"An extraordinary thing happened to our ancestors as they bent over the magic pages of Dickens. They were becoming different people. A strange new light was entering their minds; a light that slowly burned away no end of their old thoughts and created in them feelings they had never known before."

In a similar way, the eminent literary critic, Stopford Brooke, writes of the work of Shelley:

"The good Shelley did in this way was very great. At the time when the democratic-liberal ideas which had culminated in the American Revolution, were dead in England, Shelley gave voice to these ideas through poetry. He threw around these ideas imaginative emotion and added all its power to the struggle for freedom. Still greater was the work he did for theology in England. He made emotion burn round it, and we owe to him a great deal of the nearer advance to the truth. The moralities of the heart in their relation to mankind; Love and its eternity; forgiveness and endurance as forms of Love; joy, freedom and justice as the results of Love, and the certainty of its victory,—these are Shelley's great contributions to humanity."

It was a wise Scotch statesman who once wrote, "If I were permitted to write all the ballads of a nation, I need not care who should make its laws." But it was an American educator who most nearly had such an opportunity and proved the truth of the statesman's sagacious saying.

Who was he? He was Wm. McGuffey, the educator who produced the series of readers upon which many of the older generation now passing were reared. These books were read, re-read, memorized, and continued, along with the Bible, the only library in many American homes. In these, many of us learned to know, to appreciate, to love the work of such masters of prose and poetry as Macaulay, Dickens, Ruskin, Tennyson, Byron, Whittier, Lowell, Longfellow. Through these we received our first acquaintance with the matchless literature of the Bible, for these books not only praised and exalted the Bible but printed many selections from it. From these we learned to love thrift, industry, honesty, and to hate waste, profligacy, intemperance, and war. How the great lines of these masters still throb in our memories! "We must educate, we must educate, or we must perish by our own prosperity. If in our haste to be rich and mighty, we outrun our literary institutions, they will never overtake us." "I need not dwell on the waste and cruelty of war! These stare us in the face like lurid meteor lights as we traverse the pages of history." "Who hath woe? Who hath contention? Who hath wounds without a cause? they that tarry long at the wine." "For at last it biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder."

McGuffey's readers were no finical "entertaining stories or fairy tales; "the idle pleasure of an idle day." They were solid, strong, reverential, joyful, sentiment-building.

So strong has been the influence of McGuffey's noble prose and poetry that a prominent government official asserts that "McGuffey put prohibition into the constitution." He avers that the direct teaching of these readers against intemperance and that the sentiments, the ideals, and the moral strength developed through their well-chosen and morally-elevating literature generated the forces that carried through this so-called "greatest moral reform of the centuries."

Not a few are beginning to recognize this truth and are inaugurating a "back-to-McGuffey movement. This month in one of the great cities of Ohio there will be organized a "McGuffey Society." The purpose of this society is big with significance and promise. It is this: "To encourage in both home and school the best in reading, embodying moral and ethical values."

A third fundamental idea of this book, "The Creative Study of Literature," is that since the proper education of the emotions is of so large importance, and improvement in the organized or unorganized study of literature will be a valuable contribution to human welfare. Hence came the effort to provide a creative method which will most effectively develop the better emotions and help the student and reader understand, love, and live the great ideals with which great literature abounds.

Out of the foregoing ideals was evolved a book which aims to provide at small cost (1) a large number of the choicest, and most inspiring short poems—everlasting poems from Shakespeare to Markham, poems especially noted for their perfection of form and elevation of tone, and for their noble sentiments and worthy ideals; (2) a statement of the function and necessity of emotions in a well-ordered and properly motivated life; (3) an explanation of the meaning of literature as the embodiment of moving emotionalized truth; (4) the presentation of a creative method that should have high value as an intellect training and as a means by which the beautiful and priceless spiritual elements of great literature may be most effectively absorbed and become in the largest way living vital realities in the lives of men and women.

The reader will pardon me if I mention yet another reason for the appearance of this book. I have had a great longing to inspire the youth of the church to which I have devoted the best years of my life. I have wished that they might thrill with the exaltation of the great spirit breathed in this great poetry. I have had a passion to save them from the superficial materialism that deadens and destroys the finer essence of life. I have desired that they might develop for the deeper things that appreciation which makes one responsive to the message of the Master Teacher. Lastly, in the words of Sir John Morley, I may say: "After all, the things that matter most, both for happiness and duty, is that we should constantly live with wise thoughts and right feelings, to which blessed companionship in great literature I have taken this opportunity to commend you."

ANGLICAN CHURCH PLANS LAMBETH CONFERENCE

The year 1930 will mark the holding of the Lambeth Conference, which, once in a decade, brings together the bishops of the Anglican communion throughout the world. The conference will be held from July 7 to August 29, and invitations have already been addressed by the Archbishop of Canterbury to the 370 bishops of the Anglican body. The central theme of the gathering is to be "The Faith and Witness of the Church in this Generation." Included in this general heading are the following concrete topics:

1. The Christian Doctrine of God
2. The Life and Witness of the Christian Community
3. The Unity of the Church
4. The Anglican Communion
5. The Ministry
6. Youth and Its Vocation.

SOMETHING NEW IN BIOGRAPHY

The latent capacities of the Negro race were never better disclosed than in the new life of the African, J. E. K. Aggrey, as portrayed by Dr. Edwin W. Smith. Dr. Aggrey, one of the foremost leaders of his race in the educational and religious field, is quoted in this volume as saying:

I am proud of my color; whoever is not proud of his color is not fit to live. I tell the Southern people of America, with whom I have lived for over twenty years, that they have a special contribution to make toward the solving of the race problem, and of the civilization of Africa. They have lived side by side with us; they know our faith, our loyalty, our honesty, our sensitiveness; they know the things we prize the most; such knowledge should be used for the extension of God's Kingdom. I want all my people, my countrymen, women and men, to be educated in the larger sense, in heart, hand and head, and thus render Africa indispensable in spiritual, intellectual and commercial products to the world.

THE AMERICAN LEGION ON A RAMPAGE

The American Legion in session at Louisville, Kentucky, adopted a resolution "demanding" that the United States Senate investigate all lobbies and especially the organizations which the Legion alleged to be engaged in propaganda tending to weaken the national defense.

Organizations named by the Legion are:

The National Council for the Prevention of War.

The Federal Council of Churches in Christ.

The Women's International League for Peace and Freedom.

The American Civil Liberties Union.

The League for Industrial Democracy.

The National Students' Forum.

The War Registers' League.

The Young Workers' League.

The Young Pioneers.

The American Association for the Advancement of Atheism.

There was some discussion about using the word "demand" but according to reports a thunderous majority vote decided to scare the Senate into action! This society of super-patriotism will have to scare many more organizations if it wishes to stop the peace talk that is going on. Why not investigate Ramsay McDonald's visit and President Hoover, Kellogg and old General Sentiment who is getting so strong in the United States?—The Christian Evangelist.

FROM WHAT ROOT IS THIS FRUIT?

In an obscure corner of a daily newspaper, on a page given mainly to advertising, appears this brief news dispatch from Tokio: "A new law abolishing night work for women and young persons was recently put into effect in Japan. The measure also reduces their day work from ten to eight and one-half hours." What lies back of that change for the betterment of laboring conditions in Japan? What caused Japan to conclude that women and children needed and deserved such protection by law? It would be more interesting than a detective story could we trace back that new law to the beginning of the sentiment which finally ripened into law, and then—one may be certain—it should be traced further back to the very heart of God. This is indisputable: The conditions of labor are best in the countries which have applied most fully the teachings and ideals of Christianity, those conditions being most horrible where Christianity is least known. Does that fact mean anything? And is there any connection between Japan's new law and the work of Christian missionaries which has resulted in the avowal of the Christian faith by many Japanese leaders and the acceptance of Christian principles by many other Japanese who have not avowed the faith? Slowly it may be, but the kingdom of heaven is coming.—The Presbyterian Advance.

RUSSIAN "GROUPS OF YOUNG ATHEISTS"

Among the depressing reports which come through the press of events and aims in the influential centers of eastern Europe, none is more distressing than the news of the Soviet government in its attempt to coerce the minds of its citizens on matters of religion. The nature of the Slav is reverent and is easily moved toward an ascent to the things of the Spirit. The Society of Militant Atheists is, as the name suggests, actively militant. In its effort to secure the allegiance of the youth of the nation, it has dropped the period of admission from sixteen to fourteen. Children from eight to fourteen will be enlisted as "groups of young atheists." Great and influential names are added to the Central Council. One of the candidates for this Council is the widow of Lenin, also Anatole Sunacharsky, commissioner of education. When the direction of educational schedules falls into the hands of avowed atheists, the doom of that nation is not distant. We may well sympathize with all troubled minds that struggle with problems of doubt; but the arrogant and irreverent and irrational must suffer the sad blight which their own vanity imposes upon them. The object is to "mobilize as many millions as possible against religion."—Thus will they destroy their own temple.—The Presbyterian.

FORTY THOUSAND VISIT AGRICULTURAL EXHIBIT

"The busy bee, the silkworm, and the hen all had their day at the Cheeloo Agricultural Exhibit, held recently in Tsinan, China. Over 40,000 persons visited this exhibit during ten days, and all the local Chinese Government schools, with one exception, sent their students and teachers to examine the better implements, and witness the demonstration of improved methods of irrigation, the elimination of pests, seed selection, and the best ways for raising poultry, silkworms and bees. Films and lectures on village, moral and social problems added variety. Other schools, as well as local business firms, cooperated by sending complete exhibits, and the new governor sent an official representative to the opening ceremony and presented a laudatory scroll."

Another evidence of the help extended agricultural workers by missionaries comes from Mr. L. M. Outerbridge, who has left his post temporarily to serve as agricultural secretary of the China International Famine Relief Commission. Up in Shansi he has experimented with drought-resisting grains and reports that dwarf kaoliang (a staple grain produce), rye, and kaffir corn give great promise. He has the responsibility of distributing seed for these provided by the Commission in famine areas.—The Congregational.

A deck of cards may be nothing more than a pile of pasteboards, but they somehow succeed in making gamblers out of young men.—Western Christian Advocate.

Our Worship Program

Daily Readings and Suggestions

(Keep with your Bible)

MONDAY

John 8:3-9. All.—Tradition has it that when Jesus stooped down and wrote on the ground, he was writing there the glaring, publicly known sins of the men who had accused the woman, and that as each man saw his own sin revealed he slunk away until only Jesus and the woman were left. Whether this is true or not, it is certain that the woman would still be unpunished if she had waited for sinless men to punish her. Yet we need not despair because of sin: if we confess our sin, he is faithful and just to forgive; and, being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ.

TUESDAY

John 8:10, 11; 3:16, 17. No more.—In this incident some suppose Jesus condoned adultery, or even that he admitted sin in himself, since he also did not condemn the woman. Jesus said he had been sent, not to condemn the world, but to save it; the woman had confessed Jesus as "Lord," he admitted her past sin in the advice to sin no more, forgave her, and, I believe, sent her forth a saved woman with the power to sin no more. What a wonderful Savior is Jesus, MY Jesus!

WEDNESDAY

John 8:12-18. The Father's Witness.—Literally, the Father bore witness when, at the baptism of Jesus, his voice was heard saying: "This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased." Again, he bore witness through the works our Lord did; but most of all, he witnessed through his loving, gentle life of service. O Father, through thy Holy Spirit, wilt thou bear witness to us and through us, that thou dost dwell in us, and hast sent us, even as thou didst send thy Son. And may many be won through thine own testimony.

THURSDAY

John 8:19-27—"If ye believe not, . . . ye shall die in your sins," Jesus warned them, but "they understood not." How Jesus must have been saddened by such occurrences! Often the minister today is likewise saddened when his people say: "That was a fine sermon," and their very manner of saying it shows that they had failed to understand his message. Let us praise God that he has given us ears to hear and understand. Read Matthew 13:6, 17.

FRIDAY

John 8:28-32. Free.—Under the yoke of Rome, the Jews longed to be free; it is a universal longing, not likely to be fulfilled in this world short of the return of Christ. But worse than industrial or political bondage, is spiritual bondage; if we continue in his word, we shall know the truth and the truth shall make us free from the law of sin and death—and without this freedom we are slaves indeed!

SATURDAY

John 8:33-47. If.—There is a sense in which God is the Father of all created things; but quite evidently, there is also a sense in which he is NOT. There are many today who claim God as their Father, to whom the world may well say: "If God were your Father, ye would love Jesus Christ more than ye love the world, and ye would hear his word!" May we, our Father, show the world by our every act that thou art our Father!

SUNDAY

John 8:48-59. Very God.—Throughout this passage Jesus repeatedly refers to his pre-existence with God, and the Jews understood his meaning so well that they took up stones, to stone him for blasphemy. Their stones did not hurt Jesus, but their action did result in untold loss to themselves. Our Father, we grieve over the insults that so many in pulpit and pew are offering thee today, and we pray that so far as possible thou wilt save thy children from the results of their own foolish acts; may they, this day, recognize in thee their Lord and Savior, very God. Amen!—T. C. L.

The Home Department

THE ADULT CLASS HAS A PART—The adult classes should be especially interested in the Home Department and the classes of different ages should seek to minister especially to the members of the Home Department who are of corresponding ages. They may accomplish a great deal by making them feel that there is a place for each one when he finds it possible to attend the session of the school—a place where he will feel very much at home.

In fact some people prefer the name "Extension Department" in place of Home Department, as it is a little easier to link the members up to the organized classes when that idea is put foremost in the work. Whichever name is used, each organized class should feel its responsibility for all those who would logically belong to that class if they were attending the school.

Take for example, a class of elderly women in the Bible school; that class should seek to bind to itself and interest in its work, all women of the department who correspond to its membership in age. The class should always feel it a privilege to make these outside members feel at home in the class when they occasionally attend the school. It should know the conditions in the homes of these extension members and in case of illness or bereavement, take some means of expressing interest and sympathy. In some instances, these Home Department members are considered as members of the Home Circle group of the class. The class might have a small roll for these names and hang it on the class room wall as a constant reminder. Invitations should be sent to these members by the class for all special occasions of the school and to all class affairs.

Likewise a class of young mothers should take in charge the members of the Home Department who come under that head, making special visits upon them in addition to the regular visits made by the superintendent and visitors of the Home Department.

And so on down the line, each little group of Home Department members could be under the special surveillance of some class. All together, of course, they would be supervised by the regularly appointed officers of the department.

IT HELPS SOCIALLY—In a social capacity, the Home Department is of great value. Periodically, some social affair should be planned when these people may meet and have the pleasure of becoming acquainted. An effort should be made to secure their attendance upon the special day services—particularly upon Rally Day.

FINANCIALLY—It has always been found that the Home Department is self-supporting and often is an added source of financial help to the school. The members will usually want to make an offering. This need is not insisted upon, but enough will be contributed by those who really desire to give, to carry on the work and more than do so.

EDUCATIONALLY—This work often leads to a systematic study of the Bible. It opens the Bible in the home and surely that recommends it.

SPIRITUALLY—The Home Department is often the means of establishing the family altar in the home, and many cases are on record where whole families have been led to enter a life of service for the Master through this agency.

IN ASSISTING THE PASTOR—This department may be made one of great help to the pastor. The superintendent and visitors as they come into touch with the home life of the members are able to give almost immeasurable aid to him in his pastoral work. It is the testimony of many ministers that no one department of work helps them so much in this particular way.

ON THE WHOLE—No school can afford to be without a Home Department. Your homes need it to bind them to the school; your schools need it to bind them to your homes; your church needs it because it furnishes one avenue of work for our members and for the assistance it renders your pastor, in giving the warm, personal touch, the most important factor of all in the winning of souls.

EQUIPMENT—Each member should be supplied with a quarterly and everything that is needed to help him to study the lesson. He should also have an envelope in which to place his offering.

The superintendent needs a book in which to keep a complete record of the work done by himself and by his visitors and the lessons studied by the members as well as the offerings made.

Application cards, report and collection envelopes, superintendent's and visitors' report books may be ordered from the denominational publishing houses or from any reliable Sunday school supply company.

A Home Department Roll is a great help and there is really no reason why as much emphasis should not be placed upon having it in the school as there is placed upon having a roll containing the names of the Cradle Roll Department.

Both are extension departments of the school and the names should be in evidence.

The emblem of the Home Department is a purple button with a white center.

A suggestive home department standard—

1. A Home Department Superintendent (and visitors if needed.)

2. Systematic effort for new members.

3. Home Department Roll on the wall (containing the names of the Home Department members.)

4. Home Department Card Index or book containing names, residences and other necessary information.

5. Members welcomed as visitors in Sunday school.

6. Removals registered.
7. Members remembered in sickness or in case of trouble.
8. An annual Home Department Day.
9. An occasional social affair for members.
10. Members invited to Special Day Services.
11. Helpful literature sent to members.
12. Effort made to establish family altar.—Taken from "The Workers' Manual," Revised Edition, 1929, by Ida M. Irvin, pp. 73-75, Christian Board of Publication.

Religion, Electricity and Henry Ford

Says Henry Ford, in a recent interview published in the Christian Herald:

Religion is like electricity. I do not understand it. I want to know all I can about it. I know that religion warms our hearts, and it makes the world better. I know that it lights up the dark places of the earth. I see and admit its effectiveness, even though I do not profess to understand it at all.

The deep-plowing theologian, philosopher, or scientist, would not find such a statement at all satisfactory; and yet we suspect that a great many intelligent and serious-minded men and women who plow in other fields than technical science, philosophy, or theology, hold an attitude, whether they give it oral expression or not, that differs very little from that of Mr. Ford.

Life is too short to permit us to try to reach the bottom of all the deep holes of thought or fact which we encounter, and not all of us are willing to reject the good that wells up from some of them, just because we cannot fully understand how, why or whence that good comes.

SOME BY-PRODUCTS OF VACATION SCHOOL WORK IN THE PHILIPPINES

An enthusiastic lady missionary, who is a specialist in promoting vacation school work, said, "We talked about helpfulness so much that the teachers almost wore it out, but it brought results in the schools."

One of the principals said, "Whenever our pupils come to school and see that the building is not clean, they sweep it and put the chairs in order. My Juniors noticed that we did not have enough chairs for all and so each brought his own chair." Another principal said, "Once when I was left alone in the church, a primary girl came up to me and I asked, 'Why don't you go home?' She answered, 'Maestra, I came back to help you. I thought that you would have many things to carry and so I returned.'"

Many parents say the children are so much more thoughtful in helping carry water, wood, clean the house, wash the dishes, cook, and care for the baby. The greatest joy came because "they obey quickly."

The children delight in playing D. V. B. S. Oftentimes they retell the stories and re-sing the songs. One teacher, while passing a home, heard a Junior boy telling a group about Daniel. One little girl tried to teach her little two-year-old brother all she had learned.

They love to sing the songs. As the boys rode the cows and carabaos to the river at night, they sang. As the girls sat at the river banks washing clothes, they sang. As they fed the pigs at the ladder of the home, they sang. Sometimes they sang alone and sometimes in groups. One report was, "Last night while we were eating, we heard a neighbor's children whistling, 'O, Zion, Haste.' When they came to the chorus, the children from another house joined them in singing, 'Publish glad tidings.'" Of course all the songs were in dialect and so they felt strongly what they were singing.

In many homes the children were the first to teach their parents to pray and to give thanks at the table. One little girl of non-Christian parents "prays even though she is ridiculed." A mother said, "My daughter knows now how to pray. I smiled at first but when I saw how sincere she was, I bowed my head, too."

Introductory Note

Two temperance lessons in less than a month may exhaust one's teaching material if he does not make a practice of gleanings new material from periodicals and books and personal observation. Fortunately, those senators who as advocates of liquor interests were shelved in the election last fall used to the full their last opportunity to sing the swan song of the liquor traffic under the dome of the national capitol. Even the "wet" successor to Senator Reed of Missouri was defeated in the race for the senate, despite the Senator's earnest work on its behalf. Every one of the few but vociferous leaders of the "wets" in the senate was defeated last fall. The new Congress is "drier" than ever. The Jones bill to increase penalties for prohibition law violators was voted through the senate with a substantial majority; so also the bill to provide twenty-five million dollars additional for enforcement.

One of the chief arguments raised against this additional appropriation for law enforcement was that the budget did not allow for it; that it was a needless waste of money. Yet the same objectors were found voting for the cruiser bill which called for fifty million dollars a year for five years, to build fifteen cruisers within two years in addition to the eight already under construction—cruisers, any one of which a single airplane bomb can sink, and that may be scrapped by the next disarmament conference of the nations.

The Government and the Christian

What is the relation of the Christian to the civil government? His citizenship is in heaven, and because of that some have thought they had no relation to the governments of this world, and no responsibility to civil law and its proper observance. But "it seems very plainly and explicitly taught that civil government is an ordinance of God, and that obedience to the lawful rulers is a Christian duty. We say again, God does not ordain any particular form of government, but he does ordain government. He does not say you must be ruled by an emperor, a king, a generalissimo, or a president, but he does say you must have a ruler and administrator of law. They must exist and administer in the form best adapted to secure the highest good of the people."

Encouraging Law Observance

It is every loyal citizen's duty not merely to obey the law himself, but to encourage law observance on the part of others. But here is one of our troubles—the influence that a few prominent citizens and others who inconspicuous, wield in behalf of lawlessness. Even editors and writers for our daily papers are in many instances guilty of this kind of disloyalty. When community leaders and organizations openly advise disregard for and disobedience to laws, it is not to be wondered at that we are in a period of unprecedented lawlessness. If such influence against the observance of certain laws may not appeal to certain individuals is not treason, it is very near to it, and ought to be treated with public disapproval.

Begin with the Youth

"It is folly to try to teach good citizenship and leave God out of all consideration. How can we expect youth to regard human rights as expressed in human law if they are not taught reverence for God and respect for divine law?"—International Journal of Religious Education.

"In order to secure efficient and perfect harmony in enforcing any law, the people must be educated to know the reason and purpose of that law. The liquor press asserts that the prohibitory law is absurd, tyrannical, unjust, and fanatical. The answer to this is to make the people acquainted with the facts and the fundamental conditions which call for such laws, and why their enforcement is a public blessing. ... All psychologists know that ideas taught the youth become fixed in the moral soil of the mind and become part of it. The saloonkeepers fully understood this, so they contrived to begin early to cultivate a taste for alcoholic beverages which would grow with advancing years. The saloonkeepers knew that the old group of drinkers would soon be gone and a new group must be coming on, so they provided brandied candy and even small bottles of rum and other allurements to stir the appetites of boys for strong drink. They are doing it now, not only with boys but with girls. That educating is going on. And then they exultingly exclaim, 'There is more drinking among the young people than ever.' ... Laws can be properly enforced only when people are intelligent and informed. Let us begin over again and educate and inform the people. Then law enforcement will be easy."—F. G. McCauley.

Prohibition Gaining Favor

Prohibition has been tried for ten years. Absolute success in enforcement has most certainly not yet come. But if those who call it a failure would study the history of other reforms, in this country and elsewhere, they would see that no radical reform law has been entirely enforced within a period of ten years—while some have taken 30 or more. It is an uphill climb but those who stop, discouraged, never view the glories from the top. And who knows how far the climber has really reached?

"Men have always felt, since temperance crusades began, that these crusades were aimed at their personal liberty, that they had a right to determine for themselves whether they wanted to drink or to abstain from drink, and that in the matter of the use of alcohol temperance crusaders were not in any sense their brothers' keepers. When men resent an attack they are not open, freely open, to being convinced."

But even those who are its victims, are many of them, anxious for freedom, even if it is forced on them by outside authority. On May 9, 1915, 80 men and 5 women in

Justice, Mercy, Humility

By D. B. Flora

Micah was a simple countryman, born of obscure parentage, in an otherwise unknown village. His father's name is not given. He is only distinguished as the Morashtite. His love for his country home and its surroundings is strikingly indicated in his description of the impending judgment. To the countryman the sins of the nation seemed to be concentrated in the capitol cities. His message is to Israel and to Judah. It deals with the vital questions of social morality and religious duty. These questions are to be the topics for this article.

The prophet's message seems centered in these words—"He hath showed thee, O man, what is good; and what doth Jehovah require of thee, but to do justly, and to love kindness, and to walk humbly, with thy God?"

The first thought is that of doing justly—seeing that each and all have their just rights, which is the foundation of society, and yet the very thing of which there was an utter lack in Micah's time. The rulers whose duty it was to know judgment, abhorred it and perverted all equity. Sternly Jehovah challenges the people: "Are there yet treasures of wickedness in the house of the wicked, and a scant measure that is abominable?" In reply the voice of the offender is heard parleying with himself whether he may not be pardoned and retain the offence: "Shall I be pure with wicked balances, and a bag of deceitful weights?"

But justice is not the whole of man's duty to his neighbor. Mercy, or lovingkindness, is nobler than justice. But mercy must not be strained and stinted, and grudgingly given. Accordingly God's second demand is loving kindness, or mercy; not merely to show it, but to love it. No doubt there were not a few of the wealthy nobles of Micah's day who prided themselves on not being guilty of injustice. Yes! perhaps they were entirely within their legal rights when they seized the land of some poor neighbor who through bad seasons and misfortune and pressure of heavy taxes had failed to pay his debts and fallen into their power. But was conduct like that brotherly? Nay, there was the higher duty of loving mercy. And how utterly destitute of the love of mercy was that state of society in which every man's hand was against his neighbor, and none could trust another.

And what does one need to do in respect of duty toward God? What but walking humbly with thy God? A life of fellowship with God implying an identity of will and purpose; but fellowship conditioned by that spirit of humility which must ever govern the intercourse of weak and sinful man with a perfect and infinite God. What a contrast to the temper of the proud self-satisfied magnates of Jerusalem, clouded in the conceit of their own power, infatuated by the supposed security of the privileges which they abused.

It is to be noticed in the Book of Jeremiah (26:17ff) that Hezekiah's reformation was due to the preaching of Micah. Then, why should not we as Christian Endeavorers do some preaching, and teaching, and living so that we may be doing our duty as good citizens of our country and servants of God.—After A. F. Kirkpatrick, D.D.

Millions for New Churches

The high tide of American prosperity is reflected in church building as well as in other activities, recites the Springfield Republican, as it notices the large number of costly edifices lately dedicated or in process of construction. Recently, for instance, the chapel of the Church of the Heavenly Rest and the Chapel of the Beloved Disciple, New York City, were opened, and by fall the last stages of a $5,000,000 church project will be completed. Springfield recently witnessed the dedication of a Methodist church with a building value alone of nearly $750,000, and Worcester, Massachusetts, has a new Methodist church likewise approximating $1,000,000 in value. A magnificent Roman Catholic church was recently consecrated in Waterbury, Connecticut. Again:

"The Episcopal church has cathedral projects aggregating more than $20,000,000 each going forward in New York and Washington. The Christian church plans a $1,000,000 edifice in Washington. In fact, all denominations and nearly all parts of the country are sharing in this church-building activity. And schools and universities, for which notable chapels have lately been built or are to be built, immensely extend the list of religious structures into which great sums and, in many cases, notable artistic designs are going.

"When Dr. Darlington, the rector, spoke at the dedication of the Chapel of the Beloved Disciple, he said that $500,000 was still to be raised. But he indicated that there was little doubt of completing the sum in a short time. Whatever the present status of church-going in the Protestant community, funds are forthcoming for new churches in the larger cities and residential suburbs. A project has been launched in Philadelphia to build a $10,000,000 church in honor of George Washington at Valley Forge, Pennsylvania, although Valley Forge already has one of the most beautiful chapels in the country.

"If wealthy Philadelphians desire this project to succeed, it doubtless will succeed. For it is obvious that most of these expensive edifices could not be built without generous support from people of wealth. In some instances, however, churches have benefited financially by the very conditions which have made it desirable for them to change their locations. The commercial development of an urban section may have rendered a church building unsuitable to serve a parish, and by selling a down-town property, and perhaps by combining with some other church, the church which might have been stranded may have received a substantial sum toward building a much finer edifice in a more satisfactory location." —Selected by W. A. Gearhart, from the Literary Digest.

A "COMING-OUT" PARTY IN NIGERIA

By Elizabeth McDonald Wilkinson, Onitsha

Thirty miles we have come, to Umunze, to a tiny crumbling Rest House built of mud and mats in a clearing of the forest. I sit in a deck chair before the door, idle and completely happy. At my elbow a lamp casts its soft glow out into the shadowy star-haunted night that has crept up around us. Fields glimmer faintly in the starlight; beyond them rises the wall of trees, blank in the darkness.

From far away comes the throbbing of many voices, the clash of metal, the strange violent rhythm of tom-toms. The noise grows and grows until a swaying lantern spark gleams out from the forest, and following it comes a group of forty or fifty girls, chanting and dancing. Their voices follow the same half score of notes over and over, one voice leading, and all the others coming in at the end with a shout. Their brass anklets clash to the rhythm in which their bodies, as one body, are caught. It sweeps them along through the dim fields; it plunges them again into the dark of the trees; it moves them, controls them, beats through them and around them. Here surely is a voice, as authentic as the crash of the hurricane, the whisper of wind in the palms, but more individual than these, more significant, more expressive. In this fierce wild ecstasy, too wild for gaiety, too fierce for beauty, does Africa speak?

All night echoes of rejoicing throb on in the town. In a neighboring village famous for its priest-craft the girls have been cicatrized with marks showing their readiness for marriage; they have gone jingling in brass and ivory, they have gone singing and dancing, to be cut with knives by the priests of Ezira. It is the coming-of-age feast. Umunze rejoices.—Missionary Review of the World.

CHINESE TO CONTROL MISSIONS

The American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions which is the foreign mission agency of the Congregational church, has transferred the control of the churches of the northern Chinese mission into the hands of the Chinese. This move is in accordance with the nationalistic desires of the Chinese for an indigenous church, and is the completion of a goal which has been in the mind of the American Board since the mission was begun in North China in 1860. According to Mr. C. Y. Cheng, the American Board is the first missionary organization at work in China to turn over complete control of the property and personnel of their mission to local control. Mr. Cheng is the General Secretary to the National Chinese Missionary Council, and head of the Church of Christ in China. The transfer was handled by Dr. Wynn C. Fairfield, who had worked in China for twenty years until he was appointed secretary of the board in this country. The Chinese will hold the property as a stewardship from the American Board of Commissioners, and the missionaries will be solely responsible to the Chinese Board of Promotion and will serve as a loan from the American Board. There are now 125 missionaries at work on the field, among whom are twenty-five ordained men, five men physicians, one woman physician, eleven other men, thirty-six wives, and thirty-nine single women. The work of the Chinese Board for the Promotion of the Congregational churches in North China is divided by their constitution into three parts—evangelism, medical, and educational. There are 225 churches and services are held in 557 places. There are 17,349 members of the churches and there is an affiliated constituency of 45,760. The cost of the department of evangelism last year was $110,000, ten percent of which came from the Chinese. There are eight hospitals, nine dispensaries, and two nurses' training schools. The cost of this work is $100,000, forty percent of which comes from fees and Chinese contributions. The American Board appropriates ten percent and the other half is raised by individual donations in this country. In all, there are 109 schools with 6,879 under instruction. The educational work costs $130,000; $95,000 of this being paid for by the Chinese. The American Board will go on with its support and the loan of missionaries, but the missionaries will work on an equality with the Chinese officials of the church, and will be responsible to the Chinese Board. Their transfers, furloughs, and their recall will be in the hands of the Chinese. It is hoped that this arrangement will gradually make for the self-support of the Chinese work so that more and more of the money of the American Board may be released for work elsewhere. This is a forward step in foreign missions and it ought to do much to arouse the confidence and ambition of the Chinese Christians.—Herald of Gospel Liberty.

AN 82 YEAR OLD MISSIONARY

To move one's home to Hangchow, China, when one is eighty-two takes more than a little courage. But Mrs. Martha Peterson thus adapted herself to strange surroundings in a foreign land because she did not want to hinder the work of her daughter who had given her life to China. After three years in Hangchow, she made a large place for herself in the hearts of the Chinese, and it was a host of friends who mourned her death. When she was young, she herself wanted to be a missionary and the greatest joy of her life was that her daughter became one. When she received money as a present, she usually gave half of it to missions.—The Baptist.

ASHLAND MEMORIAL ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

RECENT GIFTS TO THE COLLEGE

Our people in growing numbers are beginning more and more to know the joy of giving and to sense their responsibility of stewardship. In a recent article I wrote on "Millions of Dollars Lost to the Brethren Church," through the negligence of our people to make provision for the church in their wills; or other distribution of their property while living in a way in which the church could be benefitted. There is a right move in this direction and I have no doubt as to the future of our institutions financially, if more take this seriously. Why should not the cause of Christ receive aid from those whom he has blessed with this world's goods while they live and in arrangements for their distribution after death?

Recently a husband and wife, members at Wooster, Ohio gave $1,000.00 on annuity. One of our members at Pleasant Hill, Ohio, also gave $1,000.00. One of the faithful friends of the college and church living in Ashland, Ohio, gave $2,000.00 in cash recently to the school.

It is people like these mentioned above that makes possible the continuation of our institutions and the carrying forward of the work of the church.

While living here under the blessings of God, let us do something worth while and have a few investments in the kingdom of God.

I am writing this en route to the Pacific Coast. Through arrangements made, I attended the District conferences at Lanark, Illinois and at Mulvane, Kansas, in representing the general work of the church. I was pleased with the spirit, attendance, plans and interest manifested in these gatherings. The work here in the middle west looks promising. They have a good leadership with a fine spirit of fellowship and cooperation.

MANSFIELD AND DAYTON

After 5 years and 9 months of pastoral association, we closed our pastorate at Mansfield and began the new one at Dayton, August 1st. Possibly a word is due all those concerned, as well as our friends and their friends.

We consider the years spent at Mansfield, profitable as well as pleasant years to us personally. As a young man just out of college we went there and they were charitable and kind to us. They were great spirited as we made our mistakes—many of them. We believe we, of necessity and of privilege, experienced about every condition of the pastorate. This was all to our profit. For the church, there were many blessings. Mansfield has a large group of consecrated men and women, who are happy in doing service for the Master, a group much larger than the average church proportionally. There were some commendable gains on the part of the membership, and there is a very favorable field for work. We believe our years there were well spent. To the new pastor, Brother Delbert Flora, we can only say, "God's best to you." We believe in Mansfield's Brethren church, and in that church's pastor.

Our weeks in Dayton have been pleasant weeks indeed. Some report has been sent by a correspondent for which we are glad. We can only add that our reception has been wonderful. If it is a foretaste of what the future pastorate will be, we can see a most happy association. We have not been here long enough to comment at any length, but one thing we notice that is the large number of responsible and talented people who seem extremely anxious to be busy in the service of Christ. This makes us glad.

Our Rally Day attendance was 832 in Bible school with about 500 for the morning worship service. Layman's Day, October 13th, was also well attended. The service was entirely in the hands of laymen, a prominent layman of Dayton, a member of the Methodist church was our speaker. His name was Mr. E. C. Harley.

The church has arranged that Rev. Wm. A. Gearhart shall assist for a while in the work of the church until the new pastor is well acquainted with the field. We greatly appreciate our brother's faithful help.

Our fall and winter program is very full.

We shall need great grace and wisdom. It cannot come from human means. We trust God's Holy Spirit as our guide in every condition. Pray for us and pray for this church. We need it and desire it. May God bless you, each and every one.

R. D. BARNARD.

CLAYTON-WEST ALEXANDRIA, OHIO

Though it has been quite some time since the writer has been heard from through the columns of the Evangelist, and even now has nothing spectacular to report, yet I feel that at least a word should be spoken regarding the above mentioned circuit.

At the rather sudden termination of Brother W. R. Deeter's work a year ago, the writer was invited to supply for them for a time. Later arrangements were made to continue on the basis of a supply pastor until October 1, 1929.

Having been employed as salesman for six days a week, besides having much work to do at home, before and after working hours, left almost no time for pastoral work, (much of which was badly needed), or anything else, except to merely preach on Sunday. So the limited opportunity afforded us as well as the results were very unsatisfactory. However, we tried, as best we could, to do them the best service we could, under the circumstances, and we leave results with him who has said, "My word shall not return unto me void."

We found many of the members who were not satisfied with the arrangements as they were, but they were, seemingly, unable to change matters, though in the majority.

But there are too many of God's real children here to be left without the care of a regular pastor. And I hope that God may soon hear their cry for such, and send them a man after his own heart, who can and will preach the whole counsel of God, and be used to mightily build up his church.

I wish to thank these good folk for the privilege of working with them, even in so limited a way, and for the many kind expressions of appreciation of our efforts. And for each one I pray that our heavenly Father may just give the blessing most needed.

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

Dr. Bell has reached the Coast and is now at Sunnyside, Washington. On the way out he stopped for the two western conferences. He does not expect to return to Ashland until late winter or early spring.

The work here moves off well. The total enrollment now is 367, 78 of which are Saturday students. This Saturday work is the source of a nice income to the College.

The writer, Miss Hurdle, teacher of voice, Miss Bickler, teacher of piano, and Miss Slack, reader, recently rendered an hour's program over the newly established radio station at Mansfield. It was the first Ashland program and was sponsored by a group of Ashland business men. All reports were that the program came in well. The student farthest away to listen in as far as I have heard, was at Lima, Ohio.

I attended our Indiana conference and spoke to the Manchester students at their chapel hour. The students were attentive and courteous. I am under obligations to Dean Holl, Professor Schutz, and others for the gracious treatment accorded me while on their campus.

Dean Anspach reports good sessions from the Pennsylvania conference. In fact, at least one address was so good that he thinks we ought to have it repeated here to the Seminary men, and we likely will.

I am to speak at the fathers' and sons' banquet at our South Bend church, October 29.

Rev. Dyoil Belote has gotten off here on his right foot and everything points to happy relations between his work and the College.

Ashland defeated Slippery Rock (Pa.) State Normal here last week 36 to 7. It was homecoming and was played before a good crowd. Many former students were here. A beef barbecue was served.

Sophomore-Freshman afternoon was initiated this last week with four contests,—sack race, tug of war, relay race, and football game. The Freshmen made a fine showing and won the tug of war and the sack race, but lost enough points to lose the contest. Now the old blarney stone can stay painted in soph colors the rest of the year. Poor old blarney, enough paint has been spent on you to cover a multitude of greater rocks!

The fall bulletin is now on the press and those to whom it will be mailed ought to receive a copy soon.

We are planning our first get-together banquet at the annual meeting of the North-east Ohio Teachers' Convention which is to

THE PENNSYLVANIA CONFERENCE

An Appreciation

Now that our District Conference for the year is a matter of history, it gives one the opportunity to summarize its value and effect. I do not have figures at hand to compare the attendance with other years, but from my recollections, the attendance was about average, although the crowds held remarkably well to the close of the last session. The number of ministers present was not as great as in some previous years, due to the fact that several of our churches are without pastors, and among the number one of the largest.

One interesting part of the Conference program was that almost the entire was presented as printed. If I mistake not, only one was unable to take the part as promised. Without exception the messages were well prepared and constituted a challenge to one's thinking, as well as to his living. As a whole they were as well prepared and as effective as any appearing on our National Conference program. The Bible lectures by Brother Ashman were especially stimulating, and the very last one, the last message of the Conference on the "Mystery of the Divine Indwelling," was of an exceedingly high order and a fitting climax to a truly wonderful Conference.

Moderator W. C. Benshoff presided with dignity, impartiality, and fairness. There was manifest a spirit of brotherly love and helpfulness. I do not believe that this was the best Conference ever, but I do believe that it was a very successful and beneficial Conference. It was truly a great Conference.

WILLIS E. RONK,
Meyersdale, Pennsylvania.

AN APPRECIATION OF THE PENNSYLVANIA CONFERENCE

The forty-first conference of the Brethren churches of Pennsylvania will be remembered because of the work accomplished and the bearing of the same to the future of the church. The work was of the quality which lasts. Brother Ronk, and the good people of the Meyersdale church, had thoughtfully planned for our comfort and enjoyment. We were cordially received and royally entertained. Too much cannot be said in praise of the hospitality of the Meyersdale Brethren.

The attendance was normal. There was an average registration of lay delegates. The number of elders present was slightly below the average, due to the fact that a number of the churches of the district are pastorless. But the attendance at the sessions, on the part of all, was exceptionally good. This was a conference of hard work, devotional worship and Christian fellowship. The presiding officer appreciates the fact that throughout there was promptness in gathering, hearty cooperation and a keen interest.

The big thing of course was the program. This, with but few exceptions, was carried out as had been arranged. Every phase of the work of the church was given place and emphasis. Sermons and addresses were thought provoking and inspiring. Our visiting Brethren, Anspach and Sheldon, inspired us to be more loyal to the cause of missions, good literature and Christian education. The Bible lectures by Brother Ashman were exceptionally good. Many were the expressions of benefit received. A sound teaching of the Word makes for the building of Christian character. The Pennsylvania Conference is pledged to a support of the aggressive program of the General Assembly, that of the conservation of our membership and church extension.

W. C. BENSHOFF,
Waynesboro, Pennsylvania.

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED BY MID-WEST DISTRICT CONFERENCE AT MULVANE, KANSAS, OCTOBER 10, 1929

Be it resolved that this Mid-West Conference, first of all, goes on record as praising and thanking God for the blessed privilege of meeting again in one of the most spiritual, uplifting and harmonious gatherings this District has ever experienced. Surely his care has been over us.

That, the Bethel church be very highly commended for the splendid way in which they have welcomed and cared for us during our stay among them. And that we appreciate the cooperation which members of other churches in the community have extended to us.

Also, that we thank Dr. Bell for his strong and helpful messages and the further insight into which he has led us for greater possibilities in extending the interests of the whole church. We are deeply grateful to the College Board, the Publication Board and the Mission Boards for sending him to us.

That, we thank God for the splendid loyalty, faith, fidelity and firm convictions of the men and women of our District in preaching, teaching, and trying to live the Whole Gospel as the Brethren church has proclaimed it in the past.

That, we wish to recommend to this conference, that we seek to establish and maintain in every Brethren home in the District a family altar and that we lend encouragement to the Woman's Missionary Society for their stand in helping promote this praiseworthy movement.

And also, that we continue our position on the "Outlawry of War" and the spread of "World Wide Peace."

And, that we reaffirm our position against the sale and use of alcoholic liquors and also that we enter our protest against the display of cigarette signs in public places, and the use of cigarettes in any form. We commend Governor Reed of Kansas and President Hoover for their stand on law enforcement and ask all our people to help support this great reform movement.

Also, that we recommend to our local churches to cooperate with our National Board to get in touch with all isolated members wherever they may be, so as to help check the losses both in numbers, support and spiritual life.

May God's richest blessings be upon us all, according to our faith and our works,—In his name.

RESPONSIVE READING FOR ARMISTICE SUNDAY BASED ON PRESIDENT HOOVER'S INAUGURAL ADDRESS

(From Armistice Sunday Service prepared by Dr. L. L. Wirt, Western Secretary of the National Council for Prevention of War, 205 Sheldon Building, San Francisco, California. Printed copies of the service can be obtained at this address at $1.25 per hundred.)

Minister—"The United States fully accepts the profound truth that our own progress, prosperity, and peace are interlocked with the progress, prosperity, and peace of all humanity.

People—"The whole world is at peace. The dangers to a continuation of this peace today are largely the fear and suspicion which still haunt the world.

Minister—"Those who have a true understanding of America know that we have no desire for territorial expansion, for economic or other domination of other peoples.

People—"Such purposes are repugnant to our ideals of human freedom.

Minister—"Superficial observers seem to find no destiny for our abounding increase in population, in wealth, and power except that of imperialism.

People—"They fail to see that the bounds of our nation and race find their true expression in a real brotherhood of man.

Minister—"We not only desire peace with the world, but to see peace maintained throughout the world.

People—"We wish to advance the reign of justice and reason toward the extinction of force.

Minister—"The recent Treaty for the Renunciation of War as an instrument of national policy sets an advanced standard in our conception of the relations of nations.

People—"Its acceptance should pave the way to GREATER LIMITATIONS OF ARMAMENT, THE OFFER OF WHICH WE SINCERELY EXTEND TO THE WORLD.

Minister—"The Permanent Court of International Justice is peculiarly identified with American ideals and with American statesmanship.

People—"The way should, and I believe will, be found by which we may take our proper place in a movement so fundamental to the progress of peace.

Minister—"It is impossible, my countrymen, to speak of peace without profound emotion.

People—"In thousands of homes in America, in millions of homes around the world, there are vacant chairs.

Minister—"it would be a shameful confession of our unworthiness if it should develop that we have abandoned the hope for which all these men died.

ALL: Surely civilization is old enough, surely mankind is mature enough so that WE OUGHT IN OUR OWN LIFETIME TO FIND A WAY TO PERMANENT PEACE.

THE GREATEST POWER IN THE WORLD

The church has in its hands the greatest power in the world—the power of love.

When it awakens to its strength and makes use of this transcendent influence over the hearts and lives of men, then a new day will dawn for humanity.

That the church should be so unconscious of its greatest weapon, and be so tragically slow to learn its use, is the despair of those within its folds whose inner eyes are open, as well as the wonder of those outside to whom it has been given to see clearly through the world's maze of tangles.

When Paul wrote the matchless thirteenth of first Corinthians he placed charity (or love) in the forefront of all the Christian virtues. Aesop reminds us how by its gentle warming rays the sun won over the wind when the traveler took off his coat. It was well said: "What the world needs most is a little bit of love."

When the membership at large of God's church feels the power of love, the problems that so sorely vex the world's heart, social and economic life can all be quickly solved. The scourge of war will never die, and nations, instead of their present exhausting struggles against each other, can give over their efforts to bringing life to their own.

We so often hear sermons on faith; let's hear more about love, not as a vague, distant theory, but a fact in the thought and action of the rank and file of God's earthly hosts. It is a rich and inexhaustible mine of truth.

Wherever we mark a worker of unusual success in the Master's kingdom, if we dig deep enough we will discover as its moving dynamic the love of humanity and the desire for the highest good of its individuals. You have likely seen demonstrations in everyday life. The "cup of cold water" wins where the cup of gold fails.

What we need most is not more organizations, more money, more culture, more zeal, but more love, a greater heart quality, a true affection that goes out beyond our own circle, our own congregation, our own denomination, to individual needy hearts, perhaps next to our own.

There are few Christians, of course, who now ask the old deacon's blessing: "O, Lord, bless me and my wife, my son John, and his wife, us four and no more," but there is a fearful and terrible lack of that widespread, Godgiven sense of the crying need of every human soul, poor or rich, black, yellow or white. What pastor or worker but has often sorrowed at the absence of even common kindness in some high in God's army. They tithed mint and arise and cummin, but thought not of the weightier matter. "Alas for the rarity of Christian charity under the sun."

How few prayers one hears in Christian pulpits for the wicked, the indifferent, the careless, yet the ones Christ most yearned over. Especially are those outside the man-made fold of church membership almost forgotten. A prayer ought never to be offered in any Christian service that leaves unbreathed a desire for the quickening of the dead in sin to new life. Our petitions are usually too full of the immediate needs of our own feverish activities to make room for the crying heart burdens of even those near to us, outside our own circle. They are too narrow to include the needy so dear to Christ's heart. In a strange Canadian church the minister grew lengthily eloquent over divine help for the needy in distant continents and states, but I heard it all but dimly through the abiding, painful memory of the drunken, sodden men I saw in the clergyman's own streets.

In everyday speech and action no Christian ought ever to forget how powerful is love as shown in little, homely, thoughtful kindness for humanity's sake. I have never forgotten how eloquent one simple rural preacher, whose life vision was clear, grew over the influence of a homely maiden woman in a country church whose love for children, over a generation, transformed the lives she touched. And few, indeed, sensed it all until her worn hands were still forever.

When the lay membership of God's church come to feel the power of love there will be no denying its reign, and the "golden age of man" will have come.

We repeat, the church has the greatest power in the world in its hands and does not know how to use it.—R. A. Peck, in United Presbyterian.

The lack of an adequate number of trained social leaders along non-material lines lies at the bottom of many of our social perplexities. The education of leaders should be the special work of our higher institutions of learning; and if they fail in the future to produce the great spiritual leaders needed by our civilization we cannot reasonably expect that it can meet the crises which growing numbers, conflicting interests, and increasing complexity of life will inevitably bring. But there is little use to train leaders for a democratic world if we leave the masses ignorant.—Dr. Charles A. Ellwood, in Cole Lectures at Vanderbilt University.

age, Johnnie Jean by name, came into her office displaying a badly skinned knee. She asked to have the knee tied up saying that she could hardly walk. Mrs. McClain got out bandages and a bottle of antiseptic, whereupon the following conversation took place:

Johnnie. "Just tie it up. Don't put any medicine on it. My mama is a Christian Scientist."

Mrs. McClain: "Would your mama tell you that the knee doesn't hurt?"

Johnnie: "Yes, but it does hurt. I'm a Baptist."

Salem jail balloted freely on the question of national prohibition. These, who had "intimate knowledge of the trouble that intoxicating beverages can cause," were because of that allowed to register their opinion on this subject of national agitation. When the ballots were counted it was found that 83 out of the 85 had voted in favor of national prohibition.—From the Boston Post of May 10, 1915.

"Personal Liberty"

"The liberty of the alcoholic drink manufacturer and seller to profit by the enslavement of the drinker was prohibited in 1920 by the adoption of the Eighteenth Amendment to the Constitution and the passage of the Volstead Act. That is, the liberty of one man to make and sell intoxicating drink was held to impair the liberty of another man to enjoy health and economic and social welfare. Ask the wife of the working man who wants full 'personal liberty' to drink whether this would increase her personal liberty. She will cut out all technicalities and go straight to the main point—that her husband's personal liberty to drink takes away her personal liberty to eat!"—Prof. Irving Fisher, of Yale.

OUR LITTLE READERS

THE LOST KNIFE

"Son, here is the best knife I could buy you while I was in the city," said Mr. Minton. "See, it has six blades, and I want you to take care of it, for it cost quite a bit."

"O, daddy, what a beauty it is," said Johnny, taking the knife in his hands, and carefully examining all the blades. How the boys would envy him such a knife as this, bristling with blades.

They gathered around him at recess in an admiring circle, and each wanted to hold the new knife in his hands, and Johnny handed it over with a smile. But there was one boy, Will Fear, Johnny's best friend, who held the knife longest in his hands, and returned it grudgingly.

That day, and for several succeeding days, Will could think of nothing else—and oh how he envied John the wonderful knife. Finally an evil thought took possession of his mind and stayed there. He wondered if he couldn't borrow it from his friend, and then by some hook or crook, make him forget that he had borrowed it.

Now, Will was naturally an honest boy, but he had allowed this evil thought to take root. Not all at once, of course—in fact he had rather pushed the idea away from him when it first entered his mind, but as time went by he allowed himself to think of it more and more, and finally it appeared less dreadful to him.

There came a day when they were having recess at school, and the boys were playing leap-frog. Will took that opportunity to say to his friend:

"Johnny, lend me your knife a minute, will you?"

"Sure," said Johnny, handing it over and going on with the game. Then Will pretended to whittle a stick for a few minutes, and when he thought his friend had forgotten about it, he slipped the knife into his own pocket and hurried back into the game.

At that moment the bell rang, and the boys fell into line. John apparently had not missed the knife, but Will decided to test him out later on, and see if he remembered to whom he had loaned it.

Accordingly when school was over for the day, and the two boys were walking home together, Will said to John:

"Lend me your knife a minute, John—I've got a splinter in my finger."

"Sure," said John, and he began searching through his pockets. However, the knife was not forthcoming, and with a downcast look the boy said:

"As sure as you live I've lost it, Bill—it isn't in any of my pockets—now what do you think of that?"

"Gee, that's too bad," his false friend replied, "for it was such a dandy knife."

"Yes, it was, and I'm afraid dad will think I didn't appreciate it."

"Well, let's go back to the schoolgrounds and hunt for it. You must have lost it in the weeds," said the sly Willie.

So back they went, but of course found no trace of the missing knife, as it reposed in Will's pocket. He had possession and no one suspicioned him either, but he was anything but happy. His conscience awoke and began to torment him, even calling him a thief; but the boy would not listen, and did not have the manhood to admit the theft and return the knife.

Then one day when Will was crossing a field with some boys, he cautiously tossed the knife in the long grass and weeds, and stooping to pick it up, exclaimed:

"Look here boys at what I've found." Of course the boys crowded around him all excited. Will had pretended to find the knife, so that if Johnny heard of it, he would think that he had lost it himself, and that Willie had found it. John never heard of it however, and Will kept the knife. But one day not very long after this the knife came up missing, and then it was harder than ever for Will to confess what he had done, so he kept still.

Weeks went by and Bill avoided John more and more—he could not face him, knowing he had stolen his knife. Then one day at Sunday school Bill's teacher gave each one of the boys a verse from the Bible to commit to memory—and the one Bill received read thus: "Thou shalt not steal."

A lump came in his throat as he thought: "I am just a common thief." And oh how his heart ached. Running home he determined to confess all and return the knife at once, for he had found it again soon after losing it, and ask John's forgiveness.

When he reached home his mother was not there, and running up to his room he secured the knife, then fell on his knees by the bedside, and asked God to forgive and wipe his sin away.

"Dear Jesus," he sobbed. "You forgave the thief on the cross—please forgive me for I am just a common thief, and I will never steal again."

Then with a light heart he sprang to his feet and ran over to Johnny's house. And John came to meet him saying:

"O, Bill, I'm so glad you came—you haven't been very friendly with me for quite a while." But Will drew the knife out and extending it to his friend said:

"Here's your knife, John. I've come to tell you that I'm just a common thief, 'cause I stole it, and if you don't want to associate with me, it will be just what I deserve. But please forgive me if you can."

Much to Will's surprise however, John said: "That's all right, Bill, we'll forget it. I knew all the time that you had my knife, and I hoped some day you'd be man enough to give it back to me. I will be glad to let you carry it part of the time if you wish."

But Bill refused to take it, saying huskily: "No, Johnny, all I ask is your forgiveness, and will you still be friends with me, 'cause I know you couldn't be friends with a thief—that's why I've stayed away from you."

"Sure thing, Bill—we'll forget all about it—come on, let's play leap-frog."—Alpha-bell Daily, in Christian Advocate.

MYERS.

McKIM-BUTTERFIELD—Miss Doris Butterfield, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. T. E. Butterfield and Ernest R. McKim, youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. S. R. McKim of Morrill, Kansas, were united in marriage by the minister September 28, 1929. Both were graduates of the Morrill High school and will make their home in Morrill. Our best wishes go with them in their future progress. L. A. MYERS.

ASKIN-HAWLEY—On Sunday, June 9, 1929, Miss Ethel Askins, superintendent of the West Alexandria Sunday school, and Mr. Clifford Hawley of Dayton, Ohio, were united in marriage in my home. They have the best wishes of a large circle of friends. G. W. KINZIE.

KINZIE-WOOD—Opal Marie Kinzie, our eldest daughter and Harry L. Wood of Dayton, Ohio, were by me united in the bonds of holy matrimony on June 15, 1929. May the blessing of God be upon them. G. W. KINZIE.

IN THE SHADOW

MONROE—Guy M. Monroe was born May 27th, 1870 in the state of Michigan, where he lived until he came to manhood. On December 28th, 1898, he and Mrs. Monroe were married and to them were born three children. One daughter died several years ago and is buried in the cemetery where the father's remains will be placed today. The other daughter, Fern, was at home during her father's illness and death and Kenneth the son was able to make the trip from Ashland, Ohio, where he is a Professor in Ashland University, in time for the services today. There are three grandchildren. Mrs. Monroe was given the strength to minister in every way possible to her husband in the last hours of his life.

Brother Monroe became a member of the Second Brethren church over seventeen years ago. Just a few years later he was selected as a deacon in the church and has been a faithful servant to the Lord and his church all these years. Just now we are wondering how we can get along without him, yet we would not call him back to earth again. His oft expressed feeling of the uselessness of the attractions the world has to offer is proof that his citizenship is in Heaven and that he took literally the instructions of the Word as it says, "Get your affections on things above not on things on the earth." The pastor had been home only a few hours before the funeral services but in that short time he was stopped on the street by business men who said "There were no real men who was sincere in all that he believed," and boys of his Sunday school class said: "I can hear him talk yet, he was a good man," and the church can say nothing less than, "One of our strongest spiritual leaders has departed to be with the Lord." If we were given to disburse eulogies we could fill the hour with truthful sayings of his sterling worth and character, but we know that he would not have it so, therefore we turn our message to the living. Sermon was preached by the pastor and Rev. T. H. Broad assisted in the service. A. V. KIMMEL.

TUCKER—J. J. Tucker of Lincoln, Nebraska, passed from this life September 23, 1929, at the age of 73 years. For 35 years he was a member of the Brethren church, and although isolated during the last year of his life, remained faithful to the end. His body was brought to Morrill and interment was made in the Morrill Cemetery. The funeral services were conducted by the writer. L. A. MYERS.

GAINES—Warren C. Gaines of Brookville, Ohio, passed to be with his Lord several months ago, after suffering for many weeks. He was a member of the Clayton (Salen) Brethren church, and held in very high esteem. Hence his departure meant a great loss to the church. Services by the writer. G. W. KINZIE.

GAINES—Mrs. Bertha Olive (Bell) Gaines, wife of Ralph (and daughter-in-law of Warren C.) Gaines, of Brookville, Ohio, went to be with Jesus May 10, 1929, after a brave, but futile struggle against the great white plague, tuberculosis. She was a faithful member of the Clayton Brethren church. May heaven bless and comfort those who are bereaved. Services conducted by G. W. KINZIE.

COPP—Wilbur S. Copp of West Alexandria, Ohio, departed this life August 7, 1928, aged 68 years and 5 days. Brother Copp was a member of the Brethren church for many years, though for the last ten years or more he was unable to attend or take active part. Just a short while before his passing, his son, Vernie, was killed by the explosion of a gasoline tank. The services were conducted from the home by the writer. G. W. KINZIE.

SWARTZ—On August 13, 1929, John Martin Swartz of West Alexandria, Ohio, was very suddenly called hence, leaving to mourn his departure his son, Millard, and his daughter, Mrs. Buchner. He was a member of the Brethren church. Services by the writer. G. W. KINZIE.

Heart Throbs of Our Leaders For Home Missions

XXII. BEGINNING AT JERUSALEM

By R. Paul Miller, Newly-Elected Home Mission Secretary

Our Lord's last instructions to his disciples before he ascended on high were to carry the gospel to all the world "beginning at Jerusalem." They were not expected to neglect the work of the gospel there just as soon as Peter's sermon was over on Pentecost! It is plain that our Lord expected them to start their testimony in Jerusalem and while continuing their ministry there to reach on out to other fields of the world. If they forsook Jerusalem, who would do the work for Christ in that town? From where would added servants of Christ come who would go out and preach the gospel? From where would the support of those who went out come?

To the Brethren Church, America is her 'Jerusalem.' To send the gospel to all the world is a fine thing to do and no man is willing to make greater sacrifices to do that very thing than the writer! But—why let America go to the devil while we do it?!! It is apparent to all who know the facts that the Brethren Church has not been caring for her mission responsibilities at home as should have been done and as must be done. Right now we have in the city of Detroit a large number of Breth- ren without any church home. So it is in Harrisburg. So also in Lincoln, Nebr. We as a church have no testimony whatever in these cities and many others that we could name where we have enough members with which to start a work. The Brethren Church has not so much as raised her voice in these great centers. If there is any church that has a message for the great cities of this land it is the Brethren Church! I for one declare that it is time the Brethren Church was being heard!

It is time we discharged the responsibility that God has laid upon us! It is time we were able to say to America, "We are pure from the blood of all men." But this cannot be done at the present rate at which the Brethren Church has been giving to Home Missions. Take Home Missions off the tail end of our missionary giving or soon the Brethren Church will be at the tail end of her string! And we must do it this year!!
Berne, Indiana.

Ghandi said: "The Christian Church today faces decay, due to inertia. It needs new life." Will our response to Home Missions lend truth to the statement?

A JEWISH Mason and Yom Kippur

Orthodox Jews, having rejected the true Christ and his atoning blood, vainly search for other means of dealing with the problem of human sin. They still pathetically observe Yom Kippur, their ancient Day of Atonement, but they have no sacrifice to take away sins.

One of the main speakers at Sinai Temple of Long Beach, during the celebration of Yom Kippur last week, was Charles M. Wollenburg, a prominent Jew from San Francisco. The leading daily paper describes him as follows:

"Charles M. Wollenburg, Grand Master of the Jurisdiction of California Masonic Lodges, spoke last night at Sinai Temple, as an important part of the Yom Kippur services. Mr. Wollenburg came to Los Angeles for the Grand Lodge Session held there last week. He will officiate tomorrow night at the constitution of the Los Cerritos Lodge in the new Masonic Temple." (Rabbi Franklin is Chaplain of this Lodge.)

"He said last night that he has taken pride in working to a high positoin in the Masonic Lodge, which is composed largely of Protestants. 'I have always been proud of being a Jew,' he said."

THE Jew and Palestine

For a long time Bible students declared that the Jew would some time be restored to his own land, in accordance with Biblical prophecy. In many quarters this declaration was greeted with scorn and contempt. The Balfour announcement in 1917, binding the British Government to the establishment of a Jewish national home in Palestine, closed the mouths of the scoffers. Since that year the settlement and rehabilitation of Palestine by the Jews has proceeded with tremendous energy.

Lately serious trouble has arisen between the Arabs and the Jewish settlers. Riots have occurred; numbers of Jews have been killed, and the attention of the world has been drawn to the situation. Once more the scoffers have taken courage to declare that this would be the end of the Jewish dream, that England would never dare to brave the disfavor of her Moslem possessions by siding with the Jews. It was freely predicted that England might repudiate the Balfour promise to the Jews, or even surrender the task of administering the mandate of Palestine.

The English Government has answered by reaffirming the pledge made by Balfour and by declaring that the Palestine Mandate will not be given up. Once again the scoffers are silenced.

But devout Bible students would not be confounded even if England should break her promise and permit the Jew to be dispossessed. A greater than any human nation has declared:

"I will bring back the captivity of my people Israel, and they shall build the waste cities, and inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, and drink the wine thereof; they shall also make gardens, and eat the fruit of them. And I will plant them upon their land, and they shall no more be plucked up out of their land which I have given them, saith Jehovah thy God" (Amos 9:14-15).

THE Jewish Challenge to Arab Atrocities

It would be easy to suppose that the Jew might grow discouraged in the face of Arab mobs to whom murder is nothing. The casual observer might argue, Why stir up the whole Moslem world and endanger the peace of the world merely to till and dwell in a rocky strip of barren country? Here is the Jewish answer from a leading Zionist Jew printed in The Jewish Journal:

"Once again in most atrocious form has come the challenge—is the Jew to have a resting place on earth, or is he once again to be driven forth an outcast from his ancient homeland? Is the mandate of the civilized world to be recalled? Is the final award of justice by the League of Nations to be revoked upon the challenge of mobs who reveal themselves as uncivilized savages, murderers of the aged, of women and of children, who flee from the scenes of their massacre with arms full of loot and pillage?"

"On behalf of the Zionist organization there is but one answer. For two thousand years Jewish blood has been spilt; oceans of blood have flowed and yet it is not sufficient. And now upon the sacred soil of Palestine itself again Jewish blood has been poured. This blood will not have been shed in vain. The Jewish pioneer will live on and fight on and die, if need be, in defense of his right."

"We Jews answer the challenge, and we say to the Arabs, to Great Britain and to the civilized world: that we mourn the loss of our brave kin in Palestine; we deplore the weakness of the British administration in Palestine that permitted this needless

Questions & Answers

Conducted by
J. Allen Miller

Readers are invited to send in suitable questions, which will receive consideration as space permits.

53. With the keys given to Peter, see Matthew 16:19, did he unlock the Kingdom of Heaven to the Jews on the day of Pentecost? Do you think there were only Jews in that assembly? Mrs. A. O. H.

To answer the latter part of this double question first let us look at Acts, chapter 2. The reading of verses 9-11 I think will clearly show that all named here are either Jews or Proselytes, that is, men of pagan birth but in religion Jewish. There is at any rate no evidence that there were any others than Jews present.

To the first part of the question we may briefly reply thus: It is to be remembered that the occasion is that of Peter's Great Confession made at Caesarea Philippi. Peter had just said in reply to our Lord's question, Who do men say that the Son of Man is? "Thou art the Christ the Son of the living God." Hereupon Jesus said, among several others things, "I also say unto thee, that thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my Church; and the gates of Hades shall not prevail against it. I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven, and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven."

It is needless to say that this has been a much disputed passage from the earliest times. But let us note that our Lord does not say to Peter, "I will found my Church." The foundation of the Church is Christ himself. "Other foundation can no man lay than that which is laid, which is Jesus Christ." 1 Cor. 3:11. See also Eph. 2:20 and 1 Peter 2:4ff. What Christ does say to Peter is, "I will build my Church." Jesus Christ is himself the one and only foundation. But Peter was the first stone built thereon. See the reference to 1 Peter above. But this same prerogative belongs to all who like Peter make the same great confession. We may note as a proof that the whole group of Apostles was here included the repetition of the words of verse 19b in Matthew 18:18. Here clearly the Apostles as a body are included in Christ's "ye."

To my way of thinking "keys" are the symbol of power and authority. From Isaiah 22:22 we learn that the keys of the House of David were laid upon the Messiah's shoulders. In Revelation 3:7 these words of Isaiah are explicitly referred to Jesus. It has always seemed to me that we must learn just what Jesus meant by these words to Peter by a study of just the very things Peter did. We shall learn what he did from a study of the early chapters of Acts. Thus, in Acts 1:5 and 2:4 Peter acts as spokesman for the whole group of Apostles. In Acts 2:38-41; 10:44-48; and other places he receives members into the Church. In Acts 5:3ff, as well as in 8:20-23 he exercises discipline. But Paul also did all these things. The power here conferred to Peter was not limited to him but was exercised by all the Apostles.

No, he did not unlock the kingdom of Heaven to the Jews on Pentecost. He did this at no time to my knowledge. This is not what Jesus meant. The Jews needed not that any one should unlock to them the kingdom of heaven. See Matt. 8:11. "Many shall come from the east and from the west, and shall sit down with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob in the kingdom of heaven." Evidently it was open to Jews long before Christ came.

Essentials of the Protestant Faith

Many who have an interest in church history have been turning their thoughts backward at this season of the year to the great Reformation. No more significant movement has shown itself in all the history of the Christian church than the effort of the sixteenth century to counteract some of the accumulated corruptions of Roman Catholicism. There is no specific date that marks the beginning of the Reformation, nor is there one that registers its consummation. It was a great religious movement that grew through many years and by the aid of many religious leaders. As has been truly said, There were many "Reformers before the Reformation." But there is one date that marks the definite break with the Roman church, caused the leaders of reform to come out from under cover and many of the communicants to begin to line up in opposing groups. That date was October 31, 1617, when Martin Luther nailed his ninety-five theses to the door of the Wittenberg church. It is well to refresh our minds concerning that important and salutary movement and to reevaluate its achievement for the purity of the Christian faith.

There were many practical points at which the reformers took issue with the Roman Catholic system and entered protests against abuses that had crept into the practice of religion, but in general there were three basic principles for which they contended. They were (1) salvation by faith in Jesus Christ and apart from works, (2) the supreme and final authority of the Holy Scriptures, especially the New Testament, and (3) the universal priesthood of believers. These were the essential features of early Protestant faith and continue to be the fundamental marks of distinction from Roman Catholicism.

The paths of Protestantism and Catholicism diverge at a very vital point. It is the very practical question of how the sin-stricken conscience can be freed from its guilt and made to experience pardon and peace. Protestantism answers by saying that it is accomplished by simply appropriating the grace of Christ through faith, while Catholicism says that along with faith and supererogating it, there must be works. The Catholic theory is that by engaging in good works, by paying sums of money to priests and by restricting and disciplining one's self, a person may help to save himself; he may lay up merit for himself; he may earn or buy the favor of God. But Protestants remember that Jesus began his ministry by saying, "Repent and believe the gospel." He said nothing about doing something, but simply to change the attitude of mind from one favorable to sin to one of belief and acceptance of Christ. That was the message of John the Baptist who prepared the way for Jesus. That was the message of Peter on the day of Pentecost. And that was the message of the greatest apostle, the one who labored more abundantly than they all, Paul, who was very explicit on this point. He told the Ephesians (2:8, 9), "For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God: not by works, lest any man should boast." The sinner is justified before God, that is, acquitted of guilt and pronounced righteous, solely because of the merits of Christ, who has made atonement for sin. He was the Lamb of God sacrificed to take away the sin of the world. He provided fully for our salvation on the cross, and we need only to reach forth the hand of faith and accept it. That does not mean that Protestantism depreciates works, on the contrary it insists on works as the necessary and inevitable fruit of genuine faith. We must prove our faith by our works, but we are not justified by our works; we must give all the glory to Christ.

The second essential and distinctive claim of Protestantism is that the Word of God, and particularly the New Testament, is the infallible authority and all-sufficient rule of faith and practice and that it is to be interpreted by the Holy Spirit to the individual, while Catholicism insists that the traditions of the church and the degrees of the pope are of equal authority with the Bible and that the pope is the only legitimate and infallible interpreter of the Bible. The written word of God is Protestantism's only and final authority, and the Holy Spirit is the interpreter. That message is its only creed and its only rightful source of appeal. That is the true faith of Protestantism. Chillingworth in the early seventeenth century declared "The Bible, the whole Bible, and nothing but the Bible is the religion of the Protestants." That formula has come down to us and is cherished by evangelical Protestants far and wide and in a peculiar way we have made it our slogan. Vast portions of Protestantism have not been satisfied with the Bible alone as their creed and have made for themselves creeds, abridging or enlarging to suit their own likes. And, like the Israelites in asking for a king, we have been tempted at times to follow the religious fashions of our neighbors, but the voice of historic Dunkerism is calling us to return to and stay by the ancient landmarks.

The third essential characteristic of Protestantism is the universal priesthood of believers, which claims for the Christian laity the right to approach God through Jesus Christ without any human mediator, also the right to read the Bible for themselves in the language which they themselves understand, and to participate in the government and all public affairs of the church. The Catholic position holds, contrary to the Word of God, that Christian laymen can only come to God through the mediation of an ordained priesthood, who have authority to prescribe the manner of their coming and the conditions whereby they may receive divine blessing. The priesthood only can rightly read and interpret the Bible and in the hierarchy of the Catholic church reposes all religious authority and temporal power, so they claim. But we do not forget that Jesus claimed for himself all authority, and that he knew the Father had conferred such upon him, and never did he at any time even suggest that he passed on to Peter and the Apostles such authority as he himself possessed. Nor do we forget that we are all "kings and priests unto God," and have been made so by him who has "washed us from our sins in his own blood."

Thanks be unto God for the riches of his grace, vouchsafed unto us through the blood of the everlasting covenant, for his perfect and all-sufficient revelation committed to us through the Written Word, and for the unhampered access that we have directly to the throne of grace. These are the outstanding essentials of our Protestant faith.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

"Give, and it shall be given unto you,"—but most people are wanting the return before they make the investment.

A note from Dr. Charles A. Bame informs us that the union meeting at Cedar Rapids, Iowa is going fine, the interest is keen and the attendance is good.

Brother William Gray, new pastor of the church at Highland, Pennsylvania, finds the people of that church hospitable and generous with the things necessary for a pastor's larder. An evangelistic campaign is now in progress there with Brother J. L. Gingrich as the preacher. It seems that the spirit of reconsecration has gripped practically the entire congregation.

Dr. J. L. Kimmel, pastor of the church at Fort Wayne, Indiana, says the work there has been encouraging during the past summer, notwithstanding the handicaps of city work during the hot months of the year, and now the spirit of activity and faithfulness has increased in the various departments so that conditions are more promising than at any time since the new church was built. The church debt is steadily being whittled down.

HOME MISSION OFFERING SUNDAY IS THE SUNDAY PRECEDING THANKSGIVING. Every pastor of every church ought to be planning how he can make this the banner offering of the year. No other cause asking for the support of the brotherhood is more certainly in need of the greatest offering it ever received than is the home mission project of our church. The giving of hearty response to our Home Board's appeal is a duty of the first importance. No one can explain away his indifference or negligence at this point. The responsibility is inescapable and it is urgent.

Our correspondent from Lake Odessa, Michigan, writes of the enthusiasm being manifested in the work there under the leadership of Brother R. I. Humbert. His chart sermons have created much interest. His zeal in distributing the Gospel by means of tracts has gripped his people also and they are giving him splendid support in the work. He has been doing some special Bible teaching as well as evangelistic work lately, having just closed an eight days' meeting at Lost Creek, Kentucky's where Brother Drushal is in charge of the work. His capable wife has been supplying his pulpit during his absence.

We are especially interested in the report of Brother E. M. Riddle, pastor of our church at Warsaw, Indiana, for two reasons. First, it is the editor's home church and he still maintains a special interest in its welfare. And second, because of the very suggestive congregational program with which the pastor challenged his people at the beginning of the church year. It follows very closely the lines of emphasis of the district program adopted by the Ohio conference last week. Brother Riddle celebrated the completion of his fifteenth year in the ministry on the first Sunday in October, and we extend him congratulations and wishes for many years more of successful service.

Brother N. V. Leatherman, secretary of the Indiana District Conference supplies us with a short story of the proceedings of their recent meeting at North Manchester, where a very successful conference was had and where Brother Schutz and his parishioners proved themselves delightful hosts. The secretary also supplies the entire officary of the district. In this connection it might be well to remind the various district secretaries that it is important to get their conference organization personnel in the hands of the secretary of General Conference, Brother J. L. Gingrich, 184 Spring Street, Johnstown, Pennsylvania, at an early date for publication in the "Brethren Annual."

Christian Endeavorers will enjoy reading this week a report from the splendid society at Ashland, Ohio, which is unusually favored with leadership both local and college students gathered from churches throughout the brotherhood. An efficient corps of officers was recently installed by the pastor, Brother Dyoll Belote, who is himself an expert in Christian Endeavor work. Other societies can make similarly fine reports. Brother Thomas Hammers, of Ashland, Ohio, who is endeavoring to keep the young people's department of the Evangelist throbbing with fresh news, will be glad to hear from you. Brother Delbert Flora, who appeared last week on Christian Endeavor page, is Citizenship superintendent.

Brother Fred V. Kinzie of Harrah, Washington, writes of his continued interest in Krypton, Kentucky, and of his sorrow at the death of Brother Manual Davidson, that zealous, native missionary of the cross, who worked in the mines for a living and spent his Sundays going in and out among the hill towns conducting Sunday schools and preaching the gospel. At the leaving of Brother Kinzie, Brother Davidson was ordained and left temporarily in charge of the preaching activities at Krypton. His death was a real loss to the work there, but the spirit of his life should be a challenge to many who have had greater advantages in the way of preparation for Christian service. Miss Lyda Carter is heroically carrying on alone at Krypton, but there is need of a pastor and his wife at that place.

Dr. C. F. Yoder writes of conditions in two towns in Argentina, where he recently visited and conducted meetings. He says in Canals they have "a few baptized members and a great many nominal believers." That sounds very North American—we have so many "nominal believers" among the constituencies of our home churches! What churches we might have, if they were all not merely "baptized members," but sincere Christians! In Rosario the work is very encouraging. A hall was dedicated, followed by a ten days' meeting, resulting in a number of confessions. This seems to be at once a very prospective and a needy field. Our missionaries are kept constantly busy telling the pure gospel of Christ to these superstition-laden people, but what are a dozen missionaries among so many? We are not surprised that Brother Yoder almost impatiently calls for workers to heed this Macedonian call. Yet even the faithfulness of these few God will bless and multiply, as he did the loaves and fishes of old, to the satisfying of the spiritual hunger of multitudes.

Brother Charles H. Ashman, pastor of the First church of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, writes some "gleanings" from his church calendar. From one item we learn that he was unfortunate enough to have been compelled to undergo an operation during the latter part of the summer, but his fall program is a full one and prosecuted with his customary energy. Early in September he launched three extended series of Bible studies in his church and they are attracting much attention, as evidenced by the church attendance. The Brotherhood of Alexander Mack has purchased a Fordson tractor and shipped it to Africa for the use of our missionaries in their agricultural work. Of special interest is the item concerning the Bible conference just closed with Dr. G. W. Rench, a former pastor of the Johnstown church, as the speaker. This was preparatory to the communion, which was celebrated with 440 communicants present, an unusually large attendance. Brother Ashman is right when he says we ought to stress more often the distinctive ordinances of our church. In them are to be found the cardinal doctrines of the Christian church as well as the Brethren church's distinctive plea and reason for a separate existence.

Last week in our editorial on "The First Sunday School," there occurred a typographical error which omitted an important fact in the story of the founding of the first Brethren Sunday school at Ephrata, Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, early in the decade following 1739. The omission dealt with the fact that Lewis Hecker's Sunday school continued until the battle of Brandywine (September 11, 1777), when the building in which it was housed was turned into a hospital, as were other buildings of the village. Elder H. R. Holsinger (See "History of the Tunkers and the Brethren Church," pp. 141) says: "After the battle of Brandywine the whole establishment (the religious establishment of the Dunkers at Ephrata) was opened to receive the wounded Americans, great numbers of whom were brought in wagons, a distance of more than forty miles, and one hundred and fifty of whom died, and are buried on Mount Zion"—a hill on which the common church or meeting house was located. This use of the building for a hospital accounts for the discontinuance of the Sunday school, and as Holsinger says, it "was occupied as such for some time, and the school was never afterwards resumed." And, as stated last week, Elder Hecker was at the time of its discontinuance sixty years of age.

PRAYER REQUESTS FOR THIS WEEK—

Pray for a revival to begin in the church at Fort Wayne, Indiana, where Brother J. L. Kimmel is pastor and Mrs. Edna Nicholas is the evangelist.

The pastor of the church at Highland, Indiana, Brother William Gray, asks prayer for him and his work.

Last week our "Prayer Request" department was omitted, so we include Brother R. D. Barnard's request from Dayton, saying, "Pray for us and pray for this church."

Prayer is requested for the work at Lake Odessa, Michigan, (the Campbell church) of which Brother R. I. Humbert is pastor.

Pray for a victory in the revival at Oak Hill, West Virginia, under the leadership of Brother Charles H. Ashman and Freeman Ankrum as evangelist and pastor respectively.

Pray for an evangelistic campaign to begin at Hamlin, Kansas, November 25th and to continue two and possibly three weeks, under the leadership of Brother F. G. Coleman as evangelist and W. H. Schaffer as pastor.

Pray for the meeting now in progress at Hagerstown, Maryland, where Dr. G. C. Carpenter is pastor and Evangelist R. Paul Miller is leading the campaign.

If you wish a prayer request placed in this column, drop us a card.

Our Individual Responsibility as Missionaries

By Sylvester Lowman

(Delivered at Mid-West District Conference, Mulvane Kansas, October 9, 1929)

TEXT: Oh Foolish Galatians who hath bewitched you that you should not obey the truth.—Galatians 3:1.

Here friend of mine is a challenge to our day as individual missionaries. Who has bewitched us that we haven't given more of self and of our money to spread the truth? Pilate when he was about to sentence Jesus asked, "What is truth?" (Jn. 18:38 and Jesus declares, "Thy Word is Truth" (Jn. 17:17).

But what of it? Well, my dear friends, have you read very lately Mark 16:15 when Jesus said, "Preach the Gospel to every creature?" Say, that fastens a large responsibility on each one of us.

Then first of all, what is my individual responsibility? Well, let us do a little figuring. Figures are cold things I know, but maybe by various means I can make each one of us feel our responsibility. The earth's population last year was estimated at 1,804,886,000. How many of these am I responsible for? There are, counting the Protestants and the Greek church, 310,000,000 and if we should count the Roman Catholic church's 280,000,000, we would have a total of 590,000,000. Now subtract this from 1,804,886,000 and you still have 1,214,886,000. Now let us figure a bit more. Our Brethren church has, say, 30,000 members at present. This would leave to our church some 4,004,960 people and this would mean that each one of us is responsible for some 133-plus souls and this number will be almost doubled if we take the Roman Catholic church off. SOME RESPONSIBILITY! NEARLY 250 SOULS FOR EACH ONE OF US!

How much does it cost to save a soul? I really do not know. But I do know that it cost four splendid consecrated valuable lives just to open our work in Africa. Sisters Snyder and Rollier, Brothers Bennett and Gribble, the latter who might be rightly called "The Livingstone of the twentieth century" and many thousands of dollars and countless heart aches—these it cost.

Second, Where is our field? Oh I know you will say, South America, Africa, the mountains of Kentucky. But Jesus said, "Go into all the world!" My dear friends, possibly China is the largest unevangelized country in the world today with its 450,000,000 souls and only a few hundred thousand Christians in the whole country, and there is India with its 225,000,000 heathen. In the face of such need is it surprising that Paul said, "Oh foolish Galatians, who has bewitched you?" And cry out of our wonderful American life and say, "O Brethren church, who has bewitched you, that you are not doing more as individuals, for after all our missionary efforts are not stronger than the individuals shall make them. Hear this pleading from Africa: A great chief of 75,000 souls came and said to a missionary, "I am asking about your mission. I need your mission greatly in our land to teach my people and my children the words of the living God. I am glad you think of starting a mission in my country. Please do not change your mind. You know God remembers my people who are crying for the message of God. We hope you will come quickly. We will always be looking for your coming." But the missionary had to say, "We have no one to send and haven't enough money to start a mission there."

Third. Brother Jobson from Africa writes and says, while the church hesitates at home, the Mohammedans are sweeping in from the north, and that it will not be long until they will overrun the whole country. Brother Gribble told me before he left the last time never again to return home, that unless Christianity took Africa for Christ, Mohammedanism would capture the land in ten years. Here we are, facing that tremendous problem right now.

Fourth. Are we doing anything? Yes, some. We have 3,915 members in Africa, 750 souls received last year. One Sunday 450 in one Sunday school made confession, and nearly 500 since Brother and Sister Sheldon left. South America received 265 confessions last year and built one new church. COME ON, LET'S GO! With this story I close. Dr. Larimer tells this incident about a man he met one day and asked him why he did not join the church. The fellow said the thief on the cross did not belong to the church and he was saved. Dr. Larimer replied in answer, If you do not belong to the church, you help support missions, of course? The man replied that he did not. The dying thief on the cross never gave to missions and he was saved, wasn't he? Dr. Larimer replied that he supposed the thief was saved, but looking directly at the man he replied, "You must remember that he was a dying thief, and you are a living one."

The New Testament Emphasis on Missions

By Dr. Charles A. Bame

It would scarcely be right to say that the major emphasis of the New Testament is on missions. More proper to say that if there is any other emphasis, it is for the sake of the emphasis on missions. I do not have the time to develop this subject and this article will not do the subject justice, but I am anxious to say that much for the sake of the most important day of our calendar church year. I am right now, on a New Testament Emphasis on Missions that is unique and interesting and, as I see it, one of the ripest fields for expansion of our cause now open. I am in a union revival meeting with our people and the Church of the Brethren in Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

Our Lord's last prayer was that they may all be one, that they may be won. He said it in these words, . . . "that they may be perfect in one; that the world may know that thou hast sent me." We have had here, a quite commendable and commanding effort where either of us alone could not have made much of an impression.

It takes no statesman to be aware that if we do not look forward and push forward in the making of new churches and the reestablishment of older ones now fading out, that we shall be swamped with overhead in the not distant future. Home Missionaries must be the outstanding emphasis this year and for a good many years to come. New churches and stronger ones at any cost, must be the new war-cry of the Brethren. Each succeeding year will be a harder one for us in these days of combinations if we do not stress this more strongly and give more freely to our Home Mission offering. I might quote many portions of scripture, but let us remind you of just one, the one given on the birthday of the Christian church, "Beginning at Jerusalem"—in present day language, beginning at home. Let us begin this Thanksgiving. My heart beat with a new joy yesterday as I heard our president over the radio say, "less money for battleships and more for waterways." Expansion at home is the cry of the Quaker president. "Less luxury and more missions" might well become our new slogan for the proper emphasis on missions.

Our Isolated Membership

By J. S. C. Spickerman

(Address delivered at Mid-West District Conference, Mulvane, Kansas, October 9, 1929)

In a denomination as small and scattered as ours, isolated membership is bound to be quite a problem. Members are continually moving, and many of them move to places where there is no Brethren church. Some of them, I fear, drift away, not only from our church, but from any church. Some keep in touch with the home church as far as possible, but keep aloof from other churches. They thus lose the benefit of the fellowship of other Christians in the communities where they live, and the communities do not get the benefit of their cooperation in Christian work. Some join other churches, and are thus lost to the denomination. That is not as bad as being lost to the Kingdom, but I do not consider that a necessary alternative. The proper course for an isolated member, it seems to me, is to keep his membership in the nearest Brethren church, to contribute regularly to its support and to the general work of the denomination, to take and read the Brethren Evangelist, to attend Brethren church services, especially communion services, whenever possible, and also to join in the worship and service of some church in the community where he lives.

But how shall those who move from us be led to remain true to our church? First, we should not be slack about indoctrinating the members who are still with us. In this day, there is a widespread union propaganda, which is largely a propaganda of indifference to any doctrines that might cause division. Our members should be faithfully taught the principle of loyalty to Christ, the Head of the church; the supreme authority of the Scriptures as a rule of life and doctrine; and the specific application of these principles. To this end, we should employ doctrinal preaching, Brethren literature, and above all, the Bible. It was the study of the Scriptures, interpreted, as we believe, by the Holy Spirit, rather than human scholarship, that brought about the formation of the Brethren church at Schwartzau in 1708.

But what shall we do for the members who are already isolated? I can not solve this problem, but I may be able to make some suggestions that will help. I believe that all who know of such members should communicate with them, and do all they can to encourage them to remain true to the church. But what is everybody's business is likely to be nobody's business. It believe it would be worth while for the National Conference to appoint a pastor-at-large, or secretary of isolated membership, to whom all known names and addresses of isolated members should be reported. He should write to them, send them Brethren literature, and inform them of the location of the nearest Brethren church and the name and address of the pastor. He should publish an annual directory of isolated members. Whenever practicable, ministers should visit them and conduct love-feasts and preaching services. Other members within reach should be notified of the time and place of such services.

We ought to have more churches and missions. This does not mean that we should neglect the missions that we already have to start new ones. I fear that there has been too much of that sort of work done in the past; but I believe that if our membership as a whole were thoroughly consecrated and enlisted in the Lords' work, we could "strengthen the things that remain," and at the same time plant churches in many places where our members must now attend other churches or none at all.

If union could be brought about between our church and the Church of the Brethren, that would help, as they have churches at many places where we have none. While they have relaxed some of the rules which brought about the division, they still claim conference authority over the churches. We believe in congregational independence. The Holy Spirit is commander-in-chief, and his guidance is available to the most obscure local congregation, as much as to the officers of a hierarchy or the delegates to a conference. We find no warrant in the New Testament for any human central authority over the churches. Until we can agree on that point, I can see no possibility of union with them. However, very encouraging progress in that direction has been made in the last thirty years. When the time comes that we can unite with them without giving up any Gospel principle, I for one will be willing to yield to them in the matter of church name or any other non-essential. Meanwhile, we should do our utmost to hold our isolated members and their families to the whole Gospel and its propagation. If our distinctive teachings and practices justify us in keeping up our denominational organizations in communities already overchurched, we are under obligations to put those teachings and ordinances in the reach of everyone, especially those who are already of our faith.

Pennsylvania Moderator's Address

By W. C. Benshoff

(Address only in part as delivered at the Pennsylvania District Conference Held at Meyersdale)

Another year with its record of accomplishments in the work of the Lord has passed into history and we find ourselves assembled in this the forty-first annual conference of the Brethren churches of Pennsylvania. As moderator it falls to my lot to bring a brief message in keeping with the occasion.

In what is said here, I have in mind the welfare of our beloved church. For the church we should be jealous. To her we must be loyal. Great is the church in her past, her present and in her prospect for the future. The Christ who loves the church which he has purchased with his own blood will preserve that which is his own unto the perfect day. It is not my purpose in this address to review the work of the past year. In reflection we find much cause for gratitude. Life has been preserved, peace and unity among the brethren have been continued, and blessings temporal and spiritual have been abundantly bestowed. For all of these we humbly thank our heavenly Father.

May I remind you of the forward steps taken by our late General Conference for the conservation of our membership and the extending of the borders of our beloved church. It is imperative that the Brethren church occupy new fields and that quickly. May I call upon this Conference to give its best support and heartiest cooperation to the carrying out of the program of the General Assembly.

Conditions within the church and the world at large are a challenge to us to do our best. The cause of Christ has always demanded the fullest surrender of the believer and the unceasing labors of the church. It is the business of the church to inquire into conditions and to take note of her responsibility.

The tendency is in the direction of selfishness, truce breaking, and pleasure loving. And the world as such holds no prospect of improvement. The putrid condition of the world is commonly conceded. Dr. Cadman has this to say: "Neurosis, depression, crime, and even suicide, ravage youth, unfortified by domestic religion and its faith in a righteous and loving God." Dr. Smith of Washington and Lee University says: "America might just as well face the facts. The facts are that side by side with universal education America today has all but universal crime." Within the church is to be found laxity, indifference, and irresponsibility. And many who profess membership yield themselves easily to the life of worldliness.

I might speak of many more things that mark the drift. I have said these few things in order to bring to our minds a realization of the necessity of the positive affirmation of Gospel truth to overthrow, or offset, the force of evil and to establish truth and righteousness. As we look out on the world of humanity and note the privations and disappointments, the unsatisfied hunger and unalleviated sorrows which make up the lot of many of them, it should stir us to a passionate desire to give them the only remedy there is for their ills.

And what is this remedy? Papini says: "We have tried the experiment of fierceness; and blood answered blood. We have tried the experiment of law, and we have not obeyed the law; we have changed it and disobeyed it again and justice has not satisfied our hearts. We have tried the experiment of intellectualism, we have taken the census of creation, numbered the stars, described the planets, the dead things and the living things, we have bound them together with the thin threads of abstract ideas, we have transfigured them in the magic clouds of metaphysics; and at the end of all this, things have remained the same, eternally the same; they were not enough for us, they could not be renewed; their names and their numbers did not quiet our hunger, and the most learned men ended with weary confession of ignorance. We have tried the experiment of art and our feebleness has brought the strongest to despair, because the absolute cannot be fixed in any form. We have tried the experiment of wealth and have found ourselves poorer; the experiment of force and have come to ourselves weaker. In nothing has our soul found quiet. We have found no welcoming shade, where our bodies could lie down and be at rest; and our hearts, always seeking, always disappointed, are older, weaker, and emptier, because in nothing have they found peace, because no pleasure has brought them joy, no conquest, no happiness. Jesus proposes his experiment, the only remaining possibility, the experiment of love, the only one which can give what it proposes."

It is my humble judgment that the time is opportune for the meeting of the wrongs and evils of the day with the heralding of Gospel truth. The proclamation of eternal truth cannot be delayed without defeat, failure and eternal loss. Stupidity and inaction at a time like this are unpardonable and offensive. "Brilliant sinning must be met by brilliant righteousness." We must meet the challenge of the hour with the effective use of God's Word. Christ met the formidable foe of his day by the direct use of Holy Writ. To the enemy he said, "It is written."

Mr. Shepherd in Colliers's, some time ago, while admitting he was not a churchman, expressed his conviction, "That the present day breakdown in morality and the failure of society was due to the neglect of certain fundamental teachings found nowhere else except in the Word of God."

Dr. Len. G. Broughton has this to say: "The main deficiency in the church is its faith; which is the result of ignorance of the Bible. The Bible as a whole is not studied. The preachers themselves do not study it. What we want is men in the pulpit who know the Bible, not simply texts from the Bible, not simply the ability to quote accurately passage after passage, but men who know the Bible as a whole and are able to teach it in this way. There will have to be a change in the method of teaching. We have been too anxious to teach all about the Bible and have neglected to teach the Bible itself."

The ministry must ever keep before the church the relation of our work to human need. I am not speaking as a pessimist; but we must face what is going on in the modern world and take some stand. We are moving with tremendous speed, the church must have some control; we must change the course of some things. An old man used to pray, "Lord, send us quick acting grace." A good prayer for today, because of the rapidity of the changes that are going on. It is the business of the church to preach the Gospel so as to make it easier for some things to happen and harder for other things.

Christ speaks to us today, as in the past, and places us under obligation. And though we cannot always see it as such, obligation in Christ becomes at once a privilege. Dr. Massee has said: "One of the hardest lessons for Christians to learn is the stewardship of privilege. To those who have that privilege shall be given responsibility. The continuation of privilege requires its investment in service. He who has must give. He who knows must tell. He who receives a revelation must pass on a communication."

The spirit of service and sacrifice which has characterized the labor of the church in the past impels us. The carrying on of the work of the church is beset with vast difficulties. But this is not new. Progress has always been made in the face of tremendous opposition. The early church triumphed under adverse and unsettled conditions. And for their effort to redeem men these believers were severely persecuted. But they were steadfast in things fundamental, were obedient to heavenly visions, and turned over to the cause their possessions. They counted not life dear unto themselves. The cause they had espoused was bigger than life. They could suffer persecution, and even death itself but they could not be faithless and unbelieving. And it all grew out of this, they recognized the Lordship of Jesus Christ.

"The historians of the Roman empire have written the record of those tragic years, through which the early Christian church passed when its saints died their martyr deaths and all the hopes and promises they had surely believed seemed false. It was an age when life was hard and brutal and cruel, when not only shame and loss and contempt, but pitiless torture caught the humblest Christian folk in its grasp." And all along the line from Peter to Paul to the present we find this same spirit of devotion to the cause of Christ, the same loyalty and heroic sacrifice. There has been through Christendom a willingness to march or halt, to endure much, to live or die as the cause demanded. It was this spirit of diligence and devotion, of faith and fidelity, of sacrifice and service which gave to the world Protestantism, and the Bible to the common people. And this is the spirit which has given us Brethrenism. And it is not too much to say that the founders and organizers of our beloved church were men who were willing to sacrifice, and even die for their convictions.

Conditions today demand the same spirit of loyalty to the faith. Conditions which made for success in the past will make for the same today. We are compassed about with a great cloud of witnesses who, in their day, lived and wrought and triumphed by faith in God. Are we as they were, will we go forward only when the going is easy and costs us nothing? Is the spirit of heroism dead? We believe not. Belief and effort are the prime essentials. William Wrigley, Jr. says: "The secret of successful salesmanship can be stated in five words, believing something, and convincing others."

Jesus Christ is our defense, our victory and our power. In the bigness and complexity of the problems before us we must not overlook or forget the greatness and efficiency of Christ. Christ is equal to any emergency which may arise. If we want to see Christ at his best, we must see him in the presence of the most difficult task. Defeat is unknown to him. "As we see his wound prints and remember his tears and cries, as we mark his struggle with ignorance and despotism, with misery and sin, we realize that the history of his church is but the record of his struggle continued by his people."

The church of the present must continue that which in Christ had its beginning. The commission has never been abrogated. We are saved to serve. Christ has placed his stamp upon us. The characteristic which Jesus looks for in us is that we, like him, deny ourselves, take up the cross and follow him. "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow me." Luke 9:23. "However subbornly we may contend for the faith, and however jealously we may guard Christ's words, however unctuously we may declare our love to a fellow believer, and however diligently we may abound in many comely graces, if we are not taking up our cross we are not disciples of Christ."

In order to hold the ground already gained and to extend the borders of our beloved church into new territory, special attention must be given to our isolated groups. At whatever cost, our church must be established in new localities. In accomplishing this work no small burden of responsibility rests upon Brethren people living in communities where we have no church. Groups of Brethren laity should work for the organization of the local church. The Methodists built up their great denomination by the aid of the class leaders, who in the absence of the preacher, got the people together for prayer and organization. And the early Dunkard church depended upon the local group to keep the church going and start new ones. This is in perfect accord with Apostolic practice.

It seems to me that our greatest and immediate need is a deepening and a quickening of the spiritual life, resulting in a sense of personal and particular responsibility. Paul charged the laity of his day to separation from the things of the world, and the presenting of their bodies to the Lord for spiritual service; while he showed the degree of his zeal and earnestness by crying out: "Woe is me if I preach not the Gospel."

Let us settle it once for all that it was a belief in Christ and the eternal welfare of the church which enabled the heroes of the past to give even life itself for the cause they had espoused. Let us even through prayer and faith, unite our efforts in an aggressive program of evangelism and Gospel preaching. And our efforts will not be in vain. Victory is assured. The Christ who has never known defeat will go on conquering and to conquer till all his purpose has been accomplished, and he, the blessed one, rules supremely. We have then the word of Christ to encourage and inspire us. May he be real to us in all our work throughout the year. I close with this word of appeal—the church needs your friendship, your cooperation, your best efforts. Where these are given in the fear of the Lord the success of the work of the church is assured.

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

MEXICO'S LITTLE RED SCHOOLHOUSE

A big and increasing crop of rural schools is sprouting all over Mexico. In July, 1923, there were only 3,392 such schools. In July, 1929, the number had increased to 6,073. And Mexico's farm boys and farm girls—who had scant chance before—are trudging, barefoot, to fill them. The enrollment grew from 499,353 in 1923, to 841,000 in 1929. The government—and in particular President Gil—is back of this movement. Among other things the state publishes a newspaper which is a sort of an educational first-aid kit. It contains information for young and old on current events, household items, health, data, farm hints, songs, pictures, poetry. One edition of the paper is made poster size, and displayed on the village bulletin board. Another edition is printed for schoolroom and family use. Open-air, rural theaters is another educational innovation. More than half the country schools of Mexico have such open-air theaters which provide community entertainment and serve to supplement the school work.—Christian Herald.

NO PRAYER—NO GOD

Monday's papers told of the organization of the Human Society in New York City, headed by one Potter, formerly Universalist preacher, and associated with him such persons as Walter Lippman, editor New York World, etc., etc. The chief tenet of the new cult is the denial of God and the function of prayer. Divorce is made easier, etc.

This Potter is the same person who aided the American Association Against Prohibition last year, perhaps does yet. Well, should we allow ourselves to be disturbed by such capers? But for the fact that we live in an age of complacency, it would not be a serious matter; but when the tendency is to compromise, to be a "good sport," to cut corners, to be "tolerant," it is then a very serious matter for men with the money at their command that this crowd controls, and with newspapers like the World as their organs of propaganda.—The Christian Index.

A LONG PASTORATE

The Rev. G. U. Wenner, founder and only pastor of the Christ Lutheran church of New York City, celebrated his sixty-first anniversary of his pastorate with that congregation recently. He is eighty-five years old, having taken on the congregation when but twenty-four. No time limit for the preacher in that congregation!—The Evangelical-Messenger.

ANOTHER PATRIOTEER COMES INTO THE OPEN

Having watched the Shearer investigation with a dawning comprehension of the sinister forces that have been operating under a cloak of patriotism, Chicago now has a confession on the part of one of her own rascous patriots to ponder. Mr. John J. Gorman, a former congressman who furnished the respectability for Mayor Thompson's attack on the former superintendent of schools, Mr. William McAndrew, has now made public the part he played in that disgraceful episode. To make the case against Mr. McAndrew, Mr. Gorman wrote, and testified before the Chicago school board, that the superintendent had permitted unpatriotic textbooks to be introduced into the schools. He named specifically a book by Dr. David Saville Muzzey, of Columbia university, which he called "an insidious, vile lot of British propaganda." Professor Muzzey sued. Now Mr. Gorman makes public a retraction in which he says that he never read the Muzzey book; knew nothing of its contents; but that he had signed a statement drawn up for him by others close to Mayor Thompson (the person indicated as responsible being now conveniently dead) and testified to something that was not true in an attempt to blacken the reputation of a notable historian, and through him to ruin the career of a useful public servant whose crime was his refusal to knuckle under to a notorious political machine. The more we learn about the sources of these patrioteering attacks, the more interested we become.—The Christian Century.

THE SALOON IS GONE

There are children today rapidly growing toward manhood and womanhood who have never seen a saloon. In the providence of God, may they live their entire lives without seeing one. In 1908 there were 200,000 churches and 298,000 saloons in the United States. The amount of wrong, the extent of human wreckage caused by these grogeries can never be estimated. They are gone, thank God. May they never return. By the assistance of heaven they shall not. In the year 1927 this country had no open saloons, but it had 235,991 churches functioning to improve humanity and to help lighten human burdens. In 1908, brewers, distilleries, saloon keepers, and their supporters were warning the churches that unless they got out of politics their members would desert them. The churches replied, "Unless you promoters of the liquor traffic get out of politics, we will drive you out of the country." In that battle the churches won. The saloon is gone. The brewer sits with an empty glass, sniffing for his beer. The distiller stands with his foot on the bar rail calling for more liquor. The saloonkeeper has taken off his apron and stands nonplussed in the midst of his defeat. The church has the eternal God with it in all its struggle for humanity.—The Christian Advocate (Western Edition).

A REPRESENTATIVE AT POPE'S COURT NOT LIKELY

An article in The Atlantic Monthly says that Secretary of State Stimson intimates that the Hoover administration will not send a minister to the Papal Court, as re-established by the Gasparri-Mussolini accords, though the Government will probably recognize the new Vatican State. Our country once had a representative at the Court of the Pope but it was discontinued.

In 1867 Pope Pius IX, proscribing American Protestant worship on strictly Roman soil, ordered its removal to a point outside the Roman walls. According to the pontifical conviction, Rome was the consecrated centre of a single universal Church and an exclusive Catholic city. To the mind of the average non-Catholic American this proscription and exile reflected ancient Rome's refusal to enfranchise the 'barbarians' of Tivoli. The order fired the indignation of President Andrew Johnson, Secretary of State William H. Seward, and the Congress of the United States. Our ministry to the Holy See was closed summarily, and our representative practically withdrawn. Official Washington's independence was shown further by her rather unprecedented failure to proffer any explanation to the Supreme Pontiff."

We cannot think of any reason at all for a representative at the Papal State. Our country has no religious function to perform. That is left absolutely to the individual conscience and to the Church. The Pope's State is supposed to be in the religious realm entirely. Nothing but complications could come from our effort to have relationship with it. Here is an entangling alliance that we must be sure to stay out of.—The Christian Evangelist.

Our Worship Program

Daily Readings and Suggestions

(Keep with your Bible)

MONDAY

John 9:1-7. Sickness.—Any physician knows that many of our physical sufferings are purely the result of wrong living, but Jesus here—once, for all—disproved the belief that sickness is the direct result of personal sin. Such a belief is an insult to the Godly men and women who have so patiently suffered, including Paul. To those who must suffer, it is a comfort to know that their sickness may be turned to God's glory. Let us pray for all who suffer: first, that they may be healed, if it be his will; second, that they may find anew that his grace is sufficient. And whether we live or die, we are the Lord's!

TUESDAY

John 9:8-12. Testimony.—The neighbors began to talk; some said one thing, others said another. But the man who had been healed settled the whole thing by his testimony. If we, who have been healed of our spiritual blindness, would be as ready to tell our neighbors the truth, many more would be led to a knowledge of God. God, lay upon our hearts the burden of souls, and make us strong to testify of all thy wonderful works to the children of men!

WEDNESDAY

John 9:13-17. Growth.—The man had previously said he was healed by a "man called Jesus." In the meantime, he was beginning to realize that something supernatural had taken place in his life, something beyond the power of ordinary men. So now, in answer to the question of the Pharisees, he says: "He is a prophet." May we so grow from day to day, seeing more of God's working in our lives, and realizing more of his power.

Thursday

John 9:18-23. Fear.—In contrast with their son's fearless testimony is the fear of the parents. Fear of the financial and social loss if they were put out of the synagogue made them unwilling to say so much as a word about the wonderful thing that had happened. There are still many who keep silent rather than risk being called a "religious nut;" for other reasons many seem to be afraid or ashamed to acknowledge before the world him whom they have acknowledged before the church. Help us, our Father, to know the penalty of fear, and also the privilege of fearless service.

FRIDAY

John 9:24-34. Growth through Testimony.—One certain value of testimony is its reaction upon ourselves. This man, when he began to reply to the attack of the Pharisees, apparently had no idea of the far-reaching statement he was about to make. But as he told again the wonderful thing that had happened, reasoning out the several points involved, the full significance of the event suddenly dawned upon him: this man was of God! As we bear witness of thee, O Father, may blessing come not only to him who hears, but may we also grow in knowledge of thee!

SATURDAY

John 9:35-38. "Blessed are they that hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled." This man's experiences made him the more hungry for complete revelation; he wanted to know the Christ, that he might worship him, then Christ revealed himself unto him and the man worshipped, his spiritual eyes now as much enlightened as his physical eyes. Lord, may we hunger and thirst!

SUNDAY

John 9:39-41; Psalm 67. Just as he had opened the eyes of this blind man, so he had come to give spiritual sight to those who had previously been in spiritual darkness; others, who had seen the light but deliberately shut their eyes upon it, should suffer spiritual blindness. Verse 41 is another way of saying: "To him that knoweth to do good and doeth it not, to him it is sin." God grant that this day the eyes of many may be opened, that they may worship thee; and that through faithful testimony and fellowship with thee, they may grow in grace and in knowledge of the truth. Amen!—T. C. L.

Methods Found Successful in Many Schools

What Superintendents and Teachers Have Done to Increase Efficiency

A DOZEN TESTED PLANS

By Elizabeth Williams Sudlow

It is often the little, unusual things that a Bible school does that sets it apart from the ordinary school. Not that the act is always a big one or one involving a great expenditure of money or time, but just the little everyday courtesies that are extended the stranger or the member and are not likely to be overlooked. Any school might duplicate any of these suggestions.

1. Members are asked to contribute one or more street car tickets so that the children of an orphan asylum located in the city may be able to attend.

2. All the Adult Bible Classes of the school have simultaneous business meetings on a designated night, independent business meetings followed by a joint social hour.

3. The specific aim of the Sunday school is set forth in the following terms, printed on charts and hung in each room: "To lead each pupil to a knowledge of God's will and to a definite acceptance of Jesus Christ as personal Savior and Lord, and to develop a Christian character that is expressed in service."

4. The attendance at this Sunday school has been greatly increased by the use of busses, which give free transportation to members living at considerable distance from the church.

5. Once a month a speaker is invited to address the general assembly (all above Junior age). These addresses are along missionary lines, foreign or some local charity, and a collection is taken to be devoted to this particular work.

6. In the church bulletin every Sunday is given the name and address of any who joined the Sunday school the previous week.

7. New scholars are introduced each Sunday during the closing session. This is carried out in each department.

8. On a suitable chart arranged to carry the record for six months, the number of those attending church services the previous Sunday is entered each week. This chart hangs in a conspicuous place and it is easy to tell what percentage of scholars is forming the habit of church attendance.

9. Instead of disbanding because a new church was being built on the site of the old one, and for about six weeks it would not be possible to occupy any portion of the building, one group decided to use the church lawn and hold a school in the late afternoon. So at 6 P. M. every Sunday the school assembled and services were held. Of course some scholars were lost, but not many, and the advertising the school received, because of the unique method of handling a trying situation, was beneficial. Departmental work was carried on in small groups.

10. Sending every member of the school a birthday card is the way one school makes itself popular. A birthday secretary has a record of all the birthdays and the card is mailed promptly.

11. Occasionally placing the opening service of worship in the hands of some one class has been found to be a good way of training different people to take part in a service. The class selected to do this work is expected to meet with an officer of the school well qualified to instruct in the development of a worship program. With this instruction the boys and girls are able to do their part.

12. A five minute prayer service for the teachers before the school opens has been a means of grace in one school.

Simple plans, all of these, but they have

My soul is kin to all the earth. . . .
Though patriot aims are fair and good,

HOW I TAUGHT THE LIFE OF CHRIST

By Leah F. Collins

My class in Snow Hill, Maryland, consisted of a boy of four, who could not read, one of seven who read fairly well, and a girl of nine who was especially bright in that way. I ordered Beginners' lessons, for the class was so varied in age, and I found they could not even understand the words in which the simple little lessons were couched. I couldn't sit down and do nothing, and the plan evolved was this.

Old lesson leaflets for all the classes were piled in a corner of the vestry room. They were the uncolored ones with pictures of various scenes in the life of our Lord on the cover. They started the train of thought and following it I went to the ten cent store and bought three loose-leaf notebooks and fillers for them, half the pages lined and half unlined. Then I took a mass of leaflets and sorted them, finding more than I needed in each case, and when I had finished I had a set of three each of twenty-five pictures, each showing a scene in the life of Christ, and running from his birth to his death and resurrection. The pictures were very good ones, far better than the scenes we sometimes get in colors on leaflets.

On the lined sheets of the notebooks I typed—one episode to each page—a simple life of Christ. It was told in words that I had found, through trial, they understood. It was the beautiful story of his life, told simply.

Each story page was put in the notebooks with a blank page after it, and when the Sunday came to start this new kind of teaching my children were given these books. On the covers I had put colored pictures, clipped from The National Geographic Magazine; one of a little Hindu girl with the legend, "Go Ye into All the World," another of a boy of China with "It is More Blessed to Give than to Receive," and the third with a child of Africa on it and the text, "Lo, I am with You."

I began my teaching in this pictorial fashion shortly before Christmas, so the first picture that the children were given with their books was the simple, lovely one of the cave and the manger and the Virgin and Child. They were also given paste and cloths to put the pictures in with, and each of them had a box of crayons. One picture with its story was one Sunday's lesson. First we reviewed the preceding one and, with their books closed and in their own words, they told me the story and then, with the picture before them, they pointed out the various persons to me. Then they were free to put in that Sunday's picture and to read the story about it. After we had talked about that they colored them, and it was wonderful training, too, in showing them the simplicity of our Lord's dress and the wonderful colors of that day's garments, and it put the whole thing before their eyes.

At that age children learn, I find, through eyes even more than through ears. I gave them something they could see and then read it to them, and then they told it to me. Today, when the pictures are all in, those books are cherished possessions and the children often bring them to me for repair where the pages are torn out from constant reading and turning. Incidentally it is well to reinforce them with the circular stickers in the beginning and thus preserve for them an illustrated story of the life of Christ.

BEGINNERS HELPED TO PAY THE DEBT

By Linda DeArmond

THERE was a debt on the church and the teacher of the small children resolved that they should help bear the burden. She must teach them to be real helpers, then when they grew up they would still have the desire to help support their church. She tried hard to think of a plan, but each idea was discarded. The time was slipping by and she was no nearer a solution of the problem than on the first day. She would carry the matter to her heavenly Father and ask for guidance and help, which she felt sure would not be denied.

As she was walking to Sunday school plans seemed to shape up beautifully. Of course the Beginners could help pay that debt. They could earn their money and the mothers could aid and direct them. What a good time they would have, all working for the same cause.

After Sunday school was over, she laid her plans before her assistant and pianist and they agreed to make little bags out of cretonne to hold the money. The bags were about four inches long, the top turned in, and a strong string run through, so the bag would be tight when the string was drawn.

The children were told each Sunday that

Introductory Note

Isaiah prophesied in Jerusalem, 755-679 B. C. Paul's address before the Areopagus, in Athens, A. D. 51. Christ talks with the Samaritan woman near Sychar, December, A. D. 27, in the first year of his ministry.—Adams.

Last Sunday we studied, in the light of Christian teaching, one of the great moral problems that confront us today. Now we are to consider another modern question. It is modern, for there is more discussion of the possibility of world peace than the world ever knew before; but still it is an old question, for the prophets of old dreamed of a day when the world would turn from war to peace. It may seem that there is little relation between a lesson on obedience to law and one on world peace; but these problems have much in common. They are both international problems. Intemperance is not merely a national menace, neither is disrespect for law, although we have found these problems especially acute in our country. The League of Nations is concerned with such problems as the drug traffic and venereal diseases, and all the forces that are bringing the nations of the world together are fusing their social problems into a mass of international and interracial problems. Is it not true that the full application of the principles of Christian brotherhood holds the solution of the social problems of our day? This lesson tries to answer this question.—Church School Journal.

The Fruit of the Gospel

The fruit of the Gospel is peace as certainly as the fruit of the apple tree is apples. It brings peace to the nation and to the heart of all true believers. And one of the outstanding characteristics of the true disciple of Christ is effort to promote the spirit of peace and good will among men. "Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall be called the children of God," said Jesus. There will not be perfect peace in the earth until the reign of righteousness in its completeness is ushered in, but it is manifestly the duty of all Christians not only to preach the Gospel of saving grace to the individual, but to encourage right and peaceful relations among men. Unless our preaching, our living and our every possible influence on the human relations are of such a character as to promote peace, there is something wrong with us. An undoubted fruit of the Gospel is peace.

Importance of Thinking Peace

One of the most important national attitudes we need to cultivate is that of thinking peace. National difficulties and disputes and misunderstandings will inevitably arise, but there is no need to think immediately of resorting to war to gain our desired ends. A people who desire only justice do not need to resort to force, nor will they be inclined to do so. War never settles trouble, but rather multiplies it, and removes a thousand fold the possibilities of true peace. We need to cultivate a consciousness of the folly of war and seek to build up the habit of thinking peace, and it will help wonderfully to do this, if we discard our weapons of warfare to the point where we shall not feel such confidence in them. A nation, like an individual, is never so cocky as when he is armed to the teeth.

Dr. Charles E. Jefferson has said: "We never think war with Canada. Canada never thinks war with us. When we get into our disputes we appoint a commission and Canada does the same, and the two commissions sit down together and thrash the matter out. Why do we do this? We have nothing to fight with along the Canadian border. We have no battleships on the Great Lakes. We have no forts or guns along that extended border line. We have not prepared for war. We have prepared for peace. We do not think war. We think peace. This is the message of world peace and it calls for a program which will extend the message to all nations. With the League of Nations, the World Court, and similar institutions at work for world peace, that great ideal seems more of a reality than ever before in history, but we know that the war idol has not yet been toppled. It is a big problem."

Heroism Through War or Peace?

There has always been a strong feeling in many hearts, and that feeling is not even yet dead, that war is essential to the cultivation of the heroic qualities. The military virtues are heroism, courage, honor, manliness, chivalry, patriotism, self-sacrifice, fortitude, quick obedience, discipline, duty at every cost, and the like. But with these there always arise great evils—murder, selfishness, brutality, cruelty, rapine,—all contrary to Christianity.

But in peace all these military virtues can be developed, without the accompanying evils. "There is nothing good or glorious which war has brought forth in human nature," said Phillips Brooks once, "which peace may not produce more richly and more permanently. When peace and not war is the type and glory of existence, then shall shine forth the higher soldiery of the higher battles. Then the first military spirit and its works shall seem to be but crude struggles after, and rehearsals for, that higher fight, the fight after eternal facts and their obedience, the fight against the perpetually intrusive lie, which is the glory of the higher man." All that war can do can be accomplished in peace.

The greatest war in all history is that of good overcoming evil, with Jesus Christ as leader, with the transforming of the world into the kingdom of heaven, with truth and love and righteousness, the gospel of peace, the shield of faith, the sword of the Spirit and the word of God; with a list of heroes so great and so long that all the heroes of physical war grow dim in its presence.

No Good War or Bad Peace

The Honorable Benjamin Franklin (1706-1790) American Statesman and natural philosopher, was appointed in 1776 as U. S. Minister at the court of France, where he was instrumental in forming a peace alliance between that government and the United States. Later, on the 20th of January, 1782, Franklin had the supreme satisfaction of signing at Paris, along with the English commissioners, the treaty by which the independence of the American colonies was secured. Franklin was a staunch opposer of the war system. "If statesmen," said he, "were more accustomed to calculation, wars would be much less frequent. Canada might have been purchased from France for a tenth part of the money England spent in the conquest of it; and if instead of fighting for the power to tax us, (U. S.) she had kept us in good humor by allowing us to dispose of our own money, and giving us now and then a little of her own by way of donation to colleges or hospitals, for cutting canals, or fortifying forts, she might have easily drawn from us much more by occasional voluntary grants and contributions, than ever she could by taxes. Sensible people will give a bucket or two of water to a dry pump, in order to get from it afterwards all they want. After much occasion to consider the folly and mischiefs of a state of warfare, and the little or no advantage obtained even by those nations which have conducted it with the most success, I have been apt to think there has never been nor ever will be any such thing as a good war or a bad peace."

Christian Endeavor at Ashland, Ohio

The Christian Endeavor Society of the First Brethren church of Ashland, Ohio, has again this year proved to be a very lively, interesting organization. The society, composed of local church members and college students, has been holding regular Sunday night meetings since the beginning of school. These hour periods have been conducted with unusual talent and the material has been of the highest religious and educational type.

At a late meeting of the organization, which was very impressive, the recently elected officers for the coming year were installed by Reverend Belote, the new minister of the church. A very able group of executives were chosen by the members, and every person is exactly suited to his or her present position.

The following are the installed officers: president, Lucetta Hibbs, Uniontown, Pa.; first vice-president, Donald Carter, Long Beach, Calif.; second vice-president, Bernice Berkeiser, Mexico, Ind.; secretary, Louise Kimmel, Gratis, O.; treasurer, Dorothy Whitted, Louisville, Ohio; chorister, Reid Thompson, Muncie, Ind.; assistant chorister, Ernest Pine, Long Beach, Calif.;

pianist, Mary Ashman, Johnstown, Pa.; assistant pianist, Frances Black, Mexico, Ind. After the installation of these officers it was necessary for every member to take a vow that he would give his utmost support to them.

The society here at Ashland is probably a very unusual one in that it is composed of young people who are representing so many different parts of the country. First of course the city of Ashland contributes a large group of active workers, but the remainder of the Christian Endeavor is made up of members from many different states. The two churches having the largest representation after the local church are the First Brethren of Johnstown, Pa., and the church in Long Beach, Calif. The society is composed of members from the states of Ohio, California, Pennsylvania, Indiana, Virginia, Nebraska, Kansas, Iowa, and Kentucky.

The members are all very active in religious work, having participants in gospel team work, Y. W. C. A. and Y. M. C. A. Their experience in this work also shows up in the C. E. meetings, enabling the production of a more helpful hour. Every person has an opportunity to take part in these sessions, consequently producing an interesting discussion.

The only project that the society is working on at the present time is the donating of the weekly collections as to the Kentucky Missions.

Argentina

During the past two weeks I have visited Canals and Rosario. In Canals we have a few baptized members and a great many nominal believers who have come from Europe. These latter are mostly German Lutherans who stake their salvation on their infant baptism and care nothing about the salvation of others.

We have meetings in Canals in the home of Brother De la Hoz. He has only a small house on the edge of town but is well known and has interested quite a number of friends. Several have professed conversion. The day I arrived there the bishop of Cordoba came on the same train in order to head a procession bearing the image of San Antonio in order to bring rain. The weather bureau, manned by North Americans, in Buenos Aires, had announced a rain as probable for this day and it arrived in advance of the bishop, who did not fail on this account to get the credit for it.

In Rosario we dedicated a new hall and preached for ten days, closing with the first love feast in Rosario. The work there is entirely sustained by the members of the Rio Cuarto church who are now living in Rosario. They have a good location and a nice little hall which can accommodate a hundred children. We had eighty in the Sunday school and at least half this number are regular attendants. There is no other mission within ten squares, which means that there are many thousands in this district whom we should reach. Brother Garcia directs the Sunday school and one preaching service a week. Brother Pacce preaches Sunday night and has a Bible study meeting.

We had good attendance and a number of professed conversions. When I return again we should have baptisms. The love feast was greatly enjoyed by all and the band of members there are loyal to the doctrine.

Brother Pacce has been asked to give Bible studies once a week for the "Cooperadores," an interdenominational society that conducts meetings in two places and has quite a large group of adherents. They have become interested in our doctrine and asked me to speak for them one evening in order to ask questions. It seems probable that they are going to agree on adopting trine immersion as their form of baptism.

They will use my book "The Faith of the Gospel" as their text in their Bible study meetings.

I was invited to speak in a number of places in Rosario but my time was too limited to accept. I am at Rio Cuarto for a few days and must then hold a meeting in Laboulaye. This week I go to Almaguer. Next week we are to have revival meetings in Rio Cuarto with Rev. Caramuti of Rosario as preacher.

The long drouth has been broken by rain, but more is needed. The people are suffering a worse drouth of Gospel truth. It is distressing to constantly see so many thousands who do not know the saving truth of the Gospel and to think that they must die without it, because our forces are too small to reach more than a small portion of them. We are in all only about a dozen workers for over a million of people, and yet it seems that not a man in the home church is a volunteer for this needy land. I sometimes wonder whether it is because we do not call loudly enough or insistently enough, or whether it is because the pastors at home do not echo the call. When Paul wanted to go to Asia the Lord sent him first to Macedonia. The South American call is our Macedonian call. Who will come over and help us? C. F. YODER.

Krypton, Kentucky, From Afar

Although we have been removed from the familiar scenes of the Eastern Kentucky field for several months, nevertheless all touch has not been lost, for our interest has not lagged and the mails have been efficient. The severance of relation with that work and leavetaking in no wise took place because the NEED had grown less, but we felt distinctly that the Lord led us hence through a number of mysterious coincidents. In the meantime we have been made to rejoice some but to sorrow more as news has come to us from a work that has lain heavy on our hearts.

In Memory to Manuel Davidson

Amidst life there is death, indeed. Little did we think, when Brother Manuel Davidson bade us good-bye, as one of the last group at the train, it was to meet no more until in God's presence. It was a report next to impossible of belief which came to us very indirectly at first that Brother Davidson had been hurled so suddenly into eternity by one of the treacherous locomotives on the winding double-tracked railway near his home. Many is the time we have trod those rock-ballasted ties, alone, with wife, with children, with friends, and with Brother Davidson, all times of the day and night. This was a dangerous highway, but almost the only one for those who did not ride the mule, and even some rode this beast of burden on the right-of-way. In the absence of the auto with its toll of human life, the railway took its share.

But Brother Davidson. Some three or four years ago he visited us unexpectedly one day, after having been living in Ohio. He said he wanted to get exclusively in the Lord's work, asking our advice, and he showed every mark of sincerity and zeal from the first. We lost sight of our brother then for some months, but eventually he located in a town, or rather a coal camp, not far distant, with employment, whereby he could obtain a livelihood, and at the same time he dedicated his time and energies to Sunday school work with great zest. Readers of the Evangelist have seen accounts of these activities many times, but few will comprehend the discouragements which faced our brother. Jesus' words still ring true, "A prophet is not without honor, save in his own country." Brother Davidson tramped several miles over the mountains every Sunday morning to his own home community to conduct Sunday school in a school house, returning to his home in time for a Sunday school there by 2 o'clock P. M. In the evening he preached for his own home folks in the local school-house. In addition he held midweek prayer meetings and Bible studies, and helped to establish Sunday schools in other communities for other young men to handle. As to the success of all these ventures, all can not be so ascribed, but for faithfulness and perseverance under trying and unsavory circumstances, he puts many of us who live in more favorable surroundings to shame.

Many times have we climbed the winding mountain paths, slippery with mud, snow or ice, along with our brother, and as we thus trudged, breathing heavily, we conversed between breaths, and we were always impressed with his thirst for the truths of God's Word. Again, in his home it was good to see his devotion and kindness to his family.

We felt it would be ideal for Brother Davidson to take charge of the Krypton work, at least temporarily, and this arrangement was made before our departure. Also we had the joy of assisting Brother Drushal in ordaining Brother Davidson to the eldership. But in God's province, altogether unexplainable by us, in the prime of this young man's usefulness, he was caught out of this world. We can only thank God for the acquaintance and fellowship he has granted us, and pray that those near and dear who have been so intensely bereaved may find consolation in the Word and the power and comfort of the Spirit.

But the Greater Loss

But a greater sorrow has come, if such be possible, in that the work at Krypton is left shepherdless, so far as a man is concerned; although the Great Shepherd's "daughter" is so faithfully "staying by the stuff," "gathering out of tears."

It had been generally understood that a pastor would be supplied, and that the whole matter rested on the volunteering of some of the Lord's consecrated children. But is it true there are none who will say with Isaiah of old, "Here am I, Lord; send me"?

Praise the Lord, that while the men selfishly stand back waiting for something "BIG," there are those of the gentler sex—women of God—who lay their all on the altar and count not their lives dear! It has always been so, and history repeats itself in the self-sacrificial labors of Miss Lyda Carter, alone at Krypton. May the Father bless her with strength and wisdom to carry on until some one hears the call to her assistance. Some young man and wife who KNOW the Word and its Author, and who, above all else, BELIEVE it, could be used mightily of the Lord in that vicinity if they would be willing to be led of his Spirit. God grant such ones might be found!

FRED V. KINZIE.

giving celebration at which we will seek our Home Mission Offering. Then comes Dedication Anniversary Celebration on December 1, when we are seeking to reduce our church debt by $4,000.00. The Sunday school is competing with its last year's record and so far this fall has exceeded it for every Sunday.

We are now engaged in a Victory Revival at Oak Hill, West Virginia with Brother Ankrum and his people. All is in readiness and we are praying for a real revival and genuine ingathering of souls. Pray for us. CHARLES H. ASHMAN, Pastor.

HIGHLAND, PENNSYLVANIA

We are glad that we can give a report of the Highland Brethren church. We moved to the field on October 15th, after serving several months from a distance, traveling by automobile from Masontown, Pennsylvania. Arriving at Highland we found the church ready to do all it could to help us. On a Friday evening, after the evening service, the church members with a number of other good friends, came to our home and surprised us. And a surprise it was, for they filled our shelves with many good things for the cold winter months. We appreciate what the church has done for us, and hope to render satisfactory service and to lead it on to victory.

Brother J. L. Gingrich of the Third church of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, has come to conduct a revival meeting for us. We are glad for the way the evangelist is proclaiming God's word. The people are hungry for the Bible, and that is the kind of spiritual food that Brother Gingrich is giving them. At the close of the first Sunday morning service the invitation was extended to Christians to come and reconsecrate themselves to the service of the Master. Forty-five responded to the call. Pray for us as we labor for the Master.

WILLIAM GRAY, Pastor.

GLEANINGS FROM THE CHURCH CALENDAR OF THE FIRST BRETHREN CHURCH, OF JOHNSTOWN, PA.

After an absence of six weeks from our pulpit, we returned to our ministry following National Conference. Three weeks in bed following an operation, three weeks' vacation, one week National Conference,—this constituted the six weeks' absence.

September was Rally Month. It witnessed the best average attendance at the church services, prayer meeting, and Sunday school of the five years we have been in the new church. That is, the best September attendance. The climax in the Sunday school was reached in Rally Day, September 29, when just a few under 550 were present.

The second Sunday in September, we began three series of Bible studies. On Sunday mornings, we began the series on the "Eleven Mysteries Revealed in the New Testament." On Sunday evenings, we began a series of seven sermons on Jesus Christ, covering his Deity, Humanity, Work, Intercession, Lordship and Kingship. On Wednesday nights, we began a series on "The Prophetic Psalms." These three series will run until almost Christmas, allowing for interruptions. We attribute the excellent attendance at the church services and prayer meeting largely to these series. The people after all are hungering for the Word of God.

At the quarterly business meeting of the church a Standard of Membership was adopted to become operative January 1, 1930. It will be exercised with much patience for the first year, being used as an educative measure more than a means of revision of the membership list. The matter of keeping a membership list up-to-date with a membership as large as ours is a serious problem. We honestly report every name on the roll. We have no intention of adopting an unscriptural "Associate Membership List." Neither do we intend to revise our list just in order to "cut down our mission apportionments." We are striving in this Standard to "restore such a one in the spirit of meekness."

The Brotherhood of Alexander Mack has started the Fordson Tractor on its way to Africa. The price of the Tractor and shipping charges will bring the cost close to $750.00. But the Brotherhood will get the money. In fact, all but $150.00 has already been secured.

From October 13 to October 20, we enjoyed a Bible Conference, conducted by Brother G. W. Rensch, a former pastor. His Bible Studies were much appreciated. They focused around the Rapture of the Church. The fellowship of Brother and Sister Rensch with Mrs. Ashman and myself going in and out of the homes was rich. The former pastor and the present pastor enjoyed it to the fulness. The attendance at the services was good. It was a week blessed of the Lord in many ways. Christ, his Word, his Church, and the Fellowship of the Saints were all exalted in the relative order of their importance.

This Conference was intended to prepare the church for the Communion service. It did that most successfully! The largest communion attendance in the history of the First church, but we question if there have been many larger in the history of the Brethren church. We are more and more persuaded that we are making a fatal mistake in the let up in preaching and emphasizing our distinctive ordinances. We have always sought to exalt them here in Johnstown and it gladdened our heart to look upon so beautiful a scene as was presented when 440 were assembled at this communion. Fellow ministers, preach the ordinances! There is nothing to lose and all to gain in this.

The next big event will be our Thanks-

WARSAW, INDIANA

Greetings to All:

Immediately after National Conference, the Brethren at Warsaw set themselves to their own tasks which confront the church. The church, with all the organizations, is in a good working condition.

At the quarterly business meeting, the pastor presented a local church program for the year, stressing attendance at worship services, the mid-week prayer, and Communion services, an evangelistic spirit to be promoted throughout the year, a pastor's training class, a definite goal for the church school, and that we teach tithing and cheerful support of the church in every way. The pastor's training class will be conducted for chiefly one reason, that the young people may know the doctrines of the church. This program was cheerfully accepted by the church.

The first Sunday of October the pastor celebrated his fifteenth anniversary in the ministry. The same text was used as we tried to preach from at the beginning of our first pastorate, which was Linwood, Maryland. The text was Luke 2:21. "His name was called Jesus."

January will be our revival month. Any other time the pastor is permitted the privilege of assisting some one church in a special campaign. The first to call for our services will be the one whom we assist, as has been our practice.

We are trusting that this shall be a great year for all our churches.

E. M. RIDDLE, Pastor.

LAKE ODESSA, MICHIGAN

September closes our church year and we find ourselves looking forward to doing bigger and better work for the Lord, should he tarry. Our new year starts with the church all out of debt.

Rev. R. I. Humbert is with us again. This is his fourth year, which hardly seems possible to the most of us. He preaches the same old Gospel story, yet made so new and interesting by his splendid charts. His sermon, Sunday morning, October 13, was especially interesting. It was a chart on the pyramid which took him many years of hard study to make. In this sermon we show the many, many signs of the closeness of our Lord's return.

We are still busy with tracts which our pastor stresses so much. A recent collection for them showed the splendid interest of the people in this means of doing Christ's work.

A few Sundays ago our pastor with brothers Warren Miller and E. Strong distributed some Spanish gospels of John among some Mexicans living near here. They also held a short meeting in each of the homes that they visited and found the Mexicans very eager to hear the Gospel story.

At our last W. M. S. meeting the day was spent folding tracts. Then many of the young people are folding them during their spare time. Brother Humbert's last shipment consisted of some 18,000.

October 25, is the date of our fall communion. The two evenings preceding it our pastor will give us sermons on the covenants.

Brother Humbert has held several meetings lately. He had the Bible hour at the Southern Michigan U. B. Camp meeting. During October he held a three weeks' meeting at Brush Valley, Pennsylvania. Mrs. Humbert supplied the pulpit at that time and certainly did very well. At the present time (from October 14 to 22) he is holding a meeting for Brother Drushal in Kentucky. Mrs. Humbert will again supply the pulpit.

We are now looking forward to our annual Thanksgiving dinner, which is held at the church every other year. Each alternating year it is held at the Thornapple Church of the Brethren. There is always a sermon at 10 o'clock, dinner at noon, followed by a short program and a service of praise and thanksgiving. We believe that this is a most fitting way to observe Thanksgiving day.

We ask for your prayers that we may all stand faithful until his return.

MRS. VICTOR CLUM,
Corresponding Secretary.

FORT WAYNE, INDIANA

No report has been made for some time from this city. Nevertheless we have been busy and trying to do the Master's will.

We are happy to say that vacation time is over and the time has come when church work gets more attention. The time when the hot summer months arrive is always a proposition. Every pastor knows that church work is not an easy thing any time, anywhere. However during the summer months in city church work becomes increasingly difficult. Constant confinement in the factory and the intense heat during the week and the good roads on Sunday becomes potent factors in religious work in the city. So that many of the larger churches dispense with nearly all their services during the summer.

Our work this summer however has done very well—much better than ever before. The attendance at the services was quite good. The prayer meeting did so much better this last summer than ever before. The fact is, that our work as a whole is quite encouraging just now. The Woman's Missionary Society also has taken on new life and is working very hard to help the men meet their financial obligations. So that our work is much more promising now than at any time since we built the church. We have also reduced our church debt during the year in a very substantial way, all of which is very consoling and stimulating to our people.

November 3rd we intend to begin a series of meetings with Mrs. Edna Nickolas doing the preaching. We ask an interest in the prayers of all of God's children.

MINUTES OF INDIANA CONFERENCE

The Forty-second Indiana District Conference convened at North Manchester, Indiana, October 8, 1929. The North Manchester church was well prepared, and received, registered and placed the delegates in a very splendid and hospitable manner.

There is no doubt but what this type of reception contributes very largely to the success and spirit of any conference. The church was nicely decorated and every effort was made to keep us comfortable.

The first session was devoted first of all to Foreign Missions with Brother Chauncey Sheldon, returned missionary from Africa, speaking. He emphasized the need and the hope of the work and then made a fitting appeal. Rev. H. F. Stuckman, the Vice Moderator, brought then the sermon of the evening, using as his text, "Be not overcome with evil, but overcome evil with good." Rom. 12:21. This sermon received many favorable comments. It was well received as being helpful. This session as well as all the other sessions of the conference was directed in its song service by Brother Glen Wagner of Goshen.

At the Wednesday morning session Rev. C. A. Stewart, the Moderator, brought the annual Moderator's address. This address was voted to be sent to the Brethren Evangelist for publication.

The Wednesday afternoon session was devoted to District Mission interests and Trustees interests. Each of the mission pastors gave a brief report of their work, as well as the officers of the Board. The Board of Trustees had a very glowing report to make. The trustees of our district have chief responsibility for our Shipshewana Lake project. During the year a new hotel was built, debt free; Additional portions of the grounds were platted; streets were built; the bathing beach improved; public buildings repainted, the grounds improved in general and the original debt cut down something like $1,200.00. A Fourth of July celebration was held on the grounds this last year as well as the regular Young People's Training School and Bible Conference. The girls' lodge was frequently in use and the new hotel proved very serviceable. Several new and large homes were also built on lots purchased there.

At the close of this afternoon session nearly the entire delegation accepted the invitation from the North Manchester College to visit and see through their institution. They have here a very fine college doing a great work. This institution like our own at Ashland is held in splendid repute in the community.

At the Wednesday night session Rev. Wirick brought the sermon, using as his subject, "The Gospel of the Cross." He spoke of the gospel rejected, the gospel triumphant, and the gospel of power.

The Thursday morning session was given over in the main to business. The officers and committees elected at this time will be reported at the conclusion of this report.

The afternoon session was given over to Sunday school and Christian Endeavor interests. Rev. W. I. Duker, president of the National Sunday School Association, led in a round table discussion by asking those present to state their Sunday school problems. To say the least this was interesting. Then Dr. E. E. Jacobs president of Ashland College spoke concerning the "Importance, Motive and Forces of Christian Education." Rev. E. M. Riddle, president of the Brethren National Christian Endeavor Union, led in a round table discussion of Christian Endeavor Principles and Methods, giving some very helpful replies to questions and suggestions for a better Christian Endeavor work. This was followed by an address by Prof. J. Raymond Schutz who spoke concerning Christian Endeavor as a Life Task, emphasizing thereby, life as a struggle.

The Thursday evening session was devoted to young people. Although the weather was very unfavorable, there was a goodly number of young folks who braved the storm to enjoy the evening. The banquet was very nicely served by the ladies of the North Manchester church, after which we reassembled in the auditorium where Dr. E. E. Jacobs addressed the young people on the subject, "Some Essential Virtues." Those virtues thus emphasized were: 1, Fidelity to the task; 2, Genuine desire and love for work; 3, Character; 4, A genuine love of our country.

The conference closed with a very fine spirit. There were 106 lay delegates present and 25 ministerial, making a total of 131 delegates, three less than the previous conference.

The following personal constitutes the new organization for the year 1929-1930:

A MEMORIAL

Whereas, God in his infinite wisdom and Love has taken from among us our beloved Brother and fellow Minister Chas. R. Senzenbaugh, and whereas, we the Ministers of Indiana, want to yield ourselves to the divine will and acknowledge our deepest sympathy to our deceased brother's family; be it resolved, that the Indiana Ministerium cause to be sent to the Brethren Evangelist this resolution of respect, and that a copy of the same be mailed to the family. Also that steps be taken to provide a suitable memorial for our departed brother, as an outward evidence of our esteem for him.

YOUTH DOES NOT KNOW

By W. G. Calderwood

There are many millions of American young people who, should they see a drunken man would not know it. They have no idea of the disgusting old-time saloon nor the diabolism of the open drink traffic. A couple of instances, the first within my personal knowledge, will illustrate.

A lad of sixteen or eighteen driving a grocer's delivery car, saw a man stagger along the walk a few yards and then slump down beside a telephone pole. The boy rushed to him and tried to arouse him or get some coherent expression from him. Failing he ran to a branch public library and excitedly 'phoned for a doctor. A library attendant who had been an active Girl Scout, and knew first aid remedies, hastened to the "sick" man. She had been a high school girl in the "good old saloon days" and therefore recognized the drunken man's condition and explained it to the unsophisticated lad. The doctor came. Then came the police. Before prohibition neither would have been called. Before prohibition a drunken man would hardly have attracted a delivery boy's passing glance.

The other incident is the story told in a letter from London written by Boy Scout Leader Walter S. Grebner of Sterling, Illinois, who went to Europe this summer with a party of American Boy Scouts. This letter, printed in the Rockford Morning Star reveals how shocked and astonished the American boy was at scenes which were commonplace in America in the "good old saloon days."

"About four blocks from the hotel," writes the American Scout, "we saw crowds. Before this we had seen several figures staggering along, and three women, dead drunk, called us names until a 'bob-by' dispersed them.

"Well, we went down to the crowd and found that in two blocks there were eight saloons, and they were closing. The great crowd was at least 50 per cent elderly women and 50 per cent of them were 'stewed.' Glasses of beer outside, bottles being gulped down, and yelling and howling all about. One old woman fell flat in the middle of the street, dead drunk, until two young girls helped her home. A man, and a woman evidently his wife, drunk, engaged in an argument which ended in a fist fight between the two.

"It was so disgusting, so degrading that we left the scene firmly thanking God for our American prohibition and convicted that it is our greatest blessing nationally."

Those of us who can remember the conditions before prohibition find here an ac-

TEMPER

*When I have lost my temper
I have lost my reason too.
I'm never proud of anything
Which angrily I do.
When I have talked in anger
And my cheeks were flaming red
I have always uttered something
Which I wish I hadn't said,
In anger I have never done
A kindly deed or wise,
But many things for which
In looking back across my life,
I felt I should apologize.
And all I've lost or made,
I can't recall a single time
When fury ever paid.
So I struggle to be patient,
For I've reached a wiser age;
I do not want to do a thing
Or speak a word in rage.
I have learned by sad experience
That when my temper flies
I never do a worthy deed,
A decent deed or wise.*

curate description of scenes that were nightly enacted in America, except that American women, other than the high-ups and the low-downs drank little and were rarely seen drunk. But otherwise the staggering, swearing, sodden, stream of the fetid human spew was nightly belched out of the stenchy maw of the saloons, not only in New York, Chicago, San Francisco, and other large cities, but also in many little cities hardly larger than villages where the traffic in the narcotic drug alcohol was protected by law. Repeal or liberalize the prohibition laws and these scenes will again defile our streets and pollute and befoul our moral senses.

"Give prohibition a chance: the liquor traffic had its day!"

"WILL MY CASE BE CALLED TODAY?"

A man had an important case pending in court. The time for trial arrived, and meeting his counsel who had it in charge, he said, "Will my case be called today? Are you sure that nothing is left undone? If judgment is pronounced against me, I am a ruined man." His earthly all hung upon the results of that trial; the decisive day had come, and he was anxious to meet the issue successfully.

There is a greater day which draws near; a day when every man's case is sure to be called. There will be no postponement, and there can be no appeal. The issues are vital; the decisions are for eternity. We must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ. What will be the issue of that solemn judgment? Has everything been done that can be done to make an acquittal sure? How is it with each one of us? God loves us and longs to save us. He offers to us the privilege of coming to him and finding peace through the blood of the cross, that we may thus have boldness in the day of judgment.

And yet, how many utterly neglect a preparation for that day. They know that eternity depends upon its issues and its decisions, and yet they smile, and dance, and trifle, and dream, and go to judgment unprepared. They are not in ignorance; they have not been left without a warning: "God hath spoken once, yea twice," but they neglect his call. Judgments have fallen upon others; a world has perished in its sins; guilty cities have gone down in fire and flames; and yet they dream on, forgetful of the solemn scenes that await them.

Is it not time to seriously consider this important matter? Is it not time to begin in earnest to prepare for the coming of that great and terrible day? God "now commandeth all men everywhere to repent; because he hath appointed a day in the which he will judge the world in righteousness, by that man whom he hath ordained; whereof he hath given assurance unto all men; in that he hath raised him from the dead."—Herald of Light and Zion's Watchman.

HEAVEN

"What must it be to step on shore and find it—Heaven;
To take hold of a hand, and find it—God's hand;
To breathe a new air, and find it—Celestial air;
To feel invigorated, and find it—Immortality;
To rise from the care and turmoil of earth Into one unbroken calm;
To wake up and find it—Glory."—Sel.

slaughter. But justice is with the Jew. We will continue to pour forth our millions; our men and our women and children will continue to go forth undismayed and undeterred. In Palestine there will yet again rise a Jewish homeland. This is not only our desire. This is the necessity and the mercy and the justice of history."

WHAT Does this Mean to Us?

The return of the Jew to his homeland indicates the fulfillment of prophecy and the near return of Jesus Christ to this earth. "When these things begin to come to pass, look up and lift up your heads; because your redemption draweth nigh" (Luke 21:28). The scoffers will continue to scoff, saying, Where is the promise of his Coming? But the wise will understand.

Methods Found Successful

in a few weeks they would receive a bag. In the bag would be a note for Mother, and they were to be mail carriers and deliver the letter. They were to earn their money for the church and the letter to Mother would tell her just what to do.

At last the day came for giving out the bags. The note was placed inside, the string drawn, and one bag was soon swinging from each arm. How proud they were to be trusted with a letter for Mother. The letter read as follows:

"Dear Mother:

"Your little boy (or girl) is going to try to earn some money to put in this bag for reducing the church debt. The bags are to be returned Easter Sunday. As he will only have four weeks in which to earn, will you suggest ways in which he can help, so that at least a part of the money will be the result of his work? Will you also write a note telling how he earned his money, as we desire to read the notes for the benefit of all parents. Greatly appreciating your interest and cooperation, I am

"Most cordially yours,
"....."

Each Sunday we mentioned the bags and ways for earning money, and the children certainly worked hard. I know you will be interested in some of the letters, so I will mention just a few here, from children three, four, five, and six years of age:

"I earned my money by dressing myself —my shoes, too." —A three-year-old.

"I earned my money by putting away my toys so mother would not fall over them." —A three-year-old.

"I earned my money by carrying 150 books from the cellar to the third story and placing them in a rack." —A four-year-old.

"I earned my money working for mother, and it was great." —A four-year-old.

"I earned five cents every time I went to the dairy in daytime for the milk. If I went after dark I earned ten cents." —A five-year-old.

"I earned five cents every day I carried the bread box up three steps from the cellar and put it back again." —A five-year-old.

"I earned one cent every time I did my work cheerfully and well. If I did not do it this way I had to return one cent to mother, and she did not get many pennies." —A six-year-old.

"I earned my money by going on errands, sweeping the porch, making beds, washing dishes, and setting the table." —A six-year-old.

On account of the flu and colds a number of the children were not able to be present when the bags were turned in. Out of sixty-eight bags fifty came back and the money was counted. Just imagine $44.50 from the Beginners' Department!

There was great rejoicing among the mothers as well as the children when they learned how much they had helped. One boy said it was such fun doing his work cheerfully that he was going to keep right on doing it that way, even if he wasn't earning the money.

When the pastor learned what had been accomplished by the little people, he just had to tell it before all the congregation. He also spoke about the wonderful training the little people were getting in church responsibility; the habit formed when the child was so little would stand by him as he grew up to manhood.

This plan may be used for any season of the year or wherever money raising is necessary. And when we secure the interest and co-operation of the parents, it is seldom a child will stay away from Sunday school.

BUYING A CHURCH TRUCK

By Elizabeth Williams Sudlow

After trying out the scheme for several months of using a rented truck to bring the children to Sunday school and then transport them home again, the First Presbyterian Bible School of Kansas City, Missouri, is convinced that the scheme is very much worth while. So the church has purchased a truck with a special body to be used for this purpose. But it will be used for other purposes also. Picnics, special church services, and the like, may at times call for the transporting of a group of people and then the truck is used. Children living at a distance from the church are now brought in each Sunday morning.

PALS OF THE SKY

By Margaret M. Howard

Gentle Breeze and Sky Blue sat on the edge of a woolly cloud waiting for Hurry Wind, wondering what tale he would bring from the earth, for he was always scurrying around finding out things, and wonderful were the things he knew. Away by himself Gray Cloud was watching too, for he and Hurry Wind were great pals, and had many a boisterous time together.

When the Sun's jolly red face appeared above the treetops, Hurry Wind piled up the tumbled cloud-blankets on the Sun's bed, then hurried over the sky ocean, and bounced the woolly cloud about as he sat down beside Gentle Breeze and Sky Blue.

"You don't look very happy this morning, Hurry Wind. What makes you sad?" questioned Sky Blue, who always liked to see everyone happy.

"As I swished by a house, on a hill down below, I peeked in an up-stairs window and saw a little boy on a bed, and he looked very sad; there were tears in his eyes too. He said to a lady sitting beside him: 'But Mummy, Danny and Jim can go out to play, and I have to lie here all day long.'"

"But there's no fun in that, just clouds and blue; nothing ever happens in the sky," he said.

They all sat very still, thinking about the little boy who wanted to go out to play.

Gray Cloud floated up and hung above them to see what was the matter.

"Go away, Gray Cloud, you'll make it rain," Sky Blue called up to him. But Hurry Wind said, "Oh, don't send him away; maybe he can tell us of something to happen in the sky for the little boy."

So Hurry Wind told Gray Cloud what they were thinking about, and asked him if he knew anything to do, and Gentle Breeze said, "Do you know what fun is?"

"Yes, I know what fun is; it is doing things. I often have fun doing stunts," said Gray Cloud.

"I'll do one now and show you."

He tumbled about, making himself like an elephant, then turned a somersault, coming down almost on top of the woolly white cloud. Hurry Wind rushed up and blew him off. He looked so funny they all wanted to know right away what they could do.

"Only clouds can make themselves into things," he said; "but winds and breezes can help."

"Can't I do something?" Blue Sky asked. "I want to help make the little boy happy, too."

"Oh, you can be the ocean for the cloud-ships to sail on."

"Oh, I will like that. Make a ship first then."

"All right, Sky Blue; where do you want your ship to go?" said Gray Cloud.

"Away to the end of the rainbow to bring me gold and colored silks like the ones the rainbow is made of."

"It won't get back till sunset then. Bring up the white clouds, Hurry Wind, and we'll get the ship away."

Gray Cloud was indeed pleased to be allowed to join these Sky Pals for usually he had to stay pretty much by himself, except when he and Hurry Wind made wind-storms and the rains. They were always sending him off, for fear he would bring rain and spoil their sunny days.

The White Clouds came piling up the sky before Hurry Wind, bumping together, twisting and turning into all kinds of shapes. Then Gentle Breeze chased a big one round and blew it into a ship with sails; then he sent it sailing away.

"Look, Sky Blue," he called, "there's your ship. Isn't it a beauty! It's a treasure-ship, and I'd like to sail with it."

"Do," said Sky Blue, "and bring it back at sunset."

So it sailed away with Gentle Breeze puffing out the sails.

As Hurry Wind chased the clouds around a great shaggy cloud lion reared up ready to eat someone.

"Now I'll be a tiger," said Gray Cloud, "and fight him."

So he went quickly toward the great towering lion, and while Hurry Wind blew around them, they rolled over and tumbled this way and that way.

"Now let's have a race," said Hurry Wind. "I'll drive a team of white horses and you drive a pair of grays."

"That's a go."

There was nothing Gray Cloud loved more than a race.

After it was over Gray Cloud said, "This is more fun than I have had for a long time. I wonder where Gentle Breeze and Sky Blue's treasure-ship are?"

"Look over in the West; that's it."

"I'm going now to peek in the window again," said Hurry Wind, and he rushed away to the house on the hill, to see if the little boy had seen their play. He heard him say, "Mummy, things did happen in the sky today. I saw an elephant, a lion, and a tiger fighting, and horses racing. And Mummy, I saw a ship go sailing away. And now it's coming back and has unloaded the treasure. Over there in the West I see a bed of gold, and the Sun's going to bed in it, and there are lovely silks of many colors to spread over him. Someone was laughing outside the window, Mummy."

"It was the Wind you heard," she said.—Our Little Ones.

Heart Throbs of Our Leaders For Home Missions

XXVIII—FIRST CALL FOR THANKSGIVING OFFERING

By H. F. Stuckman, President General Home Mission Board

These days of rush and stress are apt to catch us unawares, unless we have some definite plans for all our undertakings. The next big thing to claim our attention is the annual offering for Home Missions to be taken as near Thanksgiving time as possible. Just a few more weeks and the time will have arrived.

A few considerations about which we must be thinking and praying are herein set before the readers of the Evangelist. This annual offering is the only means of supporting Home Missions available to our Board. Last year the offering was smaller than on previous years. If this condition is permitted to exist again this year it will seriously hamper our work. Your Board can move no faster than you supply the funds with which our work is done. The answer to a bigger and better Brethren Church is your gifts to us at Thanksgiving time.

Each year your Board plans to do certain work with no more to go on than our faith in you. In other words, we have planned for the expenditure of thousands of dollars, with not a cent of that amount in sight, believing that you would support us to your utmost ability. The deficit in our treasury from last year, for no good reason, excepting the fact that many withheld their gifts to us, and the budget for the new year's work, I want to lay upon your hearts. It would seem, by this time certain of our brethren who have been richly prospered in material things would begin to plan to put large amounts into church extension, knowing that only by such means can our borders be enlarged and the Kingdom built up both at home and abroad.

As President of our Board I am appealing to you in this foreword to begin now to plan, pray and lay aside of your possessions, that when the time comes we may be able to give the largest Home Mission offering in our history.

Goshen Indiana.

The Story of Human Progress

(Review of "The Story of Human Progress" by Leon C. Marshall; The MacMillan Co., New York).

By Ernest H. Cherrington, LL.D., Litt. D.,
Director of Department of Education. Anti-Saloon League of America

A rather unusual book intended for junior high school pupils, is "The Story of Human Progress" by Leon C. Marshall, professor of Political Economy in the University of Chicago, published by MacMillan. One of the most important tasks society faces today is involved in making the rising generation understand some of the problems resulting from our living together. It is as undeniable as it is strange—all though not inexplicable—that the increasing complexity of our civilization seems accompanied by a developing individualism which is too prone to ignore social responsibilities. It may be that youth today is not being taught the essential social truth that "we are members one of another." It may be that this excessive individualism is merely the unconscious expression of the ego's resentment at being reduced to merely one link in an endless chain or one cog in a great machine. However that may be, no youthful student—nor for that matter, any older mind which has read Mr. Marshall's book—will misconstrue the interrelations of human society.

Professor Marshall does not discuss prohibition any more than he does many other highly disputed modern problems. But those who are concerned about prohibition and especially about youth and youth's relation to prohibition, will be glad to read phrases like this in Mr. Marshall's book:

"We ought not to think of law as some goblin 'that'll get us if we don't watch out.' We ought to think of it as a statement of the ways of living that long experience has shown to be good. A physician gives us rules of good health; he makes better rules as he learns more about the human body. Our laws are part of the rules of good health for a community; we can make better laws as we learn more of how a community is put together and what will make it healthful."

or this one:

"It is of tremendous importance that we keep our respect for law. No game is clean unless the players respect the rules. No society is safe unless its members respect its rules. We ought to be like the Greek philosopher, Socrates. He was in prison and sentenced to death. Some of his friends, by crooked work, arranged to set him free. 'No,' said Socrates, 'above all things we should faithfully keep the laws. I will not escape.'"

Nullificationists or anarchistic foes of law enforcement will not have an easy time to indoctrinate youth with their false standards if youth has caught the meaning Professor Marshall has so pungently expressed in sections like this:

"But, after all, if our hot ideals and ideas are 'right,' reasonably good ways exist for carrying out the will of the people in an orderly way, and these ways can be made even better. Another of the most dangerous members of our society today is the fellow who is unwilling to use our orderly ways of making changes. It is far wiser to use them than to build up a strain that may cause a break."

Mr. Marshall's occasional references to over-hasty reformers and to others who try to lift humanity more rapidly than wisdom would suggest may not be relished by some of our friends whose indiscretion is as great as their earnestness and sincerity.

It is high time that someone should have written and that someone else should have published a book like "The Story of Human Progress." I am glad that Mr. Marshall and the MacMillan Company are filling this very genuine need.

Prime Minister MacDonald Given Bible

Prime Minister J. Ramsay MacDonald was presented with a King James Version of the Bible by President E. Francis Hyde on behalf of the American Bible Society in his suite at the Hotel Weylin, in New York City, upon his return from the conference with President Hoover. The presentation was "in commemoration of the profound influence of the great versions of the English Bible upon the ideals of peace and freedom held in common by the English-speaking peoples and in testimony to its place in strengthening the bonds of friendship and goodwill between the nations of the earth."

"This Book contains in the seventh Beatitude a tribute to the Peace-makers," said Mr. Hyde in making the presentation. "Copies of the King James Version are published by the National Bible Society of Scotland, the British and Foreign Bible Society and the American Bible Society and circulated throughout the English-speaking world. No book has done more to bring the nations of the world together in mutual understanding and cooperation than the Bible." Mr. MacDonald indicated his thanks for the Bible "with the personal inscription always valued."

When the American Bible Society was founded in 1816 one of the first gifts it received was from the British and Foreign Bible Society in England. "It was the Power of the Bible alone," said Mr. Hyde, "That made this generous gift possible almost at the moment that the war of 1812 was over."

THE OLD SCOTCHMAN'S PRAYER

Prayer is a simple but a real interchange between the child and the Father in heaven. The child asks, and the Father gives. Many books have been written on the philosophy of prayer, but not one has made it any clearer than our Lord's words recorded in Luke 11:9-13.

Many years ago an old Scotchman, poor, pious, and hard of hearing, lived where he seldom heard a sermon. Learning that religious meetings would be held for several days at a distant place, he journeyed toward it on foot.

On his way he fell in with a young man, and as he also was going to the meetings, the two walked together. As they came near the meeting-place it seemed good to them to halt behind a hedge and offer prayer. The old man, a child when he knelt before God prayed:

"Lord ye ken weel enough that I'm deaf, and I want a seat on the first bench, if ye can leave me have it, so that I can hear thy Word."

"And ye see that my toes are sticking through my shoes, and I don't think it is much to your credit to have your children's toes sticking through their shoes, and therefore I want a pair of new ones."

"And ye ken, I have nae siller, and I want to stay during the meeting, and therefore I want you to get me a place to stay."

The young man, shocked at the old man's familiar way of praying, gently suggested that it was hardly the proper thing to approach the Almighty as a child would a father.

"He's my Father," replied the old man, not accepting the suggestion of irreverence; "I'm weel acquainted with him, and he's weel acquainted with me! therefore I take great liberties with him."

When they arrived at the large tent in which the services were held, it was full. For a few minutes the aged man stood in the rear of the congregation, making an ear-trumpet of his hand to catch the preacher's words.

His strained attitude of attention at last attracted the notice of some one near the pulpit. The old saint was beckoned forward and given a seat on the front bench.

During the prayer the old man knelt. The reverential posture attracted a lady's attention. She saw his worn-out shoes.

"Are those your shoes?" she asked, when he assumed his seat.

"Yes, but I expect my Father to get me a new pair, very soon."

"Come to me after meeting, and I'll give you a new pair."

At the close of the service she conducted him to her house and gave him a pair of shoes.

"Will you stay through the meeting?" she inquired of the old gentleman.

"I would, but I'm a stranger in the place, and have nae siller."

"You are welcome to make my house your home as long as you care to remain."

The young man learned of his aged friend's good fortune. And he learned more—that even a child's earnest, simple, direct requests are not irreverent when made to the Father in heaven.—Selected.

If ye love me, keep my commandments. A new commandment I give unto you That ye love one another.

England spent more to subjugate two South African republics than it cost to make Athens the wonder of the world. In the last world war they spent more than it would take to bring the Gospel to every man in every part of the world. O, that God would enable men to see the folly, and devilishness of war. If good will towards men were in every heart, bayonets would pierce none.

The Reflex of Missions

An Editorial by Prof. A. L. DeLozier

(Editorial Note: We failed to get this splendid article in time to run it with the general articles, and because of its excellent worth and the prominence that Home Missions deserves in this issue, we are giving it editorial space this week.)

The greatest and most worthwhile Christians that I have ever met have been those primarily interested in missions. By interest in missions, I mean an irresistible desire to see the Gospel proclaimed everywhere. I refer to what we commonly call a can't-help-it attitude. If not "Woe is me if I preach not" then at least "Woe is me if I do not all in my power to make possible the preaching."

This interest to which I refer is far from mercenary. It is on the contrary entirely and purely and superlatively unselfish. It is as irresistible as the force of gravity.

The title of this article reads "Reflex" and this is the right word to use here, because whatever blessing comes through this interest of which we are speaking, comes spontaneously and unconsciously. It isn't planned. It comes as a surprise. It is a by-product.

I mention this because when I think of our interest in missions, I cannot have in mind mere philanthropy or anything that savors of the meritorious. There is no reflex for the person who is interested for what he may get OUT of it. This would be too much like a statement which I read in a European paper: "The only interest the United States has in Europe is what she can get out of Europe."

That may or may not be legitimate interest in the case of the dealings of one nation with another, but such an attitude is quite short of the mark in Christian things.

That there is a worthwhile reflex, or to put it colloquially "Kick" accruing to one's interest in and promotion of missions needs no argument. It is proven by the fact that men and women of all classes and of all stages of wealth and position have relished such a reflex. In fact the world's biggest men are interested in missions. Statesmen, steamship captains, professional men—as bankers, lawyers, doctors and all the rest.

No doubt that one of the first items in this reflex is that it makes one bigger. The whole missionary task is a big thing and men grow big as they ally themselves with it. After all, everyone likes to be "big," even in the best sense of the word.

This interest brings intellectual satisfaction, especially geographically, economically and ethnically. But in many other ways the intellect is fed by a vital contact with missions.

We talk of seeing America first, but we may know America best by a missionary interest in her cities and various communities.

There comes the satisfaction of knowing that we are in the Lord's will and linked with his plan. This injects real purpose into our lives and makes for genuine happiness. We feel that we aren't living in vain.

There comes the pleasant feeling which results from helping others. No honest and normal man or woman but who will admit that this is a very worthwhile reflex in life.

There is the superlative joy of soul-winning both directly and by proxy. Alas, too few Christians in our day are capable of estimating this joy. But some at least can testify that the Word is true when it alleges that "He that winneth souls is wise."

People get satisfaction out of hobbies. No hobby will bring so much of that feeling as the missionary hobby.

There is the joy of an investment plus certainty of dividends. This means quite a great deal in our day of bogus stocks.

It means the translating of the Bible into practice and hence a sense of achievement.

It imports to us a more serious prayer life. For the Christian this is most assuredly worthwhile, especially in a day of neglect such as ours. But above all, our interest in missions sounds the death knell of pessimism and selfishness and fills us plumb full of faith in an age of doubt. I wish that I had the time to make the right amount of prayerful research on this point. I am sure that I could bring forth a surprising array of satisfactions, blessings, joys and thrills.

Indeed one could exhaust the vocabulary of words expressive of genuine and worthwhile reflexes that pour like a flood into the soul of the Christian who fosters a true interest in the thing that lies at the very core of the span of God and the mission of Jesus Christ in the world. But I am not posing as covering so rich a field of meditation as this. I only hope to have you, Mr. Christian, sit down, or rather kneel down, and pass in review the good things that have come, or may come, to you through your proper sharing with the Master the burden for souls.

May God speed the day when we may learn to build as the tree grows, from the center out and out in ever enlarging circles to the ends of the earth. But, mark you, the center or HOME BASE must be strong and solid or the whole thing will be as dead and worthless as a hollow log. If the growth at the center is endangered, it is only a matter of time until all must suffer.

The Brethren church has been very fortunate in not having to retrench in her foreign mission work. Many churches are being obliged to do so. Yet if we as a people do not back our home missions better, we too stand on the verge of a dark abyss of uncertainty on this matter.

Why not be "happy and on the way" in our day which finds so many drifting aimlessly as a derelict on the sea?

Let's not be unhappy like old king Lear, but rejoicing with the King of Kings.

The Need of a National Peace Mind

One of the most important elements in the process of building for international peace is the turning of the thoughts of the nation to ways of peace and to peaceful means of settling international problems and disputes. It is all very well for our government officials to make peace pacts and to renounce war, but unless we are able to bring our nation to have a peace mind, our instruments of peace will not accomplish much. All peace measures are artificial and premature until public sentiment is brought to their support. There was nothing more significant in the addresses Prime Minister MacDonald made during his recent visit to the United States than his repeated appeal for the support of public opinion. Both he and the Honorable Elihu Root, who presided at the dinner given the Premier in New York by the Council of Foreign Relations, dwelt on the fact that the only possible way to prevent war is to prevent the coming of a war state-of-mind. And in order to do this there must be developed a peace state-of-mind.

Here is where the church should function in a larger and more positive way than she has done in the past. There is no institution that has so much right and responsibility as the church for building into the minds of the public the Christian attitude toward the great moral problems of the day, and the problem of building for peace is one of paramount importance. This Armistice season ought to see very definite efforts put forth to turn the minds of the people from a dependence on navies and military armaments and organizations for a sense of security to a reliance on international fellowship, the council table, and the adoption of principles of righteousness, justice and trustfulness as the motivating and guiding policies of national procedure. Let us seek to build up a peace-loving attitude of mind in whatever ways appeal to us. Especially should we seek to inform the people about the peace pact. Secure a copy and hang it on the bulletin board in your church vestibule, or in other ways make it possible for the people to study it. No religious group has a larger proportionate share of responsibility for the building of a peace mind than the Brethren church, whose history is one continuous record of opposition to war. We fear our younger generation is not being informed at this point as they should be, and there we are at fault. Let us not forget that Jesus not only told Peter to put aside his sword, but he also said, "Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall be called the children of God."

EDITORIAL REVIEW

God judges a life by what it sincerely intends, while men judge it by what it actually achieves.

A man can always be happy, if he will learn always to like whatever he has, even though it is not exactly what he would like.

Not the house nor its furnishings make the home, but the folks who live inside.

There are so many societies and clubs for both parents to join these days that they have no time to join the home circle.

Every pastor owes it to the future of his denomination to make the best preparation possible for the lifting of a generous Home Mission Offering.

If it is true, as some one has poetically said, that "Christ has no hands but our hands to do his work today," how sorely he must be handicapped by the inactivity of some of us.

Something has happened to prevent copy for both the highly appreciated departments of page two arriving this week, but they will both doubtless be in their places next week. Both Brethren McClain's and Miller's departments are very popular. If you have questions for Dean Miller, send them in, to him or the editor.

Sister Emma Aboud writes of the celebration of the second anniversary of the Brethren Gospel Hall and of the first anniversary of the organization of the Brethren church in New York City. This service was programmed to continue from November 3 to 18th. Communion service is to be held on November 24th.

Of course you are reading Prof. McClain's timely comments and Dr. Miller's answers to questions. Both departments are interesting. You can help along Brother Miller's department by sending him questions you would like to have answered. It is not for preachers only, but for laymen as well. Don't be backward about sending in any appropriate question, to Dr. Miller or the editor.

Brother L. G. Wood, pastor at Fort Scott, Kansas, writes that the situation in that mission church is more encouraging than for a long time, but that there is still need of patience being exercised. One person was recently received by letter. An intensive leadership training school of interdenominational character was participated in by our people. They are praying and working to the end that their church debt may be lifted this year.

Brother A. R. Staley writes that he began his work at Des Moines, Iowa under most discouraging conditions, but that there is cause for encouragement, and he believes our church in that city has a chance to make good. With a reorganized Sunday school headed up by Attorney R. A. Emmert and a working W. M. S. and a newly organized Christian Endeavor society, and with interest increasing in the church services, there is reason for more hope for the future of the Brethren cause at that place.

Brother W. S. Crick, the faithful pastor of the church at Fremont, Ohio, writes of the progress of the church through the years of its history and points out the worth of mission support. He says that the Fremont church will likely be able to care for itself as soon as its building debt is out of the way. It is a fine piece of work that the gifts of the churches have made possible—the adding of adequate and efficient equipment to this field of our Lord's work. Brother Crick is proving himself a worthy and capable leader of these people.

From Winchester, Virginia, come reports from pastor and evangelist concerning a successful revival recently held, resulting in fourteen souls making the confession of Christ and fifteen reconsecrating themselves to his service. Brother Rohart has proven himself a good and faithful pastor, being especially successful with the children. This was Brother R. Paul Miller's first campaign of the season. He sees much promise in this mission field and is pleased with the progress made in its three years of history. Its needs and its prospect are a challenge to the brotherhood's liberality in the coming Home Mission Offering.

The new church of the Pacific Coast is South Gate, which Brother Leo Polman reports in this issue. Starting with a Sunday school of fifty-five they are pressing on to larger things with much energy. They are to dedicate their new church building on November 10th, with Dr. L. S. Bauman preaching the dedicatory sermon and Brother A. V. Kimmell having charge of the money-raising features. Other ministers of the district have parts on the program of the day. Brother John Lienhard of the Second church of Long Beach is conducting a two-weeks' evangelistic campaign preceding the dedication.

From Muncie, Indiana, Brother M. L. Sands, the pastor, writes of the interest in and progress of the work during the year he has had charge. He has a splendid group of workers and they are giving him fine support. During the year they added $2,000 to the building fund. They are anxious to get their new building built, as it would add much to their chances of growth. The Sunday school has been making a splendid record. About the middle of October on the occasion of a Homecoming and Rally Day, Dr. J. L. Kimmell, a former pastor, was the special speaker of the day. This is one of our very promising mission points.

Brother G. E. Drushal reports a splendid meeting recently conducted at Riverside Institute, by Brother R. I. Humbert, who was instrumental in leading sixteen souls into the church by baptism and twenty-three to reconsecrate themselves to the service of Christ. The meeting extended only one week, but it was intensive. Brother Drushal points out the value of maintaining the high school work at Riverside. Brother Humbert, who also writes in this issue, supports that view and pays tribute to the fine work being done there and at Krypton. Brother Humbert has made frequent visits to the field and has given it much help.

A splendid report from Harrah, Washington, is given us this week over the signature of the pastor, Brother Fred V. Kinzie, who finds much to praise God for in his field, particularly the fine response of the membership to the appeal for funds to retire a large portion of the debt that remained on their church building. Apparently these good people know how to give to the Lord, and because they do, we anticipate that they will, in a few short years, realize the ambition expressed by their pastor, that of becoming a self-supporting church. The fine progress being realized certainly gives cause for encouragement and satisfaction to those who have been giving good money for the building of churches in the homeland.

PRAYER REQUESTS FOR THIS WEEK—

Brother L. G. Wood, pastor of our church at Fort Scott, Kansas, says: "Remember this work at the throne of grace."

Dr. Florence N. Gribble asks prayer for the work in Africa, especially for the faithfulness of the native evangelists.

Brother Chauncey B. Sheldon solicits prayer in behalf of his deputation work in Ohio and Indiana.

Our correspondent from Clay City, Indiana, where Brother Oberholtzer is pastor, asks prayer for the work at that place.

Brother G. E. Drushal asks that prayer be made that some pastor may volunteer for work at Krypton, and that they at Lost Creek may be kept in the will of God.

Brother A. R. Staley asks an interest in our prayers for his work at Des Moines, Iowa.

Brother A. B. Cover, pastor of the First church of Los Angeles, asks that he and his work be put on your prayer list.

Pray for the salvation of souls and the success of the Brethren work in New York City under the leadership of Sister Emma Aboud.

Our Part in the Peace Program

By Q. M. Lyon, Editor Sunday School Lesson Publications

(Address at Ohio Conference, held at Ashland, October 22-25, 1929)

There are two kinds of peace spoken of in the Bible. The first is inward; the second is outward. The first comes from a knowledge of sins forgiven and from the assurance of life eternal. The second follows upon the ways of justice between a man and his neighbor, and between one nation and another. Thank God, we can have peace of heart when we cannot have social, industrial, or international peace. But we would like to have both kinds of peace. The prophets were interested in both kinds. They predicted the sure coming of an age of peace between nations, when battleships should be scrapped for use in agriculture, and great guns should be of interest only in museums. Jesus, too, spoke of both kinds of peace. He bequeathed his wonderful peace of heart to his disciples on the eve of his departure from this life. But he also blessed the peacemakers, calling them sons of God! He clearly foresaw the age of peace, following upon an age of strife.

It seems to be our denominational attitude to attend to the spiritual needs of those about us, and let the physical take care of itself. It also seems to be our tendency to speak to the individual's needs, and thereby assume that we have looked after his social needs as well.

Commenting on the former attitude, I would remind you that Jesus usually healed men's bodies before he cured their souls. He was interested in their physical well-being and happiness quite as much as spiritual salvation. All through history Christianity has proved its right to the distinction of being the final religion by the character of its good works. "By their fruits shall they be known," said our wise Savior.

As for the second tendency of our denomination, let it be said that no man exists apart from his social environment. The individual is quite as much dependent on his social environment as his environment is dependent on him. And if we want to be of the greatest usefulness in this world, if we want to show forth the genial sympathetic spirit of our Lord and Master, we must be interested in society as such, just the same as in the individuals who make up that society.

Now if all the people of the United States had assumed this attitude that it was enough to look after the spiritual needs of individuals about us, today we would still have open saloons on every street corner of our large cities, towns and hamlets. Mills and factories would be exploiting the lives of our nation's children. Women would still be working unbearable hours in shop and factory and store and office. And landlords would be ordering the poor out into the streets without mercy.

Thank God for those Christian men and women of vision who have dared to preach and sacrifice for the sake of winning a better day for us! I also thank God that such men and women still exist, and that they are in pursuit of such ideals as world peace, industrial equity, the elimination of poverty, crime and disease, and the establishment of friendship between the races of mankind and equal opportunities for all.

The world is extremely fortunate right now—rather, I should say, we are blessed by providence, in that the two greatest nations of the world are headed by Prime Minister MacDonald and President Hoover, Christian men whose ideals are the ideals of Christ, who love justice and mercy, and who are frankly and earnestly trying to rid the world of the curse of war. These men are paralleled in such fields as industry and social welfare work by men like Henry Ford and John D. Rockefeller, Jr., and the Columbia Conserve Company, and a host of others who are recognizing the rights of humanity to all-around well being.

It would be hard to estimate what the situation in the world would be today without the influence of the church of Jesus Christ. The same divine force which in the early centuries strengthened martyrs and caused the church to gain a place of ascendancy in the antagonistic Roman empire has today caused the church to gain a second victory in a profounder sense. I believe that the heaven of Christianity is responsible for the great gains which our civilization has so far made, and that it will be responsible for many more such gains.

Last year the Ohio Pastors' Convention made a vigorous protest against the cruiser bill of the big-navy program, and sent a record of their action to their responsible representatives at Washington. Shortly after that the bill was voted on, and the big-navy program was defeated. Was there not a connection between the two events? Similar correspondences may be traced between government actions and the resolutions of various church bodies in our country. Besides definite instances of where the church has influenced legislation, there are innumerable instances where public opinion has been formed over a number of years by the teaching of the church.

THE PACIFIST

By C. F. Yoder

*Braver than he who can stay with the sword
And conquer the insulting foe,
Is the man who can win with the pardoning word
And avoid the avenging blow.*

*Truer the patriot army of peace,
Creator of prosperous homes,
Than the army of conquest, planting the flag
Wherever the tyrant roams.*

*Loud as the mouth of the cannon is,
As it barks in defense of men,
Stronger and clearer by far is the voice
Of the prudent and friendly pen.*

*Great is the statesman, staying the hand
Of treacherous alien powers,
Greater the preacher, routing the foes
From the homeland's sentry towers.*

*Not in the glory of loud applause
Does the pacifist seek his reward.
Rather he suffers insults in his cause,
Content to be loved of the Lord.*

*But when in the justice of final accounts,
The heirs of the earth are made known,
The sword and its champion shall disappear
And the peacemakers come to their own.

Some Brethren Church Leaders of Yesterday, as I Knew Them

By Martin Shively, D.D.

XXIII. Elder Henry Wise

Somewhat more than five years ago this man of God was called from labor to his eternal reward, after having served his church in a ministry which had covered a total of forty seven years, and a ministry which had been much blessed both in the conversion of souls and the establishing of centers of service. He had the good fortune to be well born, both as to human parentage and Divine, for he was a Spirit-filled man. As to parentage, he was not only of Tunker stock, but the son of a minister, and I am sure he was of the really consistent type, so that not only was the son inclined by his home life to enter the church, but to enter its ministry when he was called to do so. His father was Elder Adam Wise, and Henry first saw the light of day among the hills of Washington County, Pennsylvania, while his early and later manhood was spent amid the like rugged surroundings in the adjoining county of Greene, whose hills seem to me to be even more rugged. The beauty of these hills and dales must have added to his inclination for reverence for the things of God, whether they lay at his feet or found expression in the wondrous revelations found on the pages of God's Book. At any rate, he gave his heart to his Lord at twenty years of age, and some years later, was called to the ministry at Quiet Dell, a rural church near which his body found its last resting place. He served congregations as pastor, in both midwest and east, as well as giving much time to evangelistic work in which his effort was much blessed. In fact he gave himself to this kind of service almost without intermission, until an attack of typhoid developed a heart affection from which he did not recover, and which finally terminated in his death. Perhaps the outstanding achievement of his ministry was the establishing of the Pittsburgh Brethren church, to which he gave much time and effort, and for the success of which he must have prayed much and often. If any man can rightfully be called the father of any such organization, this thriving congregation may be thought of as his child, and he as its father. Dan Bole rendered yeoman service there, but his work made it impossible for him to present its needs to the various conferences, or to call widely upon possible human helpers, a service to which Brother Wise gave himself without stint. The ill health referred to earlier in this brief paper, made it impossible during his later years to do more than sit on the side lines, cheering on the workers, and assuring them of his prayers in their behalf, a service as much worth while as any he could have rendered. His end came mercifully, swiftly and painlessly, a manner of going for which he no doubt had besought the Master whom he had served so faithfully and so long.

Brother Wise was a man of splendid appearance, tall, straight, and of dignified mien,—a man who wore a smile not easily erased, and one who inspired confidence in all whom he met. Perhaps his chief interest centered in the Pittsburgh church and in the home of his one son in which he found domicile during most of the last twenty-seven years of his life, for the wife of his young manhood had preceded him in death by that span of years. But if his chief interest centered here, he had an abiding interest in all the institutions of the church. Not many months before he was called home, he came to Ashland to visit the college and publishing house, being the guest of the writer at that time. It is all too common for men to have such an absorbing interest in one institution, that there is no room in their hearts for anything else. If it is the work of their own district conference, little if any attention is given to the general conference, and too many have so little interest in it that they rarely if ever attend it. Others have all their interest absorbed by the foreign missionary interests of the church and give little attention to anything else. With others, it is home missions, and this receives their help to the exclusion of all else. The subject of this sketch was a man of far wider vision, and when the church militant lost him, it lost one whose interest was as wide as its needs. He was a familiar figure at the general gathering of the church, and while he never coveted advanced position in it, his geniality, his quiet and kindly dignity, and his wise counsel, made a contribution to the results of such conferences which was more than worth while.

I am not at all sure as to when or how I first met Brother Wise, but suspect that it must have been at some of the general gatherings of the church. And we rarely met except at such times, but I felt that I knew him well, and know that I loved him much, and in his death I lost on this side, one more of the friends, the knowing of whom enriched my life, and for the passing of whom, there is additional reason for persevering in the Jesus way, since the end of it not only promises the incomparable reward of seeing him as he is, but also assures me of the added joy of meeting again the dear ones whom I knew and loved here.

Ashland, Ohio.

Our Part in the Peace Program

There appears to be three things which the Brethren Church may do, by way of cooperating in the program of world peace. The first is to minister to the individual's needs at home and on the foreign field, and by that reconciliation of the sinner's heart with God make possible his reconciliation with his fellow men. The second is that we may again make peace a dominant note in our denominational teaching and propaganda, as our fathers did before us. The third is that we may, as a national assembly, as state conferences, as single congregations, and as individuals, keep in close touch with our representatives at Washington, and let them know on what principles we stand, and how our next votes will be cast. In a democracy such as ours, only the people can be blamed if things go wrong.

In regard to our first duty, I believe the Brethren Church measures up favorably with any church in its missionary zeal and in things accomplished. As for the second, we shall not as a denomination make peace the dominant note of our church life as it once was until we get rid of the notion that war is inevitable. Was not the saloon inevitable? Was not slavery inevitable? Was not child-labor inevitable? Were not the horse and carriage inevitable? With God, nothing is inevitable, and nothing is impossible, and that means with the Spirit of God working through us!

President Jacobs recently asserted in "The Social Note" of the Brethren Teacher, that prohibition and temperance are no longer merely a religious question, but a broad human question. If temperance rather than prohibition was the ideal of New Testament times, that was because conditions were different from what they are now. There was not a saloon on each street corner in those days. Nor was there so much wealth to squander on drink. Nor were there automobiles and machinery which make the use of intoxicating drink a hundredfold more dangerous.

In the same sense, the question of world peace is a topic which for the present supersedes religion. Mankind's answer to that question will determine whether civilization shall continue or not.

It has been said that "If mankind does not end war, war will end mankind." The former First Lord of the Admiralty, Winston Churchill, has written one of many similar statements by military experts as to what a future war will be:

"All that happened in the four years of the Great War was only a prelude to what was preparing for the fifth year. The campaign of the year 1919 would have witnessed an immense accession to the power of destruction. Had the Germans retained the morale to make good their retreat to the Rhine, they would have been assaulted in the summer of 1919 with forces and by methods incomparably more prodigious than any yet employed. Thousands of aeroplanes would have shattered their cities. Poison gases of incredible malignity . . . would have stifled all resistance and paralyzed all life on the hostile front. . . . The campaign of 1919 was never fought; but its ideas go marching along. In every army they are being explored, elaborated, refined under the surface of peace; and should war come again to the world it is not with the weapons and agencies prepared for 1919 that it will be fought, but with developments and extensions of these which will be incomparably more formidable, and fatal . . ."

"As for poison gas and chemical warfare in all its forms, only the first chapter has been written of a terrible book. Certainly every one of these new avenues to destruction is being studied on both sides of the Rhine (and, we may add, in countries far from the Rhine), with all the science and patience of which man is capable. . . . A study of diseases of pestilence methodically prepared and deliberately launched upon man and beast—is certainly being pursued in the laboratories of more than one great country. Blight to destroy crops, anthrax to slay horses and cattle, plague to poison not armies only but whole districts—such are the lines along which military science is remorselessly advancing."

"Mankind has never been in this position before. Without having improved appreciably in virtue or enjoying wiser guidance, it has got into its hands for the first time the tools by which it can unflinchingly accomplish its own extermination. Death stands at attention, obedient, expectant, ready to serve, ready to sheer away the people en masse; ready, if called on, to pulverize without hope of repair, what is left of civilization."

Any glory that was ever attached to war has certainly disappeared now. I had rather our country should submit to invasion and foreign occupancy than to go to war with such weapons in use. By a passive resistance we could make foreign control unprofitable financially, and a war which does not pay is never fought deliberately.

In consideration of these grave facts, and of all that we have said, is it not our duty to cast our lot with all Christendom and all who will join us in those spiritual enterprises which far transcend denominational and racial boundaries, and lend all our powers and influence to the bringing about, to the greatest degree possible, a permanent state of international peace? Shall we again let a conference program pass without some definite consideration of peace and our relation to it? At our last national conference the peace interest was absent. It did not even appear in our resolutions! Our government does not know that Brethren people vote, it would seem. This is not as it should be. To sum up our peace situation: the time has come when we realize that loyalty to mankind is greater than loyalty to any single government. Friendships are now international. We are dependent on one another all around the globe. We need each other, and the only way to survive is by being friends. The day of trigger diplomacy is past. Strong-arm methods of enforcing so-called international justice are out of date. The only moral way to obtain international justice is through international courts of law and arbitration, just as we now obtain justice between the states and individuals of our nation by appeal to the United States Supreme Court. Even if justice sometimes miscarries in the courts, that is still better than using the very unprofitable and immoral method of guns and poison gases. A system of international police force is justified, but that is a far different proposition from our present burdensome and competitive system of armaments.

Finally, I commend the builders of the present conference program for including the peace issue. And I hope that the Ohio Conference of Brethren churches will stimulate more thought and action in the church at large in this important duty. The next general conference, and the next state conference, should do three things: First, it should include the topic of peace prominently in its program. Secondly, it should appoint a committee to study possible ways and means of promoting the peace mind among ourselves and among those whom we directly influence. Thirdly, it should let the government know definitely where we stand and what we mean to do in case there is ever another war.

Things By the Way. XXIII

By Dr. A. D. Gnagey

A Searching Question

It was a heart-searching and timely question which some one asked not long ago: Which should be of greater importance or prominence, the perpetuation of a church's theology or the salvation of men? The maintenance of an institution or the evangelization of the world? The propagation of our opinions or the extension of life that was in Jesus? Surely, here is something for us to think about, especially for those who make paramount in their thinking and religious activities theories concerning God and Christ and the Kingdom which are just as truly based upon hypothesis as is the theory of evolution. The things of supreme importance are the things to which Jesus summoned men and the things the summons involved. These should be paramount in the Christian's thought and life. Jesus did not talk about a mysterious and magic salvation, or of a theoretical scheme of redemption which it is beyond the comprehension of ordinary men to understand. He talked of a life to be lived now, a fellowship with the eternal Spirit to be entered into now, a change in daily thought and conduct to be effected now, a wonderful and eager joy to be enjoyed now. Jesus made religion a simple and beautiful thing: we have made it a mysterious and magic philosophy.

The Printer's Error

Occasionally, very occasionally, the printer's error is an improvement on the original, as is evidenced from the following item: Recently there appeared in one of the church papers a suggestion from an eminent minister under the title, "Put Peace Pact Posters in the Churches." The plan was commended as good. So it was. Yet the printer was either dreaming good dreams or else had a genuine inspiration which caused him to depart from "copy" and set slightly different heading, for the proof which appeared contained a suggestion that is even better. This was it: "Put Peace Pact Pastors in the Churches." A change of a single letter, "o" to "a," did the trick.

The Secret of Success

Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman in an interview with General William Booth, asked him the secret of his success. After a moment's hesitation, with tears in his eyes, he said: "I will tell you the secret. God has had all there was of me. There have been men with greater brains than I, men with greater opportunities; but from the day I got the poor of London on my heart, and a vision of what Christ could do with the poor of London, I made up my mind that God would have all of William Booth there was. And if there is anything of power in the Salvation Army today, it is because God has all the adoration of my heart, all the power of my will, and all the influence of my life." That spells complete consecration to a great cause,—and it won for William Booth; it will win for any Christian.

Why She Cried

A little girl was found sobbing bitterly. When asked by her mother why, she answered, "I dreamed that God had died." Would it affect you that way if God were excommunicated from the universe? Would it make any particular difference in your way of living if you felt sure there were no God? The little girl who sobbed over her dream must have been taught that God really is, that he is not merely an impersonal force or power in this universe, but a real personality, and a personality that is absolute in his goodness. Is it not a fact that some professing Christians live as if after all God were a non-entity? Better give this matter a bit of thought, gentle reader. Test it. It is barely possible that your life is a betrayal of your faith in the existence of a God in whom you believe and trust.

Making Gods

That was the peculiar sin of the Children of Israel,—making gods. Israel made idols and said, "These are our gods; they will save us. As for this Moses we wist not what has become of him." There are some supposed very good people who are still in the same business; perhaps most of us are. We build mills and railroads and battle-ships and airplanes and schools and universities; we print books and magazines and daily papers; we erect skyscrapers, write constitutions and elect presidents, then we say, "These will save us; civilization is secure because we have built institutions and set forces in motion to preserve it. We work out theologies so incomprehensible, so complicated, so magically mysterious; write creeds which begin, "Firstly, I believe, etc.; secondly, I believe, etc.; thirdly, we teach and believe," etc., then we settle down and say, "There, now, that is what we believe, Lord, surely it will save us." We will see the folly of it some day and realize that the things our hands have made and our brains have spun out in the form of a "statement of our faith" are as helpless as the idols of Israel unless they are linked with God. It is easy to get the cart before the horse in this matter. It was God who taught our brains to conceive and our fingers to work the achievements of our civilization; yet these are the things we are putting in the place that belongs to him. Put God first, and keep him there, first in your church, in your business, in your school, first in your life. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness." That is still good theology, even though it is nearly two thousand years old. Motley, in his "Dutch Republic," tells that when food came in after the dreadful siege of Leyden, the men who rushed first to the supply greedily overate and many of them died. But the majority of the people went first to the church to give God thanks for their great deliverance, and only after that satisfied their hunger. Seek first the kingdom of heaven, and let other things come in their order. With many people appetite comes first and health later, rather than wrecked health.

The Real Problem

Not so very long ago an inspector refused to certify a farmer's milk which he was delivering, because it was dirty and therefore threatened the health of his customers. It did not meet the test of the Board of Health for cleanliness. The farmer became so angry that he swore. He was a member of a church, and the church forthwith rebuked him for swearing, but it did not say anything to him about the evil of selling milk so dirty that it was unsafe for babies to drink, or any one else. Which of these two faults was the greater, if there be any degrees in faults, swearing or selling impure milk? Or does the church have nothing to do with health and work and politics and family relations and business? Was it really a church problem?

THE EDISON CELEBRATION

It is perhaps not an exaggeration to say that no man before him ever received such acknowledgment of his achievements and service as Mr. Edison, on the occasion of the 50th anniversary of his producing an incandescent light. The wealth and interest in old things of Mr. Ford had produced a village which was a counterpart of the villages which were common in Mr. Edison's youth. Mr. Edison made the trip from Detroit to Dearborn in a train with passenger coach seats, small panes of glass, kerosene lamps and wood-burning locomotive which was exactly like the trains on which he had plied his youthful trade of news-butcher, and on the trip out he plied his old trade again. The President of the United States felt honored to be present and to state in fitting phrases the high service which Mr. Edison had rendered to his country and to the world. It is no wonder that Mr. Edison should have been deeply moved by all this. With characteristic modesty and sense of fairness the great inventor said: "I would be embarrassed at the honors that are being heaped upon me on this unforgettable night were it not for the fact that in honoring me you are also honoring that vast army of thinkers and workers of the past and those who are carrying on, without whom my work would have gone for nothing."—The Presbyterian Advance.

FROM FAMILY TO FAMILY IN INDIAN JUNGLES

Ten miles beyond the farthest station of Takli, India, far into the wild country, lies the interesting village of Palshi. So wild is life here that deer and wolves abound, and villagers tell of witnessing fights between their dogs and panthers at night. This village is completely surrounded by a strong wall, with only two entrances now in use; a likely reminder of the wild days before British rule. A Takli Christian named Umaju had given his daughter in marriage in this village. Umaju himself had a real conversion fourteen months ago. He then gave up his profession as a Hindu religious leader and with it a lot of profitable but questionable practices.

In his enthusiasm he went to visit his daughter, where he talked to her father-in-law, and to others in the village. As a result five entire families asked for baptism. "It was such a far-away, questionable place," says Rev. Alden H. Clark of Ahmednagar, "that I thought at first that we should not answer this response, but when I had gone there and seen their real eagerness and earnestness, I could not hold out against their request. We shall rely largely on the volunteer work of Umaju to keep up the feeling of this isolated group."—The Congregationalist.

JEWISH SCHOOL TEACHERS

According to a prominent New York daily out of 34,000 public school teachers in that city 17,000 are of the Jewish faith. This fact was brought to light recently when the question of the observance of Yom Kippur, the great Jewish holiday, was brought before the school authorities of New York. Heretofore the Board of Education has given them the holiday, but deducted the salary of the substitute from their pay. Now they are granted the holiday with no loss of pay. But why should half the teachers of that city be Jews?—The Evangelical-Messenger.

IT IS WELL TO MEASURE THE SIZE OF OUR TASK

Of nearly 43,000,000 children and youth under twenty-five years of age in the Protestant section of the population of the United States, more than 28,000,000 receive no religious instruction in any school provided by the churches; of 8,576,000 Catholic, 6,806,000 receive none; of 1,543,000 Jewish, 1,363,000 receive none from any Jewish educational agency. That is, of more than 53,000,000, all told, nearly 37,000,000 receive no religious instruction in the institutions maintained for that purpose.

For the figures credit goes to the Baptist Record of Mississippi, quoting W. S. Athearn.

This is "Christian" America. Contemplate by comparison, the children and youth of India, of China, of Africa, and the U. S. S. R. It is well to think ahead to the time when the present generation of Christians will be dead and children now born will have become the world's leaders. What kind of a world will theirs be?—The Baptist.

THE DILEMMA OF POPE PIUS

The College of Cardinals is only complete when the historic seventy fill up the required number. There are now but fifty-seven cardinals in the countries of the world, which suggests that at the coming Winter consistory the Pope will nominate a large group of men of distinction who will be given the red hat. There are now two opposites before the aim of the Vatican, either one or both to be desired, and yet either one or both necessarily to be avoided.

It has been pointed out by secular statesmen that the Vatican is of necessity under this fresh and novel adjustment with Italy, obligated to show special favors to the Italian Government. This may be only an evil suspicion, but it is a very influential one. It insists on having a place in political thought. If the Pope continues his policy of creating another group of Italian Cardinals, it will strengthen this opinion and in many minds it will prove sufficient to confirm that view. However, if he should bring into the College of Cardinals a fresh enforcement from other nations, it would open the way for the possible election of a German or Britain or Frenchman to the Papacy. This would destroy the practice of the centuries, and thus create a fresh cause for Italian alienation. Should he consider Italy, he will estrange other nations, and should he consider other nations, he will estrange Italy.—The Presbyterian.

Our Worship Program

Daily Readings and Suggestions

(Keep with your Bible)

MONDAY

John 10:1-9. "People are like sheep."—Our western sheep are not trained as the oriental sheep were; because they have not been trained to follow the shepherd, they are prone to follow each other. Among the sheep in the Lord's flock, much of the same condition prevails; we have not known the Shepherd as well as we should, and are too apt to follow one another, rather than the Shepherd himself. All that ever came before him—either before him in time, or before him in honor and position—are thieves, robbing him of his rightful position and authority. May we only be concerned, our Father, with following thee; and may we never allow anything in our lives to come before thee.

TUESDAY

John 10:10-18. The GOOD Shepherd.—There had been many false "christs" in Jesus' day; there were false leaders in the days of the apostles, and they are with us yet—for "what they can get out of it, and not because they love the sheep. The Good Shepherd had nothing to gain except the safety of the sheep he loved. And even as he laid down his life for the sheep, we know he delights to lead them forth to green pastures and still waters, to supply their every need. Let us follow him, whithersoever he shall lead!

WEDNESDAY

John 10:19-21; Matt. 11:2-6. The Works of Jesus.—When John the Baptist, imprisoned and discouraged, sent to Jesus to inquire if he were indeed the Christ, Jesus' only reply was to point to the unusual works he had done. If it is true that "never man spake as this man," it is equally true that never man did the works which Jesus did. This fact emphasizes two qualities in Jesus which we love and reverence: his power, and his compassion. Let us pray that his followers today may have power from on high to do the works whereunto we have been sent, and that we may have compassion upon those about us, even as we hope for compassion from him.

THURSDAY

John 10:22-30. Absolute Security.—Coupled with this unmistakable claim to deity, our Lord gives absolute assurance to those who follow him as their Shepherd. Sheep may turn from him and wander away, but even then he will leave the ninety and nine to find and bring back the wanderer. Not only able to save, but able to KEEP. Who could help following such a Shepherd, once they have known him? Let us make him known!

FRIDAY

John 10:31-42. Blasphemy.—It was not Jesus who blasphemed, but the Jews. Yet the Jews were not more blasphemous than those today who profess to be followers of the Good Shepherd and then deliberately choose to follow the "thieves and robbers," or to walk in their own foolish way. God help us to examine ourselves, and save us from blasphemy and the fate of blasphemers!

SATURDAY

John 11:1-6. The Love of Jesus.—Again we are reminded that even sickness or death itself may be to the glory of God. Let us pray not so much for healing, as that our condition may ever be such as to bring the greatest glory to our Lord. And though we may not understand at the time why he tarries, yet we know that he will come, "with healing in his wings." Blessed assurance!

SUNDAY

John 11:7-10; Psalm 119:105-112. Following Him.—Jesus now proves his love for Lazarus by returning to his tomb, to raise him from the dead. To his disciples, this meant certain death at the hands of the Jews. But Jesus answered that when one is walking in the full light of heaven's will no harm can fall except by the will or permission of God; it is the man who does not follow the divine guidance who needs to fear. How careful then we ought to be, that we should ever be found walking in the light, and what blessed assurance to all who are so walking. May many this day turn from the darkness of sin to walk ever in the safety of thy glorious light. Amen!—T. C. L.

Securing Sound Teaching in Sunday School

By Philip E. Howard

A Statement of Faith Used by One School

To secure sound teachers and to make sure that they are remaining sound is the one way to insure sound teaching. This seems so obvious as to be hardly worth saying, but many a superintendent does not clearly know what his teachers are teaching, and if he does know he permits many minor considerations to modify his test of a teacher's fitness to deal with the Bible.

Assuming that for the most part Sunday school membership is at least youthful, to put it conservatively there is no field whatever in the whole range of Christian activity today where unsound teaching is more hurtful, and sound teaching more practically helpful than in the Sunday school. It is often a very difficult thing to "resign" a teacher who is not teaching the truth. A young superintendent in an active school was approached by the members of a class of girls in their later teens who wanted to register a protest against some of the teaching they were receiving from an elderly man of long experience and real devotion to his opportunity as a teacher. This earnest man was old enough to be the superintendent's father and the young man could not think of any proper way by which he could approach his older co-worker to tell him of the difficulty. There were various complications that almost always intruded themselves at such a time. Week after week the young superintendent wondered what he ought to do, prayed about it, and watched for his opportunity, but it never seemed to come. On one Sunday he went to the school determined that the problem must not longer remain unsettled and asked the Lord to show him just what to do that very day.

As he stood arranging some papers on the platform the teacher, who was early, came across the room to him and said, "I just came over to tell you that I feel I must give up my class." And he went on to state several reasons why he thought he ought to do this. The superintendent in his inexperience and in his great relief accepted the resignation without touching upon the character of the teaching, and whether he was right or wrong in allowing the matter to rest just there he learned in that hour of relief how wonderfully God lays his hand upon a situation like that. What man can't see the way clear to do, God so often does, and in a way that could not have been foreseen.

A Christian man on a visit found in one Sunday school of an evangelical denomination a Unitarian theosophical freethinker teaching the largest Bible class. And in another Sunday school of an evangelical sect he found a New Thought adherent, who denied the deity of Christ and the atonement, busy at his work of teaching a large class of young women. Both the denominations to which the schools belonged have been historically noted for spiritual power and steady adherence to the Scriptures. These instances only go to show what can occur in a Sunday school unless special measures are taken to prevent such a fatality.

In the Sunday school of the Church of St. John's-by-the-Sea, at Ventnor, New Jersey, the Sunday School Association, made up of persons of various denominational connections, agreed upon a statement of faith and included it in the by-laws of the Association, and each teacher is required to affirm or sign it each year. No one can be assigned to a regular teaching post in the school, or as an officer in the school, without first expressing acceptance of the by-laws of the school, including the statement of faith, which is as follows:

All officers and teachers of this school are required to affirm their belief in the following doctrines:

1. The unique, inspired authority and infallibility, in the original writings, of the entire Bible as the Word of God (Heb. 4:12; 2 Tim. 3:16; Eph. 3:5; 2 Pet. 1:21).

2. The deity of Jesus Christ, different in kind as well as degree from any so-called "divinity" of man (John 1:1; Heb. 1:8, 9).

3. The lost and sinful condition of all persons by nature (Rom. 3:9, 10, 19, 23; Luke 13:5).

4. The substitutionary death of Christ as the only way of salvation for all persons, that salvation is to be received by simple faith in his finished and sufficient work (John 3:15, 16; Acts 4:12; 1 Cor. 15:3; 1 Pet. 2:24; Gal. 2:16).

5. The virgin birth of Jesus Christ (Luke 1:34, 35; Matt. 1:18-23; Isa. 7:14).

6. The resurrection of his physical body (Mark 16:5, 6; Luke 24:39-43; John 2:19-21; 20:27, 28; Acts 13:35-37).

7. The bodily resurrection of all persons (John 5:29; 1 Thess. 4:16; Rev. 20:13).

8. The future return of the Lord Jesus Christ, in person, to reign on earth (Matt. 16:27; 26:64; Luke 21:27).

9. The eternal life of the "saved," and the eternal punishment of the "lost" (Matt. 25:31-46; John 3:36).

This is a long step toward assuring unity of fundamental teaching in the school, and guarding scholars against erroneous teaching.

It is heartening to see what this type of unity produces by way of united effort in soul-winning, in the selection of proper Sunday school literature, and in the whole atmosphere not only of the Sunday school, but of the church to which that school belongs. Strong differences of opinion may exist and do exist in the school as to various policies, but around this unity all such questions are speedily and happily solved. Such a safeguard of the teaching reaches out in so many directions to build and protect and quicken the best life of the school, that one cannot overstate the importance of such a regulation. Young people have been going out from that school to Bible institutes for further training. Many older folks in the families of the neighborhood, which is a wholly mobile one, have been brought out of indifference through the devotion that the children show toward that Sunday school.

If the church, the pastor, the official board, the superintendent, and the other officers of the teachers' association want to keep unsound teaching out of the regular work of the Sunday school, it can be done.—Taken from the Sunday School Times.

WHAT TO DO WITH BIBLE PICTURES

Missionaries of all denominations keep writing to the World's Sunday School Association, 216 Metropolitan Tower, New York City, asking for the large Bible Lesson Picture Rolls and the small Bible Lesson Picture Cards that are used in almost every Sunday school in the homeland. The date does not interfere with the use of such pictures abroad. Often a verse of Scripture is pasted on the printing side and the picture given after its story has been told to eager listeners—adults as well as children. Every small picture card helps in building up the Sunday school, and the large pictures are invaluable for both Sunday school teachers and evangelists.

Since 1909 the World's Sunday School Association has been promoting the placing of such pictures through its Surplus Material Department. Write to this Department, 216 Metropolitan Tower, New York City, for a card of introduction giving the name and address of a missionary. Indicate your denomination if you wish a name in the same church. A leaflet will be sent which explains the plan in detail and indicates numerous things that are desired by these missionaries. It is far better to send out these pictures and articles for a second and often longer use than to throw them away. They have a real value in use abroad and the postage charge is comparatively small. The usual rate on pictures is only one cent for two ounces. Right now there are requests on file from at least eight hundred missionaries. Start a Surplus Material Committee in your Class or Sunday school. You can begin with a Committee of One which will soon have a truly world-wide helpful outreach. The letter of appreciation from the missionary will make you eager to send other packages.

Editor's Select Notes on the Sunday School Lesson

(Lesson for November 17)

Living with People of Other Races.

Scripture Lesson—Ruth 1:1-18; John 4:5-10; Acts 10:1-11:18; Rom. 1:14; Gal. 3:28, 29.

Printed Text—Acts 10:9-15, 30-35; Gal. 3:28, 29.

Devotional Reading—Eph. 3:14-21.

Golden Text—Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons: but in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is acceptable to him.—Acts 10:34, 35.

Introductory Note

The lesson today from Acts 10 and 11 reveals one of the grandest facts in the history of Christian evangelization. It points to the first introduction of the gospel to the Gentile world, and thus proclaims the unconfined love and beneficence of the new economy, Ro. 1:16; Cornelius, who was a centurion in the Italian band or cohort, and probably a Roman by birth, was stationed at Caesarea, the political capital of Palestine, and the seat of the highest Roman authorities. Besides supplying a description of his character and circumstances, and of the vision with which he was favored, the narrative suggests the following practical applications: 1. Cornelius was one of those truth-loving and truth-seeking souls, which rendered him peculiarly susceptible of Christian impressions. As a proselyte of the gate, he stood midway between the formalism of the Jew and the dead heathenism of the Gentile. The one was too bald and naked, the other too dim and indistinct to satisfy the man; therefore he was looking out for something higher and more advanced. In this state of mind a heavenly messenger was sent to him, to instruct him as to his future course. "Not disobedient to the heavenly vision," he sent to Peter, who as a representative of the world's Great Teacher, might more perfectly show him the way of life; and with inexpressible interest Cornelius waited for the coming of the man of God. 2. But the Apostle himself was but partially informed as to the grounds on which the Gentiles were to be received into the church of God, and needed a special revelation on the subject. Peter, too, had a vision in which he was taught that the new kingdom is a purely spiritual institution, and that admission into it must be sought, not in any outward rite or symbol but alone in the state of the heart. "If any man be in Christ he is a new creature," 2 Cor. 5:17, a part of the new creation, and therefore inseparable from the church. No outward observance can bring one into union with the Savior; and if the soul be united to him, 1 Co. 6:17, the neglect of any merely outward ceremonial can never affect, far less dissolve that bond., Ro. 8:35. 3. Christianity is the only power that breaks down every "fall of partition" between man and man, Col. 2:8-13; Eph. 2:14-28, or between nation and nation.—Harris. Ten Commandments of Righteousness and Justice

In a sermon recently reported, by Rev. A. W. Palmer, he gives "ten commandments of social justice" to be added to the ten of Exodus. Some of these apply directly here. Others apply to following lessons. Those applying here are:

"I. I am the Lord thy God, but thou shalt remember that I am also the God of all the earth. I have no favorite children. The Negro and the Hindu, the Chinese, Japanese, Russian and Mexican, are all my beloved children.

"VII. Thou shalt outlaw war and make no threatening gestures either with great navies or vast military preparations against thy neighbor.

"VIII. Thou shalt honor men for character and service alone, and dishonor none because of race, color or previous condition of servitude.

"IX. Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor by malicious propaganda or colored news or by calling him contemptuous names such as Dago, Chink, Jap, Wop, Nigger or Sheeney."

God as a Father

"The idea of God as a father roots deep in the traditions of the Christian church. We find evidence of it from time to time in the history of the Hebrew people as given in the Old Testament. But the idea reaches its greatest development and most means of reaching your people. Letters to individuals will also prove very helpful in advertising your work.

But you are not confining your membership to those who are immediate members of your church. If so, you are not a live society and furthermore, you are failing in one of the works of Christian Endeavor, namely to win young men and women and boys and girls for Jesus Christ. You must get in touch with those outside. Some are just starving for the fellowship and blessings such as you enjoy and possibly they are not aware of the opportunities which are so near to them and yet so far because they never know. You may reach these people through the medium of the electric sign; through bulletin boards or posters, any of which should always be fresh and attractive. Maybe you have any one of these things but it seems to be ineffective. Take a look at it, maybe it needs to be cleaned or repainted. You will be surprised at the number of strangers that will be present in your meetings, brought there principally because of the invitation extended through any of the above mentioned mediums.

Another effective and most acceptable manner of advertising is through the use of the newspapers. Appoint some individual in your society, whose business it shall be, to act as reporter for the society. If you are planning a very special Missionary meeting and expect to have some missionary present as a speaker on the program why not tell other folks about it? Or you may be planning a special social function. This will also make good news. Write your article in such a manner as to be easily read, using one side of the paper and preferably with the typewriter. Take it to the newspaper office in plenty of time and if it is real news, you will be surprised at the reception of same by the publishers.

Certain places as the local Y. M. C. A., Y. W. C. A., school or library are also very convenient places in which to place posters or bulletins that will direct strangers to your society.

There is yet another medium, of which Brethren Endeavorers may avail themselves for the purpose of advertising their society. It is the much neglected C. E. page of the Brethren Evangelist. The space is free and you need but write your article and send it to the editor of the page and same will be given proper attention. Brethren, we are scattered about over this great country of ours and I am firmly convinced that some of us are not aware of the existence of others. California Endeavorers are probably wondering if there are any Endeavorers in Pennsylvania and vice-versa, but since they are so seldom privileged to personally meet each other, why not get acquainted through the pages of this paper? Tell us about the plans that have worked or are working effectively in your society. Tell us about the new societies that you organize and relate some of the interesting features of your most successful meetings, also tell about that fine social function that so many enjoyed. Here is your opportunity and I am wondering how many will avail themselves of this privilege.

Californians, do you have C. E. out there? They have it in Pennsylvania. I want to hear from you folks, both East and West, North and South. Now, let's go.

Advertising in the Modern C. E. Society

If there ever was a time in which the church and especially Christian Endeavor needed to awake to its possibilities in the realm of advertising; it is at this very hour.

On every hand we read such phrases as, "Keep that Schoolgirl Complexion," "I'd Walk a Mile for a Camel," "99 99-100% pure," and many more. They appear in every magazine of large circulation, in newspapers, in street cars, busses and remote indeed is the place in which they cannot be seen. This very fact attests to the magnitude of this great enterprise, and day by day it grows. Now advertising is no new thing and it has been employed throughout many years. From the small boy with a kite for sale to the largest manufacturer, there is some form of advertising employed as an aid to selling. Some advertising is beautiful, sane, sensible and reliable, while others apparently possesses no merit, but it is not my purpose to discuss the merits of such at this time. I am more concerned about the reason for this great business of advertising. Is it not because the other fellow has something which he wishes to bring to your attention, so forcibly, that you will be sold on its merits and that you will have a desire to possess same. And regardless of the number of different brands of whatever it may be, each fellow has the best and in many respects it surpasses all others on the market. This of course is just one of the reasons for advertising. There are many more, but you probably wonder what relation they have to Christian Endeavor. Simply stated it is as follows.

You have a Christian Endeavor society in your church. That one fact alone is sufficient reason for you to advertise it. Does every boy and girl and every adult member of your church and Sunday school know that such an organization exists? Further it meets every week at a specific time and place and programs of extreme interest and helpfulness are given. Besides all of this, there are some very good musical numbers included on the programs; at other times a missionary may speak and at still other times a pageant may be given. Do other persons, not included in the regular membership of your society know about these things? Possibly they do, but not until it is all over and then it is too late. Why not start immediately to advertise all of these facts so that the people of your church will at least be acquainted with your proceedings? Posters, bulletins, announcements from the pulpit and in Sunday school, also in the church calendar are very effective

NEWS FROM HOME MISSION FIELDS

FORT SCOTT, KANSAS

A little news item from this place may not be out of place. The work is moving along very nicely, and we are encouraged with the progress being made. One has been received by letter since our district conference, the first part of this month. The real opportunity for work here is growing brighter all the time, but we know the need of patience in such a task and we are hoping the brotherhood at large as well as our local people, may exercise this fine art, of hopefulness and perseverance. We have just passed through an intensive school of training for leadership. It was interdenomination and was a standard school, and three of our people attained a credit unit. This was sponsored by the Ministerial Association, but was put on under the Kansas Council of Religious Education. This training school is to be continued by our local ministers for six weeks, one night per week which will be sufficient for another unit in leadership training. We are also starting a training class in our congregation to meet once per week, in addition to our Wednesday evening prayer and Bible study. The district conference was enthusiastic about this work and is concentrating its efforts on this point to see it self-supporting as soon as possible. And the local people are just as anxious, but they lack opportunity in several ways to accomplish their aim.

Our local workers are earnestly seeking the leadership of the Holy Spirit, that our efforts may meet his approval. We are also praying that the Lord may open the way, by which the debt on our property may be paid this year. We do not know HOW it is to be done but HE knows and we are willing to do all we can to bring it to pass.

We have not been able to arrange for our revival as yet but hope to do so in the near future. Our Bible school under the leadership of our new superintendent, Mr. Thurman Orr, is moving along very well and increasing in attendance. We make our midweek prayer meeting one of definite Bible study as well as for prayer and it is proving very helpful, and is quite well attended, considering our small group of workers.

The Lord is blessing us with health and strength, and we are glad for an humble place of service in his Kingdom.

Remember this work at the throne of grace.
L. G. WOOD.

LOST CREEK, KENTUCKY

This has been an especially busy fall for the workers at Riverside. Never so far as I can remember have all been so busy, this being made so by the unusually large attendance which we have had. But strength for each task has been given, and the work moves on.

We have just had a week's revival effort, led by Rev. Russell Humbert of Lake Odessa, Michigan. Because of conditions as they were, we only wanted a short meeting this time. We also wanted only the kind of a leader who would give us the whole Gospel without the use of the scissors at all. This Brother Humbert did, and the visible results of the meeting were thirty-nine confessions, with sixteen received into the church by baptism, the rest being reconsecrations. For a short meeting it was good, and the spiritual uplift very marked. Then also it was a real pleasure to work with Brother Humbert whose father also labored here with us, and both of whom fitted into the work so well. The work is much indebted to this father and son for their splendid labors.

While the revival meeting was impressive, yet a chapel service not so long ago was also very impressive. The teacher of the freshman high school Bible class of about twenty-five asked that the class be given the privilege of leading in the chapel service one morning. The class arose, quoted much Scripture, and then led us in prayer, and to hear those high school freshmen PRAY was certainly very, very inspiring. As we listened to them we just wondered in how many schools such a thing could be heard, and we felt that there would be mighty few of them. Then we wondered and thought that if those who would silence the work of Riverside Institute could only have heard this one service, we believe that they would be cured of their doubts. No, dear reader, not a one of the workers at Riverside Institute are here just to help conduct a high school, but are here because our God has so directed them.

We also had the recent pleasure of entertaining the Mountain Laurel C. E. Convention, composed of a number of Eastern Kentucky counties. The convention lasted three days, with representatives from other C. E. societies. It was good and inspiring and furnished a good beginning for our revival meeting. It closed with the very, very impressive consecration service, in which a number of our young folks offered themselves for life-time service, and also others who had done so before came forward. I believe that every worker at Riverside was in the group.

Demands for clothing continue very strong. Many have now kindly asked for bags in which to ship it. We try to write to all who do this, but if we should miss you, you may know that your gift is appreciated very, very much, and is very helpful. We have had as high as fifteen here at one time for clothing when we had none for them. We thank you who have interested yourselves in the matter, and assure you that it is very helpful. However we could use much more than is now in sight, as the clothing room is empty most of the time. Two bags have come with no shipper's name on them. This makes it impossible for us to write you or give proper credit for the same.

We are glad also that you are remembering Krypton with the clothing. This is where Miss Carter is so faithfully and valiantly holding forth for God, in the hope that somewhere some one will arise and say, Here am I, Lord, send me to Krypton. Can it be possible that a work which was so recently so promising can be just let go and die a slow, strangling death? Can such a thing be possible for those who have put their hands to the plow? But that sort of thing is just going to happen at Krypton, if some husband and wife do not volunteer for the work there. Miss Carter cannot forever keep the work up there all by herself. We fully believe that a proper appraisal of things here would lead all to keep these two plants going on a real workable basis. Will you, dear reader, join us in prayer that some one somewhere will volunteer for the work at Krypton, and that we here may be fully kept in his will, and not get ahead of it.

G. E. DRUSHAL.

LOST CREEK, KENTUCKY

After winding around countless hills, passing over high bridges and darting through many tunnels, our train came to a stop at Haddix, Kentucky. The conductor had announced our station and we left the train. Darkness had slowly crept in upon us and snow was falling gently.

As our train hurried on and disappeared around a corner, a great wave of loneliness swept across our hearts. There we were, my wife, our little child and myself. The flu was raging in those mountains and we knew not where to go. But our anxiety turned to joy when Brother Drushal came to take us to his home some two miles up in the mountains. Brother Drushal carried the lantern and led the way. Our path led across a large bridge with part of the floor planks missing. We followed instructions to walk on a wide board and crossed in safety little realizing the great void that lay below us. After walking some two miles we came to the last thrill of our journey. It was our first experience with a swinging bridge but after much grabbing and strenuously walking we arrived on the other side of Old Troublesome and stepped for the first time on the grounds of Riverside.

I had long wanted to be sure of my salvation and felt that if I could do something worthy, I would be more acceptable to the Lord. Thus in the midst of the flu we left our home in Indiana and answered the call for work at Lost Creek.

But I was scheduled for a surprise. One evening, in a teachers' meeting, I learned that salvation was by faith in our Lord Jesus Christ and not by any works that I could do. It seemed too good to be true and I asked so many questions that our teachers' meeting was practically given up. Next morning I was determined to know more about this great salvation and eagerly watched for Brother Drushal as he went to the barn to milk the cow, so I could have a private talk with him. As I now look back upon my life I thank God for that experience and count it a turning point in my life.

I have just returned from my fifth trip to this station. The train was late because of a wreck in a tunnel and it was about dark when we arrived at Haddix. Brother Drushal took me out in his automobile and we hurried to the church where we found it almost packed with waiting people.

It was indeed a great joy to look into the faces of these dear people again, especially those who had come out in our meetings a year ago. We thank God for the manifestation of his power in the lives of these young people. Anyone who is concerned with the problem of the young people of our day, should take note of this living example. In fact the problem of the young is really a problem of the old people. Parents, teachers and even ministers have resorted to all manner of new inventions and tricks. They tell us that we must have all kinds of foolishness to "Hold the young people." Truly the young people will rise up in judgment and condemn the leaders of our day for feeding them on wind and vanity while their feet were slipping into a Christless grave. I verily believe that the young people would take life more seriously if they were taught to do so.

Last year in our meetings at Krypton and Lost Creek a great number came out. This year in a week's meeting at Lost Creek fifty-four came out for conversion and reconsecration. But why did they thus respond? Only one answer. The Lord had used those godly workers to prepare the hearts of those under their care and I thank God for the privilege of working with so consecrated a group of fellow Christians.

As I visited the school rooms I noted many things. The text book would take evolution but Brother Drushal carefully sifted it out and showed the fallacy. In Sister Drushal's Bible class the students handed in questions and I have never seen a group of questions that showed more thought and genuine sincerity. Riverside is fortunate in securing the services of Sister Srack, who is indeed an outstanding Bible teacher in the Brethren church. I went into an algebra class taught by Brother Cleveland. He paused for a word of prayer before he began his class period. How we thank God that he has given us the privilege of helping to support such a place as this.

As the young people come in from many miles around, they hear the Gospel and when they return home, they carry it far back into the hills with them. In the judgment, I believe it will be revealed that the Brethren church has never undertaken a work in the United States that is any greater, in real service for our Lord, than this work in Kentucky. On Saturday and Sunday afternoon a baptismal service was held in Old Troublesome and it made us rejoice to see so many young people enter the water, symbolizing their burying the old man of sin and rising into a new life in Christ Jesus, a life where old things have passed away and all things have become new. Sunday afternoon almost every chair was filled at the communion service and again it did our hearts good to see the fine spirit that prevailed in the lives of these people.

We were glad to see Miss Richards, who has rendered such acceptable service for several years, again in charge of the dormitory. Miss Hooks, who probably ranks the highest in number of years of service among the teachers, is again at her post.

Let those who are interested in this work remember that the Mission Board no longer fully supports this place but that several thousands of dollars must be secured from other sources. Thus any one desiring to help will do well to send some money to Brother Drushal at Lost Creek. Also many, many bags of clothing can be used to great advantage. How fine if many freight shipments would be sent to help in this work. Because the bridge at Haddix is washed out, all freight shipments should be sent to Jackson, Kentucky.

Although I did not get to Krypton on this trip, I heard good reports from others, of the work Miss Carter is doing. Truly the Long Beach church can be proud of her as she represents them at this station. Miss Carter is carrying on this work in faith and she told me that it is most wonderful how the Lord has supplied her needs. Money or clothes sent to her will be used for the glory of our Lord.

Now the God of peace make the writer and reader of these notes perfect in every good work to do his will as we support these two works of grace in the mountains of Kentucky.
R. I. HUMBERD.

SOUTH GATE, CALIFORNIA

A few words from our baby church. We will have to make our bow to the brotherhood and anticipate your prayers for the success of this new work.

Services began in the new church with a wonderful attendance in the Sunday school. Fifty-five were present and were real enthusiastic about the new work. The morning worship was well attended and showed by the prayer meeting held, after listening to the pastor on the subject of "Preparation for Success," that each one was willing to put his shoulder to the wheel and do whatever he can to glorify Jesus Christ at this SOUL SAVING STATION. This verse exemplifies the spirit that was prevalent in this service.

"I am only one, but I am one.
I cannot do everything, but I can do something.
What I can do, I ought to do.
What I ought to do, By the Grace of God, I WILL DO."

Such splendid interest led the pastor to ask for a Christian Endeavor service at the 6:30 hour. Some 40 or 45 persons were again present. This is remarkable for the first day, many thought.

At the evening service, Brother John Lienhard, pastor of the Second Brethren church, Long Beach, California, serving as our evangelist for a two weeks' meeting prior to Dedication Day, preached a mighty message. The subject at this service was, "The Foundation of the Brethren church." Brother Lienhard surely made the Brethren cause plain, and we can say that he is a safe, sane and sure preacher. The Lord bless him.

Monday night, Second church of Los Angeles came in a big delegation and it goes without saying that added interest was manifested in the community. Tuesday night First church of Long Beach was present. I believe that Brother Bauman tried to crowd us out but we pushed into service every available seat in the house and really surprised the folks.

Thursday night the Brethren from the Whittier church are coming in a body. Friday night Brother Cover of the First church of Los Angeles, is bringing his folks over.

Will we uphold their hands?

Each night finds Brethren visiting us from many points and it is needless to say, we are glad they come and are encouraging us.

November 10th the church will be dedicated. Brother L. S. Bauman of the First church of Long Beach, is to preach the dedicatory sermon. Brother A. V. Kimmel, of Second church of Los Angeles, is to have charge of the dedication offering. Brothers A. B. Cover of the First church of Los Angeles, A. L. Lynn of the La Verne church, and Charles W. Mayes of the First church of Whittier are also to take part in the program. I will at a later date give you the details of our church as well as the dedication program and the picture of our new church. I would send it now, only it would be impossible to have a true picture of the church for the exterior is still being worked upon.

This is a very fertile field and truly the Brethren church and its teaching will find hearts ready to receive her Blessed Savior, Our Lord Jesus Christ, and I am convinced that we have made no mistake in spending our God-given money in this corner of the Lord's vineyard.

Yours in his Service for Souls,
LEO POLMAN.

THE BETHEL BRETHREN CHURCH Mulvane, Kansas

After a little more than two years of association with the brethren at this place I feel I should write and that the brotherhood would like to hear about the work in this far-southern Kansas church.

The people here are a hard working class and are deserving of the very best that is possible. Ours is a rural church, and like all rural churches has its problems. It is situated four and one-half miles east of Mulvane on the state highway 15. The Brethren church here is unfortunate in having a United Brethren congregation just one mile south. This community is well church and well-worked and we cannot hope to be much more than what we are under present conditions. During the little more than two years that I have served these people I have received thirteen into the church by baptism. We have lost three by letter and two by death. Some of our young people are away nine months of the year attending college. To a small church we feel their loss greatly.

However there has been a feeling growing on the part of some of our most loyal members that we should move into the little town of Mulvane, with 1,200 population. Half of this number are not church members. We could secure a church building formerly owned by the Presbyterians, which with slight alteration would care for our needs adequately for some time. This can be bought very reasonably—about 1500 or 1600 dollars. This, to the writer's opinion, would be the only wise thing to do if we hope to have a Brethren church in this extremely southern part of Kansas. As it is, we haven't any field to build from. There we would have at least 600 people to hurl the power and weapons of God against, and give a minister a real job. There are a few who through sentiment would oppose it. Can we afford to lose a Brethren church through sentiment, when by a little move of four and one-half miles, where, with automobiles and good roads we could keep the church going for years to come? We have already lost some members in Mulvane, who for want of a way were unable to go out of town to their own church. Others are now there who still hold to the Brethren faith, but who have no way of going out of town to church. Our brethren out of town all have automobiles and could easily drive to Mulvane in twenty to twenty-five minutes. Why not take the church to those who have no way of going, especially when there is a field there? The mission board of this district is heartily in favor of this move.

We are very grateful to the mission board for its support. But the support that we now receive is far too small to enable a pastor to support himself and family. With the present situation obtaining I can see why it would be unwise to put any more into this field, but with a change in location I am sure the Mission Board would see the wisdom to supporting this field more liberally. This is an ideal spot in which to have a Brethren church. From here we could move on, and we should be moving south. There are thousands of people who do not know of the blessed doctrines which we hold dear and many places where opportunities call us. Let us push our borders out.

I believe I have the hearty "amens" of other mission pastors when I say that if many of our laymen could be placed in our stead for just one year they would see to it that upon Home Mission Day we should receive such an offering that would make it possible to move forward and start mission churches in many places, where people do not know the whole Gospel and do not have access to the practice of all the means of growth.

We have added slight improvements to our church and parsonage, re-roofed the church, put in new cement steps and re-varnished the wood work. We put in a new cistern at the parsonage. The church is still in debt about $550. However, they have been cutting that down very nicely every year. Almost one-half of the debt has been wiped out since I arrived on the field. I might say that the parsonage is one and one-half miles due east of Mulvane and three miles west of the church, on the same state road.

We have a wonderful climate. The weather has been the finest this fall that I have ever experienced. The only thing lacking was moisture. It has been very dry, only a few drops of rainfall since July. Just now, however, as I write these lines, we are having a very welcome steady rain, which the wheat farmers are glad to see.

Finally, brethren, we solicit your hearty response on this Thanksgiving season. Let your gifts be:

(a) Without delay. For life is short; duty demands; God deserves; opportunity favors; delay is a slight; we are liable to forget altogether when we postpone.

(b) With freshness; nothing deteriorated or exhausted. Beauty, vigor, sweetness, fragrance, virtue, soundness,—all should be laid at his feet, offered at his throne.

(c) With generosity. Let us not withhold; and having given, let us not withdraw; the Lord loves a cheerful and ungrudging giver. "Whoso offereth such praise glorifieth God."

Pray for us and pray for the church. We need it and desire it. May God bless you one and all.

C. A. LANDIS, Mulvane, Kansas.

THE REVIVAL AT WINCHESTER

This is the first meeting of our season. This is a mission point under our Boards and is but three years old. Most commendable progress has been made in this time and a fine lot of people have been gathered together in its membership. They proved their genuineness in the way they attended the services, responded to every appeal, brought their Bibles, entertained the preachers and in making a good offering.

Discouragement, that nightmare of many a mission point because of its size and difficulties, had taken hold of many of the dear folks here also. But under the blessing of God and through the working of His Spirit this soon was forgotten in the chances that were coming about in many hearts and lives and the situation in general. From the very start, the attendance was fine and several times folks were turned away because of no room, standing or otherwise. The newspaper gave us front page full column space daily and that helped a lot. Some of the folks from Brother Ed Miller's church at Maurertown came over at different times and he himself was there one night. Other Brethren including Brother and Sister Thompson from Harrisonburg, Virginia, who drove 75 miles to come, were frequently there. Members of the local churches freely attended, but we looked for most of their pastors in vain!

We had our home with Brother and Sister Rohart, the young pastor and his splendid wife. They certainly did their level best to make life pleasant for us in every way. Brother Rohart is quite a singer and led the congregational singing as well as did some solo work himself. He is a great favorite with the children and can get a child to do almost anything. The way the folks took us into their hearts and homes was most refreshing. And they fed us on "wild turkey" and now we are "wild" about turkey! From all the tame birds I have eaten I judge that man has not improved them by taming them!

There were some who were restored after periods of careless living, some who renewed their devotion to their Lord and some who were saved. While the total is not large, yet considering the size of the work and the difficulties involved we feel it is a real victory and indicative of a great future. That there is a real future for the Winchester church is without question if we but rise up and avail ourselves of it. No better location apart from all other churches and in a fine growing residential community could be found. We believe in Winchester and shall be glad to have any part we can in its future growth.

The offering, while not the largest ever given, yet was such as to show that these folks mean to stand by the work of Christ at the cost of real sacrifice. We believe that within another year the brotherhood will hear of their rejoicing over clearing off their last $800 of indebtedness.

And talk about apples! Well, I thought I had seen apples in the Northwest, but I confess I never really saw apples at all till I came to Winchester! I saw a pile of apples so big that it would have taken four or five snapshots to have covered it all. I got two of it. And cider! Well, if a couple of those big tanks would "bust" it would "flood the country round about." And there were hundreds of such tanks. And vinegar! Well, it's the same story over. You see the vinegar doesn't make these folks sour, because they ship it all out! But it is a great country with a lot of life, prosperity, confidence and a real future. We believe in Winchester's future. You see, one good brother gave us a barrel of fine apples to send home to the "kiddies" so we can't forget Winchester! R. PAUL MILLER.

A HEART STIRRING REVIVAL

A heart stirring revival campaign just closed at the mission church at Winchester, Virginia. Our meeting ended with our communion service held at the close. Brother Miller's help at this service was surely appreciated. The church considered it a great spiritual privilege to have an evangelist like Brother Paul Miller to lead them in this campaign for souls. We praise the Lord that the Brethren church has a man of God like him to offer to our churches that are seeking a revival. We want to highly commend him to our churches as a servant of God, one that really not only helps build up your home work before leaving it but also aiding the pastor himself. Thanks be unto God for sending us a man that can help a poor unworthy mission pastor. He surely has helped me. Hallelujah and Amen.

In spite of the busy season here in the apple industry during which our meetings were held, the attendance was very good and many nights we wished our building was larger. The interest was unusual and the Holy Spirit was manifest in moving upon the hearts of the people. Fourteen souls made the great confession, and fifteen were reconverted.

We are hoping if the Lord carries to have another revival soon, but we need a larger building to seat the crowds. We have a good-sized vacant lot adjoining the church on which we could erect a tent. If there are some spirited Brethren who could help us get in touch with some one who has a large tent, we would appreciate it. If you choose, you can help us next year to have one of the greatest revivals we have ever had. If you would like to have some part in a tent campaign, write the pastor.

E. J. ROHART,
Winchester, Virginia.

FREMONT FACING FORWARD!

Fremont Brethren church celebrates the twenty-ninth anniversary of her organization on Thanksgiving Day. All but one of the twelve loyal charter members have been called into that Presence where is Life indeed. The faithful leadership of Brother and Sister S. M. Loose for fifteen years, and of their successors has not been in vain. Incomplete records attest that an average of nine members have been added each year to the church.

After a quarter of a century of witnessing for the Whole Gospel Faith, increased membership found the original building inadequate. A building program had to be undertaken or the work would sustain serious loss.

But decision to incur indebtedness was not reached until the local congregation was assured by the National and District Mission Boards that they would "stand by" with financial assistance. Having received such assurances, the building project was launched and successfully carried through. As a result, Fremont has a plant equal to her needs for several years. Already owning a splendid parsonage property, and maintaining a full-time pastorate, before the building project was undertaken, present indications are that Fremont within a few years, will be able again to resume full self-support.

The gifts of the brotherhood for Home Missions at Thanksgiving time, have had a large part in making possible Fremont's promising future. May this single instance, which is but one among many, of the manner in which the Mission Boards foster extension of the home base, inspire to greater liberality in our thank-offering this month. Our Board's ability to foster such extension is limited by the extent of our giving. May the entire brotherhood underwrite our Home Board's far-reaching program for this year, and provide a margin of surplus. W. S. CRICK.

HARRAH, WASHINGTON

An Outpost of the Great Northwest

A certain friend of the writer, in noting our address as "Harrah," commented that we must be having an "enjoyable time," in "such an enjoyable place" (confusing our village's name with the interjection so similar). Indeed, better yet, would be to exclaim "Praise the Lord" now that the intense heat of summer is past and weeks of wondrous sunny days, crisp nights enhanced recently by a moon so brilliant that fine print was read by its light, are here. The very busiest season of the year is now coming to a close, and for this we shall praise the Lord, if it will give more opportunity for those who have been blessed with an abundant harvest to give more of their time and energies to the work of the Lord. However, we are not unmindful that many have been faithful even during days of arduous toil. We praise the Lord also that a siege of sickness in the writer's home is now practically at an end.

But, the special thing for which we can say "Hurrah," is the action of our membership in a desire to set the feet of the church on a better financial basis. To this end the families of the church simply went down into their pockets and subscribed sufficient funds to pay up all indebtedness except one lump sum of $2,000 which had been loaned by one of our leading brethren and which amount can be repaid at liberty with no worrisome entanglements involved. Besides this, the funds just now raised will enable us to finish the church building, especially the outside stucco which had been postponed (lack of rain making this possible); and church pews have been ordered to replace the highly unsatisfactory opera chairs originally installed.

Even before this noteworthy step of financing was taken the Sunday school decided to have their rally day offering go towards liquidating one specific $40 debt, and the offering was $69.04. At that same time a brother and wife, who desired their names withheld, offered to supply a new set of song books, one of our greatest needs. These new books are now a reality, and a joyous one when we think of the "shredded" and pageless condition of the predecessors.

The next ambition of the membership, in a financial way, is to become entirely self-supporting. It seems altogether possible that this may be done ere long, and if it should come to pass inside of, say two or three years, this will be an unusual record for any congregation, and will show that it pays to turn our eyes to some of the "unexplored" (Brethrenially speaking) lands, thought so often as the home of the sage brush and prairie dog.

But these financial considerations are not the greatest points of interest, nor that which calls most for our praise and thanksgiving.

A body of believers working smoothly in fellowship and unity is of greater value than much fine gold, and such is Harrah. God grant that it might always be so! Just now we are looking forward to the fall communion, dated for Wednesday night, November 6. To many in this field our manner of thus commemorating the Lord's Supper will be new—this will be the second such service (if we are rightly informed).

Furthermore, we are looking forward to a revival effort later in the winter, all plans for which have not as yet been completed; but we feel the field is such as should yield a bountiful harvest, depending upon our faithfulness in watering with diligent seed-sowing and prayer in the meantime.

One of the leaders who was largely responsible for the establishment of this church here, is now planning to move to a new irrigation project in Oregon. While we regret very much to lose this family, we feel the distinct loss to Harrah will without doubt mean the founding of another Brethren work in a state not now in the Brethren lists, a fact to the shame of our people.

There are books, speeches, methods, and schemes galore on the market for the "raising" of church funds. Some one has tritely and rightly stated that the proper way is simply to place the hand in the pocket, grasp the purse, and "RAISE." Well, this same thought holds good on the subject of "How stem the ebb tide of Brethren congregations?" Some one must follow in the steps of our Dunker forefathers and be willing to leave all the pleasant ties of "the old home town," push out into virgin territory, and above all take their religion along. The day of the pioneer is in no wise past for those who truly love the Lord and the church of their choice. There is entirely too long a jump from the most western Brethren church of Kansas or Nebraska to the most eastern congregation of the Pacific coast states.

So, Harrah comes to this Thanksgiving season with true thankfulness for many things, amongst which not least is the fathers of the church who continuously pushed westward, and that right here in our midst are those who still feel the call of the unconquered—unconquered for Christ and the church. We are moreover thankful for the support rendered us by the church at large in these days of beginnings, and trust that the new plans for home church extension may result in a genuinely progressive growth, to the end that the whole Gospel may be proclaimed in wider areas than ever, to the glory of the Lord in these last days.

FRED V. KINZIE.

MUNCIE, INDIANA, NEWS

When we came to Muncie a year ago we found a small group of faithful workers eagerly waiting for their new pastor. They had been without a pastor for some time and were anxious to get started anew in the work of the Lord. They gave us a fine welcoming reception.

We had been working for five years with a fine group of people at Smithville and it was hard to break ties that had been formed and move to a new field. They gave us a fine farewell reception wishing us God-speed in our new work among new people.

The church here was fully organized and all set to go forward in real work. The membership is small but they have maintained a good Sunday school for several years. The attendance in the school began to increase until 260 were present on Rally Day. This set a high-water mark and made possible an average attendance of 145 for the year. The attendance in church services were good and new people were interested in our work.

During the winter evangelistic services were held with Mr. Glenn Wagoner of Goshen, assisting the pastor. Good crowds were in attendance and fine interest was manifested during the meetings. One of the special features was the daily broadcasting by Brother Wagoner from the local station. This new feature was much appreciated by the people and gave us splendid advertising for our services. Much good was accomplished, but no accessions were had during the meetings.

The building here is a great handicap to successful work. We have a large dwelling house which was converted into a church. There are a number of rooms we use for classes but the auditorium is entirely too small for Sunday school work. Then our Beginners, Primary and Juniors have to meet in a basement that never was intended for this service. On special occasions we have them standing around the walls of our auditorium.

One of our goals during the year was "A New Building in Two Years." The people were asked to pledge and the Sunday school classes worked with the result of $2,000 being raised to date. Many of the friends of the school helped us attain this amount. The W. M. S. is a great factor in this work. In addition to quilting they sell home-made pies and soup every Wednesday. Thus they are adding to their treasury which in time will increase our building fund. We still have until December 31 to cash in on our pledges and we hope to increase the amount a little by that time.

Sunday, October 13, was Rally Day and Homecoming Day at our church. We began the day with 300 in Sunday school and a good crowd at preaching service. This was followed by a basket dinner at noon and an afternoon service, with Rev. J. L. Kimmel as speaker of the day. There was an evening service with the pastor as speaker. Special music was rendered in the afternoon by the Y. M. C. A. male quartette and in the evening by our own male quartette. Letters of greeting from former pastors were read at these services. Altogether it was a big day in our work here. Some strangers who were present are still talking about our fine Sunday school.

We are very grateful for the financial help the Mission Boards are giving the work in Muncie. We are trying to prove ourselves worthy of your support. We hope the people of our churches throughout our brotherhood will rally to the support of these boards and give the best offering they have ever had. Let's show our thankfulness in a really substantial way.

M. L. SANDS, Pastor.

DES MOINES, IOWA

It has been some time since any news of the work at Des Moines has appeared in "The Evangelist," the last being given by Dr. Charles A. Bame in reporting a revival meeting which he held last November.

There has been no regular pastor here for the past year. During the late winter and early spring months the pulpit was supplied by one not a Brethren and the work was not constructional so far as the Brethren cause is concerned. During the summer months Brother Floyd Shiery of Dallas Center, now a Junior at Ashland, did some preaching for these people and was well liked by all.

We closed our three years' work with the good people at Conemaugh, Pennsylvania on August 11. After a brief visit with the writer's parents in southern Iowa and Mrs.

Staley's parents at Lawrence, Kansas, we began our work here the first Sunday of September under the most discouraging conditions of our ministry. On that first Sunday there were twenty-seven in Sunday school. Most of those present were boys and girls whose parents do not go to Sunday school or church. The school has been reorganized with Brother Ray Emmert, who did such a commendable piece of work in the absence of a regular pastor, heading the list. We have experienced a slow but steady increase in attendance. A young people's class has been organized with about twelve members and the pastor as teacher.

Most of the children in the absence of their parents go home after Sunday school, so on that first Sunday the new pastor was forced to preach to an audience of nine. Since that we have enjoyed the presence of from fifteen to thirty adults. Sunday evening following District Conference Brother Cashman came over from Dallas Center, bringing his good people with him. Thank you, Dallas, come again. Your presence was greatly appreciated. We have a Women's Missionary Society that many of the larger churches would be proud of. Before this appears in print we hope to have organized a Senior Christian Endeavor Society.

In the Capitol city of our home state, with a fine church building and a small group of as loyal and faithful members as can be found anywhere and with the help of the Omnipotent God, we believe that there is a real future for the Des Moines church.

Praying that the Lord may richly bless the readers of this article and asking an interest in your prayers we press forward.
AUSTIN R. STALEY, Pastor.

FIRST BRETHREN CHURCH, NEW YORK

We are celebrating the first anniversary of the FIRST BRETHREN CHURCH OF NEW YORK in conjunction with the second anniversary of the BRETHREN GOSPEL HALL, located at 315 West 57th St., New York City, from November 3rd to 18th inclusive. The first date being to commemorate the opening of the Gospel Hall, and the 18th for the organization of the church.

We plan to have various speakers and special singing and would welcome any of the Brethren from nearby places, if they find it possible to attend.

On Sunday, November 24th, God willing, we expect to hold Holy Communion and would be glad for any of the Brethren to come and partake, and assist Sister Aboud in this most holy celebration.

We have to thank Almighty God for his goodness, in keeping the door open under financial and other pressing difficulties and we covet the prayers of the brotherhood in general, for this most needy and worthy field of the Savior's vineyard.

We ask your prayers for precious souls' salvation and more grace to declare the full gospel to a hungry city.

Yours in the Master's service,
E. M. ABOUD.

F. Petznick, Secretary, 273 Linden Street, Brooklyn, New York.

We cannot put on the graces of the life of Christ as we put on clothes, one after another: they have to grow like flowers out of our souls. Such traits of character like purity, unselfishness, mercy, manliness, forgiveness, toleration, and kindness are not the results of a moment.

"It is better to go lame to heaven than walk straight to hell."

Isn't it rather strange, how poor some rich people feel?

The little boy with his five loaves of bread, was not the last fellow that got a large return.

The fruit of the Holy Spirit is "gentleness." This should reach down to the cattle in the barnyard.

Some men's religion can't stand water very well. Statistics at church on rainy days proves this to be true.

Some cats and dogs get along better than some people.

OUR LITTLE READERS

A FOX TALE

When I ask children to tell me what they know about a fox, they almost always reply: "He is a little red beast, very cowardly and cunning; he kills hens, and has a very bushy tail."

This is all quite true; but Renard lives a very hard and extremely uncertain life; yet all the while is so dashing and gentlemanly, so quick and clever, that you must forgive him one or two faults.

He begins his life in a nice warm nest of hay, dry moss, and leaves, at the bottom of a deep burrow, generally in a sandy bank. His mother tends him, fondles him, plays with him, as only a mother can; her one ambition being to keep him concealed from human sight. Once a man came by a particular burrow with his dog, hung about for some time near by, and then went away again. That night, Mother Fox took her little one up in her mouth by the nape of his neck, and set off to find a safer home. Hardly had she gone ten yards from her burrow when a dog jumped out of some bushes and gave chase.

Mother Fox flew like the wind over hill and dale, on and on, till her breath began to come in short, sharp gasps, and she felt she would soon have to turn and face her pursuer. But never once did she dream of dropping her little one and thereby saving herself; oh, no! cowardly as foxes are ever said to be, the mothers will always die fighting for their young.

Happily for this mother, however, a long stretch of bushes just then came in sight, and summoning up all her strength she made a last spurt, and crept into the thick of them. The dog followed for a short distance, but evidently found the thorns too sharp for his thick nose and long flapping ears, for he soon retired, leaving Mother Fox gasping, but triumphant, with her cub in her mouth, and made tracks for a hollow tree which she knew of in the neighborhood. Reaching it in safety, she soon had a warm nest made in the tree trunk, where little Renard lay for weeks eating and sleeping by turns, till he grew into quite a respectable fox.

And what a merry little fellow he was! As playful as a kitten, and quite as active; running all round and over his poor patient mother, burying his face in the furry depths of her brush, or, if she refused him that huge enjoyment, flying round and round in a mad race after his own, till he looked for all the world like a woolly spinning top!—B. Grieve, in The Carroll and Brooks Readers.

influential state in the teachings of Jesus himself. The Old Testament idea fell short of its mark because it held that the father relationship existed only between God and Israel. The early Hebrews gave no place in the relationship to others. But Jesus widened the circle into a universal Fatherhood. It was to be inclusive rather than exclusive. God was interpreted as being one who was ready to receive not only those of the house of Israel but people of other races and nations as well. The new fellowship with God knew neither Jew nor Gentile, bond nor free. The church today can make its greatest contribution to society by uniting all in a universal brotherhood."

Human Brotherhood

"One of the greatest contributions of the Christian religion is its measure of success in developing human brotherhood, and in so far as we have actually responded to this spiritual power such as was manifest in our welcome for the men from foreign shores who conquered the air in their coming, love has proved to be man's greatest ally. The extension of our frontiers westward was always retarded by the obstacles set up by the roving bands of hostile Indians. China has suffered severely because of the savage brigands that have made the highways unsafe and have terrorized the rural and outlying sections of the country.

"A resident of San Francisco, at the time of the earthquake in 1906, wrote to a friend: 'I saw a rich woman from the St. Francis Hotel lying asleep on a doorstep with her head on a muff. A long sable coat was thrown over her, and under one corner of it a young Japanese boy was curled up asleep. Everybody was everybody's friend, and though we were all dog-tired, there was not a word of complaint or ill-nature.' Common danger, common disaster, common tasks, common joys, can usually be counted upon to produce an almost ideal brotherhood with the law of love supreme. Why must it be lost when the excitement is over?"

Sentience Suggestions

Caste spirit forces a cast-iron ring around the soul.

Racial prejudices are not to be nourished but to be uprooted.

The best cure for race prejudice is service of the despised race.

The Father plays no favorites.

A person who thinks himself inherently better than a person of another race has not learned how to think.

Each race has its mark of superiority; but each race has also deficiencies that should keep its members humble.

To be exclusive is to shut oneself out from what is worth while in life.

Protagonists of "Nordic supremacy" have an overdone superiority complex.

Race prejudice sometimes serves as a pretext for oppression.

Brothers in Christ should scrap petty antipathies.—L. B. Phifer.

A REMARKABLE Editorial

The leading Editorial in a late issue of the Long Beach Press-Telegram is so remarkable that I am giving it all my space this week. In matters of detail, the trained theologian might improve upon this editorial, but its general ideas are startling for their accord with Biblical prophecy. When editors of great daily newspapers begin to think along these lines, it is time for the church to sound the cry, "Behold, he Cometh."

THE Editorial

AWAITING GLORIOUS DISCOVERY

But do we trust in God? Is there sincerity in the declaration broadcast on the coin of the realm? Or do we trust more in the value of the dollar than in the Deity in whose power we pretend by the inscription on the dollar to repose our confidence, and to whose beneficence we purport to commit our welfare?

Do we trust in God, or are we ever blowing bubbles of vanity and conceit that burst when they appear their loveliest?

Do we trust in God, or are we chasing rainbows whose mythical pot of gold always is out of reach; or if grasped in the form of worldly riches otherwise attained, crumbles to ashes under the test which all things material must endure?

Greater than the price that is supposed to lie at the rainbow's end is the ability to understand God and really to trust his infinite love and his infallible intelligence.

Yet mortal sense tells us we can feel the dollar in our pocket, while God, to the same mortal sense, is a long way off, if really existent.

The dollar, in truth, is impotent. Worse than that, it is destructive. Love of money is the root of all evil. Love of God is the source of all good.

Simple, not abstract, are these statements. They rest upon Scriptural authority. The Master's teachings are filled with admonitions to seek first the Kingdom above, to take no anxious thought of the morrow, to consider the lilies of the field, to note the fact that while the foxes have holes and birds of the air have nests, the Son of Man had not where to lay his head. Yet who would not give up all earthly possessions to be assured of a place at the right hand of the Savior in the eternal heavens?

How shall we learn actually and always to trust in God? By what token in these modern, hurly-burly times shall we know that the faith of our fathers was justified? Do we need a sign to confirm our spiritual inheritance? If so, where shall that sign be sought? Surely not in the busy marts of trade, nor amidst the distractions of the forum, nor in temples dedicated to the worship of worldly idols. Rather, in the secret place of the Host High, beside the still waters of sacred meditation, in the solemnity of communion with the Holy Ghost.

Great have been the discoveries of these latter days. Does a still more marvelous revelation wait around yonder corner? Is there to come from out the mental mists that hide this further unfoldment an overpowering demonstration which will sweep away all doubt, and by the same grand proclamation of the first Great Cause and Ultimate Purpose, affirm the universal Fatherhood in a manner that will bring to bended knee every mortal being in voluntary acknowledgment of God's supremacy both in the trivial and the vital affairs of life?

This is not an impossible sequence in the progress of an unprecedented age. Indeed, is there not Biblical promise of that Second Coming which shall find all redeemable mankind ready to exclaim, as did Thomas under the unmistakable proofs which he was vouchsafed: "My Lord and my God!"

That this happy day may appear more quickly than the confusion of the period would indicate is a hope sustained also by prophecy of Scripture, which tells of chaos and disturbance and violence as marks of the last desperate resistance of Satan against the marshalling of the heavenly hosts.

This dawning of the millennium will witness the destruction of the last enemy of mankind, death itself, the fear of which has been for ages the white flag of humanity's foreordained defeat.

Watching and waiting, working and praying for that day of days, man needs more than ever before to set aside periods for quiet study of the facts of being. By this means will the human mind be attuned to catch the opening strains of the inspiring anthem that will announce the Great Awakening.

A FRIENDLY Warning

To all this, I would add just one word of caution—If the world is looking for a great demonstration which will compel belief in the supernatural, let men beware lest they be deceived by the Great Counterfeit of the Ages. Before the Revelation of the Son of God from heaven there will appear one who by his greatness will deceive all that dwell upon the earth whose names are not written in the Book of Life.) Rev. 13:8. Read the whole chapter.)

Pastoral Visiting

Bishop Hogue said as between a good pulpiteer and a good visitor in a pastorate the latter was preferable. He added that there was a growing disinclination among Free Methodist preachers to pastoral visiting. "This witness is true." "Pastoral" is a word from the sheep industry, and so leads our minds to the care of sheep as illustrative of the work of the pastor. Shepherds are always with the sheep committed to their care. Not for an hour are they left in danger unguarded, and most all other animals are the enemy of sheep. How true a parallel to the sheep of his hand!

Excuses are profuse. People are busy. They will be when the last trump sounds. The pastor should assume the importance of eternal things as in their true value and superiority to material and earthly considerations, and then act that way. No temporal duty can stand before prayer and exhortation, in its importance when analyzed in the laboratory of wisdom. The Discipline is clear and quite adequate in instruction on this head, and served the pastors of bygone days. If the pastorate is a spiritual charge, and involves the care of souls, and is not a professional employment, then the importance of diligence in care and oversight of those committed to our trust appears.

One good preacher, now gone to God, said when charged with neglect in visiting, "I got a call to preach but none to visit." Such a "call" is found in the Discipline, and is obligatory upon all who accept the charge of circuit or station. In the Bible also is the example: "Publicly, and from house to house." Many who are diligently "publicly" fail, and are wanting in the "house to house." An unvisited charge is only half served, and a minister neglecting the calling portion of his "calling" is but half serving, at best.

Often when calling proceeds, the poorer members are neglected. One such said the pastor called once in a two-year term. Others were served weekly or oftener. "Respect-of-persons . . . ye commit sin."—A. J. M., in Free Methodist.

Incarnation

What the doctrine of the Incarnation really means is not that God has invaded a world that is alien to him and taken on a nature different from the divine, but rather that man and God are akin, that they belong to the same family. The doctrine of the Incarnation means that this is God's world and that history is the sphere of his activity. God and man are not unlike and totally distinct with reference to ultimate nature; they do not differ in kind. And the Incarnation of God in Christ is not altogether something new and strange, something totally different from what we see going on in the world around us all the time. Indeed, if I may so speak, God is evermore incarnating himself. He incarnates something of his beauty in a flower, something of his majesty in a storm, something of his vastness in the wide-extending sea, something of his eternity in the steadfast mountains—"God's eternities in stone." He puts something of his holiness in every saintly soul. He incarnated himself perfectly in Jesus Christ. As a matter of historical fact, "God was in Christ." Said Jesus, "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." And Paul was telling what Christ had come to mean in his own experience when he wrote, "In him dwelt all the fullness of the Godhead bodily."—From Preaching with Authority, Yale Lectures for 1929. By Bishop Edwin D. Mouzon.

A man may be a bully at home, and a good-fellow among his friends, pious at the church and hard-boiled at the market place. This acting like Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde may fool men, but never the Lord. With him a man is either one or the other.

Home Missions---The Task Before Us

This is the time when the entire brotherhood is called to face the task of Home Missions. At this Thanksgiving season our churches are to make their contribution for the extension of the Gospel in the Homeland for an entire year. And every congregation should be ready to do its full duty with promptness and generosity. No church or individual can afford to shirk or lag behind in this important enterprise, and none should do less than its or his best. The need is too urgent and the calls are too persistent. "The reflex of missions" is too valuable to risk being lost and the future of the church too much at stake.

The Missionary Passion

The advancement of the kingdom of God is being delayed for lack of missionary passion. There is too much lukewarmness about the propagation of the Gospel. We have not, in large numbers, a zealous desire for it. We are not vitally, seriously, anxiously concerned about it. We are concerned after a fashion, but it is little more than a well-wishing attitude toward the Gospel. It is not the kind that will drive men to sacrifice and to heroic endeavor. We are not overcome with zeal for it. We have not come to the point where we lose any sleep about it, though it is the chief task that faces the church of Christ today. And this lack of passion is our outstanding weakness, a costly weakness indeed, and a cause for slowness of growth. The spread of the kingdom is being delayed because we take the matter so lightly, we treat our supreme task so indifferently. We need to be aroused at this point. We need to have our eyes opened and our souls stirred with the urgency of the task. This is the very first thing necessary to the giving of life and substance in such measure as to make possible the great Home Missionary advance about which our church leaders have been talking.

A Vision of Lost, Distressed Souls

If the members of the church could catch a vision of lost souls, if they could see the spiritual need of men as Jesus saw it, there would be a great revival in missionary endeavor. Jesus sought to give his followers such a vision. It was after he had made his missionary tour and had visited all the cities of Galilee, that he pointed out the great need and wretched condition of mankind in these memorable words, "distressed and scattered as sheep having no shepherd." Do our souls get the picture? Are we impressed? J. W. Shephard relates: "Once in the long ago as a shepherd lad it was my duty to 'salt the sheep,' scattering salt upon the rocks and watching the timid creatures shyly approach and timorously lick the salt until their timidity was lost and some would even venture up and take it from my hand. On a memorable night my boyhood ears heard a startling tinkle of the bells at midnight as the dogs invaded the flock and scattered the 'distressed' creatures far and wide, wounding, tearing the wool from some and killing others. This vivid impression of my boyhood days has been burned into my soul as I have traveled around Brazil and seen the multitudes hopelessly abandoned in the darkness of ignorance and illiteracy. Thousands of them are around us in every town and city who do not know the Gospel." And those who have the vision to see are aware of that fact that practically the same condition obtains in the towns and cities of the homeland. There are great numbers of people in the great western stretches and in the mountainous districts of the south who are wholly untouched by the Gospel. In every section of our country there are many communities where little or no church privileges are afforded, and many others where there is a hungering for the advantages of the whole Gospel. And everywhere men are dying in the darkness of sin and ignorance and unbelief. If we only had eyes to see the distress and hearts attuned to understand the wretchedness of these hosts of unshepherded lives our souls would burn with missionary fervor. Or, to turn to another figure that Jesus used, if we could only see the multitudes of people falling in sin, unevangelized and unsought, as a harvest falling to the ground because overripe, we would hasten to the fields and gather many precious sheaves for the Master. An adequate supply of men and money is awaiting a vision of this sort.

The Need of Intercession

Before we give we must pray. Before we go we must pray. Before we do anything besides seeing, we must pray. Then along with everything else we must pray, and as a completion of everything else we must pray. We have not rightly appraised this mighty force. Robert F. Horton says: "Intercession is the greatest and most powerful instrument that God has put into our hands. The whole trend of modern discovery and of modern thought has been to make more credible for us the power of prayer. Today we bind the whole earth together and speak across continents and across seas. . . . We can see the meaning of prayer and can understand that it is a God-ordained method of service by which all things are made possible for the kingdom of God." Then he illustrates the power of prayer by reference to the prayers offered up by the little church at Jedburgh, Scotland on behalf of their missionaries, the Murrays, in the South Seas, resulting in a sudden and extraordinary spiritual awakening in those islands. The people came in asking for baptism, and rose up in the assemblies confessing their sins, crying to God for forgiveness. And all this came about without any special effort or plan on the part of the missionaries; they were unable to explain it until they learned months later that on that particular date their home church had betook itself to earnest prayer. As Dr. Horton says, "The prayer that ascended in Jedburgh for the coming of the kingdom of God was answered in Tutuila on the other side of the world." Prayer is the most important thing we can do for the promotion of Home Missions. It is not an easy thing to do, in fact, nothing is more difficult. But at the same time, nothing is more effective, nor more powerful.

Missionary or Decadent

Every church is either a missionary church or a decaying church. That is inevitable by the very nature of the Gospel, which is a live, moving, active force, that cannot be restrained or hoarded. It is good news and must be passed on, and he who attempts to withhold it and keep it for himself, will find it becoming stagnant, breeding spiritual disease and death. Like the manna gathered by the Israelites in the wilderness, the Good News cannot be selfishly hoarded, but can maintain its true character only as it falls upon new ears and finds entrance into new hearts.

A painter was once asked to portray a decaying church. He placed on the canvas a fine, handsome building, and a large number of fashionably dressed people going towards the entrance. In the lobby where it could be seen by all who entered, was a box with a slit in it, and on the box was written in large letters, "FOR MISSIONS": but over the opening a spider had woven its web. A church that loses its interest in missions loses its life. And may we be permitted to suggest that there exists some possible connection between the slow growth and in some localities, the decrease, in membership, and the small pittance given for Home Missions. When a church undertakes in no uncertain way this great task of missions, increase in membership will inevitably appear. "Vital Christian conviction and vital Christian life are shown in our interest in the advancement of God's kingdom on earth. Once get people interested, instructed and inspired concerning missions, get them down on their knees for the salvation of the world and giving must follow. When a Christian gets the world-wide vision, he gives and gives freely."

It is wise to plan to raise your church finances in ways consistent with the highest spirituality.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

The Christian ought not to consider the tithe in the light of the Mosaic requirement, but he ought to consider it an obligation nevertheless. The tithe should be accepted as the minimum of the Gospel requirement.

One of the most certain evidences of growth in the Christian life is the consciousness of stewardship, the sense of belonging to the Lord and of being under obligation to use not only money, but life and talents and time as pleases him.

The secretary of the General Conference is asking for the data from the various district conference secretaries and from leaders of departmental organizations. This is the data that should be included in the Brethren Annual and Conference Minutes. Prompt action is important.

The children will find in this issue of the Evangelist an excellent mission story written by Mrs. Charles W. Mayes, and those who cannot read it for themselves should have their parents read it to them. If they read it, they will want to have a part in the Home Mission offering.

Brother Drushal in this issue writes of the importance of the adequate support of the work at Lost Creek, by which he means the support of the school as well as the church. Our Kentucky work has long been a most appealing mission venture and much splendid fruit has been reaped from it.

Brother Claud Studebaker writes us that he would appreciate having any one send him names of any Brethren people, or people having a Brethren background, living in or near Pittsburgh. Brother Studebaker is pastor of our Pittsburgh church and you may address him at 5002 Dearborn Street, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

President E. E. Jacobs records for us a few items of news concerning the college. The College was called upon again to provide a radio program at Mansfield recently and all who took part on the program acquitted themselves well. The Ashland College band is proving to be a very high grade organization and is receiving many favorable comments.

Dr. G. W. Rench writes of his pleasant visit to the First church of Johnston, a report of which the pastor, Brother Ashman, recently made. Brother Rench speaks of the remarkable growth this congregation has made during the years since he served as its pastor twelve years ago, and of the spiritual strength of that people. He pays fitting tribute to the veteran Sunday school superintendent of that church, Brother Albert Trent, who is completing his fiftieth year of service in that capacity.

Brother A. B. Cover, pastor of the First church of Los Angeles, writes of the progress of the Lord's work in his field. They met the "summer slump," especially as it effects the evening service, by putting on special programs that succeeded in large measure in attracting the crowds and resulted also in discovering some unused talent. The various departments of the church are functioning effectively and the congregation is united behind Brother Cover's leadership for another year.

The members of the Home Mission Board and other persons interested in the cause are writing this week, presenting strong appeals and arguments for a more loyal and enthusiastic support of Home Missions and it is hoped that those to whom papers are sent will make an effort to distribute them wisely and thoroughly, that they make their appeal as widely as possible. As a rule the regular Evangelist readers are already supporting every interest of the church and do not need to be urged, but those who are not members of the Evangelist family must be reached, if the offering is to be what it should be.

The church at Clay City, Indiana, recently enjoyed a successful Homecoming and Rally Day program, when a goodly number of members living at a distance returned for the day. They have planned a joint revival with the local Church of the Brethren, with Brethren H. M. Oberholtzer and Ira T. Hyatt, the two pastors, doing the preaching and exchanging pulpits. It is a fine spirit they manifest, and possibly the next step will be to plan to worship regularly in the same church, as one congregation, in the not far distant future. And that, of course, is what we ought to be planning to do in many places where the two groups of Brethren have overlapping fields.

Dr. Charles A. Bame writes that he is now in evangelism, the thing in which his soul delights. He asserts that the thrill of his first experience as an evangelist has never left him and that he cannot rest without engaging in such work. We need men like that, as well as men who find their chief joy in organizing, calling and teaching, and carrying on the daily grind of the pastorate. His meeting at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, was a union meeting with the Church of the Brethren and the Brethren church and he says, "All outward semblance of differences was absent as the two groups worshipped together." That is as it should be, and we thank God that more and more the spirit of fellowship and co-operation is being encouraged between the two denominational groups.

Our correspondent from Long Beach, California, writes that the new Sunday school building is completed and the church will soon be finished and they expect to dedicate November 24th. The First church has accomplished a great undertaking in securing for themselves this extensive equipment and they have set before themselves a challenging program of religious education, which will be under the direction of Prof. Alva J. McClain. This splendid church has gone forward from one victory to another in a remarkable way during the long pastorate of Dr. L. S. Bauman, who has been in charge of the work from its beginning. We shall hope to have the privilege of publishing a view and description of their new plant when it is dedicated.

Turn to the Business Manager's Corner and read the brand new proposition that we are offering you as an inducement to do your church a favor. The Evangelist is offered for three months for twenty-five cents. This is your opportunity to put it into every home of your congregation. No church can afford to stay off the Honor Roll at that price, much less afford to be denied the inspiration and instruction and the news services of our church paper. There are many churches that ought to take advantage of this offer, some to give their members a taste of the Evangelist for the first time, and others to present an inducement to a membership once on the Honor Roll, but dropped off for financial reasons, to get back in line. It would be a fine thing for a church to make every home a Christmas present of the Evangelist, or a Sunday school class teacher might wish to send the paper to each home represented in his class. Or possibly some Sunday school would care to subscribe for a period of three months for each home represented in the membership of the church or the school. Or, let interested members take it upon themselves to solicit short time subscriptions at that rate, and thus bring a great spiritual blessing into the lives of the people. The pastor might well consider this a part of his pastoral duties. In most of the big denominations as well as small ones, the pastors are the recognized agents of the church papers. It should be so in our church. We pray for cooperation in every way in our effort to make possible the rendering of a larger service on the part of our church paper. And along with this, we invite any reader to offer suggestions or criticisms looking to the improvement of the paper. If you have an idea that you think is worthy and practicable, send it in, and it seems to be possible and advisable to put it into practice we will do so. Tell us what you think of the various departments and which you find most helpful personally.

PRAYER REQUESTS FOR THIS WEEK—

Please pray for our campaign led by Brother H. E. Eppley, evangelist, and Brother G. W. Chambers, pastor, at Mount Olive Brethren church, in Virginia, writes C. T. Van Lear.

Pray for victory in the meetings at Louisville, Ohio, November 10 to December 1, with the pastor, Brother A. E. Whitted doing the preaching and Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Richer in charge of the music.

Pray for the churches that they may respond in a large way to our Home Mission appeals and needs, and that the funds may be supplied to make possible the carrying out of a really aggressive Home Mission program.

GIVE HOME MISSIONS THE RIGHT-OF-WAY

Opportunity at the Door!

By R. Paul Miller, Newly Elected Home Mission Secretary

The city of Jerusalem was the first center from which all missionary activities issued forth. It was natural for it to be so. It was there that Jesus was crucified; it was there that the Holy Spirit fell upon the waiting disciples at Pentecost; it was there that eight thousand were saved in a short time following Peter's great sermon thus forming the first Christian Church. Great zeal, even to martyrdom, characterized the early days of the church in Jerusalem. But this beautiful situation did not last. Before long the legalistic religionists began their contentions and soon the church in that city was torn asunder by strife about words. In their devotion to controversy they forgot the call of Christ to evangelize the far corners of the earth and as a result the City of Antioch became the center of Christian testimony. Jerusalem had her opportunity and threw it away, and today the sad case is that missionaries must now be sent to the very city where Christianity was cradled.

Is this not a very real picture of America today? Has not America been the greatest center of Christian testimony in the world for a hundred years? And now the pitiable fact is that America is becoming so involved in religious contention and is so failing to preach the gospel at home that millions of dollars in deficits are facing the Missionary Boards and returning missionaries freely declare, in their shocked surprise at conditions here, that America is in great need of Foreign Missionaries to come and lead her back to Christ!

But the tragic thing to note is the part that The Brethren church is playing in all this! Just as we decline in evangelism, in conserving our present membership, and in failing to extend our ministry into every city that we can possibly reach, so are we taking part in this tragic drift into decay. No wide-awake Christian in the Brethren church can fail to see the tendency against evangelism, our neglect of isolated members and smaller churches struggling for life, together with the pitiable slow advances we have made in the cities of America!

To stop this ultimately fatal course the Home Mission Board comes to the entire brotherhood with a program of aggression that will not only overcome all this but will send the Brethren faith forward in such a march of progress that the charge can never be said that we gave up to the apostate drift of the age.

Going ahead of what our present income would really justify, the Board has appointed a field secretary to actually start the great work, believing the need program to be so apparent to all loyal Brethren that they will back them up in the work to the fullest extent. To double the amount of the Thanksgiving Offering of last year may seem a good thing, and it is, but face to face with the tremendous needs and possibilities it is still far short. We have the lacks of many past years to make up and account for and that is not an easy thing to do. Let no church consider that equaling last year's offering to Home Missions will suffice! No pastor can ignore this pressing appeal without hurting himself in the long run, for he narrows his own field within the church. Every individual member of the Brethren church who does not respond to this appeal is hanging a question mark over the spiritual future of his own boy and girl. If the church at home decays and does not advance to care for the growing generation, who will preach the old faith to your children? A doubled Home Mission offering is every responsible father's answer to his concern for the spiritual welfare of his own boys in this godless, Christless age!! Remember, it must be doubled!!

This will make it possible for the Board to go into the cities where your boys and girls are going to live and follow them up and keep them true to the faith of their fathers and their childhood. We could recite you enough spiritual tragedies already, due to our failure in the cities, to make your heart break as it has ours. We are ready to go in now, but we can only do so as every man, woman and child and pastor in the Brethren church makes it possible for us through giving and praying.

But this is not all our need. We need young men who love Jesus Christ utterly to lay their lives on the altar of carrying Christ to these places. We need young men who are red-blooded and intelligent and trained for the work, who are not afraid to work that they might build a monument to their Lord in establishing these churches; young men who are willing to do as did the great Apostle Paul, who went from house to house, day and night, pleading with tears in the wicked city of Ephesus. God give us young men who are worthy to follow in the footsteps of the great men of faith who have gone before them, and with them may we have fathers who will back them up with their gold! Remember, we must double the offering in order to begin! "Lift your eyes, look upon the fields for they are white unto harvest."

Give Your Brethren Friend a Church Where He Moves

By R. D. Barnard

"Take your Church Letter with you when you move" is a statement we like very much to make when a new person or family comes into our community. It is a principle we very grudgingly endorse, if at all, when one of our members move to a different community. There is a good reason for this. Other denominations have congregations in about every community in the United States. They can safely say it, for it only means the transfer of membership from one congregation to another, or if the counsel should become generally accepted, they would gain more from the smaller denominations than they would lose. Our problem is different. There are so many more communities and cities where we do not have congregations than where we do. For us a large percentage of the moving from the home community and church means a loss to our denomination in general.

We realize that a great mission is being undertaken by the Brethren church through its Home Mission Board—that of using an Executive Secretary in the person of Brother R. Paul Miller as a type of pastor for all isolated Brethren folk. This is noteworthy, it is highly commendable, and has our whole-hearted support. I believe every pastor of the Brethren church should cooperate in this.

We are thinking of another thing, however, and even it is not a new thought. We know our Home Board has often considered it and has given much time and prayer to its accomplishment. If it is to be accomplished we must help. Give our friend, when he moves from a Brethren community to a community where there is no Brethren church, a Brethren church. This, I suppose, sounds impossible. But impossible or not impossible, we must begin to do it, and forge ahead in doing it as the years pass, or we must suffer irreparable loss in our ranks.

I do not believe this thing impossible. I believe it highly possible and highly probable. Do we want to? Have we really consecrated self and possessions to Christ? Do we believe in the Brethren's special and unique message? If we can answer to these "I do" or "I have," there is little else to hinder; we are ready to go forward.

But how can this be done, you ask. I hasten to say, I do not know all about it—possibly very, very little. But I have a few thoughts, and I don't charge for them; they are free. First, it is rather safe to say that Brethren folk, when they move, move to certain general communities. This seems to have been Brethren history. In the earlier days Brethren seemed in moving to make jumps of about 300 miles each, from the east coast to the west. Brethren churches mark these places. Now the tendency seems to be that Brethren, as other folk, move to great centers of population. I do not have the figures, and may be wrong, but I can easily imagine that a large percentage of isolated Brethren live in some eight or ten great centers of population and industry. Be that as it may, at least the Mission Board knows of a few of such centers where congregations could be found and undoubtedly established if there were funds and leaders. This gives a hint of the purpose of this article, and the challenge it will soon present.

Another thing. Our people follow the same general trend of life as others. They go south in winter, and north in summer: they invest their money about the same places as others. In so doing interests have centered in certain great sections of our land. As we understand it, the Brethren churches of California and the Great Northwest, in their beginnings, were to some extent the result of such movings and the saving of those who came by the establishment of these churches.

Many of our people are moving to Florida, Texas, and similar places of appeal. Is it not an opportunity to form Brethren communities? I believe if some concerted, continuous action or policy were launched in the best of these great sections, Brethren people, when they moved, would seriously consider Brethren centers. In saying this I am not thinking of entering the land business as a denomination. But thought spent upon this theme will not be wasted.

We are dreaming, you say. Possibly so. But one thing is sure—there is a great present with us. The Thanksgiving season is near. This is an opportunity for us to really sacrifice in our giving, or rather, our paying, to the work of Christ for Home Missions. Even the beginning of the great plans adopted by our Home Board cannot be made without a most liberal offering. My challenge and appeal is this: "Will you give most liberally that the beginning may be made in the great program of giving your Brethren friend a Brethren church where he moves?"

Forward, March!

By Freeman Ankrum, Vice-President, Home Mission Board

All too long as a church have we stood still, so far as our program for the Home Mission work has been concerned. Our progress has been slow and at times we have made no gains. Year after year comes the Macedonian call to come over and help us, and we have been forced to reply that we have more calls now than we can answer. The nucleus groups in numerous cities look to the Board for some one who will come and lead them to their realization, that of a church and a spiritual home. As these leaders have not been forthcoming some of the people have been lost to the church, as they do not care to wait indefinitely when there is no promise of help. The time has come when the progress of the Foreign field is contingent upon the enlarging of the Home Base, as the program of our church must not become top heavy. The advance in the Foreign field can only be in proportion to our progress in the homeland. Our claim to be a Missionary church must be more than a paper claim. The proof of our claim must be found in the results. In days gone by we have not been able to supervise the weaker Mission points as supervision was needed. Neither have we been able to make thorough and complete investigation of the nucleus groups. It was necessary for men to leave their pastorates for a few days, which, while being the best they could do, was far from satisfactory from the standpoint of the people visited. The Board has at its recent meeting this year at Winona unanimously taken the first step which it hopes will be the beginning of a new epoch in the Home Mission work of the Brethren church.

We have a man in the person of Brother R. Paul Miller who, after the first of the year, will be full time field secretary, and who can give the needed supervision required in the field. As a Board we have taken the first step, and the second step is up to the brotherhood this Thanksgiving time. The issue cannot be avoided; the facts must be faced. The responses this Thanksgiving time will indicate whether we Forward March, or disgracefully retreat. Shall this always be true? The answer is in your hands.

The Supreme Task of the Church

By L. G. Wood, Member Home Mission Board

As one has long since said: "The mission of the church is MISSIONS; and how truly the Lord made that fundamental in the marching orders which he gave nearly two thousand years ago! But also, how slow his people were to comprehend the meaning of that part of his order! Perhaps the first expression of the present religious awakening among the men of America was a movement to send the gospel to the whole world. The Laymen's Missionary Movement aroused tremendous interest in the spread of the Gospel and vastly increased missionary contributions.

But it was discovered that the missionary movement did not cover the entire wants of humanity. A Gospel that supplies every human need cannot be confined to the bounds of even a world-wide missionary enterprise, and so this Laymen's movement merged into the more comprehensive "Men and Religion Forward Movement."

The missionary work of the church is not less important, because it is now being done in a larger way, but it is more important because it is not yet being done in the largest possible way. The mission work of the church takes its place as the reason for the existence of the church and the definite plan of God for the uplift of all mankind through the regeneration of the individual.

Therefore we conclude that there is no difference between Home and Foreign Missions, except as we classify for the study of different fields. The heathen in Africa, South America or China are no different from those in the United States, as to their need of Divine Grace. The question of Home and Foreign Missions is settled by the great commission of our Lord, under which we work: "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to the whole creation."

While it is my opinion that American Protestantism is the best type of religion that this world has ever known, yet much of the business is not conducted according to the program of Christ. The political chicanery, with which many public officials have secured their offices, the complacency with which the public views the atrocious acts of some men of wealth, the infamy of child labor and sweat-shop systems—these are only a few samples of national evils which confront us as a nation. Shall the church so interest herself in these evils, and launch into politics and try to clean up these affairs? No, not if she desires to be true to her supreme calling. These evils are the challenge to the church to "preach the Word," and make Christ known to every individual possible, for the Gospel is still the "power of God unto salvation to them that believe." The greatest thing the Brethren church can do now, is to consecrate and concentrate, all of her resources upon the one supreme task, to live and preach the living Christ as the world's only hope; for his is the only Name given.

There is an acknowledged great awakening in Foreign fields, calling for the Word of God, may every member of the Brethren church do his best in the broadening of the home base, that we may answer the worlds' call in a much larger way than ever before. Never before has the heathen world been so free and anxious to receive the Gospel. Never before have the demands been so great for missionaries to "occupy" the waiting fields. Never before have there been so many heathen peoples standing, as it were, on their tiptoes, asking for missionaries to be sent to them to lead them to God. These things have not just "happened," but this is in the fullness of God's plan for the church and the beckoning hand of opportunity to every child of the King. God never created a yearning without providing means for its gratification and the Gospel is at hand to meet the heathen's eagerness for light. Our Home Mission work is the base of supplies of both men and money with which to answer the Lord's call and to meet the challenge of waiting millions.

Let every member of the Brethren church live, pray and give for the broadening of the home base, and let us not plead our smallness, for we are engaged in the greatest enterprise on earth and have the greatest program known to man.

Truly the fields are white for the harvest and it is a man's job. The program of Christ is plain. The command is emphatic and divine power is promised to those who will follow the divine plan. Let us obey the orders of the great Commander and carry the Gospel to the whole creation beginning at Jerusalem.

Fort Scott, Kansas.

Why Double Up

By Dr. G. C. Carpenter, Member Home Mission Board

1. Because of the Need. The church in the homeland must be strengthened before the church in distant lands can be enlarged. The home field has many cities where there are already goodly numbers of Brethren people who are anxious to help establish new Brethren churches. Therefore it is very necessary that our Thanksgiving offering for home missions be at least double the amount given annually for a number of years. The need says double up!

2. Because of Prosperity! Brethren people are more prosperous than ever before, a favored people. There may be exceptions but they only prove the rule. If God's share is laid on his altar for his work this year every church can easily double its former banner offering. "As God hath prospered." "Will a man rob God?—Bring ye all the tithes—The tithe is the Lord's." Present prosperity says double up! •

3. Because of his Love! Jesus died for a lost world because he loved men. Then Love commanded the evangelization of the world and we are marching today with that command as our marching orders. It says begin at home. Therefore the Thanksgiving offering for home missions is of first importance among all the offerings of the year because it provides funds for homeland work. It provides for the enlarging of the foundation. Do we love with Christlike love? Do we have compassion on a lost and needy world as Christ had? His wonderful, self-denying love says double up!

Our Most Vital Task

By Claud Studebaker, Member Home Mission Board

The one thing essential in the propagation of any species of life is the reproduction of its kind. Failing to do so is a sure method of extinction. Every Christian is to bear fruit, otherwise he is barren and is cast aside. Fruit may be edible or beautiful and may serve many purposes, but the real purpose of fruit is the reproducing of its kind. It bears the seed of life for another plant, hence the continuity and increase of the kind is assured. The fruit of the Christian life may bring many blessings, but the really vital purpose of our fruit bearing is to make more Christians.

The primary objective of the disciples of our Lord was not to seclude themselves and live righteously but to cast themselves out into the current of humanity and preach the gospel to every creature, to redeem their souls and bring them to a like precious faith. The urge of every Christian should be to lead others to Christ. The fathers in our church bore fruit, not only by adorning their lives with the heavenly graces, but by reproducing their faith in others and building churches. The many churches that were built by even a small group is testimony to the greatness of their faith. We are left to carry on with a heritage of a whole Gospel, unincumbered. No people ever held a more clear cut and powerful message. No time in all the history of the church when the need of it was so distressingly great. Out of the babel of doubt and speculative philosophy, a clear call from the trumpet will catch the ear of those who are true at heart. The old order is passing, mourn or rejoice as you choose; it makes little difference. A small group in a rural community or small town, no longer is able to carry on with a local elder as before. This is a day of education and specialization. The church has been the prime mover in the progress; she has built schools, endowed colleges, and now finds herself with an educated constituency, in a fast moving, distracted world, with the identical sins and soul needs of the early centuries.

Will the Brethren church meet the issue? She can, if she will. Our will has been faulty. With our manifest conviction in the importance of our distinctive doctrines we have been all too ready to barter them away for a little popularity or convenience, in worship, or a matter of economy, or to stifle our faith and fail to hand it down with the vital seed to reproduce itself. I think the world sorely needs the message of the Brethren church, now. There is a tremendous swing from the plain teaching of Christ. The overworked phrase, "The Jesus Way," is as helpless to meet the need of the world as a toy cannon would be to win a battle, for they have reduced our pre-eminent Christ to a nice young man who lived an exemplary life. Our Christ is Lord, and all of his commands come to us as the fiat of an eternal God. Our ministry and churches are sound in the faith. We should bear fruit. Your faith does not mean much to you unless you are willing to propagate it. If you have light and put it under a bushel, beware! You may discover your light has gone out when some one kicks the bushel off.

Our young people and older ones as well are leaving the rural communities and small towns and filing places in the large centers, many of them important places. Our loss is tremendous from this condition. We must build more churches where we can reach the people. We have faithful groups in many places who with some financial aid and a faithful leader will develop into a strong church. An increase of five thousand dollars in our Home Mission offering as a thankoffering would still indicate that we are not suffering from excessive gratitude. If the Brethren church will consecrate her life and substance, she will see a marked rise in the spiritual state of the church and a very great increase in new churches. The man who talks about what he believes and prays loud and long, but shuts up like a clam when it comes to matching his words with his dollars, will have have a hard time convincing the world that he is sincere. If we will pay the price we can build many more churches. What will be say, brethren, in our Thanksgiving offering? "She hath done what she could." Will we?

The most vital task of our church is to give our whole Gospel message to the world. To do so effectively we must build more churches where we can reach the people. This Board should have a much larger offering. I sincerely believe we can give it and be greatly blessed in the giving.

Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

Lengthening the Cords and Strengthening the Stakes

By C. C. Grisso, Member Home Mission Board

If space permitted I should like the privilege of preaching a sermon from the above text to our entire brotherhood at this Thanksgiving season. Forgetting our past history, our beginnings and our growth as a church, and taking a look around us as we are today, we cannot but believe that if ever there was a time in the history of the Brethren church when extension ought to be the great dominant thought, that time is now. If our church does not rise to her opportunity now, it will beyond all probability never face a bigger or better one.

Our Home Mission work as yet has not been pressed to its limits. There are scores of centers where there are Brethren that ought to be organized and thus utilized as a nucleus for a church. What if those who have gone before us had been content as we, how many churches would we have today? I fear that in the midst of our greater opportunities, and wide open doors, and our immensely richer affluence, we have shown an indifference and cowardice that in their situation they had never shown. We ought to be building more new churches. We should be giving more attention to our weak ones. We should be more carefully shepherding our isolated members. All of these call for an immediate and heroic response of both men and money. Thanksgiving time is here. As for the church that we love may its coming witness a mighty advance along all lines.

What we need, I believe, is a new vision of our task, and when we once have it, we are going to leave off many things that are now demanding our attention and will begin to give our time and thought and money to the extension of his kingdom. Verily, "an enlarging of our tent, a stretching forth the curtain of our habitation; a lengthening of our cords and a strengthening of our stakes." Isa. 54:2.

The Urge of Missions

By F. C. Vanator, Member Home Mission Board

Behind every worth-while movement there must be a motivating power. It must be a power that is exhaustless. It must be a power that is untiring. It must be a power that will become increasingly insistent, the urge of which is felt in each part of the movement. Such a power—such an urge is our God.

We are often asked what the real meaning of missionary endeavor can be. It is the earnest endeavor to please our Master by doing the very thing he asked us to do, namely, "Go, make disciples." But disciples cannot be made by simply "wishing." Discipleship is the result of Workmanship.

Just now the particular need of our work is the turning of the attention of the entire brotherhood to the task of Home Missions. Being the pastor of a Home Mission church brings one in vital contact with the real need of such a movement as Home Missions. Such an one is looking at the question from the inside. Looking from the inside out makes the situation look much larger than looking from the outside in. The one on the outside sees only the need; but the one on the inside both sees and feels the need.

Let us look at the scene from the "inside out" for a moment. The Mission church looking through the eyes of a helpful Mission Board, sees the church in action as a great brotherhood which has become the agency through which Christ is working for the upbuilding of his church. They see the effort that is put forth in the general church that becomes more than the mere giving of an offering, and which becomes to them the symbol of mutual helpfulness.

In helping the mission church the general brotherhood is putting faith and strength into the weak and tiring arms of that mission church membership. And so, as we come to the time of our Thanksgiving Offering, let us make it, not a collection, but a real "Thank-offering," not giving as unto men but as unto God.

"I gave my life for thee,

What hast thou given for me?"

The Obligation of Stewardship

By A. B. Cover, Member Home Mission Board

The Scriptures are very explicit upon this teaching of Stewardship. Everywhere is the invitation "come," and always follows with the command, "go." So it is a matter of assuming our obligation. I remember that one man I met in a former congregation, said, "I do not believe in missionary work." Before that pastorate ended that very man was interested in all of our missionary work. I simply taught him the Word. Again and again there comes to me the thought that the Lord made it possible for every one to have a part in his program. I am thinking of the wild man of Gadara: he came to Jesus Devil-driven but he found peace and then he became a home missionary. Jesus told him to go tell his friends how great things were done for him and he went. The woman who went to the well for water when she met Jesus forgot her water-pot and became a home missionary, testifying for her Master. We could multiply instances but let these suffice.

What are we going to do that another opportunity comes this Thanksgiving time to testify for our Master? The crying need is before you. We must strengthen the home base if we would advance. So to you, my brother, sister, comes anew the call! Will you rejoice the hearts of your servants who are seeking, praying, laboring, that this work may reach out in increasing power and influence by sending in an offering that will make possible the building of new churches and strengthening those that are still under the care of the Home Board? Pray concerning it, and then give, that you may rejoice in seeing the cause you love go forward.

Los Angeles, California.

The Call More Urgent than Ever

By Frank G. Coleman, Member Home Mission Board

Through the years we have been urged by our Home Board to go over the top with our Thanksgiving Offering. They have told us repeatedly their ability to extend the Church is limited to our giving. The Foreign Board has said, We cannot go farther in the foreign work until the home field is extended. But, through it all, we maintain about the same degree of liberality. The Thanksgiving offering remains about the same year after year. Another Thanksgiving season has come bringing another urgent call to each of us to make this the banner offering.

Is Christianity at the "Cross Roads?" Our answer is written in the defeated and demoralized condition in mission work throughout the world. Curtailment to the amount of 50% in some of the largest mission projects, due to lack of funds. From India, China, Africa comes the tramp of recalled missionaries, and the wailing heart broken cries of those heathen left to perish in darkness. You, dear reader, if you be a child of God, have a grave responsibility in the preaching of the Gospel to every creature. Perhaps God has blessed you with wealth. You have far more than you will ever need in this life, why not put it to work for the Master? Your Mission Board offers you the regular rates of interest for annuity gifts.

The call this year is more urgent than ever. The time is getting shorter. One of these days the Lord is coming. Will we rush to him with our hoarded wealth and throw it at his feet only to hear him say, too late, too late? You should have invested it for me in the Gospel, that I might have had mine own at my coming.

Make this a real Thanksgiving Offering.

Flora, Indiana.

True Thanksgiving

By Roy A. Patterson, Member Home Mission Board

"O give thanks unto the Lord, for he is good: for his mercy endureth forever." Surely such words must have been inspired by a spirit of deepest gratitude, recognizing the eternal mercies of a loving father.

As a nation for more than one hundred and fifty years, we have been recognizing Thanksgiving Day, in a special way, though with some interruptions. The observance of this season began on a bleak day, when the Pilgrim Fathers, after months of privation, misery and indescribable hardships, knelt upon the cold, snow-covered ground and gave thanks unto God for the blessings they had received. Miserable as their lives must have been, they still gave expression to hearts filled with gratitude.

This day has become a national holiday, but we are wondering if, since that day, our Lord has heard such sincere prayers. Are we a truly grateful people? If so our expressions of gratitude must be of a magnitude proportionate to those who were so thankful that they could kneel on the cold, snow-covered ground and with bared

Some Suggestions to Aid Boys and Girls in Preparing the Foundation for a Useful Life and a Few Hints to Parents

By Patrick Purcell, Probation Officer Juvenile Court, Mount Vernon, Ohio

TEN SUGGESTIONS

For Young Men to Follow

First—Honor and respect your parents. Have reverence for the old home and home ties. By your acts and conduct always uphold the honor of your family name. Look upon the old home as the dearest spot on earth, it will cultivate in your heart love for your own home that you may establish later. Respect and obey your school teachers, make good use of your school days.

Second—Be polite and gentlemanly at all times and in all places and to all persons. Remember that a young man who is a real gentleman will always be respected. Be kind to parents, relatives and all companions, and be kind to all animals. Such a trait, well formed, will make you a kind father and faithful husband.

Third—remember that a pure mind and a clean body is the foundation for a useful, pure and successful manhood.

Fourth—Be truthful and honest, and never be influenced to practiced sinful habits or dishonest acts. Remember that a bad habit will grow upon you like a disease, and is almost certain to cling to you all through life. So never make the beginning.

Fifth—Practice the habit of associating with only good, clean, pure minded companions and help others to be clean and pure minded. Read only good uplifting, instructive literature.

Sixth—Avoid public dance halls or other public amusement places that are not clean and uplifting. Don't be a pool room patron or a street corner loafer. Don't use or induce others to use intoxicating liquors at any time or place. Have lots of human pride.

Seventh—Remember that employers are not seeking for young men who have the reputation of being rough, wild, cigarette fiends or loafers. The young man who is industrious and of good habits will always be in demand for positions of trust and merit. Be an active member of some church organization and Sunday school. It will strengthen your character.

Eighth. Remember that a man of strong character and a pure minded woman are the noblest and most perfect of all God's created beings. Never allow yourself to be tempted to rob a young girl of her modesty and virtue. That is a sin that will bring down upon you God's wrath and punishment. At the proper time prepare for marriage, and look upon it as a sacred undertaking, and select a clean, sensible, modest girl as a life companion. Don't have it said of you that you were compelled or forced to get married, for such would be a handicap on yourself and family in future.

Ninth—Cultivate the habit of industry and thrift. Don't crave for things that your position in life will not justify or permit. Don't be afraid of work, it is honorable to toil at any honest labor. Avoid getting into unnecessary debt, especially debts you cannot meet. Endeavor to live within your means and be self-supporting as early in life as possible. Don't be a burden on your parents.

Tenth—If when you grow into manhood you are entrusted with property or funds of another, don't commingle it with your own or use any part of it for your own use, intending to replace it. It is a temptation that will later cause you disgrace and dishonor. Don't live a double life. Live a clean upright life and you will always have friends in this life, and leave behind you an everlasting monument after death.

TEN SUGGESTIONS

For Young Girls to Follow

First—Don't parade with an "all dressed up and no place to go" air. Dress with taste and modesty. Remember that modesty is the fairest jewel on a girl's brow. It inspires noble thoughts and lifts the soul to God. The modesty of the Christian girl must not allow foolish, dangerous and sinful acts or fashions to dim the sweetness and luster of its glory.

Second—Always tell your mother where you are going and with whom. Remember that if you deceive your mother, God will punish you in some way. Keep no secrets from mother.

Third—Remember that a strong character is a safeguard against temptation. Choose modest, clean companions and don't allow yourself to be tempted or bribed. Attend Sunday school and church services regularly.

Fourth—Don't accept gifts of money, jewelry or clothing from pick-up acquaintances.

Fifth—Don't let boys or men treat you to intoxicants, at any time or place.

Sixth—Avoid public dances, wild automobile parties and moving pictures where suggestive films are shown and exhibited.

Seventh—Beware of the young man who offers you an auto joy ride.

Eighth—Beware of the young man who after a ten minute acquaintanceship wants to put his arm around you; he is not clean minded.

Ninth—Look for healthier and safer forms of excitement than street flirtations.

Tenth—If you find a really clean, decent, sensible boy friend, introduce him to your parents; and meet with him under the bright light of your home, and not in an automobile in the dark of night on some lonely highway.

TO MY FRIENDS

Both Children and Parents

My purpose in offering these suggestions is with the hope that they may bring to the mind of youth the necessity of now and then to stop and consider whither are we drifting. Are we avoiding temptations, and on the road to a clean character and useful life, or are we drifting along the roadway strewn with temptations, at the end of which is grief, disgrace and unhappiness? And again, with the desire of urging parents to set a good example for their children and watch more closely their habits and associations.

I have had more than the average man's experience in dealing with domestic affairs. I have learned much of law violation, life's misfortunes and mistakes of youth, and my heart is burning at times with the desire to heads, give to their posterity such an example of true Thanksgiving Spirit as would find a permanent place upon the pages of history.

But my dear friends, as we pause to give thanks, there comes to our minds those who through lack of equal opportunities or other conditions, do not enjoy the advantages, physical and spiritual, that we enjoy. It is with these we must share the goods news and the abundance of a wonderful harvest.

What greater expression could come from a true Thanksgiving Spirit than the desire to share with others, to help them and really know what Thanksgiving means.

Let us make our Thanksgiving Offering truly proportionate to the blessings we have received, remembering the mercy of our Father endureth forever. Surely our mercies ought to endure for a season.

A CHRISTMAS PRESENT

tell children how to avoid temptation, and those things that would be helpful to them in days to come. If I could only get my message to reach their hearts and could have the cooperation of parents. But, oh, how often my efforts are in vain. Too frequently I am looked upon as a crank whose eyes and ears are open to the observation of such small things that should not be noticed. I have observed the beginning and end of many a wasted life, hence I do observe small temptations, and with all the sincerity of my mind and heart I urge children to never begin a sinful habit or a dishonest act.

One of the most alarming evils in our American social life today is the increasing number of broken homes, separated parents, children by the thousand scattered to the four winds of fate, deprived of real parental care, good example and companionship, of what should be united fathers and mothers, divorced parents, remarriages, stepfathers, stepmothers, and in many cases the second stepfathers or stepmothers, until the situation is alarming, children every day going down the pathway to ruin and destruction for want of real parental care, deserted by father or mother, and in some cases by both. The situation reminds me of a remark made by a little boy when I inquired of him about his father, and he replied, "Do you mean my real father, my new father, or my newest father?" I have lots of sympathy for the most of wayward children. They were born into this world handicapped by traits and bad habits of their parents. In many cases no preparation for marriage. Marriage and marriage vows are treated as a make-up joke agreement. If we don't care to live together we can get a divorce. If we have children we can put them in the orphans' home, so-called once. Now they are mostly Homes for Deserted Children. It is strange how few realize, that bad habits and traits of parents will very often crop out in children and their parents wonder why their children go astray. I recall the case of a young girl under age, a plaintiff in a divorce case, who had run away and married a worthless young man. It developed in the testimony that she had been cruelly abused and finally deserted, and I asked her the question, "How did you come to meet up with this fellow?" and she answered, "I didn't meet up with him; he overtook me on the street one evening and said 'How do you do?' and I said 'How do you do?' and he asked me if I didn't want to take an auto ride, and I said I would, and while riding he asked me to run away with him and get married, and as my home was not very pleasant for me—I had a stepfather—and I thought I would take the chance, and we ran away and were married. We stayed at mother's home for a short time. My husband wouldn't work and was mean to me, and one evening he came home and beat up on me and left, and I have never seen him since." The girl's mother, who was standing

Editor's Select Notes on the Sunday School Lesson

The Higher Patriotism

(Lesson for November 24)

Scripture Lesson—The Book of Jonah.

Printed Text—Jonah 1:1-3; 3:1-5; 4:5-11.

Devotional Reading—Isa. 55:1-7.

Golden Text—He made of one every nation of men to dwell on all the face of the earth.—Acts 17:26.

Introductory Note

We know nothing of the Prophet Jonah except what we learn in the Book of Jonah, save for a reference in 2 Kings 14:25, where he is mentioned as "the son of Amittai, the prophet, who was of Gath-hepher." Gath-hepher was a village in northern Palestine. Jonah prophesied about 862 B. C. "The natives of the town commonly identified with the ancient Gath-hepher, point out what they claim to be the tomb of Jonah. There are many places however that are claimed as the burial place of this prophet."

The Call of Jonah

The Book opens with the summons of Jonah to go to Nineveh and denounce the wickedness of the city, the inference of the account being that he is not merely to denounce its wickedness but to call its people to repentance. Nineveh was the capital of the ancient Assyrian empire. A journey to Nineveh would perhaps mean a thousand miles of travel northward to the upper Euphrates valley, and then eastward through Mesopotamia. The response of Jonah to this summons is described in the language that reminds us of the early chapters of Genesis: "Jonah rose up to flee into Tarshish from the presence of Jehovah." Tarshish was in the opposite direction from Nineveh. It is probably to be identified with the ancient Tartessus in southern Spain. The Phoenician merchants had sailed westward to Tarsus and procured various metals; silver, iron, tin and lead. It is said that ancient tin mines are still to be found on or near the coast of Spain. Thus, instead of going in friendly spirit to Nineveh, Jonah tried to run away, went down to the site of the modern Joppa, which was the port of Jerusalem and the adjoining country, found a ship going to the eastern end of the Mediterranean, paid his fare and went on board. Then follows the story of the storm and the great fish.—E. Leigh Mudge.

A Missionary Book

The object of the Book of Jonah is not to teach repentance, though the repentance first of Jonah and then of the Ninevites is prominent in the book, and even God is said to "repent" of the punishment he had intended for the great city. This teaching, however, is subordinate to the fundamental lesson of the book, to which each chapter is related and of which the last chapter is the climax, the great lesson of God's love for all men. The book is a stinging rebuke to Jewish pride and exclusiveness, which held that all other nations were outside God's family, and that men could be saved only as they became Jews. One of the greatest and most wonderful things in the Bible is the appearance of this powerful evangelical book in the midst of the Old Testament writings, and one of the earliest of the prophecies. It is saturated with the spirit of Christ, the universal love of Calvary. It might have been written by the Apostle to the Gentiles. It is one of the chief missionary books of all time.—Adams.

The Great Fish

The greatest danger with which we are confronted in the study of the book of Jonah is that of becoming involved in a fruitless discussion of the story of the fish and miss the main point of the story—that God loves all men and has a place in his plan for the salvation of other peoples of the earth as well as for the Hebrews. Let us take this simple and beautiful story for what it really says and not lose the kernel by working on the shell. However, just for the information of those who are interested, we will quote what we consider a reliable statement about the great fish:

"There are few stories in the Bible which have been subjected to more adverse criticism than that of Jonah and the 'great fish' rightly interpreted, no doubt, to mean the greatest fish of all, the whale. The great fish in question would be the sperm whale or cachalot, the species which inhabits the southern waters where Jonah was voyaging. It attains a very large size and may measure from 50 to 70 and 80 feet in length. The head is about one-third the length of the body, very massive high and truncated in front. It will not, therefore, be considered exorbitant if we postulate for Jonah a whale 60 feet long, with a mouth 20 feet in length, also 15 feet in height and 9 feet in width."

Jonah's Mission

(1) God at no time confined his love and care to the Jews. With the first promise to Abraham was expressed God's desire and intention to bless all nations. God's people were always intended to be a missionary people. Thus Professor Beecher says, "The religion of Jehovah, as described in the Old Testament, was a missionary religion from the beginning." To remind the Jews of this may have been one reason for Jonah's mission. (2) He was sent on this mission while his own country was yet very bad. He was not to wait till all was done at home before he preached abroad. Yet (3) he first did all that he could for his own country. (4) His mission was to be one of the great enemies of his country. If the great enemy of Israel should repent, then Israel would be safe. (5) Jonah's foreign mission was patriotic as well as religious. Not one moment was Israel out of danger while the Assyrians retained their power and their wickedness. They must repent or perish. No Christian nation can be at its best, can attain its highest prosperity, can even be safe, while the rest of the world is heathen. Foreign missions are crammed full of patriotism.

If there are any who are tempted to make light of or to despise foreign missions, press this lesson home. Jonah made himself ridiculous. Instead of being overcome with joy and gratitude to God for saving the thousands who lived in Nineveh, he was selfish enough only to think of his own feelings. Judged by the great plans of God every opponent of foreign missions makes himself as ridiculous as did Jonah.—Illustrated Quarterly.

Our Problem

"Our Problem is to broaden the basis of loyalty. Within a hundred and twenty-five years we have watched patriotism expand from the local unit to the larger one. We have seen Massachusetts patriots converted into American patriots, Bavarians into Germans, Venetians into Italians. In the last few years we have been witnessing the growth of an imperial patriotism within the British Empire. There is, so far as I can see, not the least ground for supposing that the broadening of loyalty must stop at the existing frontiers." "The task before us, therefore, is to widen the area of good will so that law and orderly government may transcend national boundaries and include all humanity. Some call this a dream, as men in other days called national unity a dream. But as men dream, so they achieve."

The Call of the Homeland

By Mrs. Mary C. Wenger, Member Home Mission Board

The Call of the Homeland is not an appeal, it is rather an insight into a great truth—the base of world reaching operations. The saving mission of the Homeland is forcing us into a true definition of God's salvation.

A saved America holds the key to the world's saving. The world is looking to America. Every wrong righted here in the Homeland will be the removal of a cause of stumbling in the Foreign land. Christ saved the world by being a Home Missionary, and his method of salvation is the only really effective one which has ever been devised.

Right here projects the spiritual leverage at the hand of God for the uplift of the human race toward God and heaven. It is true that the state of Home Missions is the index of its missionary activity in Foreign lands.

At this Thanksgiving time the Home Mission Board is making a special effort to raise funds to carry the Gospel to many who are calling for it.

The work is so important that no one is justified in shirking duty. The work is God's work through us. I am not sure but that the major task of Home Missions lies with the individual Christian, rather than with the Mission Board. Our missionary task at home is as clear as crystal.

May God keep our ears open to the divine command, make our hands strong for mission service and cause our feet to be shod with the Gospel of Peace. "For him and through him, and unto him are all things." To him be the glory of God forever.

Two Kinds of Sheep

By Mrs. C. W. Mayes

"I thought that Jesus worked as a carpenter before he began his real work," observed John as he sat looking at a picture which hung on the opposite wall. "I wonder why he is pictured as a shepherd taking care of his sheep."

"I am sure that he was a carpenter, but I believe that the Bible says something about him being a shepherd, too," answered his sister Dorothy, who was busily at work making a dress for her favorite doll.

"Let's go and ask mother about it," suggested John, and off the children ran, for it seemed that mother could always settle their problems.

They found her in the sewing room, and when they had explained their difficulty, she smilingly laid aside her sewing and picked up her Bible.

"I think I can read something to you that will help you to understand about Jesus as a shepherd," she said.

When she had turned to the tenth chapter of John she read the words spoken by Jesus, showing the difference between a true shepherd and an hireling, and proclaiming himself to be the true shepherd. Then she asked the children to listen carefully while she read these words, "I am the good shepherd, and know my sheep and am known of mine. As the Father knoweth me, even so I know the father: and I lay down my life for the sheep. And other sheep I have which are not of this fold, them also must I bring and they shall hear my voice and there shall be one fold and one shepherd."

Then she read further on in the chapter where Jesus spoke to some men who did not know him, and could not understand what he was talking about. This is what he said:

"But ye believe not because ye are not of my sheep. As I said unto you, my sheep hear my voice, and I know them and they follow me and I give unto them eternal life."

"O, I know what it means now!" exclaimed John, "Jesus was a shepherd to people instead of to sheep, wasn't he?"

"Yes," answered mother, "and he is still a shepherd to those who love him, for he cares for us tenderly and well, when we hear his voice and follow him. Then mother asked Dorothy to bring the picture which had been responsible for their little talk, and they all looked at it closely.

"How contented and safe the sheep seem to be! And how kind the shepherd looks," observed Dorothy.

"Yes," agreed mother, "but now let us close our eyes and imagine that there are some more sheep in the picture. They are just a short distance away, and when they see the shepherd, they dash madly in the other direction. Some of them run into the thorns and briars which tear their wool, and others fall on the dangerous rocks. They look poor and hungry for they cannot find the good grass, and many times they are thirsty, for they do not know about the clear sparkling stream. Often a wolf comes and snatches one of them away, but there is no one to care.

"Softly the shepherd calls to them but they will not follow him for they do not know his voice. Perhaps they think that the long crook which he carries, is to strike them instead of to care for them and to keep them in the right path."

"Why don't the other sheep tell them about him?" asked Dorothy anxiously. "They could understand then, couldn't they?"

That was just what mother wanted the children to think about, and she looked very happy as she answered, "Surely they could, but what if the happy sheep do not care enough about the others to bother to tell them?"

"O, I am sure that would make the shepherd very, very sad," said John.

Then mother reminded them that all who know and love the Lord are the happy sheep, and asked them to think who the unhappy sheep might be. Of course they could not help but think of those around them who do not know and love the Lord. And when mother explained that there are many even in our own land who have never even heard about Jesus, both children were very thoughtful and sober. Finally Dorothy spoke,

"We should be telling them about him, shouldn't we mother? How can we do it?"

"I will tell you one very good way," answered mother. "Next Sunday our Thanksgiving offering is to be received. The money given then is for the purpose of helping those in our own country to know about our loving Savior, and even you children can help with that."

Quickly the children ran to count the money in their banks, and then as the week went by, they carefully saved every cent that was given them for candy or ice cream and both of them found several little errands to earn more money.

How happy they were as they counted their money into the little home mission envelope. And it is certain that it helped to make at least one more happy sheep.

Lost Creek, Kentucky

After the establishment of any work, and after it has been in existence for some time there always comes the inevitable question, Why should it be continued? That question is now being plied to the work of the Brethren church at Lost Creek, Kentucky. We do not question at all the necessity of the question, nor that anyone does not have a perfect right to ask it. That was asked of the work here from its very inception, especially the school phase of it, (finding some of our first Evangelist articles recently reveals that so clearly) and it is still being asked today.

Yes, the question is all right, perfectly so. But the thing that does not appeal to us as being proper is for one to form a "snap judgment" of the expediency of the school phase of the work, i. e., form judgment when they have only had a bit of look-in on the work, some of them only over night. Could the judgment of such be competent?

Now there are two outstanding things which seem to us to be valid reasons for the continuance of the work on the basis on which it was organized, and continued to the present time. This basis recognizes the church and school work as one, working together and if you want a separation of it, then the church first, and then the school. However try to separate the school from the church work now, and those competent to pass judgment, invariably see clearly the result.

The first of these two outstanding things is that not a denomination is dropping its school work, where it has been already established, unless it be in one or two cases where a certain denomination had too many going. If you doubt this consult the late report of the Russell Sage Foundation on this point. And not only are other denominations not dropping their school work now, but two new schools have recently been established not so very far from us. We are not unfamiliar with some of the articles of the theorist, appearing in recent magazines, that the time has come for the church schools to discontinue, and let the state do the work. But none of the denominations are doing it, but on the other hand are only the more fully equipping their schools, and establishing new ones. We are more than willing to let this fact stand against the theory of the theorist.

Then the second of these two outstanding evidences of the need of the whole work is found in this: We do not know of a single one of those who have labored here in the past, and have fitted into the work, that went away knocking on it, i. e., the school work with the church work. On the contrary some of those have been sending in their offerings right along for the work, and some who have been here in the years past, are now back, and back when they knew that there had not been sufficient funds in sight for the running expenses of the year, and glad that they were back again. Who can know better the needs here than those who have labored right here in the work year after year? We submit the above, as valid evidence of the integrity of the whole work, both here and at Krypton.

G. E. DRUSHAL.

FIRST CHURCH OF LOS ANGELES

Vacation days are over and we are gradually settling into our usual activities. This great Pacific coast has many enticing allurements for the tired toiler who seeks real rest and recreation. From the pen of Brother McClain a description of some of the beauty of the Sierras. The writer with his better half also was privileged to enjoy some of those scenes never to be forgotten. To stand upon the shore of Crater Lake and behold the beauty of a perfect reflection, one realizes in a more significant sense what Paul meant when he said that we were reflectors of the heavenly. What poor reflectors of the Christ we are! We returned to our pastoral and ministerial duties after seeing parts of Nevada, Oregon and then the northern part of this state, refreshed, inspired and ready to assume obligations with that zeal that physical energy adds to spiritual tasks.

Upon our return, we found that the work had been well cared for by Brethren Kenneth Ronk, who attended the University here and B. F. Schisler, our elder of the congregation. So we took up the reins and have been endeavoring to lead on to greater vision which we hope will mean eternal fruitfulness. We tried an experiment in our evening services and it has proven successful. Instead of the regular sermon on Sunday evening, we put on special programs with a shorter address either by the pastor or some one upon whom the pastor would call. The response by the various organizations were much beyond the pastor's expectation. Every organization of the church and each individual were in the mood to respond with the result that much good has been accomplished. We are blessed with considerable talent which we utilize to the Master's glory. This gave the pastor an opportunity to discover some hidden talent which is used to profit now. This way we avoided much of the summer slump.

At our quarterly business meeting in July, the pastor was again extended the yearly call to remain as pastor. We accepted the call and are glad to report that the outlook is, that we are facing the best year of our work here. The membership has shown a desire to cooperate with us in our leadership which means that one essential of advancement is established. No work will prosper with divided forces; and we are led to believe our forces are more firmly united than heretofore during our pastorate. We formulated our plans for Rally and Promotion, the last Sunday in September. The program in every respect was considered a grand success. So the Bible school is reorganized and has settled to definite work. We are regaining the loss of the usual slump that vacation brings here, especially where in a few hours' ride one can reach the mountains or the sea-side. The Endeavor societies are shaping up in an encouraging way. The W. M. S. is a banner society and we are proud of their achievement. Our choir under Brother Cecil Snyder is doing good work and the orchestra adds to the musical end of the work. The men's organization, the Brotherhood of Alexander Mack, is functioning in a telling way. We have our monthly meetings where a happy fellowship is enjoyed. In the October meeting, we invited to a banquet the entire church membership with special friends to hear our city mayor, John C. Porter, whom the united brotherhoods of the city elected to this office and who is a fine Christian gentleman. We were honored by his presence and instructed in civic righteousness by his address.

We are also looking forward to our communion service which we will hold on November seventh. This will be preceded by a short evangelistic campaign, which we aim to make helpful in every way. We were not privileged to attend General Conference this year but we rejoice because of the splendid reports of the Conference. We ask that you who have prayer lists add us and pray that the Lord may use us in His Glory.

CLAY CITY, INDIANA

On the first Sunday of October our church observed its annual homecoming and rally day. The weather was ideal. The distant membership responded well to the invitations and quite a number came from long distances. The services lasted throughout the day. A most excellent spirit of worship, fellowship and brotherhood prevailed through every part of the services.

After the forenoon session a splendid dinner was served in the basement of the church. Then came the friendly social hour in the shade of the trees on the church lawn. This in turn was followed by the afternoon meeting with special music, recitations and a short talk by the pastor.

As has been the custom on such occasions to invite our sister church, the Maple Grove Church of the Brethren, a goodly number of them were present and enjoyed the occasion with us.

For some time we have been feeling the need of a series of evangelistic meetings. On discussing the matter with the members of the Maple Grove church we found them in very much the same circumstances as ourselves. Being so far removed from churches of like faith and practice it always makes the financial burdens in securing an evangelist from a distance rather heavy. Consequently finding a mutual need and interest we have decided to begin a series of union meetings at our building in Clay City on next Sunday, November 3rd, with Brother Ira T. Hyatt, pastor of their church preaching. It is the intention to continue the services later at the Maple Grove church with Brother Harvey Oberholzer, and pastor, filling their pulpit. Trusting our plans are directed by the Spirit and that the cause of the Master will be materially strengthened not only in the two churches but in the community at large, we solicit the interest and prayers of all who may be in sympathy with the work at this place.

Respectfully yours,

MARTIN R. GOSHORN.

JOHNSTOWN—FIRST CHURCH

Among the many churches in Johnstown, Pennsylvania, the Brethren people are in considerable evidence. It has been my privilege to be in the First church, preaching over the three consecutive Sundays, October 13, 20, 27, and assisting Brother Ashman in a series of Bible lectures preparatory to their fall communion service. At the latter service 442 surrounded the Lord's table—an inspiring, and never-to-be-forgotten, service. The pastor is beginning his ninth year with this congregation. A noted and noticeable change has taken place since leaving that field about twelve years ago. A magnificent new church building, with a large and growing membership whose standing is in keeping with its stately and imposing edifice, without losing in spiritual power, is an accomplishment any body of people may well delight in. Their anthems were religious. The congregational singing was thrilling. A spiritual pastor backed by consecrated leaders is the answer to such a condition.

This is the home of that veteran Sunday school superintendent, Albert Trent. He is rounding out his fifty years of unbroken service as superintendent of that great school. When that school looks upon a floral wreath some of these Sunday mornings instead of the smiling face of Albert Trent, it will know a giant tree has fallen in the forest. It is not generally known that Brother Trent was the stenographer in that famous Berlin church-trial of H. R. Holsinger, which provision almost wrecked the plans of the Annual meeting committee sent there to try Brother Holsinger.

We missed the cheering presence of three spirit-filled elders, who have answered the summons, already on the way to us all, since leaving there. Elder R. Z. Replogle, Elder W. A. Adams, and Elder Benjamin Goughnour. These Brethren were an inspiration to any preacher as they sat from Sunday to Sunday in their pews. But new leaders have come forth, building wisely yet surely on the foundation they helped to lay. Elder Hilderbrand, one of the pioneers who spent his last days in Johnstown, is also gone across.

But there were many, many old friends to meet Mrs. Rench and I, and the greeting we received was worth going across a continent to experience. Anything, everything loving hearts could do to make our stay pleasant and profitable was placed at our command. Even the shut-ins visited lent their good cheer to make the evening service tender and helpful.

We can never forget faithful, old Johnstown with their many kindnesses. It must be a step in the preparations for that wonder of all wonders—that great meeting with the Lord in the air.

LONG BEACH NEWS

We are happy to report to our brethren that the Long Beach church work is steadily going forward.

The Bible school building is now complete and the work on the church is rapidly being finished. We expect to dedicate on Sunday, November 24th.

Our church program has been greatly enlarged with the coming of Professor Alva J. McClain who is in charge of three Bible classes.

The first class that was organized, 180 met, and 80 registered as students. Seven different denominations were represented.

So, you see, we are acting as a home missionary among the other churches. At each Sunday service new members are being added. The seed is being sown and great may the harvest be.

Pray for us as we enter this larger field of service that we may each one find his place in sowing the seed and in garnering the harvest of lost souls, as we continue to look for the coming King. Following is the dedication day program:

9:25 to 10:45—Special Bible school program.

Exercises by Primary Department.

Address by Prof. Alva J. McClain.

Offering lifted by pastor.

11:00—Morning sermon by the pastor.

3:00—Dedicatory Sermon, Prof. Alva J. McClain.

Dedicatory Offering, to be lifted by the pastor.

7:30—Evening Sermon. Rev. John Lienhard, pastor of the Second Brethren church, Long Beach.

Monday Eve.—Community Church Night.

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

We had the pleasure recently of having Rev. L. S. Chafer at the Chapel service, where he spoke very acceptably. Rev. Chafer is head of a Bible school at Dallas, Texas, where our former librarian, Leslie Lindover, is now in school. He has a position also in their library. Rev. Chafer also addressed the seminary students at their weekly meeting.

We had the privilege during the Ohio conference which recently met here, of having several of those attending to conduct our chapel devotions: Rev. Willis Ronk, from Meyersdale, Pennsylvania, and Rev. Gearhart of Dayton.

Dean Charles Anspach recently attended an educational meeting at Columbus where he led in a part of the discussion.

I attended the fathers' and sons' supper at our South Bend church where Rev. Victor Leatherman is the pastor. The attendance was very good and a fine spirit prevailed.

Dr. Ullman, Mrs. Dean Leslie, and others attended the meeting of the Northeast Ohio Teachers' meeting in Cleveland. As many of our graduates as could be assembled had luncheon together when Dr. Ullman and Superintendent Bowsher, of the Ashland schools, addressed them.

This past Monday evening, the College furnished the program over the Mansfield radio station. Mrs. Stuckey, Mr. Glenn Jacobs, a student, the California Male Quartette, and the College band of 25 pieces, were the participants. The reception here was good.

Recent football scores, Ashland 20, Wilmington, 18; Ashland 43, Cedarville, 0; Ashland 31, Thiel, (Pa.) 7.

Our theological men have been called on for pastoral services in nearby churches in larger numbers than usual. They are supplying not only for our own churches but for congregations of other denominations.

TRAVEL FLASHES

Cedar Rapids

We are now in evangelism; it was the call to this work more than twenty-five years ago, that pulled me out of the schoolroom, and brought amazement to me for the very wonderful response to my poor sermons, filling houses and winning lost men to Christ. The thrill of that first experience has never left me. Although twenty-two years of my ministry have been spent in the pastoral relation, I have always held from three to ten meetings a year and always one or more in my own pastorate. I believe that it would be a good policy for every preacher to hold at least one meeting a year in his own pastorate, regardless of what else the program for the year called for. Evangelism is not only scriptural and necessary for the growth and progress of the church, but it is so interesting and thrilling that I covet the experience for every preacher of the gospel.

One might think that after so many years, I might be slowing up and that this work would be galling. But I am doing this work this fall easier than ever. Indeed, it seems that I can not rest without doing it. I have learned after all these years of trying experience how to eat and take care of my body, and better also of my voice, so that here I am, singing solos, preaching, and leading the singing, all—all, when I have to. And let me throw in this hint, that churches calling men to this work ought to do the very best possible in the way of getting them the things they need—even the things they think they need for they have enough to bear without putting on them burdens that could be easily lifted and carried by others without any trouble.

Cedar Rapids was like that. I was in the beautiful and hospitable home of Brother G. T. Ronk. Each day we discovered how much alike we were in comity of spirit. Both evangelistic and fundamental in our theology; both with a considerable experience in evangelism in the Brethren church; both struggling to do the utmost while it is yet day and before the night cometh, it was a great pleasure to live with him and his family, all interested in the larger sweep of the Brethren principles in American life. May God give us more folks of the vision of the Ronks—more with the readiness to see that things go, regardless of the money cost!

A Union Meeting

This meeting was of the nature of a union between the two sister groups of Brethren. It was the second I have helped to conduct and in each, there seemed to be a free spirit answering to the prayers of our Lord, "that they may all be one ... that the world may know that thou hast sent me." I hope that Brother Ronk will tell in his own inimitable way what he said to me almost every day about the surprising progress and power of the meetings. From the first day when we all knelt before God and renewed our allegiance to him, to the last, when they gave so liberally to send me on to my next meeting, the Lord seemed to be working in peculiar power and we saw and believed that he was pleased. All outward semblance of differences was absent as the two groups worshipped together. Both received the messages with equal eagerness and apparent sanction. In a Church of the Brethren meeting house, with about half of each kind (?) of Brethren, I, (a Progressive) presided at a communion service surrounded by a number of preachers of both groups—I will not say division. There were many reconsecrations and some very fine additions to the churches; a wonderful cementing of the two groups and an invitation to return to the city for a city-wide meeting in December to be conducted at the Mission building down town with radio accommodations and later, I shall give the brotherhood the hours I shall be broadcasting from there.

I hope to render more of this kind of service as the days come and go. There is no wider field for advancement of the things of Brethrenism than in our smaller churches trying to group together with a sister church, calling an evangelist who understands the two groups and thus extending our gospel and enlarging as we can not without this added strength from our friends and the God who hates schism and division.

I am now at Ankenytown, Ohio, home of the Leedys, the Garbers, the Workmans, the Deals and others, who have much longer been Brethren than my forebears. The Lord is blessing us wonderfully. I still have some open dates beyond the holidays and desire to be kept busy in the Master's work. Write me at Ashland, Ohio.

CHARLES A. BAME.

SOME SUGGESTIONS FOR A USEFUL LIFE

by, remarked that 'My daughter made a mistake in running away and not telling me anything about it,' when the girl spoke up and said, 'Oh, mother, I didn't have very far to go to learn the trick. When you were a girl you ran away yourself and got married, and shortly after I was born you were divorced from my father, and now you have applied for a divorce from my stepfather, so you can't blame me. You set the example.'

Yes, we have hasty marriages, quick divorce, then alimony. In some of our large counties in this state the amount of alimony payments made by divorced husbands is so large that it is hardly believable, until some divorced women are commercializing on alimony orders. Should I be asked "What is your cure and remedy for the evils I mention?" my answer from my experience would be "Back to the sanctity of the home. Prepare for marriage, and reverence for marriage vows. Good example of parents for their children to follow, and not only a Christian training of children, but to train for the bringing of children into the world a generation before they are born."

I have ascended the hilltop of life and am fast going down the valley at the end of which my life work will end. I have willingly and cheerfully given the best years of my life—a third of a century. I gave my heart, my best thought and energy in safeguarding youth and in aiming to instill into their young minds a desire to live good, clean, useful lives, and fulfill the object of their creation. The first great end of life is to be saved for God and to enjoy the reward of a life well spent, and next, to leave the world better for having lived. When I am summoned to lay down the burden of this life what a consolation, what a pleasure to me in parting this life, if I can feel that it will be said of me that I was kind to the poor, the wayward and the unfortunate; that I was a friend to children, and earned their respect and confidence. For this I would rather have than all earthly fame. The friendship and friendly greetings of the children as they pass my doorway waving a friendly hand or uttering a word of cheer, then the old man would know, understand and remember that at his journey's end he is not forgotten.

"Friendship makes sunshine brighter Friendship makes burdens lighter."

TO PARENTS

From the bottom of my heart I urge parents to set a good example at all times. Remember that children are imitators. No matter who you are, some child may be patterning its life after yours, looking up to you as a model. Let me illustrate the thought I wish to leave with you. A father said to his small boy, "Jimmy, when you grow up I want you to be a gentleman." The little fellow answered "Daddy, when I get to be a man I don't want to be a gentleman. I want to be just like you."

If your children meet disaster and bring dark clouds on the sunshine of your home, you are the one to suffer, you are the one to blame. So then, bring up your sons and daughters with respect for God, religion, their neighbors and law, then in the building of our homes and nation there will be no blot or flaw. Always keep in mind that the home is the foundation of all that is good in this world. Anything that tends to lessen or disturb the sacredness and sanctity of the home is undermining and destroying the foundations of our religious life and our country's welfare.

Hoping to be remembered as the friend of children, the friend of the poor, the wayward and unfortunate,

Respectfully,
August, 1928 PATRICK PURCELL.

If it be my lot to crawl, I will crawl contentedly; if to fly, I will fly with alacrity but, as long as I can avoid it, I will never be unhappy.—Sydney Smith.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

WILLIAMSTOWN, OHIO

The fall communion service will be observed at Williamstown, Ohio, on Sunday evening, November 17th.

C. K. SANDY, Pastor.

SECOND CHURCH, JOHNSTOWN

The Second Brethren church of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, will hold its semi-annual communion on Sunday evening, November 24th at 7 o'clock. Brother James S. Cook of Martinsburg will be with us on the 20th and will preach on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday evenings at 8 o'clock. Then on Sunday morning at 9:30 we will have Bible school, followed by preaching by Brother Cook, who will conduct the communion in the evening.

D. G. HILDEBRAND.

THIRD CHURCH, JOHNSTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

'The Third Brethren church of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, will hold their Communion Service Sunday evening, November 24, at 7:30 o'clock. Every member of the church is strictly urged to be present. We invite others to share in this observance, who believe as we do. This service is the climax of one month of doctrinal preaching.

J. L. GINGRICH, Pastor.

FOR THE BRETHREN ANNUAL

The secretaries of the various district Conferences as well as the secretaries of the church auxiliaries respecting the General Conference notes are urged to forward their material, including the officiating of each, to the General Conference Secretary, J. L. Gingrich, 186 Spring Street, Johnstown, Pennsylvania. The new Annual will be sent to press as soon as all material is in. Then, too, all ministers who will have a changed address are to send to the secretary their corrected address before the material goes to press.

J. L. GINGRICH, Secretary.

Business Manager's Corner

AN OPPORTUNITY OF A LIFETIME

That is the way a great many advertisements begin that are intended to reach the "sucker list" of people who are looking for some "get rich quick" scheme whereby they may easily rid themselves of the savings of a lifetime. And it usually is an opportunity too, but it is an opportunity for the "fake" salesman to dispose of worthless property at the expense of the uninformed investor.

Our proposition will not impoverish any one nor will it increase one's material wealth in any marked degree, but it should be of great advantage to the spiritual attainments of all who take advantage of the opportunity. Souls must be fed as well as bodies, and soul food must be provided the members of every Christian family if its spiritual health is to be maintained.

The Law of Supply and Demand

This law may hold good in the material world, but we doubt if it is true of the spiritual world, for in the spiritual world the supply seems to be always in excess of the demand, and what we would like to do now is INCREASE THE DEMAND.

We have no "federal bureau" that can be depended upon to supply us with funds to enable us to carry over our "surplus stock" of spiritual food until the market takes a turn for the better, so we must draw upon our own resources and depend upon your co-operation to stabilize the market.

Your Part of the Problem

The regular price of The Brethren Evangelist is FOUR cents per copy, but we are now offering the paper to NEW subscribers for THIRTEEN weeks for Twenty-Five Cents which is less than TWO cents per copy.

This special number of the Evangelist will get into the homes of about FIVE THOUSAND families that are not now subscribers to the paper, and we are trying to reach this large group of "unpapered" Brethren people. Will you seize this chance? Put a QUARTER or twenty-five one cent stamps in an envelope and send it along. Then read the paper carefully and "prayerfully" for three months and see if by that time you will not want to become a "permanent" subscriber. Many a good sister goes to a beauty parlor and pays $7.50 or $10.00 for a "permanent" that will not last her as long as $2.00 invested in a subscription to the Brethren Evangelist.

I have no quarrel with the beauty parlors, nor with those who patronize them, but it does seem to me we should give as much attention to the things pertaining to our souls as we do to our bodies.

An Honor Roll Help

Pastors, this is your opportunity to get your church on the Honor Roll, if it is not already there. We will not publish the Honor Roll this week, but there have been a goodly number of churches to renew their Honor Roll lists since our last report, and some of these are now in their TWELFTH YEAR as Honor Roll churches. Don't you think that is worth while?

Our proposition to pastors at this time is to give credit to all these three month subscribers, if their subscriptions are renewed, for the three months and then make their subscription for the remainder of the year for $1.25, if the pastor secures enough to entitle his church to a place on the Honor Roll.

Another Proposition

The Publication Board has authorized us to reduce the number of subscriptions required to secure a place on the Honor Roll to FIFTY subscriptions where they are secured through individual canvass, but the fifty must be sent in at one time and the money must accompany the order to secure this special rate. There must be no book-keeping and no delayed collections on the part of the Publishing House. There are a goodly number of churches that should now be able to win a place on the Honor Roll.

Will you do it?

R. R. TEEYER, Business Manager.

How Funds are Provided

Through the generosity of missionary-spirited individuals, Bible classes, the National Christian Endeavor, the National Sunday School and National W. M. S. organizations, our National Home Mission work has been made possible.

Forward Movement Program

If the BRETHREN CHURCH expects to go forward and accomplish BIGGER things along missionary lines at home or abroad, WE MUST provide more funds to keep up and to extend the HOME BASE. Under the new plan with Rev. R. Paul Miller giving considerable time during the coming year, to arouse deeper interest in our Home work and to get together groups of Brethren people living in cities where no Brethren churches are located, we do hope to see our HOME BASE greatly strengthened. WILL WE DO OUR BEST?

Heart Throbs of Our Church Leaders

XXIX—"YOUTH—ARE WE FAIR TO IT?"

By Fred C. Vanator

Are we keeping faith with our young people? Few there are, indeed, but would answer "Yes," but some would reply with an emphatic "No." Some would even go so far as to say that we are narrow in our viewpoint—that we have forgotten we were young once ourselves. But is this true?

I heard a prominent young people's worker make an address a few weeks ago upon the subject "Boys." He said something that struck me as being the key note to the whole situation. He said, in effect, "Ours is a day of 'Don't,' when it should be one of 'Do.' 'Don't do this; don't do that,' until our children are becoming like the little lad, who, when asked his name, said, 'Charlie Don't.'"

True, the commandments say, "Thou shalt not." But Jesus said, "This Do and thou shalt live."

Looking at both sides of the question we may say, in the main, we are fair to our young people, in that we furnish them homes and education and advice (sometimes good and sometimes bad) and, in thus looking after them until they come to the age of "severance" when we think we have done our duty.

But, (and how much meaning that word takes when it acts as a transition), we likewise have been unfair to them. It is unfair to a building to put in "mud" when bricks should be laid. And, would it be fair to a structure to take out a keystone and fill the place thus vacated with putty? And yet that is what is being done with youth today in far too many cases. We say, "Thou shalt not," and then, when they obey and take the forbidden thing from their lives, we put in a "piece of putty," in that we leave a void.

Youth today does not need "preaching" half so much as it needs example. It does not need "nagging" as much as it needs leadership. Youth is a time of activity. It is thus that growth takes place. But it should be guided into sensible, loving, Christian activity. We dare not say, "You cannot do that," and when they ask what they can do, we answer, "Sit down and twiddle your thumbs." Youth is not built that way. I am pleading for a definite, active, Christian program for the youth of our church.

Brethren, let us seek to help our young people, not by less "don'ts" but by more "Do's," thus filling a place in their hearts as well as their minds.

Peru, Indiana.

THE Mote and the Beam

This country is experiencing a fresh wave of anti-trust agitation, aroused by the late exposures of lobbying on the part of great capitalistic combines. The Hearst newspapers, with scare-head editorials, are demanding legislation to prevent the expansion of the trust evil and its propaganda.

No thoughtful person can seriously question the need for such agitation, in view of the recent revelations at Washington. But the most dangerous trust is not the Power Trust, nor the Textile Trust. No combination can possibly be filled with such possibilities for evil as a chain of great newspapers whose policies are dictated and controlled by one man or one group of men. Newspapers are the most important channels of public information. Their absolute freedom and independence should be maintained if necessary by law. It should be made a criminal offense for any one man or group of men to own or control more than one news organ.

THE Prohibition Predicament

The most disillusioned men in America today are those optimists who supposed that prohibition would usher in the millennium. Things haven't turned out quite as they expected. The legal enactment of prohibition has done a great deal of good, but along with it has come the greatest wave of organized crime and racketeering this nation has ever experienced. The present era should be designated by historians as the period of organized crime. Those who seek to gloss over the facts are nothing but little boys whistling in the dark.

The bone of contention now is, What caused the present wave of crime which is organized around the popular demand for booze? The anti-prohibitionists claim it was caused by the enactment of the 18th Amendment. The prohibitionists retort that the cause is lack of enforcement. In my judgment, both miss the mark. The Apostle Paul offers a better solution. His seventh chapter of Romans sheds more light on the prohibition predicament than all the modern discussions put together.

In this chapter, the Apostle is dealing with somewhat the same general problem as we are facing today, namely, Why is a good law attended by evil results? Is it possible that the law is not really good, as the antis argue? Can a good law be the cause of evil? Paul's answer is that the law is not the cause, but rather the occasion of the evil. The following quotations will indicate his argument:

"Is the law sin? God forbid. . . . But sin, taking occasion by the commandment, wrought in me all manner of lust. . . . When the commandment came, sin revived. . . . And the Commandment, which was ordained to life, I found to be unto death. . . . Sin working death by that which is good. . . . For we know that the law is spiritual, but I am carnal" (7:7-14). Here are the main points in the argument:

1. The Law is good.
2. Man is carnal.

3. The application of a good law to a carnal man cannot change his nature.

4. On the contrary, the imposition of law actually arouses sin in a carnal nature.

5. The cause of sin lies in man's carnal nature which rebels against restrictions; the law which restricts is only the occasion, not the cause of sin.

The Apostle Paul could not have written a clearer statement of the prohibition predicament if he were living today.

Now what is the solution? The Apostle states it in the next chapter. "What the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and as an offering for sin, condemned sin in the flesh, that the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit" (8:3).

When we have learned that no law, no matter how good, can possibly change the carnal nature of fallen man, but that only the Atoning Sacrifice of the Incarnate Son of God can overcome the natural man's rebellion against law, then we shall continue to make progress in the matter of temperance. The present prohibition predicament is just one more instance of the ancient problem—"When the commandment came, sin revived." We have trusted too much in law. We have forgotten the Word of the Lord, "Ye must be born again."

Thanksgiving Proclamation

By President Hoover

"At this season of the year, when the harvest has been gathered in, the thoughts of our forefathers turned toward God with thanksgiving for the blessings of plenty and provision against the needs of winter.

"They came by custom to look to the Chief Magistrate to set apart a day of prayer and praise, whereon thanks as a united people might be given with one voice in unison.

"God has greatly blessed us as a nation in the year now drawing to a close. The earth has yielded an abundant harvest in most parts of our country.

"The fruits of industry have been of unexampled quantity and value. Both capital and labor have enjoyed an exceptional prosperity.

"Assurances of peace, at home and abroad, have been strengthened and enlarged. Progress has been made in provision against preventable disasters from flood and pestilence. Enlightenment has grown apace in new revelations of scientific truth and in diffusion of knowledge.

"Educational opportunities have steadily enlarged. Enduring advances have been gained in the protection of the public health. Childhood is measurably more secure. New experience and new knowledge in many fields have been reported from which a deeper wisdom may grow. We should accept these blessings with resolution to devote them to service of Almighty God.

"Now, therefore, I, Herbert Hoover, President of the United States of America, do appoint and set aside Thursday, the 28th day of November, as a day of national thanksgiving, and do recommend that all our people on that day rest from their daily work that they should extend to others less fortunately placed a share of their abundance, and that they gather at their accustomated places of worship, there to render up thanks to Almighty God for his many blessings upon them, for his forbearance and goodness."

KNOCKING AT THE GATES OF LIFE

Dr. Stanley Jones, on the eve of his departure from London for India, opened his address in Central Hall, Westminster, with this declaration:

"I think we are trembling on the eve of a spiritual awakening throughout the world. Somehow I sense it among classes that you would not think had any spiritual longings or yearnings. I was recently at Columbia University in a students' meeting, and the subject assigned to me was this: 'My Personal Religious Experience.' Now of all the places in the world where I would hesitate to strip my soul bare, that place would be mechanistic Columbia, but before I had gone very far I discovered that we were just folks, that mechanistic philosophy or psychology had not gone so deep that it uprooted those things that are elemental; for, before we are psychologists, we are people, and sometimes we survive the psychology and remain people.

"I had luncheon with the millionaires of Wall Street, and of all the hard-shelled people in the world who would be impervious to religious influences, they seemed to be the ones; but in a little while we forgot about being millionaires and missionary, and we were just folks wanting something. They were children knocking at the gates of life and wanting something—God, life.

"The students are supposed to be blase and hard-shelled. I found if you could get to it that there was a deep, underlying hunger in the student world. They were impatient of bunkum, of cant, of hypocrisy, and they loathed veneer, but I found those students looked you straight in the eye, and said: 'Is there anything real in it? If so, in Heaven's name, tell us!'

"I feel we are on the verge of one of the greatest spiritual awakenings, if we can meet it, that the world has seen in many a century. There is an upsurge of spiritual craving throughout the world."—The Christian Advocate, (New York).

Many an otherwise good meeting has been killed by a long winded prayer. Most prayers in the Bible are short, and to the point.

"Ye Thankful People"

It is a beautiful custom we have of gathering in our appointed places of worship for special thanksgiving to God as the autumn season is nearing its close. Nothing makes for attractiveness and beauty of life like the spirit of thankfulness and few things are more essential to our welfare, both physically and spiritually, than gratitude. This custom is a valuable precaution against forgetfulness and ingratitude. Well is it that our President reminds us of our duty along this line and calls us to our public assemblies by annual proclamation. And wise is the admonition that we often songfully express in these words:

"Come, ye thankful people, come,
Raise the song of harvest-home."

It is significant that the admonition in this couplet is to "ye thankful people", for the unthankful do not come, and would not if they were invited. There must first be present the spirit of thanksgiving before we can expect any gathering together for the expression of thanksgiving. There must first be eyes to see God's goodness before there will be any cooperation to sing his praise. Professor Agassiz once approached the instrument of the celebrated microscopist, but paused and said, "Tell me what I am to see." The microscopist, delighted, answered, "You are a man after my own heart. You recognize that there must be a prepared mind to enable the eye to see rightly." So, as we approach this Thanksgiving season we shall see what we have been accustomed to seeing, or what we have been prepared to see. And until we have gotten a vision of our utter dependence on God and have come to recognize the constancy of his loving care and provision, there will be little or no gratitude, much less uniting in public expressions of thanksgiving.

It is important, therefore, that we build into our lives the habit of seeing the goodness of God. There are good things crowding into our lives every day in uncountable number and variety, but we are not accustomed to looking back of the gifts to the Giver. We just accept them as a matter of course, without stopping to consider from whence they came. Though taught to pray, "Give us this day our daily bread," we receive the bread and consume it with seldom a thought that "Back of the loaf is the snowy flour,

And back of the flour the mill,
And back of the mill is the wheat, and the shower,
And the sun, and the Father's will."

We do not bear in mind, as did Saint James (1:17), that "Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights." We are forgetful of the goodness of God, notwithstanding the fact that we are warned that "When thou shalt have eaten and be full; then beware lest thou forget God" (Deut. 6:11, 12). The blessings of God are showered upon us with the fullness that the sun sheds its rays upon the earth, but we seem as unresponsive and barren as the Sahara. We are so short in memory of God's kindnesses, so dull in appreciation of his goodness and so slow to recognize his hand in the affairs of life. We are made to cry out with the Psalmist, "Oh, that men would praise the Lord for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men" (Psa. 107:8). Surely every visible benefit and blessing ought to be a suggestion to us of the Great Beneficent One, and every good gift a sign of the Giver of all good. And we ought to command ourselves with unrelenting purpose to "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits" (Psa. 103:2).

Having really sensed and truly recognized the goodness of God, we shall want to tell it to others; we shall want to bear witness to our gratitude in public assemblies. Praises shall pour forth from our thankful hearts as spontaneously and unrestrainedly as the waters flow from the never-failing spring in the hillside. So it was with the Psalmist, who said, "My tongue shall speak of thy righteousness and of thy praises all the day long," and with that spirit possessing all our hearts the churches will be thronged with worshipping people. There will be no reluctance or half-heartedness in our support of meetings set apart for public praise, for out of the depth of our gratitude we shall eagerly join with others in voicing our appreciation of the great goodness of our Lord and Savior. Such was the enthusiasm of David, who declared, "I will give thee thanks in the great congregation: I will praise thee among many people." Thus he could spread the news of his Lord over a greater portion of the earth. If every Christian were of that same mind, the places in the homeland and abroad now without the knowledge of the Gospel would soon be enlightened and the number of heathen lands now unoccupied by Christian missionaries would diminish rapidly.

When that thorough appreciation of the goodness of God is realized, it will show itself in the home, will be expressed in unquestioned sincerity and it will "forget not all his benefits." Surely the home is in need of a revival of a display of gratitude within its precincts, on the part of the members, both toward one another and toward God. There is, in the former attitude, so much of grumbling and fault-finding and taking things for granted and seldom an expression of thankfulness. And in our attitude toward God there is scarcely less of complaining and bitterness over disappointments and in many Christian homes no thanksgiving at all. Even in those homes where there is the custom of returning thanks at meals, the thanking of God for things so bountifully provided is not infrequently followed by a lamenting of the hard times and a grumbling about the things prepared to eat and to wear so that the children are made to question, as was the case in one home, whether God hears the expressions of gratitude or those of dissatisfaction. There is need of a more consistent show of thanksgiving in the home.

A keen consciousness of the loving care and daily provision of God in the midst of the varied and trying experiences of life imparts to one a sense of security and joy that is satisfying. And it makes a wonderful difference as to the spirit in which one faces the round of each day's duties, as the testimony of many would verify. Just one will illustrate. The other day a Christian woman told of starting the morning with a sad and heavy heart. She had no song, no praise, no thought of gladness. All work went with a drag and plans persisted in going contrary. Circumstances were distressing and nothing seemed worth living for. The outlook presented nothing but drab and gloominess. When suddenly, in response to an unvoiced prayer, and all unexpectedly—so quickly her own soul was unprepared for it—something happened which changed her entire outlook. Light broke in upon the gloom and her wretched, hopeless attitude gave place to one of calmness and assurance. It seemed as if an angel from heaven had brought light and a song into the tangle of her life, so marvelous was the effect. The spirit of joy and gratitude was awakened in her heart, and that changed everything. "The life was saved from despair. The clouds and shadows rolled away and the blue sky hung everywhere." She knew that God cared for his own and her soul was satisfied.

And finally a keen sense of God's constant care for our lives should move us to show our gratitude in service and sacrifice for him. It is a beautiful thing to give sincere expression to our appreciation, and we have acknowledged that all too often we are thoughtless and thanksgiving languishes on our lips. It is noble to set a consistent example of praise in our homes and to maintain an attitude of calmness toward life's daily grind, but if in all these we are genuine and true, the soul will seek not only to voice its thanksgiving and to express a grateful attitude, but will desire to actually do something about it. A real sense of indebted-edness tends to move the soul to deeds of service, and to self-denial and to sacrifice. It leads to a thanksgiving life, which is a life void of selfishness. Thanksgiving thus becomes thanksgiving and service is seen to be the best way of showing genuine gratitude. And the most acceptable thanksgiving is not the mere speaking the praises of God for the blessings he has bestowed upon our lives, but the sincere effort of the heart to give to others some blessings not directly bestowed by God because he wanted us to have the incomparable privilege of bestowing them in his name.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

---

Brother R. E. Gotschall recently closed a meeting at Glenford, Ohio, where he is pastor, with three accessions and others near the kingdom. The attendance was large and the interest good. The revival was closed on a Monday night with a well-attended communion.

Brother S. M. Whetstone, pastor of the church at Waterloo, Iowa, writes in a personal note to the editor: "Our work is opening up in real good shape here and I think we have reason to expect some good results before long. The attendance and interest increases with every service."

Brother Fred C. Vanator, pastor of the Peru, Indiana, church, has for some months been publishing a neat little church bulletin each week, and we imagine that the output is largely due to the knowledge he gained of the printer's trade while in school at Ashland.

Brother Horace Yoder favors us with a brief history of the effort to establish a Dunker congregation in the Rio Grande Valley in Texas, which effort has suffered a distinct loss in the death of Brother Stewart Lichty. This situation is typical of many a challenging opportunity offered by the great west.

One of the most important types of revival that the church needs is a revival of the teaching of Christian stewardship. Perhaps, "revival" is not the word we should use here. It suggests that once we did teach Christian stewardship and that it has fallen off. But we really never did give much attention to it. It is scriptural however, and we need to be awakened to the fact. We are not teaching the "Whole Gospel" without it.

Brother C. B. Sheldon, missionary on furlough from Africa, writes of his visit among the churches. He has been very busy telling the story of Africa's need and everywhere he found a warm reception and very generally found a live interest in missions. He was able to visit three different district conferences, and we can say for the Ohio conference, that his address was much enjoyed, as was also that of Mrs. Sheldon.

Religious leaders of New York City will participate in the celebration of the one hundred and twentieth anniversary of the New York Bible Society on December 4th, in the Holy Trinity Lutheran church. During its long life of service this Bible Society has circulated millions of copies of the Scriptures among immigrants, sailors and seamen, alien populations, the sick in hospitals, prisoners, and has supplied the Scriptures in raised type for the blind. It has also placed over one hundred thousand Bibles in New York hotels.

Have you ever claimed like Moses that you are halting of speech and unable to witness effectively for Christ, consider then that more effective way by which you can witness for your Lord —by a radiant Christian life. Dr. Chalmers says: "There is an energy of moral suasion in a good man's life passing the highest efforts of the orator's genius. The seen beauty of holiness speaks more eloquently of God and duty than the tongues of men and angels." You can make your life, by the grace of God, speak with such eloquence.

Dr. Charles A. Bame tells of his campaign at Ankenytown, Ohio, of two weeks' duration. Notwithstanding the handicaps of bad weather and rush work for the farmers, he had good attendance and interest, and the church membership was much stirred up and a number of conversions were received. These people have suffered in the recent past, as other country churches have suffered, but there are still a goodly number of Brethren people in the community, including a promising group of young people, and Brother Bame thinks the church has a very worthwhile possible future before it.

From Oak Hill, West Virginia, come reports from pastor and evangelist of a "victory revival" in which forty-two took a stand for Christ. Some of these were reconsecrations, we are told. It was Brother Ashman's first revival at Oak Hill and in cooperation with Brother Ankrum, but they all (pastor, evangelist and people) worked together in a fine way for the advancement of the Kingdom. These two hustling pastors made a splendid team in evangelism and it is not surprising that the Lord honored their efforts. Brother Ankrum is serving his seventh year as pastor of these people and the church has made fine progress along every line under his leadership.

Elder D. F. Eikenberry of Canton writes of the progress of the work being realized there under the leadership of Dr. J. C. Beal, who had just begun a revival meeting, the first service of which resulted in five making request for baptism. Three additions to the church had previously been registered, one by letter and two by baptism. Brother Beal's Tuesday evening Bible class continues to hold good interest, the average attendance being about fifty. A new pipe organ was recently dedicated, the gift of the late Sister Eliza Smith, who remembered the church of her love by giving it one-fourth of her estate. May God put into the hearts of more Brethren people to dispose of their substance at the last in ways that will honor him and promote his cause.

The request has come for the publication of a complete list of the special days of the church, and that request will be honored in next week's issue. But for the present, let us say that the next special day is "White Gift Offering Day." Every Sunday school is requested to take an offering at the Christmas season for the promotion of the work of the National Sunday School Association. This Association is cooperating in the promotion of some most important educational work in various lines. Some of its money is spent on our educational work being conducted in Kentucky, some goes to Ashland College, some to the promotion of Sunday school work in the brotherhood and—well, a complete budget is promised for a later issue. Also the Association is cooperating with the editor in planning for a special issue of the Evangelist that will tell the brotherhood of their work and needs.

Dr. Florence N. Gribble writes from Africa that her medical work is bringing her into touch with steadily enlarging numbers of African people, opportunity to preach the Gospel to whom is thereby secured. She also informs us that it has been made possible for the enrolling of little girls in the Yaloke school. This will mean much for the building up of Christian homes and the more extensive teaching of the Gospel in the years to come. These are not the days of rapid growth such as was realized a few years ago, but is the time of testing and trial, yet the belief is expressed that the days of great blessing are close upon them. At the time of the writing of the letter, Mr. and Mrs. Hathaway and Miss Bickel were expected soon to arrive on the field from their furlough, and Mr. and Mrs. Kennedy and Miss Emmert and Miss Tyson were to leave for the homeland on their furlough.

PRAYER REQUESTS FOR THIS WEEK—

Brother Freeman Ankrum of Oak Hill, West Virginia, writes: "We request intercession at the throne of grace by our friends of the work here, as the battle has never been easy and is not now."

Dr. Charles A. Bame says: "Pray for us at Hudson, Iowa," where he is now engaged in a revival. Brother Forest Byers is the pastor.

Brother H. W. Koontz writes: "R. Paul Miller begins an evangelistic campaign in Masontown, December 3. We would appreciate the prayers of the brotherhood in behalf of this meeting."

Pray that programs may be prepared and plans may be laid in our Sunday schools in such a way as to bring glory to the name of Christ during the approaching Christmas season.

Thanksgiving a Remembering

By R. F. Porte

Thanksgiving Day recalls to our minds some of our American history. The event in our history which was the beginning of our national Thanksgiving was one of remembering. It takes little imagination to picture with what reverence the people came together to thank God for a bountiful and sufficient harvest. The feeling of thankfulness was intensified by the remembering of the years of suffering and need. This leads us to ask ourselves whether failure and want do not have both an ethical and a spiritual value? The answer to my question may be suggested in the fact that severe distress is the time when mankind turns to prayer. It is quite common for people to become very independent and inconsiderate when there is continued prosperity. It may sound very harsh to say that there is any good in the sense of need, but what experience is there which contrasts life's experiences with such coloring! How beautiful are the rays of light on the morning of a clear day! The beauty of the rising sun is magnified by the receding darkness of the passing night. So a severe contrast in life will always increase the power of mankind to appreciate the bounties which we all receive and which we do not always recall to mind.

It may be truly said, I think, that our Thanksgiving will become more meaningful if we stop and recall to mind the gracious beneficence of our Heavenly Father. The thought is well suggested in Psalm 103 where the Psalmist says, "Bless Jehovah, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits." The music of that Hebrew poem rises like a growing symphony when the Psalmist recalls the guilty soul and exclaims, "Who forgiveth all thine iniquities." The Psalmist goes on to think of broken, suffering humanity and again says with divine hope, "Who healeth all thy diseases." Again the note of hope is struck for the slave, "Who redeemeth thy life from destruction." The Psalmist looks higher and then with glorious melody says, "Who crowneth thee with loving kindness and tender mercy." The chorus reaches its climax as the singer thinks of the needy of the earth, "Who satisfieth thy mouth with good things." What a treasure is Jehovah to the writer of Psalm 103! What a treasure Jehovah may be to us all if we will resolve to return to our Heavenly Father with appreciative remembrance of his great gifts!

In order to be unthankful one must need to be very short sighted and possess a poor memory. With all the trouble which may beset an unfortunate soul it would be far better to remember the good

Travelers in the polar regions keep up their spirits by remembering the good things of home and talking about them. A farmer one time offered his farm to an agent to be sold. The agent prepared a description to be printed in advertising and brought the description to the farmer for his approval. After reading a well written word picture of his farm and taking a moment for reflection the farmer said to the agent, "That is exactly the kind of a farm I have wanted all the time, I do not wish to sell my farm." It takes something different to make us see and appreciate the things we ought to appreciate. What interest would there be if all the world was one color? It is the sunlight on the storm cloud which makes the rainbow possible. Who knows but what the song of Fanny Crosby was not sweeter because of her affliction? The most of us can go to our churches on Thanksgiving Day and devoutly thank God for a healthy body and for the living hope in Christ Jesus our Lord, when we think of the multitudes so far less favorably situated than we. Let us lift up our eyes from our immediate sorrows and discontents and look away a bit and behold earth's beauty in heavenly splendor portrayed. God lives, the world is not all right; but God is right and the end of life is in God.

The element of remembrance which I am stressing in this short message is a step towards recognizing contrasts in life. What benefit can one possibly derive from the consciousness of only that which is dark and sad? How can one recognize the good without being moved by some high emotion? Who can look at a beautiful sight or witness a heroic act without a high emotion? Out of the sinful world have come forth lives touched by love divine and reflecting a heavenly splendor. Dr. Jowett once said that, "No one is going to have anything worth calling a harp in glory who has not first learned to harp music in his own soul." What value is the varied colored landscape to sightless eyes? The harmony of a sweet strain of music can mean little to deaf ears. How shall a soul so benumbed by the sordid things of earth rise in ecstasy in the presence of the heavenly? Happiness lies within and the joy without is but a reflection of the light giving power within. Life need not be colored by the things which surround us, we may possess the heavenly glory in our soul. The more darkness there is, where our lot may be cast, the more the heavenly light may glow with the splendor of the noonday sun. At this Thanksgiving season let us choose the best, contrast it with that which we call dark and disagree-

Freely Received-Freely Give

By C. F. Yoder, Rio Cuarto, Argentina

*Have we not received,
The life we live, the breath we breathe,
The sunshine from above,
The rain that falls, the winds that call
The fruits that grow for one and all,
The gifts of God's great love?*

*Have we not received,
Our precious homes, our friends so true,
And schools in which to learn,
The work we need, the books we read,
And kindnesses in word and deed,
New joys at every turn?*

*Have we not received,
Eternal life through faith in Christ,
The hope of heaven above,
The Holy Spirit, light divine,
That in our hearts doth ever shine,
And fills them with his love?*

*Shall we not freely give?
And first of all our grateful praise,
Our love and gratitude,
To him who guards us all our days
And helps us walk his righteous ways,
And crowns our lives with good?*

*Shall we not freely give,
Our hands to serve, our tongues to tell
The story of his grace,
Our eyes to see the work to do,
Our feet to bear the message true,
To every clime and race?*

*Shall we not freely give
The tithe of all we have received,
With offerings of love,
Our hearts, for they are his alone,
Our time, till he shall call his own
To reign with him above?*

able and then rejoice in the better prospect.

Thanksgiving cannot be artificially produced. The President may issue the Thanksgiving Proclamation but that is merely the reminder to those who are thankful to express their thankful devotion to Jehovah. An abnormal mind could not be thankful. Thankfulness is not produced by the mere possession of things. For centuries the Egyptians were ignorant of the source of the Nile river which brought them yearly great fertility and bountiful harvests but that did not stop the yearly overflow of the river. Back of Thanksgiving there must be the remembering of the Great Giver. There must be a sense of obligation. Why not thoughtfully ask ourselves what is worth-while without appreciation? The fruits of earth might as well be stone. We can see, I think, that unthankfulness is the result of not taking thought of our blessings. Assistance in time of great need or distress produces within us a sense of thankfulness. This feeling of thankfulness is determined by our realization of need. Thankfulness may be a mere courtesy in some cases and in other cases the expression of a sense of obligation. It is quite possible with little thought to realize our utter dependence upon God. Mankind actually owes everything to God. Our helplessness without Gods' provision for our needs is immense. It may be necessary for God to deal severely with us in order to awaken within us that happy sense of thankfulness. If God is interested in the moral growth of his people and we know that he is, then God is interested in having us know the things for which we should be grateful and on account of which we are indebted to him. The unthankful person must be one who is only conscious of a sameness of things. All things look alike. The passing year of 1929 is just another year. Thanksgiving Day is another holiday and suggests a great feast. Another view of the unthankful person is that he tries to get happiness out of the possession of things. The spirit that covets things and more things. What more could a person want than to know that he is being kept by a loving heavenly Father who graciously supplies the need of life? Thanksgiving comes to teach us that the soul must not be stifled under the mass of things. There is a material side to human life which demands material things but that which we are, the image of God in us reaches out for that which only God can supply. Thanksgiving is the placing of the life in the larger atmosphere where greater growth is possible.

Gratitude is the memory of the heart. How poor the mind that does not glow in the riches of other people's thoughts! How dark the heart that is not illumined by the blessing of God bestowed so freely! How poor indeed is he who lacks the spirit of thanksgiving! How can we receive a gift without appreciation? In prayer we yield to the pressure of our love. In thanksgiving we yield to the pressure of our sense of the value of blessings received. We are reminded of the ten lepers Jesus healed. One returned to bring a forgotten thanksgiving. The nine went away in the satisfaction of their healing. They possessed that which they had long hoped for and dreamed about. The thankful one returned with a sense of his debt. Dr. Robert E. Speer once said, "Thanksgiving opens a road between the human heart and God, over which God may more fully give himself to men." Thanksgiving has an out reach to those to whom we are indebted. There is need for that spontaneous out-reach of the heart after God who has given us so much. "Bless Jehovah O my soul, and forget not all his benefits."

Testing Our Work by the Output

By Wm. H. Beachler, D.D.

(Moderator's Address at the recent Ohio Conference at Ashland, and voted by that assembly to be published in the Evangelist)

In preparing this message, if so dignified a term is permissible, I was aware of two facts. First, that it has become a custom among us to have some such paper from the Moderator at each conference. It is just possible therefore that I was governed mainly by a sense of duty in the matter. And the second fact is that we have before us for our enjoyment and edification an unusually strong, comprehensive program—so comprehensive in fact that it seems to leave very little ground to be covered in a Moderator's message.

As I cast about for a subject there came to mind an expression very prevalent today, viz., "checking up." The process of "checking up," or testing, is in operation continually and on every hand today. I take it that this is due largely to the fact that we are living in a scientific age, when facts are faced, causes sought out, and results demanded. My subject is, "Testing Our Work by the Output."

We should never shun facts. We should never disregard the merit of checking up. We should never cease demanding of ourselves the most and the best, either individually or collectively. Jesus of Nazareth never feared facts. He held himself constantly under the most exacting and merciless testing. Hour by hour and day by day he checked up on himself. He unceasingly demanded the best and the most from himself. It is not strange therefore that he never, not once, had occasion to ask the Father for forgiveness. Neither is it strange that he could face with absolute absence of fear and with every degree of assurance the most bitter, relentless, discriminating, eagle-eyed critics man ever had with the challenge, "Which of you convicteth me of sin?"

No harm can come of checking up. Very often harm comes from failure to do it. And I am constrained to say that, when an individual, or a congregation, or a conference, through lack of courage or frankness, or because of unwarranted satisfiedness or complacency, or for any cause whatsoever, ignores testings or refuses to check up on himself or itself, it is just too bad, to say the very least.

There is a vital connection between true growth and progress on the one hand, and fearless testing and checking up on the other. We cannot overcome our weaknesses except as we seek them out and recognize them as such. We cannot turn failure into success until we are willing to face our failures as failures. We cannot correct our inefficiencies by merely coining alibis, excuses, and explanations. The sincere individual or organization demands nothing less of himself or itself than the maximum of output, plus the maximum of quality, and may I add, at the minimum of cost. To do this, we must face facts; study causes; demand results—in brief we must check up on our output—we must test our work by our output.

I am thinking of this conference in relation to our churches in Ohio. And I find myself of the strong persuasion that for the most part, the ideals and plans of this and similar conferences in the future must find fulfillment and realization in our local churches. I cannot think there will be serious inclination to dispute this.

What results therefore are we getting in our churches? When we test our work by the output what do we find? Are we getting the maximum of output, plus quality, at a minimum of cost? Are we satisfied with the results we are getting? Hardly a greater calamity could overtake us than just that—to be satisfied. Someone of note has proposed that if he were adding one more to the present list of beatitudes it would be, "Blessed are the dissatisfied for verily they shall improve." And he added, "The satisfied are dead already and should be buried." If there is soundness in this proposed beatitude, its merit, it seems to me, is as apparent for an organization or congregation as for an individual. Another has said, "Whoever is satisfied with what he does has reached his culmination point—he will progress no more. Man's destiny is to be not dissatisfied, but forever unsatisfied."

In this study I am passing by the thought of the years of history covered by Ohio Brethren churches—what we were at the beginning from the standpoint of number of churches and total numerical strength, and what through the years we have gained. But rather, I shall endeavor to hold this study to the thought of the output—the present output in our churches.

Our children and young people. In checking up on our work in the churches where we are to begin, if not with our children and young people? Children and young people represent at once the greatest asset of the church, and at the same time the most delicate, intricate task that faces the church. A church has not even begun to attempt a check up on itself until it takes into account what it is doing for, and what results it is getting with, its children and young people. The church of tomorrow will be very largely what the church of today does with, and for, and through its children and young people. No failure of the church can be as costly and tragic as the failure to demand of itself "output," in its work with the children and young people.

A man outstanding in his own denomination rather recently said this, "I am almost constantly dedicating churches, having dedicated more than forty new churches in the Detroit area since last General Conference. Without exception the congregations have been noted for the large numbers of children and young people. And again and again I have remarked that the future of the church is secure so long as it has increasing multitudes of young people."

Purely to stimulate thought I raise a series of questions. For instance, Are our Ohio Brethren churches seeing the full measure of their obligation and responsibility to their children and young people? Are our Ohio Brethren churches viewing their children and young people as their supreme opportunity? Are our Ohio Brethren churches demanding of themselves that they shall stand side by side and shoulder to shoulder with the most aggressive Protestant churches of Ohio in an endeavor to make Ohio a cleaner, more wholesome and safe state for our children and young people? Are our churches doing their utmost to make possible for our children and young people the very best religious instruction? Are we continually pleading for better homes and better parents for our children and young people? Are our Ohio churches giving to their children and young people due and proper recognition in the life and activities of their congregations? One time Jesus as a lad got lost from his parents and they found him in the temple. Many a lad since has been lost, ignored, forgotten, pushed aside, in the church. About the greatest thing a pastor can do for some church officials and church boards is to help them realize and discover that there really are such things as children and young people. How tragic that church boards should ever become so immersed in dry, dead matters of secondary importance that children and young people should become for them a negligible quantity!

The present generation of young people faces a world radically different from the world faced by any former generation of young people—speedy transportation, new forms of amusement, new temptations, new perils, new ways open to waywardness, changed ideals and standards. And because this is true, young people of today need every safeguard, every restraint, every caution, every encouragement the church can bring to bear. And the handwriting I see on the wall is just this, that the church today owes her young people a greater debt than the church of any former generation owed the young people of that generation. Nor can this debt be paid in censure and criticism. To refer to youth as "Hell Bent," and "Flaming Youth," gets no where. Our young people do not need more censure and criticism; they have an abundance of that. They need genuine sympathy, and kindness, and comradeship, and wise guidance, and sane, wholesome fathering and mothering. Our youth are in a world which is not of their making. They found it already made and waiting for them. Their dads, and mothers, and uncles, and aunts, and grand-dads made it for them. And the great shame of it all is, some of the gravest perils that beset their pathway have been placed there by men mad for gold.

It seems to me, as pertains to our children and youth, the moment demands of the church the exercise of her soundest and best sense. It is truly no time for foolishness. It has been wisely said, "We cannot prepare the path for the boy, but we can prepare the boy for the path in which he has to travel." Thus I take it that our task with the child and the youth is a task of preparation. If you please, preparing children and youth to live; to live nobly, safely, triumphantly today, tomorrow. To perform this task we must know the child, and the youth, and the world in which they live. We must then humbly and in the fear of God seek to arm these boys and girls and youth with strength of character; with moral anchorage; with a power to discriminate between what is right and what is wrong; with a love for God, and Christ, and the Bible, and the church, and the right, and a hatred of the wrong; with high regard for honor and honesty; and with reverence for things sacred. To send young people out from our churches thus prepared to stand, and live, and serve, and resist, and lift, is at once the greatest work our churches can do. What about the work of our churches at this point? In the light of the output, will our work stand the test?

(To be concluded)

The Challenge to Brethren People

By S. M. Whetstone, Member Home Mission Board

The Brethren Church has unlimited possibilities. No member of it need feel ashamed of belonging to one of the smaller denominations. Rather, may we do all within our power to give to the world, just at this time, the message for which Brethren people have lived, labored, and died. Your Home Mission Board brings to the Church a tremendous challenge, and not alone to the Church, but to each individual as well. The necessity for support of the work in the homeland is equally as important as that of the foreign field; in fact the foreign work can not be carried forward as it should, until the home work is strengthened. Permit me to offer a few concrete examples which stand before us as a challenge.

1. The Challenge of a Broader Vision. A task is necessary, but a vision is essential. No life, or enterprise, is ever successful without a vision. The Brethren Church of tomorrow will match our vision of today only if backed by hard work and great faith. We have not realized the possibility before us; the great neglected fields which send up the cry every year. We have been too self-centered and too easily satisfied.

2. The Challenge of a Larger Faith. We must believe in the message of the Brethren Church. We must believe that God has a place for us. We must believe he will help us reach that place. We must believe in ourselves and in our cause. The Word of God tells us if we believe we have the thing we ask for, we have it. The Church has not fully realized the value of its mission points. Too long we have thought of them as liabilities, when they are assets. Giving is not so much a duty, as a privilege. The Church of the future that neglects its missionary work will die. Your Church, my Church, can have what it needs if it has faith to match its needs and works for it.

3. The Challenge of Teaching and Preaching the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Do not misunderstand me just here. We do have the teaching and preaching of the Gospel in large measure, but perhaps in some cases not to the extent we should have. We preach so much ABOUT Christ and we do not preach CHRIST enough. Our Christianity is not a book, nor a principle—it is a Person, the Divine Son of God. The blood of Christ cleanseth from all sin. Vital lessons hold; others do not. We are responsible for results to the limit of our ability.

4. The Challenge of the Coming Generations. We appeal to you for the sake of others. We are to plant, another waters and another reaps. Is that not true of most of our churches today? Another planted and now we reap. Perhaps our own children will move to one of these neglected fields before long. Someone has given us these words which suggest the message I want to leave just now:

A traveler on a lone highway

Came at evening, cold and gray,

To a chasm dark and deep and wide,

And he crossed over in the twilight dim,

For the rushing stream held no fears for him;

And he turned when he reached the other side

And builded a bridge to span the tide.

"Old man," said a fellow pilgrim, standing near,

"You are wasting your time building here;

Your journey ends with the ending day,

And never again will you pass this way;

You have crossed the chasm deep and wide.

Why build a bridge in the even tide?"

The builder raised his good gray head,

"Young man, on the way I have come," he said,

"There followeth after me today

A youth whose feet must come this way.

This stream that naught has meant to me

To that fair-headed boy may a pitfall be,

He, too, must cross in the twilight dim.

Young man, I'm building this bridge for him."

WHAT SORT OF EDUCATION?

Is the contemporary faith in the efficacy of education justified? It is a religion with many, a reputed cure-all for the ills of mankind. Aldous Huxley, the novelist, is one of those who jeers at such credulity. It was the view of Helvetius that you can educate any shepherd-boy into a Newton, an Alexander, a Raphael—what you will. But Huxley declares: "We have had universal education for about 50 years; the supply of Newtons, however, has not perceptibly increased. Everybody, it is true, can now read—with the result that newspapers of an unbelievable stupidity and baseness have circulations of millions. Everybody can read—so it pays rich men to print lies wholesale. Everybody can read—so men make fortunes by inventing specious reasons why people should buy things they don't really want. Everybody can read—so the old traditions have died, the local peculiarities which gave a savor to life are being ironed out, and every peasant is as shallow, as half-baked, as vulgar as the journalists who stir together the hogwash in their daily paper."

Exaggerated as this estimate may be, it also contains enough truth to leave a sting. What is here said serves to remind us how partial and half-baked much of our so-called education is. An older and wiser Huxley revealed to us the peril of training the intellect without at the same time reinforcing the feelings and the will. Without the development of the moral sanctions, our schools will only produce clever rascals, whose very cleverness will make them more of a peril to other men. Is anything more dangerous than education without character?—Reformed Church Messenger.

UNION IS ONE THING BUT HARMONY IS SOMETHING ELSE

The Disciples, like Baptists, and the rest of their spiritual kin, inherit union from their fathers, but they find harmony a contemporaneous problem. At the Seattle Convention in August, a commission on harmony which had been appointed in the annual meeting in 1928, presented a report recommending a broad platform of freedom and cooperation, with conciliatory attitudes among divergent groups, a general pension plan, an international convention to serve as a clearing-house of communication and fellowship for all groups, and next year a great pentecostal convention in Washington.

Edwin R. Errett, speaking to the report, presented the view of the group represented by him in the following words: "We may as well face the fact now as later that unity and harmony are altogether too spiritual and intangible to be founded upon anything so human and fallible as adjustments of organizations. It is the distinctive characteristic of our movement that, renouncing all effort to obtain unity upon man-made declarations and arrangements, we propose unity upon a spiritual basis, and that a divinely created one. That principle having been bred into our people, we cannot hope to attain unity, and should not attempt to attain it, upon the basis of human creations."

With reference to the reality of spiritual unity, his view seems to be sound and generally accepted. But harmony is largely a matter of adjustment, of consideration for others, of willingness to cooperate, sometimes of ordinary good manners. Unity is God-made; harmony is man-made, and it often taxes human ingenuity.—The Baptist.

A GERMAN SCIENTIST SPEAKS ACROSS 6,589 MILES

Speaking from his home in Berlin in both German and English, Dr. Albert Einstein, whose audience is usually limited to scientists expert enough to understand his words, was heard at the celebration of "Light's Golden Jubilee." Millions of listeners heard him as well as those assembled at Dearborn, Michigan. His words along with those of President Hoover, Henry Ford, and Mr. Edison, who was the personal center of the demonstration, were doubtless heard in every nook and corner of the civilized world. The wonder of it all outruns the reach of imagination. Dr. Einstein's voice had to travel 6,589 miles, which his words did in less than one-fourth of a second, engineers say.

The round-the-world flight of Dr. Einstein's syllables was accomplished by devious routes. Land wires connected his Berlin telephone with the French shore of the English Channel, where the cables dived undersea toward London and Rugby, England, where the American Telephone and Telegraph transmitter is located.

From this point the message took to the air across the Atlantic to Netcong, N. J., and from there by land wire again to the National Broadcasting Building, New York. From the studios his words were spread fanwise to individual radio stations throughout the United States, and to short-wave transmitters of the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company, at Pittsburgh, and the General Electric Company, Schenectady, for further leaps through unestimated spaces.—The Christian-Evangelist.

PRICELESS NATIONAL POSSESSIONS

Our scientists and inventors are amongst our most priceless national possessions. There is no sum that the world could not afford to pay these men who have that originality of mind, that devotion and industry to carry scientific thought forward in steps and strides until it spreads to the comfort of every home; not by all the profits of all the banks in the world can we measure the contribution which these men make to our progress. And they are the least interested in the monetary results. Their satisfactions are in their accomplishment—in the contribution of some atom of knowledge which will become part of the great mechanism of progress. Their discoveries are not the material for headlines. Their names are usually known but to a few.

* * * * *

And scientific research means more than its practical results in increased living comfort. The future of our nation is not merely a question of the development of our industries, or reducing the cost of living, of multiplying our harvests, or of larger leisure. We must constantly strengthen the fiber of national life by the inculcation of that veracity of thought which springs from the search for truth. From its pursuit we shall discover the unfolding of beauty, we shall stimulate the aspiration for knowledge, we shall even widen human understanding.

* * * * *

Our civilization is much like a garden. It is to be appreciated by the quality of its blooms. In degree as we fertilize its soil with liberty, as we maintain diligence in cultivation and guardianship against destructive forces, do we then produce those blossoms, the fragrance of whose lives stimulate renewed endeavor, give to us the courage to renewed effort and confidence of the future. —President Hoover, at The Jubilee of Light.

WISDOM AND STRENGTH OF GOD

Today, as in the days of Paul at Corinth, "We preach Christ crucified, unto the Jews a stumbling block, and unto the Greeks foolishness, but unto them that are called, both Jews and Greeks, Christ the Power of God and the Wisdom of God. Because the foolishness of God is wiser than men; and the weakness of God is stronger than men!"

Daily Readings and Suggestions

(Keep with your Bible)

MONDAY

John 11:11-16. Love—In verse 5 we read that Jesus loved Lazarus; in this passage we find, in part, the proof of it. The hatred of the Jews in Lazarus' neighborhood was so great that his disciples considered it certain death for Jesus to go there, yet he did not hesitate. Nor did he hesitate to prove his love for us all in coming into this world of sin, even though he knew that a shameful death awaited him here. Let us, like Thomas, determine to follow him, even though we die with him!

TUESDAY

John 11:17-27. Faith.—Martha here illustrates the faith and peace that may belong to every believer in spite of all circumstances. At this time of sorrow and loss, she found the presence of Jesus so sweet that she arose and went to him; her faith seemed unshaken, and she listened eagerly to the precious promises of Jesus. Let us pray that all those who today are sorrowing over the loss of loved ones, may find in him and in his precious promises that hope, and faith, and consolation, which they so sorely need.

WEDNESDAY

John 11:28-37. Unbelief.—It was Mary, remember, who had sat at Jesus' feet while Martha was busy with the dinner; yet it was Mary's faith that seemed so sadly shaken; she even reproached Jesus. She was like many in our day, who grow bitter and rebel when death touches the one they love. Let us pray that the faith of all such may be strengthened, even as Mary's was, since it is as certain that their loved ones shall live again as it is certain that Lazarus arose. And when they DO rise, it shall be to die no more!

THURSDAY

John 11:38-46. "Though one rose from the dead!"—Mary, and even Martha, seemed to feel that Jesus could have saved their brother from death, but could not raise him from the dead—as though there were a limit to his power! The writer feels that it was largely this unbelief on the part of those who knew him best that caused Jesus to groan within himself. In verse 46 we find a vivid illustration of Jesus' words, that some would not believe though one rose from the dead. The resurrection has been called the best attested fact in human history, yet there are many who do not believe. God hasten the day when the knowledge of the Lord shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea!

FRIDAY

John 11:47-54. Not for that nation only!—Little did Caiaphas realize the full import of his words! It is well to remember that even an unbeliever may give voice to God's message. And let us not make the mistake of thinking that it was for OUR nation only: it was for all the children of God! Father, help us to realize that though others reject thee, thou wilt ever continue with thy disciples; and may our hearts ever be open to thy message!

SATURDAY

John 11:55-57. Seeking.—We find the Jews here seeking for Jesus—some for one reason, some for other reasons. There were also those who were determined to take him, and keep the people from following him. Today there are those who would know him, and there are many hindering circumstances. Let us pray for all such, that they may know him, and that nothing may separate them from the love of God.

SUNDAY

John 12:1-8. Love and Service.—Mary's loving act of service and honor has been told throughout the world. If only the church were as anxious to serve and do him honor today! And why shouldn't we all be? We have been saved from death, and we know that even our bodies shall be saved from the grave as truly as Lazarus was raised up. Cleanse our hearts today, O Father, from any such unworthy thoughts as those of Judas, and may we be anxious only to serve and honor thee. Amen!—T. C. L.

Should We Give the Gospel to Children?

Or Must they Wait until they are Grown up to Accept Christ as Savior?
The Boy Who Couldn't Spell

By a California Reader

Some years ago in California, while doing personal work in an Old Soldiers' Home and working in a mission near by, I had need of clothing and other necessary things. In former years I had had every comfort and plenty of luxuries. But it had pleased the Lord to bring me into the school of faith, and I was at that time trusting him for my daily bread. So, kneeling in my room, I asked my heavenly Father for a suitable hat, and dress, and shoes, and such other things as I thought I had need of in the place of humble service to which he had called me in a wonderful way. I had abundance of fine clothes from my former life of plenty, but nothing that was suitable to wear among the poor with whom I was working. That very evening there was a call for me on the phone. A lady, who was a stranger to me, was calling from a nearby city. She asked me if I could stay with her children while she went East with her sick husband. A mutual friend, she said, had suggested me to her.

"No," I replied, "I cannot come now. I am busy here, I cannot leave."

"Do come," she pleaded, "I do so need you. May I come to see you in the morning?"

"Yes," I answered, "I shall be glad to see you, if you wish to come."

Next morning, during the Bible study hour, she came in. She was a charming young woman, a lovely personality, who soon coaxed the old soldiers to persuade me to go with her. "Yes, you go, Sister K—." She needs you and you need rest."

"If you will give the children to me while you are gone to do with just as I would with my own, I will go," I said.

"Oh, that is just what I want," she exclaimed. "You can be a missionary to them. They are little heathen. If you like to do missionary work my home is the place for you."

I went that afternoon, arriving just before the parents left for the East. The only request the mother made was, "Please teach Arthur his spelling lessons. His grades are so poor. Have Mary practice her piano lessons." With a good-bye and a wave of the hand they were off, and I was left with a sacred charge, two precious souls to win for the Lord Jesus.

It was a beautiful home with every comfort. There was trained help to care for it, and you may be sure it was a rest to a poor little missionary, who had once been accustomed to such a life but had just now come from living in a tiny little room, with about six dollars a month for expenses.

At the evening meal the children, Arthur eleven years old and Mary thirteen, were surprised to see me bow my head and ask God to bless them and the food he had provided. It was a new experience for them in their home. At night I would go with Arthur to his room, kneel down with him, teach him to pray, tuck him in his little bed, and, with a good night kiss and a "God bless you," I would leave him, praying that the dear Lord would help me win these young hearts for him during the five or six weeks I should be in their home.

How happy we were together. There was no friction. Courteous, lovely children they were. As the days went by my heart was made glad, for I could see that the Lord Jesus was working in their hearts, especially dear little Arthur's.

He was truly a poor speller. He would bring home a long list of words and nearly every one would be misspelled. He was much ashamed, but seemed unable to do better. One morning I said, "Arthur, Jesus does not want you to spell poorly. He wants you to be a bright, fine student, and be your best for God. Do you not want to ask him to help you with your spelling?"

He said, "Yes," and we knelt and Arthur asked the Lord to help him to be bright and to teach him to spell, for he wanted to be his best for the Lord Jesus. Following that prayer, for five weeks, Arthur did not miss five words. He would bring home his work many times without one word misspelled.

That answer to prayer had a wonderful effect on Mary. Once she said, "I know God answers prayer for he heard Arthur's prayer. He never could spell before he asked God to help him."

Arthur's own heart was encouraged and his faith grew. We had many precious talks about God's Book and his promises. After Arthur's heart had been opened to receive the Lord Jesus as his Savior and Friend, how I coveted Mary for the Lord! She was so fine in character.

There was a big old barn of a church where the Shekinah glory seemed to overshadow the place. I loved to go there and on one occasion took the children. It was very different from the formal service of the high Episcopal church. They wondered at it all and did not get away from the influence of it.

On Sunday evening Arthur brought out an engine which ran with alcohol. Mary said, "Mama told you not to play with that engine while she was away."

There was only a small quantity of alcohol in it and he had been so good, so I said, "I will be here and when the alcohol is burned you will put it away, won't you, Arthur?" Without my knowing it he had put more alcohol in the engine and went out on the porch to run it.

In a few moments there was a scream from Mary. "The house is on fire! The house is on fire!" I gathered up a rug and threw it on the blaze putting it out at once, but oh, what a fright we had!

That night I said, "Mary, God has been very good to spare dear little Arthur and the home. It might have been so much worse. Don't you think we should thank him for his care?" For the first time she melted, and kneeling we thanked our heavenly Father for his loving care and protection. That was the little wedge to Mary's heart. From then on I could see that the Spirit was working with her.

Finally a letter came saying that mama and papa would soon be home. Arthur cried, and Mary said, "Why, Arthur, why are you crying? Aren't you glad they are coming home?"

"Oh, yes, but it means Mrs. K— will leave us." How good of my heavenly Father to give me the love of those precious children!

The last Sunday I was to be there, I said to Mary, "I will go with you to church today."

"No," she replied, "I will go with you." So we went together again to the place where God was pleased to manifest himself in saving and sanctifying power. Mary sat in front of me and I noticed how she was melting under his presence and power. When the altar call was given she said that if I would go with her she would go forward and, praise God, she, too, was saved that day.

Arthur had been writing his mother how he loved the Lord Jesus and how the Lord was helping him to spell. When mother arrived I told her more, but she laughed cheerily and said "Oh, they will, over that, Mrs. K—." She little realized her own need of the same Savior her children had found. Fully believing that he who had begun a good work would perform it until the day of Jesus Christ, I left those dear children in his care.

The cook in that lovely home was a Christian woman and had long been praying that God would somehow send salvation into the family, and we rejoiced together that I was sent in answer to her prayers.

Moreover, the fifty dollars I received for caring for the children more than provided every article I had asked of the Lord just before I was asked to take the position in the home. "Before they call I will answer, and while they are yet speaking I will hear."

Editor's Select Notes on the Sunday School Lesson

(Lesson for December 1)

The Christian Home in a Modern World

Scripture Lesson—Matt. 19:3-9; Luke 2:40-52; 24:28-32; Eph. 6:1-9; 2 Tim. 1:3-5; 3:14, 15.

Printed Text—Luke 2:40-52.

Devotional Reading—Psalm 78:1-8.

Golden Text—Honor thy father and mother.—Eph. 6:8.

Introductory Note

The home is the oldest institution of our social life, and it is also about the most fundamental and vital. It is important from the standpoint of the state, society and the church. Nothing has so much to do with the life and progress of Christianity as the home and no Christian institution is so important in moulding the character of children and youth and in giving inspiration to service as the Christian home. Not all other educational forces combined are so important as the true Christian home and family, where the child "is at school already with two great teachers, Nature and Love." All the instruction and training he may get elsewhere and in after years will not have so far-reaching an influence on his life as his home.

"Some Major Problems of the Home"

Changing economic and social conditions and spiritual decline are creating grave problems for the home. Among these are: parental neglect of children, the strenuous life, use of leisure time, both parents working, divorce, commercial amusements, freedom of women and youth, lack of religious influences.

A seven-year-old boy in a juvenile court said he would go straight if only his father would take time to fix a wheel on his wagon so he could have something to play with. He attended Sunday school regularly, but also went to a movie immediately afterward each Sunday.

By an unknown author is the following entitled "Lost—A Boy":

"Not kidnaped by bandits and hidden in a cave to weep and starve and raise a nation to frenzied searching.

"The fact is, his father lost him. Being too busy to sit with him at the fireside and answer his trivial questions during the years when fathers are the only great heroes of the boys, he let go his hold upon him.

"Yes, his mother lost him. Being much engrossed in her teas, dinners, and club projects, she let the maid hear the boy say prayers, and thus her grip slipped and he was lost to the home.

"Yes, the church lost him. Being much tied with sermons for the wise and elderly who pay the bills, and having much care for dignity, the minister and elders were unmindful of the human feelings of the boy in the pew and made no provision in sermon or song or manly sport for his boyishness, and so the church and many sad-hearted parents are now looking earnestly for the lost boy."—C. D. Smith in Church School Journal.

Christian Home Training

"Christian home training calls for training the children in the habit of private prayer. Mother prays for herself before she closes her eyes in slumber, and as she prays for herself, so she teaches her children one by one to clasp their little hands, and bend the knee and recite some simple evening prayer. Years may come and go, but the remembrance of that sacred moment when we knelt at mother's knee and spoke softly to the great God in heaven can never fade away.

"The Christian home will be sanctified by the voice of family worship. It will suffice for the family to meet for a simple service at some convenient time. A portion of the Bible may be read, a hymn sung if desired, and the father, or some one for him, should lead in prayer. When time presses in many homes it is the custom to conduct the simple service when the family assemble for the morning meal. Such worship makes a good beginning for the day, and draws the entire household into touch with what is holy and eternal."

"The table blessing should never be omitted in a Christian home. It may be only a sentence, or the silent blessing of the Friends may be used, but this simple acknowledgment of the goodness of God is certainly the least that can be made in any family that calls itself Christian."

The Home Problem

Charles E. Jefferson, in "Quiet Talks with the Family," says: "The so-called home problem is, at its root, a religious problem, and it is only spiritual forces which can solve it." He lists the perils of the home as: (1) Economic forces: city growth, modern industry, tenements, apartments, women in industry, plutocracy, social whirl, expense of marriage, childless homes; (2) literary free love, which scoffs at marital fidelity; (3) the unchristian heart, the chief foe of the home.

E. A. Ross, in "Principles of Sociology," says: "More serious (than economic changes) are the spiritual changes which attack the family from the inside and work against its success and stability." Among these changes he lists: (1) the decay of religious belief. "Fraternal religion is stronger than ever among us, but fewer people are willing to bear conjugal unhappiness because they believe it to be God's will. For myriads the religious sanction to marriage has crumbled away, leaving it a galling yoke if they are not well-mated." (2) Individualism works havoc in the family, implying absolute freedom of matrimonial choice, mating in obedience to romantic love, marriage the open door to "wedded bliss," rights uppermost in the mind rather than duties, and slight appreciation of the significance of the family for racial and social welfare. (3) Feminism and contending ideals of marriage.

The Ideal Family

The ideal family consists of three divisions bound together by the closest of ties—the Husband; the Wife; the children. No family is at its best without children. If there are none let the parents adopt orphan children and train them as their own, in order that they may gain the best blessings and development and culture the family can gain from the training of children.

The home should be the center and source of every good influence, a lamp which can shed its light to those who are nearest, but also reaches around the world. It does great good to the children, broadens them even in their early years to know that they can help and reach those in need even in the distant parts of the world.

There are other things that can best be done by the united family. Family prayers together daily with the children, especially when young. When they are grown up it is not so easy. Going to church together. Each child contributing as well as the parents. Studying the Sunday school lessons together, and all joining in its teaching and services. And many other things as well.

Note that the bringing up of a family is no easy task, especially in this modern world. The trying to do it is a training in God's school of life.

The third chapter of Proverbs, verses 1-6, 13-17, is an excellent picture of what a model husband should be. Eph. 5:25, 28 is another picture of him. He must be a true gentleman, as courteous to his wife and children as to strangers. He must be an example that his children can look up to, that they can admire as the freshman does the senior athlete, who can often do more for the new-comers than even the college authorities.

The picture of the ideal woman and wife is presented in Proverbs 31 has many points that belong to our day as truly as to 25 centuries ago. Note verses 10, 12, 20, 23, 26, 27, 28-31.

A church made up of the members of such an ideal family would be such a power in the world about it as no one could resist—if it also did its part.—Illustrated Quarterly.

STRONGER THAN DEATH

I knew them well when they were small
For we were schoolmates three.
She was the loveliest girl of all,
And he was handsome and lithe and tall
And their lives were glad and free.

Together they went to the Sunday school
And they learned to love the Lord;
And the people said, What a happy pair,
With beauty and talents and friends to spare

And all that wealth can afford.

As lovers next I knew the two,

For their childhood love remained.
And she was tender and pure and true,
But college friends his virtue slew,
And his life with sin was stained.

Ten years passed by as she waited still
And prayed for him to reform.
But though he struggled he failed until
He was naught but a wreck in body and will,

Like a ship on the rocks in a storm.

Ten more sad years and he was gone,
Was gone to a penitent's grave.
But she with a martyred heart loved on,
Loved on in the light of the rosy dawn
Of the life she could not save.

I like to think that the great beyond
Has hope for even such as he.
I like to think that a heart so fond,
Has found in Christ an eternal bond
That is worthy of such as she.

Cambria County C. E. Union

The Cambria County Brethren Christian Endeavor Union held its 9th quarterly mass meeting in the Conemaugh Brethren church, Thursday evening, November 7, 1929.

The program was conducted along the line of a "Model" or pattern meeting, having as its aim the setting of an example for individual society meetings. Every society of the Union had a representative on the program. This is the first time such a plan has been followed and it proved very successful, revealing much latent talent among the members. The topic discussed was, "What Happens When Young People Dare to Follow Christ?"

The third annual election of union officers resulted in the following choices: President, Floyd Benshoff; First Vice-President, Carl Uphouse; Second Vice-President, Ora Mackall; Secretary, Ruby Horner; Treasurer, Mary Brant; Junior Superintendent, Mrs. John Fitt; Intermediate Superintendent, Kenneth Ashman; Social Committee Chairman, Melvin Wertz; Lookout Committee Chairman, Arvilla Miller.

Nearly 100 C. E. members and friends were present at the rally, the First Brethren society gaining the felt banner award with a computed average of 71%. This is certainly not a banner attendance for this organization but in view of the fact that two of our churches are without pastors, it is considered fair.

The excellent spirit shown at this meeting bids well for the future of Brethren Christian Endeavor work in Cambria County.

The next meeting of the union will be held in February at the Third church, Morrellville.

Kingdom News from Africa

Yaloke, Aug. 14th, 1929.

Dear Evangelist Readers:

We are grateful for God's goodness to us during the time which has elapsed since our last writing.

Especially are we grateful to the Lord for his goodness through the medical work. About 2,500 or 3,000 treatments are now given monthly to our patients at the dispensary. In this way prisoners and others who have no opportunity to attend the church services are brought daily under the sound of the Gospel. Many of these have been saved. A wide-spread epidemic of mumps has brought many to the dispensary as well.

We cannot sufficiently praise God that he has at last made possible the admission of little girls to the Yaloke school. Some of them are already learning to read. Should our Lord tarry they will one day be capable Bible women, wives of evangelists, and mothers in Christian homes, teaching their little ones, as Lois taught her grandson, and Eunice her son. There is a wonderful object lesson in what is known as the second-generation Christians in Africa.

Mr. Bouquet and Mr. Lienard have recently visited Yaloke Poste, making only a brief military halt as the war still continues, in not far distant places. We continue to pray and wait upon God for restoration to normal conditions in French Equatorial Africa.

Church services are daily held, both morning and evening. Classes for school children and evangelists still continue to be a source of blessing and life as the Word is unfolded to those who attend.

There are busy days at Yaloke. Mr. and Mrs. Foster expect to leave for Bellevue August 26th. Mr. and Mrs. Kennedy will meet Mr. and Mrs. Hathaway here early in August. We will also gladly welcome Miss Bickel who will accompany the Hathaways. We do not know whether Miss Ethel Myers and Miss Byron are in the party or not. Miss Emmert and Miss Tyson with Mr. and Mrs. Kennedy will be leaving for furlough shortly after the arrival of Mr. and Mrs. Hathaway and Miss Bickel. We will then be only nine on the stations (until or unless Miss Byron and Miss Myers arrive). Miss Estella Myers expects to make us a visit at the time of arrival of Mr. and Mrs. Kennedy.

We do not forget to pray for Mr. and Mrs. Taber in France. We shall welcome the day when he shall come forth as a fully qualified physician.

Some Hausa traders have moved into a village near here. They are Mohammedans but we rejoice that they come daily to the Mission for teaching. We are handicapped as to language, but we are able to read the Word to them in Hausa and one of them can read Hansa and Arabic. It is a day of small things at Yaloke Station now, but a day when faith must shine brighter than even did it in the days of our spiritual prosperity. Days of great blessing are close upon us. Perhaps never or seldom has a work been so blessed as ours. Never has one been more tested. Our future as a station and as a mission is as bright as the promises of God.

Our evangelists, greatly tried and tested, are yet to come forth as pure gold. Three especially have remained unshaken by all the enemy's tactics and our faith is undaunted for those who have in any degree been disturbed. They need your prayers that none of them may turn to the weak and beggarly elements of the world.

August is our month of heaviest rains. They are indeed sudden, these storms which come up and we are thankful for the safe shelter and protection of our home. We pray God's journeying mercies for many of our missionaries who in the latter part of August and in September will be traveling.

How thankful we have been for the safe shelter and protection of our God in the fierce storms of testing and trial which have passed over us during the year past. And now we have reason to believe that they will soon be fully past. We pray God's journeying mercies as with renewed vigor we shall arise and step forth to fare undaunted the dangers both seen and unseen that may beset our path, trusting still in his protection. Faithfully yours,

FLORENCE N. GRIBBLE.

Among the Churches

After having made Ashland, Ohio, our headquarters we started doing some deputation work among the churches of the brotherhood. Having been gone from the homeland for some seven years, we, of course, find a great many changes, a great many new pastors are in charge of the churches. We were glad to find so many young men in the pulpits, taking up the work laid down by others. We have reason to be proud that we have so many consecrated and faithful young men taking up the work of the ministry; as these are days when people are lamenting the fact that there are so few young men taking up the work of the ministry; but such is not the case in our denomination.

We went first to Milledgeville and found the church in a growing state being ably led by Brother Cone. The people were very much interested in missions. At Lanark we found the church rejoicing over the fact that they had found such an able pastor as Brother Grisso and the people are right behind him. We are looking for that church to do even greater things for God than in the past.

The Iliokota District Conference at Lanark was surely a great success and we believe everyone who attended received a great blessing. Everyone went away from the conference with a greater determination to live true to him and be what he wants them to be. After the conference we were glad for the opportunity of going to Cerro Gordo, where we found the church suffering because they had had no pastor for over a year. We found many faithful ones who were trying to hold things together and keep the Sunday school running. We had a blessed time while there and rejoiced greatly when we learned that Brother Lewis was coming to be their pastor. As Brother Lewis goes there we pray God's richest blessing to rest upon him as there are many problems to be met and solved and he needs your prayers also.

We then attended the Indiana District conference at North Manchester and even though we were only able to be there for the opening session, yet we could sense that they were going to have a wonderful time of feasting upon the Word of God. As the Pennsylvania District conference was convening at the same time at Meyersdale, we had to hasten away. This conference was also a success and the inspiration talks by Brother Ashman were some of the best that we have ever heard and know they were used of God to stir up Christians to see the need of consecrating all to him.

Then at Berlin, Pennsylvania, we found a body of people very much interested in missions, probably because this was Mrs. Jobson's home before going to Africa. We were glad for the opportunity of talking to Mrs. Jobson's brother and telling him of the welfare of loved ones in Africa. At Uniontown we also found the church going forward under the leadership of Brother Gehman. Brother Gehman seems to have the confidence of the people and believe that he is going to be used of God to bring them closer to him. We found at Masetown a people that was very much enthused over missions and believe the pastor is doing a wonderful piece of work in educating the Christians to the needs of foreign missions.

At Aleppo we found a very nice country church and the pastor has won a place in the hearts of all in the district. Then the pastor is not content with the work in the one church but sees the need at Cameron, West Virginia and is seeking to open up a work there also and we know he would be glad for your prayers in behalf of this new work. At Martinsburg and McKee we found the people very much interested in missionary work and even though the pastor was away we had a fair attendance and a good time.

We found the church at Pittsburgh moving forward under the able leadership of Brother Studebaker and believe God has great things in store for them. Then at West Kittanning and Brush Valley we noticed that the churches were very much interested in missions and had crowded houses at both places. It appears that the churches that have sent workers out into the field have a keener interest in anything relating to home or foreign work. So perhaps that is the reason why Kittanning and Brush Valley were so interested because they have a representative out in active service in Kentucky; we refer to Miss Bessie Hooks, who has worked so faithfully in Kentucky for so many years.

Then we were privileged to attend the Ohio District conference at Ashland and it was another time of feasting upon spiritual things and all will agree that it "was good to have been there."

In all of these district conferences we have noted the wonderful spirit that ran through them, of wanting to know more about the Book in order that they might be better able to draw men to Jesus Christ.

During the month of November we are planning on doing further deputation work among the Indiana and Ohio churches and we solicit your prayers as we go that we may be used of him to reveal the needs of dark Africa.

IN THE RIO GRANDE VALLEY, TEXAS

(The following is a portion of a personal letter written by Brother Horace Yoder, along with the obituary of Brother Stewart Lichty.—EDITOR.)

I will give you a brief history of the effort to effect an organization in this part of Texas. . . .

Rev. W. D. Keller of the Church of the Brethren came here from Baltic, Ohio, last winter and looked up those of Dunkard faith living in the Rio Grande Valley. He found some 15 families, including members of both branches of the church. Several meetings were held with around fifty in attendance at each meeting and a church organization was talked of that was to include the members of both branches of the church, as "co-workers for God." Brother Stewart Lichty offered to donate a valuable lot in Harlingen for a church. His widow, Mrs. Fanny Lichty, now renews this offer of the lot, but it should be accepted in a reasonable time.

On account of a good many of the members going away during the summer our meetings were postponed until after vacation time, when it was agreed we were to meet again and start a Bible class. Brother Lichty looked forward to these Bible class meetings with much interest, and the last meeting we held was at his home. He joined the Church of the Brethren early in life, and was a graduate of Oberlin College.

At each of the meetings held there was a fine spirit manifested and it was hoped that at least in the Rio Grande Valley an organization would be effected that would mean a united church of Dunkard faith instead of two branches. We still hope for this but we miss the leadership of Rev. Keller, who has not returned to continue the work, and we shall greatly miss Brother Lichty, who has been transferred to higher service.

H. M. YODER.

TRAVEL FLASHES

Ankenytown

In the old home of the Leedys, Garbers and Beals, I had the privilege of sandwiching in a meeting of somewhat peculiar character. It may not be hard to explain when it is told that it began on Tuesday evening and ended two weeks later on Wednesday evening; that it rained each succeeding night for the first four nights and then again and again afterwards, pouring all day the last day until evening. The farmers, of which most of this community is composed, were frantic to get their corn out of the shocks, and this made another diversion mentally and physically that was not on our side of the ledger. Yet we had a fine meeting with most unusual attendance. Some of mature judgment said we had the largest crowd one night they had ever seen there at a revival.

A Community Revival

It was almost a community revival. The card of our Evangelistic and Bible Study League which asserts the great fundamentals and which some of our preachers of another day would not sign was signed by a Universalist, by several of the Christian church and some of the M. E. church. It was a great time of Bible reading, text quoting and serious re consecration. It was not to be a time of large ingathering. The pastor said in the introductory meeting that if we revived the church, it would be an achievement. We believe that was done but it will take time to prove whether it was a "revival or a spasm," as I told them. The Sunday school grew, the collections increased and the attendance of people who had never been seen in the church were all marks of encouragement that made it seem worth while. But this church needs what a good many of our smaller churches need—a man on the field. These people are the offspring of the heroic and devout, responsive to every good appeal. Hospitable, sympathetic, faithful during this revival, it made me think that they would be most happy to do all in their power for a man who would be all that to them. They have a large auditorium, a fine parsonage and together with some other point, they ought to support a man full time and have him live among them and keep things moving in the right direction. If I were a member here, I would agitate that until it is accomplished. It had been so before and it can be so again; indeed Ankenytown could do so itself, if it desired. Brother Delbert Flora is the present student-pastor. A few confessions and many re consecrations received during these days of revival ought to make this church get on better in the days to come. We believe that it will.

I am just "country jake" enough to say that I had a good time eating chicken, visiting the families, leading the singing, conducting the devotions and preaching that I hope to return to them at a more favorable time and try it all over again. A few years and the standbys of the now will be gone and then, new folks will guide and direct here, unless there is new devotion and sacrifice among the children of the forbears.

Union?

Only a half mile away is a Church of the Brethren. In 1860, they divided—not on the subject of the lamb at communion as I had thought, but on the mode of foot-washing. The "Leedyites" were one of the first of the dissenters that became the Progressives later. They were heroic men and women and may their tribe and followers increase and bring about in the not far distant day a happy reunion of folks who acknowledge that they are alike and still remain separated. Pray for us next at Hudson, Iowa.

CHAS. A. BAME.

OAK HILL VICTORY REVIVAL

The victory revival at Oak Hill, West Virginia was in some respects a new experience to us. Although we had been in Ashland College together and played on the same football team together, this is the first time we had labored with Brother Ankrum in the Lord's work. We found him to be a most congenial fellow-workman. He has wrought a noble work at Oak Hill. A beautiful and commodious new church edifice stands as a monument to his leadership. He has good report both from within the church and from those without. Our fellowship with him was most enjoyable. He labored earnestly in seeking the lost. This is his seventh year as pastor at Oak Hill and the church will do well to keep him much longer.

This was our first experience in working with Southern folks. Their hospitality was excellent. They cared for our physical needs in royal style. They sought to outdo each other in making our sojourn among them to be pleasant. We shall long remember their kindnesses.

In many ways, the campaign was a victory revival. The crowds were good throughout the entire revival. In spite of much rain, they came and filled the house practically every night. They availed themselves of the Question Box to enable me to render a larger service than would have been possible otherwise. We believe that the spiritual life of the church was renewed. The singing was good. The "Duncan Brothers' Quartette" contributed special numbers. The interest was sustained, not up and down. All in all, we believe the church enjoyed a real revival.

The adversary did his best to defeat. Wickedness is rampant in the community. Drunkenness, gambling, impurity, profanity,—these sins are found in abundance. Hearts were hardened with sin and gospel-hardened also. Many souls were visibly convicted of sin, but stubbornly refused to yield. Prayer, preaching, singing, entreaty, nothing could move them to Calvary. We rejoice in those who were won to Christ, 42 in all. But, oh, the large number who would not yield! We pray that they may yet accept Christ.

In this community, the Brethren church stands as a "city set on a hill." Her light of the Whole Gospel is shining out. Her message is Gospel. Brother Ankrum believes the Bible and knows how to "rightly divide it." His message rings true and clear, giving forth no uncertain call. We believe there is a bright future ahead of the Oak Hill church. She has her problems, all springing from selfishness,—the curse of the church and indifference, the besetting sin of the church of today. "The future is as bright as the promises of God."

REV. CHARLES H. ASHMAN, Evangelist.

VICTORY AT OAK HILL, WEST VIRGINIA

The anticipations of a year have now in the main become realizations. For that long a time we had been looking forward to the coming of Brother Charles Ashman to wage a campaign in this section of the brotherhood. As this was his first meeting here he was new in the main to the most of our folks. While it was not deliberate there had never been a time when he and I had shouldered the yoke of an evangelistic campaign before. His sermons were of the highest type and he heaved to the line even though some folks were nearly covered up with the chips. They would dig out and come back for more. Some of them succeeded in hardening their hearts against conviction. There was never an uncertain sound, in sermon or the answering of questions. The most difficult questions and sermon topics were handled in a kind and sympathetic way that won the admiration of those who may not have at first agreed with the speaker. He preached an old time gospel with a needed new time power. One party pronounced him "an old-time Dunkard preacher." The attendance from inside and outside the church night after night filling the house was a compliment to the power of his preaching. We had the highest type of listeners that we have ever had in a meeting here. Many new friends were made for the church.

The value of the meeting will be hard to estimate. Brother Ashman was always ready to go where any work could be done and spared not himself, preaching three sermons each the last two Sundays. From the standpoint of a fellow laborer I know of nothing more I would ask in him. The door is wide open here for him and a welcome awaits him whenever he cares to come, either as a visitor or an evangelist.

During the meeting forty-two took a stand. Of this number there were some re-consecrations, a baptismal service was held the last Sunday afternoon of the meeting and others are to be baptized. The meeting cannot be measured by the number taking a stand as there were many new friends made and people became interested in the church who made no public stand. There ought to be a continual ingathering from this meeting during the coming year. The Oak Hill church appreciates the loan of their pastor by the Johnstown church. We tried to return him in such good shape that they will be willing to loan him to us again.

We request intercession at the throne of Grace by our friends of the work here as the battle has never been easy and is not now. The forces of darkness seem to be marshalling their powers to break down the very church. Surely this indicates that the last days are here and soon the battle will be over, the victory won, the crowns received.

FREEMAN ANKRUM, Pastor.

CANTON, OHIO

The First Brethren church of this city seems to be gathering momentum as the days come and go. Since our last report there have been some outstanding events worthy of mention.

One of the most interesting features, interesting because of its results and uniqueness) is the Tuesday evening Bible lecture hour, conducted by our pastor, Dr. J. C. Beal. This is proving to be a most profitable activity for Christ and this church. The average attendance is somewhere near fifty. These meetings do not supplant the regular mid-week prayer meeting, as that also is a regular service well attended.

Since our last report, additions to our number have been made. One young man came out for definite Christian service, one came by letter and two for baptism.

During October and so far in November, the Sunday school has made remarkable progress in its attendance, surpassing all previous records for the same length of time.

The second Sunday in October was rally day. This was the greatest rally day ever held by this church. The result was a total attendance of 400 and an offering of $109.17.

On Friday evening, November 8 a representative of the Business Men's Council of the Pocket Testament League spoke in our church to a good sized audience. The result was at the close of the service sufficient donations were made to secure 250 New Testaments to be used at once in the revival starting at this writing (Sunday evening, November 10).

Today this church had two most happy services. In the morning we dedicated the new pipe organ, made possible to us by the thoughtfulness and kindness of Sister Eliza Smith, in her bequest to this church of one-fourth of her estate. Sister Smith was a charter member of the Canton church. Her great interest in this church is fully proven by her generous gifts. The house was well crowded with people and a fitting and appropriate service was held. Following are the important features of the dedication program:

Processional—"Holy, Holy, Holy"....Choir
Invocation ..... Rev. Alvin Byers
Song ..... Congregation
Organ-Piano Duet—"Rhapsody"—Damerest
Misses Elizabeth Beal, Vera Lindower
Special Music ..... Choir
Offertory ..... Elizabeth Beal
Dedicatory Service:

Eulogy to Mrs. Eliza Smith and Presentation of Organ to Congregation
Rev. D. F. Eikenberry
Acceptance, behalf of congregation,

F. B. Lindower
Dedicatory Prayer ..... Rev. J. C. Beal
Solo ..... Mrs. Harry Holliday
Message ..... Dr. J. C. Beal

In the evening Dr. Beal was at his best, preaching a heart-searching sermon on the subject, "God Marked Men." At the close, his appeal for Christian service was responded to by many in the audience. And when the count was made, five had come out and requested baptism, and a large number offering themselves for a richer service.

It is very rare, indeed, to witness so great results at the close of the very first sermon of a revival effort. In this case, however, the secret is found in the fact that for one year definite seed has been sown, the crop cultivated, and the time of harvest has just come.

By the time this is read, our revival campaign of ingathering will have progressed far into the period of its efforts. We are expecting wonderful results.

D. F. EIKENBERRY.

MY BIBLE AND I

We've traveled together, my Bible and I,
Through all kinds of weather, with smile and with sigh;

In sorrow or sunshine, in tempest or calm, Thy friendship's unchanging, my lamp and my psalm.

We've traveled together, my Bible and I,
When life has grown weary, and death e'en was nigh.

But all through the darkness of mist and of wrong,
I've found thee a solace, a prayer, or a song.

So now, who shall part us, my Bible and I?
Shall ism or schism, or new lights who try?
Shall shadow for substance, or stone for good bread,

Supplant its sound wisdom, give folly instead?

Ah, no, my dear Bible, revealer of light,
The sword of the Spirit, put error to flight!
And still through life's journey, until the last sigh,

We'll travel together, my Bible and I.
—From the "Almanac and Counsellor" compiled by Samuel Ridout.

CHRISTLIKENESS

Pour forth all the odor, color, charm, and happiness you have to all your friends, to your home, to your daily society, to the poor and sorrowful, the joyous and the prosperous. Brighten darkened lives, soften the rude, make a sunshine of peace in stormy places, cover the faults and follies of men with the flowers of love. Love others, and you will spread the delight of youth over all whom you meet, and in doing so you will live intensely; for you will have within not only your own life, but also the lives of all whom you bless by love. That is the best religion, the life of Christ, the very life of God. That is to be at one with him whose smile kindles the universe: whose love, moving in the spring, is the beauty that enchants our senses and heart, and inspires our soul.—S. A. Brooke.

A DAILY RESOLUTION

I will this day try to live a simple, sincere, and serene life; repelling promptly every thought of discontent, anxiety, discouragement, impurity, and self-seeking; cultivating cheerfulness, magnanimity, charity, and the habit of holy silence; exercising economy in expenditure, carefulness in conversation, diligence in appointed service, fidelity to every trust, and a childlike trust in God.—John H. Vincent.

MINUTES OF OHIO DISTRICT CONFERENCE OF THE BRETHREN CHURCH

First Brethren Church, Ashland, Ohio,
October 22-25, 1929
Tuesday Evening

The Brethren churches of Ohio assembled in conference at Ashland, Ohio, October 22 with Moderator Dr. Wm. M. Beachler of the Gratis church in charge. Dr. Martin Shively led in singing "Sweet Hour of Prayer" and "To the Work." Rev. Conard Sandy, pastor of Gretna and Williamstown churches led the devotions. He read from I John 4 and emphasized the virtue of "Love" and then led us to the Throne in prayer.

After singing "In the Cross of Christ I Glory," Rev. Dyoil Belote, new pastor of the Ashland church, extended to the conference a very hearty welcome.

The Moderator then made some necessary announcements. In the absence of Rev. O. C. Starn, Rev. A. E. Whitted was appointed as a member of the Committee on Committees. Miss Katherine Teeter sang in a very pleasing manner, "When to the Cross I Turn My Eyes."

Dr. R. R. Teeter, Vice Moderator gave the first message of the conference on the theme: "The Power of the Proclaimed Gospel." He centered his remarks around the words of Acts 5:20. At the close of this challenging message the congregation sang, "Sing the Wondrous Love of Jesus." After several volunteer prayers Dr. Teeter pronounced the benediction.

Wednesday Morning

The second session of the Ohio Brethren Conference was called to order at 9:00 A. M. After the singing of "Ain't Thine O Lord" and "Down at the Cross Where My Savior Died," Rev. W. S. Crick, pastor of the Fremont church, read from several passages which stressed the theme of "Feeding the Flock." After singing "My Faith Looks Up to Thee" and a few volunteer prayers the devotional period was closed by Brother Crick. Song, "We'll Sing Till Jesus Comes."

The first business session was called to order by the Moderator with a report from the Credential Committee. It reported 22 ministerial and 22 lay delegates. This report was accepted and committee continued. Rev. Floyd Sibert of the Ellet church, Rev. Delbert Flora of the Mansfield church and Rev. W. S. Crick of the Fremont church at the request of the Mission Board Chairman, gave a brief report of their mission churches.

The minutes of the previous session were read and approved. Rev. Geo. S. Baer, President of the Ohio Mission Board, gave his report of the Mission churches. These churches give promise of growth.

The Board's Treasurer, R. A. Hazen, gave the financial report, which report was accepted. It follows:

Respectfully submitted,

R. A. HAZEN, Treasurer.

The Committee on Committees was authorized to appoint 7 members on the Board of Evangelists and make their report at the afternoon sessions.

The Credential Committee gave an additional report, making a total of 31 ministerial and 33 lay delegates.

The regular program was then taken up with Dr. Miller in charge. Song, "Sing the Wondrous Love of Jesus." Rev. Dr. Wm. Beachler, pastor of the Gratis church, brought the Moderator's address at the 10:15 hour on the theme: "Testing our Work by the Output."

He said that our Ohio churches must test their work by their output and challenged the conference to make this test from four angles. First, in regard to our children and young people. Second, in our program of evangelism. Third, in developing strong character and Christian living among our men and women. Fourth, in encouraging our people to a closer fellowship with other peoples, especially with the Church of the Brethren.

This message was approved by conference and requested published in the Evangelist.

Remarks on the Moderator's address followed. The Committee on Committees was authorized to appoint a Committee on Company composed of three members. Song, "Standing on the Promises."

Conference voted that offering be received during the evening sessions.

The first Bible Lecture of the conference at the 11:00 hour was brought by Prof. Kenneth Monroe on the theme: "God Reveals Through His Names." This was a very scholarly, instructive and well prepared message on the theme.

After announcements and a song, "We're Marching to Zion," Prof. Monroe dismissed the conference.

Wednesday Afternoon

The afternoon session was opened at 1:30 by singing "What a Friend We Have in Jesus" and "I Love to Tell the Story." Rev. Sibert led in prayer.

The entire afternoon program was given over to the Committee on "Church Forward Movement" and was in charge of the "Forward Movement Committee." Rev. R. D. Barnard, Rev. George Baer and Dr. Wm. Beachler.

Rev. Barnard gave a brief report of the committees plans. Dr. Wm. Beachler was the first speaker. His theme was, "Why Have a Working Program Among the Ohio Churches?" He stressed the importance and gave the advantages of such a program. The advantages were given under three points, namely, Symmetrical Development, Concerted Effort and Sustained Effort.

The second speaker was Rev. George Baer on the theme: "What are the Essentials of a Workable Program?" He stressed the four points outlined by this committee. They are: (1) a deeper, more abiding spiritual experience; (2) a workable program of intense evangelism and missionary activity; (3) a keener and more faithful denominational loyalty; (4) a truer sense of Christian stewardship.

Rev. R. D. Barnard, Chairman of the committee, presented the plans and points of this program. The program submitted is as follows:

Ohio's Semi-Centennial Program of Progress

Ohio's Semi-Centennial Program of Progress shall be for the intensifying of the work of the Brethren churches of Ohio. This Program shall continue for four years and shall close with Ohio's Semi-Centennial Conference in 1933. There shall be a General Chairman of the Program Promotion Committee, and four additional members of the Committee, one for each major division of the program. They shall have active charge of the program in the State.

The pastor and secretary of the local church shall be chairman and goals secretary, respectively, of the local promotion committee. Others may be added as the congregation may direct. The Program is as follows:

- I. Devotional Life and Bible Study (Knowing God)
1. 50% of the members of the local church with individual or private devotions.
2. 75% of the members of the local church in weekly public worship. (Church or Auxiliary).
3. A course in Systematic Bible Study presented at least yearly.

II. Evangelism and Missions (Christ and my Neighbor)

1. An evangelistic meeting at least once each year.
2. Lay evangelistic Visitation throughout the year, looking to certain seasons for securing decisions.
3. Some definite type of missionary instruction at least once yearly.
4. General use of tracts and literature with missionary and evangelistic messages.

III. Denominational Ideals and Interests (God and My Church)

1. Some course of instruction or teaching in denominational doctrines each year, and the use of denominational tracts.
2. Presentation of the Cause of, and the lifting of an offering for, recognized general interests of the Denomination.
3. Increase of gifts for District Missions, and every present Mission church self-supporting by 1933. At least one new mission point opened.

IV. Stewardship of Life and Substance (Jesus Christ at the heart of My Life)

1. Presentation of the Challenge of Life Work at least four times yearly.
2. Not less than four public presentations of Christian Stewardship during each year.
3. At least one general circulation of Stewardship Literature during each year.
4. Increase in the total gifts of the local church, and the enlistment of at least some titheers each year.

Committee—R. D. BARNARD,
W. H. BEACHLER,
GEO. S. BAER.

After singing two verses of "When They Ring the Golden Bells," a motion was made and carried that the program be endorsed by the Ohio churches. Discussions were entered into by Brethren J. Allen Miller, W. S. Crick, A. E. Whitted, Noah Beery and Dyoell Belote.

It was moved and carried that this committee to direct the Program be elected by General Conference in open session.

The Committee on Committees then reported the following nominations, which report was accepted by conference:

Auditing Committee: E. F. Miller, Wm. Gearhart.

Membership Committee: Vice Moderator Chairman Floyd Sibert, M. M. Hoover, W. S. Crick, George Pontius.

District Mission Board: George S. Baer to succeed himself as President (3 years).

Ministerial Examining Committee: J. Allen Miller to succeed self (3 years).

Church Trustees: E. F. Miller to succeed self; term expires 1934. H. S. Rutt, fill unexpired term of Brother E. L. Kilhefner, 1931; L. P. Clapper, 1932; Wilson King, 1933.

District Evangelists: Kenneth Monroe, Wm. Beachler, J. C. Beal, C. A. Bame, R. D. Barnard, Dyoell Belote, A. E. Whitted.

General Conference Executive Committee: Wm. H. Beachler, R. R. Teeter.

Shipshevana Booster Committee, Delbert Flora, R. D. Barnard, Floyd Sibert.

Statistician: Conference Secretary.

Christian Education: M. A. Stuckey.

Sunday School: Quinter M. Lyon.

Christian Endeavor: Ray Klingensmith.

District Representative to Ohio Council of Churches: Geo. S. Baer.

District Representative to Board of Religious Education: M. A. Stuckey.

Resolutions Committee: O. C. Lemert, W. S. Crick, Grant McDonald.

Respectfully submitted,
A. E. WHITTED,
J. ALLEN MILLER,
MARTIN SHIVELY.

Moved and carried that the committee to sponsor "Ohio's Semi-Centennial Program of Progress" be elected for the full term of four years. Rev. R. D. Barnard was then elected as chairman of this committee to be known as the "Program Promotion Committee."

Dr. J. C. Beal to head Section I—"Devotional Life and Bible Study." Dr. Wm. Beachler to head Section II—"Evangelism and Missions." Dr. Geo. Baer, Section III—"Denominational Ideals and Interests." Rev. W. S. Crick, Section IV—"Stewardship of Life and Substance."

The Credential Committee made a further report of delegates, bringing the total to 34 ministerial with 22 present and 48 lay. The session closed by singing, "Onward Christian Soldiers" and benediction by Rev. Wm. Gearhart.

THE TIE THAT BINDS

MAURER-KILMER—Miss Kathryn Kilmer, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. Kilmer of South Bend, Indiana, became the bride of Mr. Everett Maurer, son of Mr. and Mrs. R. Maurer, also of South Bend, at a beautiful wedding which took place in the First Brethren church. Mrs. Wm. Schutt played "The Bridal Chorus" from Lohengrin for the entrance of the bride party. During the ceremony Mrs. DeVries sang "O Promise Me" and "I Promise You." The ceremony was pronounced by the undersigned. Following a short trip, Mr. and Mrs. Maurer will reside in South Bend, Indiana.

N. VICTOR LEATHERMAN.

GROSS-MILLER—Rollin Gross and Miss Pauline Miller, both of Warsaw, were united in marriage at the First Brethren church Sunday morning, October 6th, 1929, in the presence of a large audience. It was quite a surprise. Mrs. O. H. Murphy was presented to sing "At Home," after which the pianist, Miss Mabelle Crist, played the wedding march. Mr. Gross, the groom, attended by Leonard Helser, entered the auditorium from the north entrance, and the bride with her sister Helen, coming in from the south entrance. Rev. E. M. Riddle, the pastor, read the beautiful ring ceremony. The groom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Gross, east of Warsaw, Indiana, and the bride is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Emmett Miller, of Warsaw. After the wedding dinner they departed for Niagara Falls. They will reside in Warsaw.

E. M. RIDDLE.

BECHER-SENSEMAN—On Sunday morning, October 20, at the pastor's residence, occurred the marriage of Mr. Orrin Becher, of Wellington, Ohio, and Mrs. Pauline Senseman, of Ashland, Ohio. Mrs. Becher is a faithful member of the First Brethren church of Ashland, and well known to many former students of Ashland College. She has been manager of a successful business venture in Ashland for the past six years. Mr. Becher is engaged in business as a plumber and electrician at Wellington, Ohio, where he and his estimable wife will make their home. The best wishes of their many friends go with them in their new-found happiness.

DYOELL BELOTE.

IN THE SHADOW

ENDICOTT—Mary Charabelle Endicott was born August 4, 1929, at Arcadia, Kansas, and departed this life at the city hospital, October 18, 1929, at the age of 2 months and 14 days. She leaves to mourn her loss, father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. James Endicott, also two brothers, James and Daniel, all of Newton, Kansas; also a host of relatives near Fort Scott and Arcadia.

The funeral was conducted Sunday by L. G. Wood of the Brethren church, who read comforting Scriptures and a brief message, followed by a beautiful tribute at childbed. Burial occurred. Beautiful flowers were offered and many friends met to pay their respect and sympathize with the family. Burial was made in the Brown cemetery, near Drywood.

L. G. WOOD.

RATLIFF—Frank C. Ratliff was born July 18, 1890, near Allamead, Kansas. He came to Portia to live in 1913 and was soon attracted to the Brethren church and on July 2, 1914 was baptized and received into the Brethren church at Portia, Kansas, by Rev. A. E. Whitted who was then pastor of the church.

Brother Ratliff had not been very well for many months, having had several serious sick spells. On the 23rd of October he again fell sick and was paralyzed on the left side and suffered intensely until Saturday evening, October 26th, when he passed away to meet his Lord at the age of 39 years, 3 months and 8 days.

About two years ago Brother Ratliff and his wife were elected to the office of deacon and deaconess respectively. In this capacity and to every other interest of the church he was faithful. He was Brethren through and through, loving every teaching and ordinance.

He lived what he asked others to do, never shunning his task as a Christian. Funeral conducted by the pastor, assisted by Rev. W. R. Deeter, a former pastor.

S. L. LOWMAN.

HARMON—Leona May Harmon, daughter of Andy and Alta Harmon, was born at Austin, Ohio, September 15th, 1905; died in Columbus at the home of her cousins, Mr. and Mrs. Taylor, September 13th, 1929, lacking two days of her 24th birthday.

Leona's illness was brief and her sudden demise unexpected in its swiftness, made the sorrow deeper and more intense to those who hold her dear. She is survived by her parents and one sister, Della Harmon, of near Washington. Other relatives and a host of friends unite in grief for the loss of the young life snatched out in the bloom of womanhood.

Leona united with the Fairview Brethren church at the early age of eleven years and to those who knew her best this early consecration of her youth bore fruit in the lovely afterglow of her girlhood years. For a number of years she made her home with Mr. and Mrs. Charles Christmas of Fairview and she was endeared to them as one of their own. The ties of affection and love which held them together, gave them an understanding and insight into her character that no one else had, and their knowledge of her pure worth and devotion but deepens their grief and sorrow.

One who knew Leona best made the remark that "you could not say anything too good about her." No greater eulogy could be said of anyone. It is more than a thousand pages of glowing memoriam. It is more than any stately monument of sculptured stone. Nothing could be said more beautiful and expressive than that of one's life.

Leona, her friends say, left everyone. It was her nature to do good. It is sweet to know and have the consolation of all these beautiful sayings of her unassuming life.

WM. A. GEARHART, Dayton, Ohio.

WILLIAMS—Mrs. Ella Williams, born in Ohio in the year 1852, departed this life in Warsaw, September 26th, 1929, after an illness of ten years or more. She had been a member of the Brethren church for twenty-seven years. She was zealous in the work of her church and a genuine neighbor as long as her health permitted. She leaves her husband, Joseph F. Williams, a daughter, Mrs. Frank Gray, Benton Harbor, Michigan, and a son, Martin J. Williams in Baltimore, Maryland. Her funeral service was conducted from the church by her pastor, the undersigned. May the Comforter be gracious to the sorrowing.

E. M. RIDDLE, Pastor.

LICHTY—Stewart Lichty was born at Eldick, Somerset County, Pennsylvania, February 16, 1869, and died at his home in Harlingen, Texas, October 2, 1929, death resulting from an injury received in an automobile accident. Funeral service and burial took place at Wellington, Kansas, the former home. His wife, Fanny Lichty, and his brothers and sisters survive him. He joined the Church of the Brethren at an early age and had served the church both as a teacher and superintendent of Sunday school. After retiring from the mercantile business at Wellington, Kansas, he moved to Harlingen, Texas, and the past year took a prominent part in the movement to effect an organization of those of Dunkard faith living in the Rio Grande Valley, including members of both branches of the church. He offered to donate a valuable lot in Harlingen for a church home, and his widow, Mrs. Fanny Lichty, now shows her fine Christian spirit by renewing the offer of the lot.

XXX—THE WHY OF WHITE GIFTS

By Prof. W. I. Duker, President National Sunday School Association

The Lord has been good to us! Are we conscious of his goodness? How sad it is to be unappreciative of the goodness of God. Some day when we come to the end of the road and realize for the first time how the Lord has been with us all the way and has been caring for us and loving us; and we remember how we have scarcely ever thanked him for his ever watchful care and constant goodness, then our regrets will force us to say, "Oh, that we might have known of his goodness earlier and kindness oftener!"

We need the Christmastide to help us bring in our wandering thoughts. We need to remember the "Wise Men of the East" who came to worship at his feet. Often have we forgotten all that we have highly resolved and honestly purposed in our hearts, at some previous time. Our intentions and impulses were sincere and without hypocrisy. But time has passed and our sense of appreciation has become dulled. We become rather prosaic and matter of fact in our deliberations. Then out of our forgetfulness God brings us a new Christmas! Then that which has been forgotten and neglected is given a new opportunity.

So perhaps we approach this season of the year again. Surely many of us need its cheering message. Many of us have forgotten. Many of us are awaiting the perfecting of our former plans. All of us need to see once more the "Child in the Manger." May we bring our wandering hearts and minds before the manger and with wordless lips worship the "Child."

The highest and holiest thoughts that have ever graced the mind of man have been born in a manger. Nothing can uplift and energize the heart like the vision of Christ on Mary's lap. Worshiping here are we directed and strengthened for the tasks before us.

IDEALISM and Realism

Not long ago the leading nations of the world entered into a solemn covenant, properly signed and sealed, forswearing war as a means of settling their disputes. This is Idealism.

Now the same nations are busily engaged discussing the rules under which the next war is to be conducted, and there seems to be some difference of opinion. That is Realism.

President Hoover, in a remarkable Armistice Day address, proposes that warring nations allow the same freedom for food ships that is now allowed for hospital ships. Such an international law, if adopted, will serve a double purpose: It will protect non-combatants from starvation, and it will enable the warring nations to fight longer. It will also enable the neutral nations to make money by exporting foodstuffs.

Anything is worthwhile that will reduce the number of wars, and render the conflict less horrible. But don't forget this: There will be another war; and when it comes the nations will do whatever seems necessary to win it. Ask the Bolsheviks, or Mussolini.

WHAT Price Church Unity?

The New York conference of the Christian Unity League, meeting in an Episcopal church of New York, planned a communion service as a demonstration of religious unity. Dr. James Sloan Coffin, president of the most radically modernistic Seminary in America, was asked to officiate. Dr. Coffin was willing, but Bishop Manning forbids it, pointing out that only ministers ordained by bishops may officiate at communion services in Episcopal churches.

According to the Episcopal theory, no ordination is valid except when performed by bishops. This automatically outlaws all ministers of Presbyterian, Congregational, Brethren, and like churches, who have been ordained by fellow elders.

Two things are certain. The first is that the Episcopal bodies will not yield their theory of ordination. To do so would be to yield their justification of separate existence. The second is that self respecting ministers of the other Protestant bodies will never submit to the dictum of bishop-ordination to make good their ministerial standing. These are two hurdles the church unity scheme will have trouble with.

The Roman Catholic Church, of course, would not recognize either the bishops of the Episcopal church or the elders of the other Protestant churches. So there you are.

The faithful minister of the Lord, anointed and ordained by the Spirit of God, will go on with his work, and let the potshards of the earth strive with the potshards of the earth.

THE Latest Los Angeles Religion

An 18 year old "prophet" started a new church in the city which he calls the "Church of Divine Knowledge." In his announcements, the young man proclaimed himself "the miracle boy—sees the unseen, knows the unknown, tells the untold, finds the unfound." Adherents flocked to the new church in such large numbers that the neighbors complained about the blocked driveways on account of crowded parking.

The young "prophet" was investigated by a policeman. He told her many things about her future, and then asked her to go with him for a ride. She promptly arrested him, and he was fined $20 for telling fortunes without a permit.

And yet they say that twentieth century people are sceptical! Men will believe anything but the truth.

A STRANGE Mania

There is in Southern California a woman who seems to have a mania for whipping and abusing children. Her method is to entice a child into some secluded place and then torment the child by slapping and beating. After a season of this, she will sometimes buy candy to appease the child, move to another spot and repeat the torture. Within two years, the woman has whipped ten children between the ages of three and thirteen. One child was beaten until insensible.

It is difficult to imagine a possible motive for this sort of crime. Men kill each other for gain or in a fit of anger. But what possible reason can there be for whipping little children cold-bloodedly? Psychiatrists will say that the woman is insane. Perhaps. The New Testament gives an interesting suggestion: A father brought his son to Christ and said, "Master, I have brought unto thee my son, which hath a dumb spirit. And wheresoever he taketh him, he tearth him. . . . And oftentimes it hath cast him in the fire, to destroy him." (Read the whole story in Mark 9:17-29).

The torture of this child, according to our Lord, was accomplished by demon-power. Perhaps the papers are right in speaking of the child-whipper as the "witch woman." There was an outbreak of demonism at the first coming of Christ. There is to be another just before his second coming.

Abolish the Battleship

"Abolish the Battleship!" is to be one of the chief slogans of the National Council for Prevention of War this winter, as voted by this delegated body at its recent Annual Meeting in Washington, D. C., and an editorial embodying and explaining this policy by Frederick J. Libby, Executive Secretary of the National Council, is the leading article in the Council's "News Bulletin."

The abolition of the battleship is urged by Mr. Libby as the obvious economy that would not diminish national security since "the airplane has made the battleship just about as obsolete as the dodo" and since "a saving of $40,000,000 a year" is possible by this measure. The abolition of the submarine will probably be blocked, he says, by the French and Italians, the reduction of destroyers is not significant, and we are apparently destined to build more cruisers instead of reducing them. Therefore he says our economy must come in battleships.

The statement of the Council's policy with respect to the Naval Conference is embodied in the following two paragraphs:

"Parity" Distrusted

We rejoice in the definite acceptance by our Government of the responsibility inherent in the General Pact for the Renunciation of War for the development of the means for pacific settlement of disputes, and the "drastic" reduction of armaments, with abandonment of naval competition as a dangerous step towards war. We distrust the principle of "parity" as lending itself to new lines of competition, unless it be inseparably linked with the letter and the spirit of the Pact. It is on the basis of the Pact and in this sense of parity that the naval negotiations have been conducted. The naval parity maintained for more than 100 years on the Great Lakes should now be the universally accepted standard for the disarmament of the seas.

The London Conference

We regard as of major importance to the peace of the world the success of the London Conference for limitation and reduction of the 5 great navies. The British government is urging that this Conference seek the abolition of the submarine, and in this effort our Government is cooperating. We recommend that our Government be urged to seek, as consistent with its pacific and economic policies, the abolition of the battleship and general reductions in other classes of naval vessels,—cruisers, destroyers and airplane-carriers.—National Council for the Prevention of War.

A Word About Work

"If I were a tailor, I'd make it my pride
The best of all tailors to be;
If I were a tinker, no tinker beside Should mend a tin kettle like me."

THAT has the right ring. A boy who believes in doing his very best in whatever he has to do will make a successful man. That is the common-sense way to work. It is the Christian way, too: "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might." There are already too many people in the world who appear never to have learned that "anything that is worth doing at all is worth doing well." Do not add yourself to their number.

Perhaps some who read this have not been in the habit of working with their might; perhaps they have slighted their work, and only cared to do enough of it to avoid reproof by parents and teachers.

If this is so, why not begin now to work in the right way, and, no matter what you may have to do, try hard to do it just as it ought to be done?—Selected.

Focusing Attention on the Bible

The first Sunday in December is coming to be widely observed as Bible Sunday. Of course, every Sunday should be Bible Sunday, for the essential part of every gathering for worship should be the magnifying of the Word of God. Not only so, but every day should be a Bible day for every child of God, as no Christian life can be what it ought to be without partaking daily of the heavenly manna contained therein. But it is good to have a special day on which to seek to focus attention on the Bible and endeavor to bring it more prominently and constantly into the lives and interests of men.

There are many noble purposes that this day can serve. It may be the means of bringing people into a better understanding of how we got our Bible, and such intelligence would prove to be a blessing, for the actual circumstances surrounding the Bible's origin and its preservation through the centuries are far more miraculous and inspiring than are some of the crude, superstitious notions we have inherited concerning it and the unwarranted and irreverent attitudes we in many instances built up towards it. Or, we may emphasize the importance of faith in the Bible as the Word of God, and the necessity of becoming acquainted with its teaching and the great men of God who have been instruments in his hands in preparing the world setting for the accomplishment of his great plan of redemption. Or, the day may be used to center the thoughts of men on the great part the Bible has played in the lives of men and on what it does and will do for men now. There is no discounting the importance of the service rendered in bringing the Bible as such, its contents and origin, more vividly and intelligently before the minds of the Christian world, but nothing is more important than to get the power of the word of God to be recognized by man and to bring them to desire to experience the fullness of that power in their lives.

In this very practical age there is a tendency to regard the Bible as too idealistic in many respects to be followed out in life. It is just a book on religion, and religion is more or less a heavenly affair and not suited to earthly scenes, so it is imagined. The Bible, therefore, is impracticable and unworkable, and its espousal is a handicap to success and achievement. It sets forth beautiful theories and noble principles but they are too far above ground. Its idealism is perfect, its religion is pure and its light shed upon the valley of death is true, but it seems that these are not the things that count in the hard pressed conditions of life. In our shortsightedness we conclude that the Bible is pitched on too high a plane to fit into the everyday affairs of life; that its precepts will not work in the midst of the dishonesty of business, the strife of industry and the duplicity of society; it is impracticable. But our trouble is in mistaking difficulty for impracticability. The Bible is hard to put into practice, but it is not impracticable. It is not easy to do some of the things that the Bible sets forth, but they are not unworkable, nor ineffective when put into practice. The trouble is not with the teaching but with our unwillingness. We are too soft, too shrinking, to endure the disciplining that the Bible calls for. We pass lightly by the Beatitudes because we are too tenderfooted. We shy at the standard of "the second mile" and the "turning of the other cheek" because we do not have the nerve to face it, we are too cowardly. We are simply and frankly afraid of the hardships that living up to such a standard would involve, and we seek to excuse ourselves by saying it is "not for us." And some who have not so much caution in handling the Word of God go a step further and say it is impracticable for such an age as this.

The Bible was meant for just such an age as this, because it has met the needs of every age to which it has been given, and we need to emphasize it and seek to focus the attention of men more strongly upon it. It comes to us with a message that challenges the best that is within us and the best that is among us. Its influence is far-reaching and vital and its infinite worth is everywhere evident. And it is reassuring to know that it meets the needs of the great as well as the small, the high as well as the lowly. And rather than being a hindrance to rising to position and power, it is a help, and it is satisfying to know that it has called forth the love and reverence of many of the earth's great ones, as these testimonies indicate. John Quincy Adams once said: "So great is my veneration for the Bible, that the earlier my children begin to read it the more confident will be my hope that they will prove useful citizens of their country and respectable members of society." Benjamin Franklin said he would put a Bible and a newspaper in every home." William E. Gladstone showed a still clearer vision of its worth when he said, "It is supremacy, not precedence, that we ask for the Bible." Immanuel Kant, one of the world's greatest philosophers, spoke this glowing tribute, "The Bible is the greatest benefit which the human race has ever experienced." And similar expressions of appreciation and devotion could be multiplied.

We need to focus the attention of men more strongly upon the Bible because it brings men in touch with God and helps them to find him a satisfying portion both in the everyday experiences of life and in its emergencies. William Adams Brown, in "Beliefs that Matter" gives us this striking illustration: "During the darkest day of the Great War, a Swiss professor sat in his lecture-room at Zurich trying in vain to concentrate his attention upon his lectures. Across the border he could hear the guns booming, and he realized that every shot was mowing down young men like his own pupils. All that he said about God and Christ, about salvation and brotherly love, seemed to him a mockery, and for a time he felt as if he had lost God out of the world. In his dilemma he turned to the pages of Israel's prophets. There he read of men who had been through experiences like his own. They had seen their country devastated, their homes destroyed, their countrymen carried into captivity, the temple in which they worshipped leveled with the ground. Yet they had been able, in and through it all, to discern the working of a divine purpose and to retain their faith that love could triumph over man's ignorance and sin. Through the prophets, Professor Ragatz found his way back to a living God, Master of the fate of present-day Europe, exactly as in the days of Isaiah and Jeremiah he was Master of the fate of Israel. . . . What the Bible did for that Swiss professor, it has done for men of every age." By acquainting men with the Word of God they will be led to discern his presence and will find strength and joy in the discovery.

We must bring men in touch with the Bible, and seek to do so with greater earnestness, because it will throw upon their lives the light that will dispel the darkness of sin and will awaken within them a desire for that power that is able to transform their lives. There is to be found the great secret of the popularity of the Bible—it contains a message that is life-giving and transforming. We do not realize the importance and power of the written word of God as keenly as we might, if we had known what it means to be without writing, or without the open Bible. Mrs. Richards, a missionary in Portuguese East Africa, has told of the effect of the mystery of written language on the Tonga tribe. She wrote that on Erwin Richard's second morning in Africa he was working on the packing boxes and wanted a saw. With a pencil he wrote on a piece of board, 'Give the boy the saw.' He gave the board to a Tonga lad and told him to take it to Mrs. Richards. It was the first written message the boy had ever known. He went off holding the board at arm's length, as if fearing that some of the 'medicine' would drop off. He found Mrs. Richards and, standing up very straight and holding the board level, gave it to her. She glanced at it carelessly, dropped the board on the ground, and gave him the saw. Completely mystified, the boy carried the saw at arm's length back to the missionary magician, who said to him, 'Little fellow, what are you thinking about?' The lad stood erect, looked the missionary straight in the eye and said, 'White man, I want some of that medicine.' He got it. So did all his people; for Dr. Richards did not stop until he had placed the gift of written language and the power to read the Bible in the possession of the Tonga tribe."

Few people look upon the written word with the mysterious, magical sense that these Tonga people experienced, because we have been familiar with the power of the written word so long. But not everybody who knows the written language, wants "that medicine," or the Bible, and that is the reason why the Bible should be taken to them and why the attention of all men should be focused upon it. It is the word of life and salvation to every one that believeth. If we were more strongly convinced of the truth of that statement, we would be more concerned about building up interest in the Bible and in giving it to those who have it not.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

The new church at Osceola, Indiana, will dedicate on December 1, with Prof. W. I. Duker as the preacher of the day. Following the dedication, Brother C. A. Stewart will conduct an evangelistic campaign.

So far as our memory serves us, the "special days" listed on this page are all that have been authorized by General Conference. Those who desire a printed list should clip this one and paste it in their date book.

We call attention to Editor Quinter M. Lyon's announcement on another page of this paper to the effect that Dean J. Allen Miller is again writing the expository notes for the Teacher and the adult quarterlies. That ought to add greatly to the worth of these publications.

An interesting newsletter is published this week from Dr. Florence N. Gribble, leader of our African missionaries. Their work is considerably handicapped still by the war conditions, but in spite of that souls are being saved through the efforts of the native evangelists, and also through the spiritual and material ministrations of Dr. Gribble and her helps at the hospital.

Dr. C. F. Yoder, our senior missionary in Argentina, gives us a report from that field this week. He states that at a meeting held at Rio Cuarto a large number accepted Christ, four being baptized and others are being instructed for church membership. At Laboulaye a new building was dedicated and seventeen converts baptized. The growth at this place is encouraging and the outlook is most encouraging. And worthy of mention is that fact that the congregation is conducting a mission in another part of town.

A good meeting is reported from Roanoke, Virginia, where Brother H. E. Eppley is the pastor and Brother Frank G. Coleman was the evangelist. Thirteen made confession and twelve were received into the church. Brother Eppley was his own song leader, to which work he is by no means strange nor incapable. He and Brother Coleman made an excellent evangelistic team and God blessed them. Aside from the additions the church was greatly blessed with increased courage and interest. Though the future of this congregation seems fraught with difficulty, yet they are facing it bravely and with commendable faith and consecration.

From Hagerstown, Maryland, come reports from pastor and evangelist of a successful revival, resulting in twenty-one confessions of faith and fourteen reconsecrations. Nineteen have been baptized and received into the church. Dr. G. C. Carpenter is the pastor, and an inveterate worker he is, and Brother R. Paul Miller was the evangelist, and with such a team we should expect results. Brother Miller believes a large future lies ahead of the Hagerstown church. The neighboring churches showed a most happy spirit of cooperation by their attendance on occasion.

One of the oldest readers of the Evangelist is Brother D. C. Moomaw of Roanoke, Virginia. Mrs. L. L. Garber, who recently returned from a visit in the Moomaw home, informed us that Brother Moomaw reaches his 90th birthday on this Thanksgiving Day. His good wife is 86. They are both long-time readers of the Evangelist and look forward to the paper's weekly visits with eagerness, we are told. Brother Moomaw reads well without glasses.

The Evangelist is offering special rates to subscribers just now that ought to be an inducement to every pastor who would like to see his church paper more widely circulated among his people. We have been receiving some very gratifying commendations on the Evangelist of late and for the sake of the larger service, we are anxious to get into many more homes. The paper will be at least as good this coming year as it has been during this year, and we think really better. The much appreciated departments that have been running this year will be continued and we are contemplating adding a new department on "Studies in the Scriptures," further announcement concerning which will be made in a later issue.

The editor is in receipt of a printed invitation to the dedication services to be held at the First Brethren church of Long Beach, California, on November 24th to 28th. The accompanying program is quite elaborate and consists of four services on Sunday and five week night services following, the Friday night program being "Church Home Night." Dr. L. S. Bauman, the pastor, has the first sermon in the new church on Sunday morning. Prof. Alva J. McClain, Minister of Education, preaches the dedication sermon in the afternoon and the evening sermon was preached by Brother John Lienhard, pastor of the Second church of Long Beach. All other California Brethren ministers are cooperating by taking part in the program. This is a most remarkable achievement on the part of the First church and we congratulate the pastor and his splendid people on its accomplishment. We are promised a report and a view of their new and enlarged structure.

Prof. R. R. Haun writes of his visit to Dayton, Ohio, to participate in a "Loyalty Day" program, staged by the young people of that church. It is most encouraging for the future of that splendid church to see how the young people are preparing themselves for places of leadership and service. They have rallied about the leadership of their new pastor, Brother R. D. Barnard, in a splendid way. And such a program as is reported is a fine way to give encouragement to the young folks. Any church can afford to give its young people a chance now and then. Besides, this program is an effort to put into practice a part of what was anticipated by the new Ohio Semi-Centennial Program of Progress. Brother Barnard is chairman of the promotion committee and it is fitting that he should lead out in the working of the aims of program. We shall be glad to have reports of other Ohio churches telling of their efforts to get into activity along the lines mapped out by their district program.

PRAYER REQUESTS FOR THIS WEEK—

Dr. Gribble requests that we join in prayer and praise, as they "press forward", "nothing daunted" by the obstacles they face.

The new church at Osceola, Indiana, says, "We need your help and your prayers."

Brother R. Paul Miller, having formerly requested prayer for his series of evangelistic campaigns, tells us he is now at work in our church in Washington, D. C. Pray for success there.

Brother F. G. Coleman says, "Let us unite in praying for Eppley and his work" at Roanoke, Virginia.

Dr. C. F. Yoder requests prayer for the continued unity and consecration of the people at Laboulaye, and also for the promising mission being conducted by that congregation in another part of the city.

Some Principles of Religious Journalism as Related to The Brethren Evangelist

By Edwin E. Jacobs, Ph.D., President of Ashland College

(Address delivered at the late General Conference at Winona Lake)

I shall discuss my topic under five heads. The first is, the duty of the membership to take the Evangelist and then to read it sympathetically and understandingly. I take this to be important. It certainly would make no difference how well the paper were edited, nor how low the subscription price, nor how large the list of subscribers, the Evangelist will not serve the purpose for which it was founded, if our church members do not read it.

I have been in many homes of our people, and I do not always find the church paper. There are many excuses offered why it is not taken, none of which is exactly valid. No time to read it; too many other papers; too expensive; are excuses often offered, but back of them all is the real reason, viz., a lack of interest.

I suppose there are no two organizations on earth more given to printed propaganda than the Roman Catholic Church and the Socialists, of every kind and name. These have both learned the unifying effect of the printed page. I take a weekly Roman Catholic paper, and it never fails to drive home the cardinal points of the Catholic faith. And what is more, I am of the opinion that every Catholic is expected to take at least one Catholic paper.

Now, it is a well known fact, too, that there is no more unified organization on earth than the Roman church. It is, also, well known among sociologists that the socialists are always ready to defend their faith and they do so with zeal and vigor. This comes from much reading about the very thing in which they are interested. That is also more or less true of the Christian Science church. All three of these organizations propagandize constantly through the printed page.

Therefore for the sake of likemindedness, and unity of doctrine, and oneness of purpose, our membership ought to read our own church paper. And what I have said about the Evangelist goes also for all our church literature. It seems to me to be straining at a gnat and then swallowing a camel, to pick out a minor error in our publications, and then turn to and adopt the publications of others who neither believe in, nor practice, nor teach Brethren doctrine.

2. Our leaders ought to be faithful in writing for its pages. Personally, I am not much in favor of giving over our publications for the opinions of others, when we have men of the highest scholarship and the deepest devotion within our own membership. It is to be assumed that the members of our own church both believe in, and practice, our ordinances and at the same time they are just as much in earnest as other men in the right interpretation of the Bible.

The only way to make the Brethren Evangelist, Brethren, is to have Brethren furnish the bulk of its articles, control its output and contribute by pen the major part of its printed matter. I call your attention to the very name, viz.: The Brethren Evangelist. Now, I am not to be considered as narrow at all. I have the widest sympathy and am very tolerant towards those who differ from me, but if the Evangelist is not a magazine of dynamic power for our own church, among other things, then there is no use in publishing it.

I therefore want to urge, in the second place, that our own men especially those connected with our national leadership, take time to write upon topics which are vital and which we as members of the Brethren church have just as much a right to decide as those who are connected with the larger denominations.

3. The Evangelist ought to detect, evaluate, and appraise currents and tendencies in our moral and religious life.

I think that the Evangelist has a perfect right to enter upon a discussion of political issues if they involve morals or religion. A notable example of this is the temperance question, Sunday closing, War and Peace, International White Slavery, Poverty, and the like. It is a well known fact, and one to be lamented, that most of the secular press take a standpat attitude towards many of these questions and they trim and wait to see which way the wind blows before they act. Hence in order to get not only the truth, but a proper interpretation of the truth, the religious press must take a hand.

But more than this, there are always abroad certain tendencies, currents, and influences that the average reader is not always aware of. I doubt if there is any large part of this audience aware of the offerings of what we call the Radical Press. I could list, if I thought advisable, quite a considerable number of public prints which now have the most radical views to put forth and exploit. Not only radical in government, but in morals and religion. Many of these statements are plausibly put, indeed so well put, that they are apt to take the uninitiated off guard. For instance: there is today a very subtle yet persistent drive against the monogamous form of marriage. You may not be aware of it, yet authorities sense this movement, if I may so dignify it. Moreover, there is of course a very outspoken and unconcealed drive against the Eighteenth Amendment. The secular press is not very strong in its opposition. The religious press must take up the cudgel. Also, there is wide propaganda against any sort of Sunday restrictions. Moreover, there are some very foolish interpretations of the Bible these days. It seems as if every day sees a new cult or ism developed.

On the other hand, there are some very helpful currents in American life. There is, first of all, a very decided movement towards church union. How good that is, and how far we should go with it, would be a very fertile field for editorial guidance. Also there is a strong movement away from war and towards peace. This accords with our historic position on this point. There are also other wholesome tendencies in education, social uplift, and community health. These currents, while not strictly religious, affect our common faith. In general, there are currents and tendencies which are worthy of criticism and a church paper ought to be outspoken on the side of Christianity and Christian idealism. Crime, lawlessness, and widespread immoral tendencies ought to be dealt with by the religious press.

4. The Evangelist does, and ought to, serve the purpose of giving expression and impetus to our own forward movements.

The offerings for missions, the College and Seminary, and other organizations within the church, would be impossible without the Evangelist. We take it as a matter of course that all the information which we may think desirable, gets before our people but this alone is possible through the pages of our weekly paper. I am personally indebted to the present Editor more than I can say, for the general efficient publicity which he has given to the College. It is perfectly astonishing how we rely upon this organ for publicity.

But more than this, our leadership can reach the people readily and easily. This Conference would be impossible apart from the Evangelist. We neither would know its date nor the program without this paper. Leadership is important, all important. I take several religious papers which differ radically from each other and some certainly have foolish viewpoints. Yet the unhappy thing about it is, these papers have a big following. There ARE people who read them. Every issue they carry at least one cartoon. Those crude wood cuts always depicting the scholar as a fool, hard hearted, and cynical, carry home a lesson to those who do not care to read much and form opinions from sound discussions.

I say, therefore, that the Evangelist has a duty, and performs it, too, for that matter, in offering to the leadership of the church an excellent avenue for the expression of their views. I shall never forget how my own religious ideals, at least in my early life, were shaped by the writings of such men as Mason, Brown, Gillin, Tombaugh, Rench, Miller, Yoder, Harrison, the elder Bauman, Cassel, Kiehl, Kieffer, to say nothing of later men. It would be impossible to calculate the number of young minds reached, the convictions formed and the bents given by the writers in the church paper. I regard this as highly important.

5. The Evangelist ought to be, and is for that matter, so well edited both so devotional, and at the same time so intellectual, that it will appeal to a wide class of readers. I suppose there are at least a dozen magazines coming to my home, to say nothing about more than 80 which come to the College Library and to which I have access. I asked the Librarian which of these magazines had the widest reading; Be reminded first of all that they may be classified as: Scientific, Literary, General, Religious, Political.

He was of the opinion that the religious journals had the widest reading, with the scientific ones next.

Now, the Evangelist can not deal with all these subjects, nor should it, but it is worth while to note the general taste of college students. In other words, when the young people of your family pick up the several magazines which come to your home, they also ought to pick up and read the Evangelist with as much confidence that they will read something worth while as when they read other publications. There is no good reason why a religious paper should be belated intellectually and take a second place among the journalism of the world. There are good reasons for great religious journalism as well as for secular journalism. If any of you are familiar with the type of writing done now, you will agree that there is a place for at least clean journalism. If you do not believe that, reflect upon the type of writing that has been taking the Pulitzer prizes for the past several years, the majority of which are of doubtful worth.

I wonder if you have noted how your own young people regard your church publications. Do they ever read them? Is there an appeal there? Do they find therein ideas and ideals that attract them as in other papers? Just how many of our young people read the Evangelist? Perhaps a good many, but if they do, they ought to do it, not from a sense of duty but from the standpoint of finding something of genuine worth.

In still other words, the Evangelist ought to appeal because it is an example of good reading.

In closing, I would like to say that I should like to see the Evangelist add four more pages, including some book reviews, and also the advertisements of good books and clippings from other religious journals, so that we might know what the other religious journals of the world are saying.

In closing I want to quote from a letter from Elder J. H. Moore, former editor of the Gospel Messenger, the official organ of the Church of the Brethren. He says: "I read your paper and like it. I like its doctrinal ring. So far as I know, I have never met the editor of the Evangelist, but he knows how to edit a denominational paper and make it stand for the accepted principles of the church it represents. Besides being well edited, it is nicely printed and has a real artistic appearance. (Date March 13, 1929).

Testing Our Work by the Output

By Wm. H. Beachler, D.D.

Again, let us think of the work of our Ohio churches from the standpoint of evangelism. What are we to say about our output? Are we getting the maximum of results? I mean the sanest and soundest type of evangelism, motivated by only the deepest, most genuine Christian motives. I only restate what has been said again and again when I suggest that the most strategic field for sound evangelism at a minimum of cost is represented by our children. The children we win and bring to Jesus have the finest lasting qualities, as has been evidenced through a long period of observation, just as they represent the greatest possibilities for spiritual development. Are we taking advantage fully and wisely of this field? And I plead for only the highest motive in our evangelism; by which I mean infinitely more than the aim to add more numbers to the church, or to outdo our neighbor church; infinitely more than winning folks to a certain denominational standard or a particular system of theological thought. I maintain that any evangelistic motive falls short of the highest and finest if it has in mind less than the sublime object of bringing lost people into saving relation with the only redeeming and blessed Savior of mankind—the great work of bringing people to Jesus, and Jesus to people. If evangelism means less than the soul of man finding the Pearl of greatest price it fails. Finding Christ means everything. Merely joining church means little or nothing. And I am also pleading for that type of evangelism that deems it much worth while to seek out that individual who has become distant, cold, indifferent, and bring him back into vital relation with his Lord. It may be more spectacular and romantic to win new recruits, and it may sound bigger and more musical in church reports. But to hold, and to keep, and to establish, and to develop the old recruits counts for just as much in the work of Kingdom building. Jesus said, "The harvest truly is ripe." And the church that cannot point in its output to folks brought to our redeeming, transforming Christ fails tragically to measure up to the test at a most vital point.

Once more, what is the output of our Ohio churches from the standpoint of producing and developing strong character and practical Christian living, in our men and women? I am venturing to give it as my own personal, strong conviction that it goes without saying that, when the atmosphere is what it ought to be in our churches; when the ideals and standards held up are distinctly high, Christian ideals and standards; when true light takes the place of "twilight zones;" when the example set by our church boards and church leaders always rings true; when discipline is more than a mere lifeless, meaningless word; and when in our teaching we stress the fact that our living always outweighs our profession, and that the Sermon on the Mount is as certainly a part of the New Testament as the Apocalypse of Saint John—I say it goes without saying, that with the maintenance of such a program and such an atmosphere in our churches, there will follow naturally the development of men and women who are verily the “salt of the earth,” and “the light of the world.” Men and women, if you please, of strength and breadth of vision and sympathy: men and women far above contemptible, blighting, unchristian prejudices; men and women with interests beyond immediate denominational confines; men and women who measure up to the highest standards of citizenship; men and women of honor, and honesty, and chastity, and dependability; men and women who set a safe and deserving example before childhood, and who glorify God, and who reflect honor and credit upon the church. I am one who believes that much of the so-called apostasy we hear about today is due, not so much to the particular age in which we live, as it is due to the fact that sometimes churches need to ventilate their entire organization, clean house, and square their programs and policies with the teachings and standards of the New Testament. When churches fall into irregularities, and become guilty of gross inconsistencies and startling compromises, we may look for apostasy and laxity as a proof of moral decadence, and a mark of Divine rebuke and disapproval. As a church, we claim to stand for the Bible, the whole Bible, and nothing but the Bible. Certainly this is a big, bold claim. And certainly from a church that makes such a claim much may be rightfully expected. Are we developing such Christian men and women, such fathers and mothers, such citizens, such supporters of the finest and best things in our nation today as substantiate and support the claim? Let us test our work at this point by our output.

Finally, thinking of the output of our Ohio churches, are we, or are we not, encouraging our people to view with hopefulness and pleasure, each and every step in this day that looks toward a closer cooperation and a greater degree of friendliness between the endless varieties and divisions of Protestant Christianity? A great movement is on. This cannot be denied or easily dismissed. Are we going to have a part in it, and lend our support to it, or are we going to stand aloof? I am not arguing for the organic union of all Protestant bodies—not at all. But I do view with genuine pleasure and approval every effort of Protestant bodies most similar, to get closer together. There is one body with which we differ very little—so little, in fact that it is with the most slender warrant that we any longer remain apart. And for us to seek a closer union with that body would amount to an effort on our part to have some place in a great movement which aims to answer the prayer of our Lord, “That they may all be one.” From the depth of his aching heart Jesus prayed “that they might be all one,” not one hundred and fifty-seven. What are we doing about this? How long is it to go on this way? Are we going to demand that this too shall have a place in our output? Can we afford to leave it out?

I covet that this conference may be the very best in the history of Ohio conferences. I covet that the ensuing year may be a great, fruitful year in the life of our Ohio churches. I covet for our churches the presence and grace of Jesus Christ in their midst. I covet that they may be busy, and consistent, and dignified, and chaste, and worthy to be used of him. I covet for these churches that they may never divorce spirituality from practical efficiency, and that they may ever have the courage to check up on themselves and test their work by their output. I covet that their goal shall be no less at any time than the maximum of output, plus quality, at a minimum of cost. If the world of business needs the church, and it does, it also remains that the church can greatly enhance her usefulness by appropriating some of the finest and best things the business world has to offer. Jesus meant that his church should be a growing, glowing, going concern. If she is that she will produce results.

“Glorious things of thee are spoken, Zion, city of our God! On the Rock of ages founded, What can shake thy sure repose?

With salvation's walls surrounded, Thou may'st smile at all thy foes.

He whose word cannot be broken, formed thee for his own abode.”

Man's Love to God

By Zella Keller

Should we love God, and why? We should love God, because God first loved us. John 3:16 says, “For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life.” God's love for man was so great that he gave his only Son for our redemption. He gave his Son to die the cruel death on the cross, to show and to prove his love for us.

How much should we love God? Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. Yes, we should love him with all our mind. We should give our best thinking to God. We should not think, speak nor do one thing which we wouldn't want to be found doing if God should appear on the scene, in bodily form. He is always with us, but in spiritual form. He knows every deed, thought or word which comes from man. Let us love him enough to reverence him even though we do not realize his presence with us.

We prove that we love God, by keeping his Commandments. 1 John 5:3 reads, “For this is the love of God, that ye keep his Commandments. For they are not grievous.” We prove that we love God by loving his children. 1 John 5:2 reads, “By this we know we love the children of God when we love God and keep his commandments.” 1 John 4:20-21, “If a man say I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar, for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen? And this commandment have we from him, that he who loveth God, love his brother also.”

We show our love to God by spreading his Word, by working for the benefit of our community, by giving our lives in his service in the foreign fields, by singing his praises, by living for others and by holding up his Word in spite of the evils of this present day.

But are we living up to these standards? Crime is rampant. Sin is claiming the world. Today the young person is the lawbreaker. Prisons are full. The home has lost its influence and the church her power. Lust has taken the place of real love. Companionate marriage is taking the place of the real marriage vows. Pleasure is god. Men and women are pleasure-mad. The home in a real sense is gone. There is only one remedy for these conditions that confront us. Let us get back to the Bible, back to the love of God. It is still the power of God unto salvation. It alone will speak the needed message and meet the world's need.

Consider Jesus' lament over Jerusalem. "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets and stonest them that are sent unto thee; how often would I have gathered thy children together as a hen doth gather her brood under her wings, and ye would not." How well that applies to our different communities! We do not kill our prophets in bodily form, but we are trying to kill them spiritually with the vain babbling of our tongues. Sometimes we who sit in the very front pews of the church, and are ready with our amens for practically everything that is said until the preacher strikes at some sin that lies at our own door, then we are ready to stone him to death.

Think of the wonderful opportunities God gives us to make use of his word, to make ourselves useful unto him, and to prove his precious promises, yet oftentimes we are more interested in the world. We say we love God, but how much do we do for him and how much do we do for the benefit of the Kingdom? Is he satisfied with the service which we are giving him? How often he has offered us the opportunity! Are we accepting it, or are we letting it slip by until a more convenient time? If we fail, who is to blame—we or God? "Perfect love casteth out fear." He that feareth, is not made perfect in love." If the Apostle John had feared, would he have been the beloved of Christ? If Daniel had feared, would he have been delivered from the lions' den? Then to love God, we must live our lives for him, proclaim his precious Word, and follow his commandments, and such loving service will cast out all fear and we shall be made perfect in God's love.

O, that we all might be made perfect in love, that we all might be with one accord towards God and man, so that when we are called home we might hear him say, "Well done, good and faithful servant," I will make thee ruler over many things because thou hast been made perfect in thy love for Me.

A THANKSGIVING DEDICATION

President Hoover strikes a welcome note in his first Thanksgiving proclamation. Custom has so set the fashion for these documents that it is hard for a President to escape from saying just what has been said over and over again. But much of the accustomed presidential language has held implications of dubious religious value. Talk of God's "favor" in years when great portions of mankind were hungry and nearly naked has verged dangerously near to Pharisaism. Mr. Hoover has escaped this pitfall. He recounts, as have his predecessors, the nation's abundant causes for thanksgiving. But his conclusion differs: "New experiences and new knowledge in many fields have been recorded, from which a deeper wisdom may grow. We should accept these blessings with resolution to devote them to the service of Almighty God." Thanksgiving celebrated in that spirit would be what it is intended to be—a genuinely religious experience.—Christian Century.

CHURCH INTEREST IN PAGEANTRY

Last year Canterbury Cathedral, England, was the scene of a unique presentation of John Masefield's Nativity play, "The Coming of Christ." This year, in August, another Canterbury Cathedral festival of music and drama was held, lasting through an entire week. The morality play, "Everyman," was performed in the open air in front of the Cathedral and "The Tragical History of Dr. Faustus," by Christopher Marlowe, was given in the Chapter House. This Canterbury Festival is part of an effort to recover the old associations of the Church with the dramatic art.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN'S RELIGION

A new volume entitled "The Amazing Benjamin Franklin," published under the auspices of the Philadelphia Chapter of the Sons of the American Revolution, edited by J. Henry Smythe, Jr., and published by Frederick A. Stokes Co., contains two chapters which will be of special interest to church people. One is entitled "Franklin, the Advocate of Peace," being written by Joseph H. Baird, Associate Secretary of the National Council for Prevention of War. It pictures Franklin as an ardent opponent of war, quoting his famous saying that "There has never been nor ever will be any such thing as a good war or a bad peace." Another chapter discusses "Franklin, the Religious Man," and appears under the joint authorship of Dr. S. Parkes Cadman and Rev. Samuel McCrea Cavert. The discussion of Franklin's attitudes toward religion emphasizes his faith in a Divine Providence concerned with all human affairs, his conviction that religion must be tested by its fruits in life, and his confidence in immortality.

WELL-KNOWN CHURCHMEN DIE

Dr. John Roach Straton, pastor of Calvary Baptist Church, New York, died October 29 at the age of fifty-four. Dr. Straton, a native of Indiana, was educated in Mercer University, Macon, Georgia, and in the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Kentucky. He became pastor of Calvary Baptist Church in 1918. He was the leader among the militant fundamentalists of his denomination. He frequently engaged in debates on the issues of fundamentalism and modernism, atheism, and other causes which he championed. Dr. Straton was a man of great courage and spent himself in defending those causes which he believed endangered by modern tendencies. He was the author of numerous books and pamphlets on religious subjects.

Dr. George A. Gordon, retired pastor of the Old South Church, Boston, died October 25 at the age of seventy-six. For many years he had been associated with Harvard University and he was an author of numerous books on religious subjects.

Rev. E. S. Shumaker, for twenty-two years superintendent of the Indiana Anti-Saloon League, died October 25. He was a minister in the Methodist Episcopal church and a lifelong worker for prohibition. His aggressive policy as head of the Anti-Saloon League brought him into conflict with the wet forces of his State. Because of his published articles he was tried on a charge of contempt of court and sentenced to serve sixty days on the State farm. Pardoned by the Governor, he was retried, resented, and finally served fifty-three days on the State farm. Dr. Shumaker was fearless in his fight against the drink evil.—Christian Advocate.

UNIVERSITY OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

In June, 1930, the University of Southern California, founded by the Methodist Episcopal church, will celebrate its fiftieth anniversary by a semi-centennial program. Established in 1880 under the presidency of Rev. Marion M. Bovard, this institution has become a great educational center in the city of Los Angeles. During the past decade the Methodist church has raised a million and a quarter dollars to build the Bovard Administration Building as a memorial to the first president. In 1928 when the board of trustees became self-perpetuating, the School of Religion remained under the control of the church. Beginning with fifty-five students in 1880 the enrollment for the present year is 15,906.—Christian Advocate.

JOHN ELIOT'S INDIAN BIBLE FOUND

The famous pioneer work of John Eliot as a missionary among the American Indians has been called freshly to mind by the discovery of the original Old Testament which he had translated into an Indian language. The discovery was made in Exeter Cathedral, England, by Rev. W. W. Rockwell, Librarian of Union Theological Seminary, New York, in connection with a recent visit to England. He recognized the volume as a result of his having seen a copy of it in the Seminary library.

The book is dated 1661, and is the earliest known instance of the Old Testament's having been translated into a foreign tongue as a means of missionary evangelization. John Eliot's Bible is also supposed to have been the first Bible printed in America and the first book printed in an Indian language.

TOWARD CHURCH UNION

One of the main subjects of interest at the General Conference of the Evangelical Synod of North America, which met in Rochester, N. Y., October 8-15, was the proposed plan for union with the Reformed Church in the United States and the United Brethren in Christ. The proposal, the first steps of which have already received favorable action from the Reformed group and the United Brethren, was approved by the Evangelical Synod, and its officers were authorized to call a special meeting simultaneously and in the same city with possible assemblies of the other two bodies.

The General Convention of the Christian Church, at its session in Piqua, Ohio, on October 25, unanimously approved the proposed merger with the National Council of Congregational Churches. The plan had already been accepted by the Congregationalists at the meeting of their National Council, held in Detroit last May.

RURAL AND URBAN GIVING

In the state of Virginia a recent survey made of comparative budgets and contributions in rural and city churches has shown "that the average city budget is about ten times the average rural church budget, while the annual contribution per city church member is only twice as much as the contribution per rural church member." The difference is accounted for by the fact that the average city church in Virginia has a membership of 477, while the average rural church shows a membership of only 109. The rural contributor, therefore, is probably giving more in proportion to his means than the city member.

The committee which directed the survey offers the following conclusion: "Whereas, the city church member has a much higher income than the rural church member and is thus more able to support church activities, it is recommended that the city church assume more financial responsibility for the development of strong rural church work. The city church is already contributing to home missions, but the contributions are only a 'drop in the bucket' compared to the need. More funds could well be spent in conducting standard leadership training schools in communities or counties not able to support such activities. The city church could also assist with the employment of district or county directors of religious education or supervisors of young people's work."—The Congregationalist.

Daily Readings and Suggestions

(Keep with your Bible)

MONDAY

John 12:9-11; 1 Pet. 2:19-25. Lazarus was a living testimony to the grace of God and the power of Jesus Christ, and therefore the priests wanted to put him to death. We should not think it surprising when, for the same reasons, we are persecuted in various ways today; the Christian can scarcely expect to be popular among men of the world. Let us pray that God may teach us how to meet these things with Christian fortitude; and in doing so, let us remember that there are many parts of the earth where persecution is not moral, or social, but physical. God grant Christian grace and fortitude, with consolation to all such! Amen.

TUESDAY

John 12:12-19. The King cometh! What a glorious day when he shall come again, and there shall be no jealousy and no hatred! Our hearts bleed at the pathos of him who made heaven and earth riding thus gently into Jerusalem only to be rejected and put to death. And when we remember that all this was necessary that we might be saved, how we ought to love and serve him! "We love him because he first loved us."

WEDNESDAY

John 12:20-22. It is true that many see Jesus without seeing in him their Lord and Savior; on the other hand, there are countless multitudes who are still only waiting to see Jesus before they hail him as their Lord. And just as in this case they had to find him through Philip and Andrew, so these countless multitudes today will never see Jesus unless we Christians send or take the news to them. Let us then pray especially for our missionaries; let us pray that the church at large may awaken more fully to her privilege in this work; let us pray that we ourselves may do our full part—and may we consider in all honesty whether that part shall be to give and pray, or to GO.

THURSDAY

John 12:23-33. How we hang on to the things of this life, being unwilling to give up the worldly life, and yet how quickly it is all past, even for those who live longest. And then we have lost ALL! As we think how he was lifted up for us all, of how his sensitive nature shrank back from the sin and shame of the cross, let us determine anew that we will follow and serve him, no matter what the cost. Think of serving continually in his presence!

FRIDAY

John 12:34-41. Though he had done so many miracles before them, still they did not believe. Perhaps, had we been living then, we would have understood no more than they; certain it is that though he has done so much for us today, still we fail to believe much of the precious truth he has left us; and being so far blind, we rob ourselves of many priceless blessings. God remove our blindness from us, as we pray that the day may soon come when blindness shall be taken away from thy people Israel, and they may dwell in peace in Jerusalem, serving thee as their long looked for Messiah. Amen.

SATURDAY

John 12:42, 43; Rom. 12:1-3. Like Nicodemus, these men loved Jesus, but not openly; let us hope that—also like Nicodemus—they later professed him openly. God help us to love and serve thee, not only within our own hearts, but also in the eyes of all the world, that so we may point them to thee, the source of light and life.

SUNDAY

John 12:44-50. Today, Father, we pray that thy word may be spoken from every pulpit and wayside chapel throughout all the earth; as thy word is preached, may men believe, that they may walk in the light and not in darkness. May we not reject thy truth or any part of it, knowing that by it we shall be judged in the last day. And as we keep thy commandments we know that we have life everlasting, by the promise of Jesus, and by the word of God, our Father in heaven. IN Jesus' name, Amen.—T. C. L.

Should We Give the Gospel to Children?

Or Must they Wait until they are Grown up to Accept Christ as Savior?

Tomboy Taylor

By Laura Anderson

It happened in a little week day Bible class in one of the churches in Oakland. All of the fifteen children who were present that day had accepted Christ and had consecrated their lives to him in thankfulness for what he had done for them. I felt that the next thing to teach them should be "answered prayer." I had each one think of friends whom they would like to have with them in heaven. Each one, as he thought of a friend, raised his hand. Soon every hand was up and we bowed in silent prayer, each one asking God to touch the heart of this friend, so that he would take the Lord Jesus as his Savior. Then I closed with a short prayer to the same effect.

No sooner had we raised our heads than up went a hand. I asked what the trouble could be, because the girl who raised her hand wore such an anxious look. She said, "My friend is Tomboy Taylor. You said not to tell you the name, but she would never accept. She does not mind her mother and does not mind her teacher and does so many bad things."

I asked, "Do you not think that God is able to persuade her to accept?"

She answered, "No, I don't think so."

I asked the class how many did believe God was able. Only half the class raised their hands, and every one in the class seemed to know Tomboy Taylor. Then I said, "Only we who have faith shall pray."

Two weeks later, while I was teaching the class, in came this same girl dragging another behind her as though the latter were a culprit. Then the class one and all said, "There she is; Tomboy Taylor!" The poor little girl, about ten years old, had a look as though she had been arrested. Immediately I put my arm around her and refused to continue until the children saw that their attitude toward Tomboy Taylor was wrong, that the Lord Jesus wants us to win people, not to make them feel miserable.

Then, in front of the class, I explained step by step in children's language how to accept the Lord Jesus as one's Savior. I always try to get them to think of something naughty they have done; but they do not tell me what it is. We each raise our hand as we think of something naughty. I raise mine first, and I ask the saved children to do it over again to help the new one, although I made it clear to them that it is only necessary to accept Christ once. Tomboy Taylor raised her hand, and then I asked her if God wants us to do naughty things and she said, "No." Then I told her that what we call naughty things or wrong things God calls sin. He says in his Word, "All have sinned, and come short of the glory of God." God can look into our hearts and he knows that each person on earth has sinned. He said that if anybody sinned he would love heaven.

Then I asked, "How many have lost heaven if all have sinned?"

She answered, "all."

"Yes," I said. "You and I and everybody else has lost heaven. If we have all lost heaven, we all need a Savior, don't we?"

"Now God says if we will take Jesus as our Savior, Jesus will wash all the naughty things out of our hearts and make our hearts pure and white, so that we can go to heaven. If you will take Jesus as your Savior right now, so that he can wash all your sins away, raise your hand." She raised her hand.

The girls were so interested by this time that they forgot to be surprised. It had all come about so naturally. Then I asked her if she loved the Lord Jesus a lot for giving her the wonderful gift of a white heart. She said she did. Then I asked her if she loved him enough to want to give him a nice present. Again she said she did. Then I told her that the gift the Lord Jesus wanted was herself. She gave herself to him and promised to do what he wanted her to do instead of what she herself wanted to do. She also promised to tell others how to take Christ as their Savior, too. I told her to put her arms around mother's neck when she went home and tell her all about it.

After the class was dismissed, Tomboy Taylor and the girl who had brought her returned. I asked what the trouble could be, and the other girl said, "She cannot tell her mother."

I asked, "Why not? Her mother would be so glad to know about it."

The other girl replied, "Oh, no; not her mother; She is a Jewess."

A chill went over me and I wondered what was in store for me; but the Lord Jesus' command to preach the Gospel to every creature rang in my ears.

I told her that the Lord Jesus was hers now because she had taken him as her Savior and I advised her to pray and ask him what to do. She lowered her head for a moment, then said, "I don't believe Jesus wants me to keep a secret from mother. But won't my mother go to heaven?"

I answered, "Not unless she takes Jesus as her Savior."

She was almost in tears as she said, "But she won't let anybody talk to her about Jesus."

Then I told her how the children had prayed that God would touch her heart so that she would take the Lord Jesus as her Savior, and told her to pray the same prayer for her mother.

I shall never forget how her face lit up as she asked, "Can I pray for my father, too?"

I said, "You certainly can."

Her face was all aglow as she held four fingers with the other hand and said, "Oh, I have four to pray for—my mother, my father, and my two brothers."

She walked as far with me as she could on her way home, and was full of joy. As I looked at her face so radiant I wondered if children in heaven look as she did then. I suggested to her that if she would obey her mother and her teacher and try hard to please the Lord Jesus, her mother would see such a change that she would want her Savior, too.

A little later we had a party and invited every child on the roll. To my surprise, the little Jewess came, too. We always have a Bible class for half an hour with our parties, at which time I seek to lead the new children to Christ. She said, "Please let me sit right close to you, so I can hear it all over again because, you know, I have never heard it before." I let her help me tell the sweet old Gospel story to the new ones. It was as though she had memorized it, although she had only heard it once. The Holy Spirit surely did write it indelibly on her heart. The Lord has brought her to my mind a number of times since, and I have prayed that he would give her strength to take her stand for him. The children decided to call her by her real name in speaking to her. They said they could not call her Tomboy Taylor any more.

Children's Division Questions

Discussed by Mrs. E. W. Sudlow

Is it considered a good idea to have a large pulpit Bible to use in a Junior Department?

We do not very often find a large pulpit Bible being used in any department of the Sunday school, but there is no reason why one should not be a part of the desk equipment. In one school a special reading desk had been placed on the platform in the Junior room, and a Bible was wanted for it. So, during the summer, vacation banks were kept by the boys and girls, and every week some amount of self-denial money was placed in these. At the fall rally the banks were returned, and from the contents was purchased a suitable Bible for use on the desk. Reading from "our" Bible is a part of every Sunday's program.

Where can I find suitable greeting cards to send the mothers of my Cradle Roll children on special days? I should like something "different."

Any house handling Sunday school supplies should be able to furnish a variety of greeting cards that will meet with your idea of something out of the ordinary. Perhaps you might like to know how one superintendent prepared a beautiful Mother's Day greeting. A post card copy of the famous terra cotta medallions of babies done by the great sculptor, Andrea Della Robbia, for the Foundling's Hospital in Florence, Italy, was enclosed in a neat tan folder. On the card was printed "Greetings from Mother's Day Cradle Roll Department, Calvary Baptist Sunday School." One of these folders was mailed to every mother represented on the roll.

This same idea might be carried out for any special season, with the use of some suitable post card and folder.

What should be done with prize winning posters? In our Primary Department we have two which won ribbons at the State Fair a year ago. We have had them on the wall all year, but now they are becoming soiled and unsightly. What is the best method of caring for them?

I do not know of any "best" method, but I can tell you how a Junior Department

Dean Miller to Write on Sunday School Lessons

We are happy to announce that J. Allen Miller, Dean of Ashland Seminary, is to write the expositions for the Sunday school lessons in the Bible Class Quarterly beginning January first. His notes will also appear in the Teacher and in the Home Department Quarterly.

Beginning with the following quarter, Prof. Kenneth Monroe will write the notes which appear in the Youth's Quarterly.

Systematic Study of Matthew

The first six months of 1930 will present a complete and systematic study of the gospel of Matthew. This will not be merely a section here and a section there, but will include the entire gospel. Not every verse will be printed in the quarterly, of course. To do so would be to annul the incentive to become familiar with the Bible. Thorough teachers will see to it that their classes cover the entire gospel intelligently and with consequent great profit.

Organize Classes for Study

There are a number of things which a class may do by way of getting the most out of such a study as is to be offered from January to June. A class will profit but little if it is merely "present" on Sunday morning to listen to the teacher. But by active participation in the study of the gospel, by organizing for special assignments in Bible encyclopedias, by weekly meetings for special study, and in other ways the study can be made of value according as a class is willing to put itself into it.

Dean Miller as an Expositor

Many will remember the notes which Dean Miller wrote a few years ago in the Bible Class Quarterly. Whoever does so remember will recall that no one has ever surpassed him as an expositor of the Sunday school lessons. You may search the notes of other denominational publications, and will not find a better treatment than our own Dean Miller can give. We are therefore supremely happy to make this announcement now.

The editor will continue to write the "Lesson in Life" after each exposition. Dr. Jacobs is to continue as the writer of the "Social Note" in the Teacher. And Mrs. Davis simply cannot be replaced for teachers' helps in Primary and Junior Group Lessons. She will continue in the Elementary department of the Brethren Teacher.

QUINTER M. LYON, Editor.

Editor's Select Notes on the Sunday School Lesson

(Lesson for December 8)

Helping Neighbors in Need

Scripture Lesson—Matt. 25:31-46; Luke 10:25-27; James 1:27; 2:14-17.

Printed Text—Matt. 25:31-46.

Devotional Reading—Luke 6:27-36.

Golden Text—Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself.—Lev. 19:18.

Introductory Note

The printed portion of our lesson follows in the Gospel of Matthew the parable of the talents. The parable uses the figure of money to represent the responsibilities of the Christian toward his divine Master. But, it may be inquired, in which do these responsibilities consist? Jesus does not leave this question unanswered. He does not wish to leave any uncertainty on this point. So he tells another parable to show how we may serve him. The parable of the Good Samaritan also indicates how we should cultivate the neighborly spirit, and the passages in James put the same teaching into terse and vigorous principles.—Church School Journal.

When we study the parables given by our Lord we observe that they fall under two headings: 1. Those drawn from Nature, as the 'germinating seed, and the lighted candles. 2. Those drawn from human life and action, as the good Samaritan, the ten virgins, and the judgment day, (as per our lesson text). Now why introduce the second class? Because Jesus had things to say to man which Nature cannot say. Because her range of speech, though most brilliant up to a certain point, is strictly limited, and she falls dumb just when the subjects we most want to know about are to be explained. Nature has no parallel anywhere to the Freedom and Will of man, therefore she can tell nothing about the responsibility of man to God, the obligations enforced by Conscience, the sense of duty, the difficulty of obedience, the sorrowful conviction of failure, and the acceptance of pardon from God. Christ went up to the limit of Nature's teaching, and then turned off into the human story, which in comparison with her crystal clearness, and the unerring certainty of her sequences (for Nature sinned against can never forgive), seems but a mass of attempts and blunders, and failures and sorrows. This change into the confused and unhappy tale of the life of man is absolutely necessary when we are dealing with sin and the souls who are engulfed in it.—Kingdom of Heaven is Like.

The Samaritans

The Samaritans of the time of Jesus were a mixed people. When Sargon of Assyria deported a considerable part of the population to Northern Israel in 722 B. C., he sent a colony of people from outside Israel to the city of Samaria. Under later Assyrian rulers other colonies were sent. These intermarried with the remaining Israelites, but the native Hebrew element proved the strongest influence, and there was in consequence a Samaritan population who were worshippers of Jehovah, their forms of worship being somewhat modified from those of the Jews. There is a small colony of Samaritans surviving to the present day.

In the time of Jesus the Jews and the Samaritans had few dealings with one another. Each group held deep prejudices against each other, such as are frequently found among people who are closely related to one another and still have developed differences of customs and culture. There seems to have been an unusual degree of suspicion and unfriendliness between the Jews and the Samaritans.

The Separation of Sheep and Goats

"The morning after reaching Palestine, when setting out from Ramleh, across the plain of Sharon, we saw a shepherd leading forth a flock of white sheep and black goats, all mingled as they followed him. Presently he turned aside into a little green valley, and stood facing the flock. When a sheep came up he tapped it with his long staff on the right side of its head and it turned aside quickly to the right, a goat he tapped on the other side and it went to his left. Thus the Savior's image presented itself exactly before our eyes."—Broadus.

Quiet Goodness

Some people do good and make a great deal of noise and fuss about it, while others do their good deeds very quietly and unostentatiously. Then there are those who do good so seldom that they find it a real struggle when once they undertake it, while others are so constantly at it that they have come to do it almost unconsciously, as is by habit. It is illustrated by the beginner in music and the trained musician. The beginner counts his measures and studies on what note to place each finger, but the perfect musician strikes the right notes and expresses the right emotions almost as naturally as he breathes, as the birds warble their morning songs. We are apt to estimate the merit of our good deeds according to the effort we make in doing them, whereas, the greater our virtue, the less we shall have to struggle in order to do them."

Sins of Omission

Who can overcome the wrong done by the sins of omission? No one can do the deeds left undone, no one can atone for their lack. Neglecting to do the things we ought to do is the source of our greatest losses. The neglect of disease results in losses greater than can be estimated and that cannot be recalled. The neglect of care brings losses that cannot be made good. And who can recover the loss caused by failure to seize one's opportunities? If one neglects to learn to sing, it is not the chorister's fault if he is not placed in the choir. Just to do no harm does not gain the assurance of heaven.

"The story has been told of a soldier who was missed amid the bustle of a battle, and no one knew what had become of him; but they knew that he was not in the ranks. As soon as opportunity offered, the officer went in search of him, and to his surprise found that the man, during the battle, had been amusing himself in a flower-garden! When it was demanded what he did there, he excused himself by saying, 'Sir, I am doing no harm.' But he was tried, convicted, and shot. What a sad but true picture this is of many who waste their time, and neglect their duty, and could give their God, if demanded, no better answer than, 'Lord, I am doing no harm!'"

Who Is My Neighbor?

He is any one who is "down and out," any one in distress, any one whom you can help. "How near must a person live to me to be my neighbor? Every person is near to you whom you can bless. He is nearest whom you can bless most."—Channing. Your neighbor may be in the slums of your city. He may be in China or Africa.

"Thy neighbor? It is he whom thou

Hast power to aid and bless,

Whose aching heart and burning brow

Thy soothing hand may press."

Practical beneficence will go far to convince any man that the religion back of it is true. Thus the rescue missions distribute rolls and coffee before their meetings on cold winter evenings. Thus Christianity has brought into existence associated charities, and free hospitals, and almshouses, and old folks' homes, and orphanages, and many other noble and blessed institutions. The church must continue to fill them all with living, personal love, and then each of them will testify of Jesus Christ. "Kindness has converted more sinners than either zeal, eloquence or learning; and these three never converted any one unless they were kind also."—Illustrated Quarterly.

Mission News from Africa's Front Line

Yalohe, par Boali, par Bangui,
 Afrique Equatoriale Francaise.

September 12, 1929.

Dear Evangelist Readers:

In the midst of many changes, actual and pending, we write you once more.

Mr. and Mrs. Foster left us for Bellevue August 26th so that Mr. and Mrs. Kennedy could depart for their furlough September 1st.

Mr. and Mrs. Hathaway and Miss Bickel have not yet arrived.

Each morning the concession residents assemble in the church, where a sermon is delivered by one of the missionaries or native workers.

Each evening a service is held especially for Christians. Few villagers are able to attend any of our services even on Sunday. Sunday school, Christian Endeavor and the regular evening services continue to be regularly held.

The love feast was celebrated on Sunday, August 25th with an attendance of 105. We are grateful for a deepening spirit of reverence in these services.

During the recent months many traders of Semitic or semi-Semitic origin have wended their way along the Bozoum Bangui trail. Almost invariably they have halted at the village of Bandaro (formerly Yalohe's village). One or two of the cattle which accompany them have been butchered and the beef sold to whomever will buy. Many come to call upon us. While they are Mohammedans and do not attend our Christian services in the church, yet they will sit upon our veranda and listen to the Word of God as it is read to them in their own tongue. Few of them can understand either Banou or Sango, the languages of this station. We are therefore most happy to sow the seed in their hearts through the medium of the New Testament in Hausa, which fortunately we possess. One of them reads Arabic and has been given an Arabic Gospel which he reads constantly.

Yama, Yolo and Voloungou are successfully carrying on the village work. God is surely glorified by their zeal and joy in the work.

Our nine little girls continue happily in school. Some are naturally brighter than the others, but all are faithful. A special effort is being made by Miss Emmert in their behalf.

No workmen being obtainable, the older school boys, since their dismissal, have been doing valiant service in certain lines of work, such as clearing, cleaning, etc.

A death recently occurred in the hospital—due to the accidental extensive burns received through the falling and combustion of a military hut. Two other women burned also extensively are in the hospital. The prognosis for their recovery is good.

A maternity case is in the hospital convalescing. Her life was barely saved after she had suffered for two days at the hands of village doctors and midwives. The unborn child was already dead when the patient was brought to us. She was already a Christian woman and her husband has since accepted the Lord.

Garamon, our old friend, is now in the hospital. He had a narrow escape during the war, having been wounded. He is now being treated for extensive ulcerations of the feet. He is much better.

It was a day of excitement when the August mail arrived, you may be sure. After five full weeks of silence, it was indeed welcome.

Two birthdays were celebrated in August at Yalohe; and one at Bassai. Mr. Foster and Miss Tyson and Miss Myers rejoice in the added dignity of another year. What occasion for thanksgiving when another milestone is safely passed on our earthly pilgrimage!

One of our evangelists recently lost a new-born child. It was a time of severe testing for him. We praise God for at last giving him a considerable degree of victory.

One of Voloungou's children was graciously restored although death seemed imminent.

Monsieur Mcole, enroute for Bozoum, partook of afternoon tea with the missionaries on Monday, August 26th. It has been our pleasure to entertain Monsieur Lienard, commandant of Yalohe military post twice recently at the Station. We pray that we may touch the lives of all men for Christ.

Three of us are waiting and serving together. How soon our guests will arrive from both directions we do not know. For Mr. Hathaway's party consisting of himself and wife and Miss Bickel and Mr. Kennedys' party, consisting of himself and wife and two children, are to meet here. Mr. Kennedy's party will be augmented at Yalohe by Miss Tyson and Miss Emmert, who are also leaving for furlough. Miss Myers expects to accompany the Kennedys to Yalohe for a brief visit here.

Above all things we praise God that in the midst of almost impossible conditions, with doors closed on every hand, souls are being saved here.

Scarcely ever do the evangelists return from their daily rounds without reporting souls saved in the villages. Several accept daily at the dispensary, which is now the only contact of station and village, aside from itineration. We continue to praise him for his Omnipotence and wondrous faithfulness, and nothing daunted, bid you join us as we press forward, remembering him who is our victory.

F. N. GRIBBLE.

Argentina, South America

October 6 to 13 Antonio Caramutti, of Rosario, came to visit his former schoolmate, Brother Romaneghi, and preached a week in Rio Cuarto. He is a very able preacher and a large number accepted Christ. Four were baptized during the week past and the others will be indoctrinated and prepared as rapidly as possible. This week these two are holding a meeting in Almafuerite and this will be followed by several other meetings.

October 17 to 21 I helped Brother Iztueta in Laboulaye. On the 22nd we dedicated the new building. On the 25th we baptized seventeen converts that have been preparing for some time. The baptismal service was followed by the Lord's supper in which thirty-five participated.

The work in Laboulaye has been handicapped by false workers who preceded us and others that have tried to destroy our work. The Romanists also have a number of monks and a large number of nuns who do their best to destroy our work.

But Brother Iztueta works quietly and persistently, making it his aim to secure quality rather than quantity in the congregation. As a result the church is known for the good work it is doing and is gaining the respect and confidence of the people.

The site was purchased four years ago and comprises two large lots located within a square of the central plaza where the important buildings of the town are located, such as the municipality, the national bank, the public school, the police station, the post office, the church, and the principal business houses. On the other side it is only four squares to the station. A beautiful new station is to be built beginning next month. Railway shops are also to be built at the same time. The population of the town is already close to twelve thousand and will double in a few years.

The building we dedicated provides for future growth. The pastor has a nice residence with study, two bed rooms, bath room and kitchen, washroom, workshop and garage, while the temporary hall in the form of a large closed-in porch accommodates over a hundred people now and will serve for class rooms and social meetings, etc., when the permanent hall can be built in front. At the side one entire lot remains for garden and play ground. The latter is an important item in the success of our work. There is also a well and a cistern with capacity for 300 barrels of water. The water, unfortunately, in this town is nearly all salty. The building presents a beautiful appearance and is attracting the attention of the entire town. The constructor donated work worth several hundred dollars and says that he is getting requests to build other houses like it, as for economy, commodity and beauty it is a model.

Brother Iztueta has saved us hundreds of dollars by his own work on the building. He is one of those men who along with a profound knowledge of the Bible is able to do the work of a mason or carpenter or electrician and do it well, and instead of losing the respect of the thinking people he has gained their respect.

In my dedication sermon I spoke of the true temple which is built of living stones, the true believers. The building made by hands is only an instrument for service. The Romanists in Laboulaye are soon to erect a building costing more than thirty times as much as ours. They are begging the money from the merchants and everybody who will give, but they will not witness the conversion of lost souls in it.

On the other hand our work has been the means of a number of remarkable conversions of well known sinners whose changed lives are compelling the admiration of the town.

What we need is not so much great buildings as great men. A good pastor will have many conversions anywhere while a poor one will have them nowhere. One denomination has spent great sums in large churches in different towns in this country and the work has gone down in them.

The first day I was in Laboulaye we had a funeral. A woman only recently converted, died. Her husband also accepted Christ, but has not yet been baptized. The rest of the relatives are Catholics, and as there is a tiny babe which must be cared for by them, the husband was overpowered by them and they brought in the priest who proudly took charge of the funeral. He gained nothing by his farce however, as everyone knew that the deceased was not of his fold.

Then the last day we had another funeral. A girl of fourteen passed away. The stepmother has been converted and the father, a notoriously bad man, has been deeply touched by the brotherly love manifested by the evangelicals, and gave us full charge of the funeral. The Catholic neighbors and friends, finding they could not do anything, did not participate. We had a sermon at the watch meeting and another at the funeral and the town was astonished to see so large a funeral procession of evangelicals. We believe that the work in Laboulaye is now in a condition to grow much more rapidly. Pray that the unity and consecration now manifest may continue.

The congregation is paying the rent of a hall on the other side of the railway where there is good attendance and quite a number have already been converted. Pray for this promising work.

C. F. YODER.

one will go to another church to be with the mother. Although not large in numbers this was considered one of the best meetings experienced by the members of this church. May the Lord continue to keep and use and bless Brother Coleman during many years to come.

H. E. EPPLEY, Pastor,

HAGERSTOWN, MARYLAND "The Gateway to the South"

Our fall revival campaign under the leadership if Brother R. Paul Miller as evangelist is over but we pray that the good results may continue to accrue for a long time. May the church draw interest on the investment for many months to come, yea, for many years. Only eternity can measure the good done.

The church feels certain that the campaign was a good investment. The evangelist proved himself a "workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." We have had some of our best evangelists in this church but Brother Miller is listed here among the best and this church is glad to recommend him to all of our churches that seek an evangelist who is able, sincere, humble, sympathetic, hard-working and helpful to a high degree to all the people.

It was a real pleasure and privilege on the part of the pastor to work with Brother Miller. Cooperation is the word. The weather was ideal, Maryland's best, none better. The attendance was very good. The interest grew gradually as is usually the case way down east. Thirty-five tells the result in numbers. Twenty-one were by confession of faith, while fourteen reconsecrated and rededicated their lives. Nineteen of the twenty-one have been baptized.

The whole church has been revived. Interest in prayer and Bible study has been quickened. May the Lord continue to bless and use Brother Miller as a flaming evangelist holding up the cross before lost souls. The positive note and "true to the Book" characterized all of his preaching. The question box was an interesting and helpful feature. It seemed that he answered "a thousand questions."

May the gradual progress that has characterized the work of this church through the years be speeded up by this revival campaign. Yours for many victories in him.
G. C. CARPENTER.

REVIVAL AT HAGERSTOWN

After a very happy closing at Winchester, Virginia, we came to Hagerstown and began a three weeks' meeting with Brother Carpenter and his good folks. We found the meetings well advertised, and the papers continued to liberally support the services. This was a great help and was a large factor in the fine attendance that characterized the entire meeting from the first night.

This was the first time we had ever worked in a meeting with Brother Carpenter and he proved to be a most capable and willing leader in everything. Every suggestion was taken and put into action without delay. This man is a hard worker every day. The high esteem in which his fellow ministers in Hagerstown hold him is shown by the fact that they have made him president of their ministerial association. We also found that Mrs. Carpenter, while not so prominent, to be invaluable in a thousand ways for the strengthening of the work,

ROANOKE REVIVAL

We opened the Roanoke meeting Monday, October 7. The Lord blessed us with the most wonderful weather for a meeting that we have ever experienced. Warm, pleasant days, and beautiful Virginia moonlight nights, with the splendid Christian fellowship, made our stay seem all too short.

We made our home with the Eppleys. Perhaps the most appreciative thing we can say is, we felt perfectly at home. Mrs. Eppley is a woman of long experience in furnishing a pleasant, comfortable home for a preacher and we can testify to her ability.

Brother Eppley directed the music, and we need not tell Brethren readers, that it was done in a most efficient way. The folks sang, they were ready for the message, and that is the highest compliment one can pay an evangelistic song leader. We appreciated Brother Eppley more because we have had much to do with song directors in times past.

This letter must not be too long, but we would like to tell you about the church there and some of their problems, and ask that you might pray for them as they face these things. Some losses have come from time to time until the membership is reduced to less than 100. Much of this dates years back and no need to rehearse it now. The fact is that we have a handful of the most willing and hard working folks you will meet. They are in average circumstances, but willing to make any sacrifice which they are called upon to make.

The colored district is gradually being extended until but two free blocks remain between them and our church. In Virginia, as well as elsewhere, that means but one thing—move. We have property there valued at $8,000.00. Parsonage $5,800, church building $2,200. It is going to be a big sacrifice when they come to sell. A new location must be purchased and a unit built. Therefore we did not have a very attractive proposition to offer those seeking church affiliations.

Brother Eppley has a mighty big job confronting him and he needs the united prayers of the brotherhood if he is to succeed in the face of the limited resources of his people.

This letter would not be complete without mention of the young people of the Roanoke church. We have seen larger groups, but none more loyal. They were there every night, singing, praying, doing personal work. We grow optimistic regarding the future for the Roanoke work when we think of those young people. They were a great source of blessing and inspiration to the evangelist.

May God richly bless pastor and people as they face these and other problems. Let us unite in praying for Eppley and his work.

FRANK G. COLEMAN.

Flora, Indiana.

FIRST CHURCH, ROANOKE, VIRGINIA

It doesn't seem possible, but a year has passed since we drove into Roanoke on a Saturday night in November. It was dark when we arrived and we were naturally very anxious to see daylight and the city. The next morning brought us to the church where we met for the first time the good people of the Roanoke church. Since then many things have taken place. There have been some improvements materially, numerically, and spiritually. There have been very few losses. In spite of the fact that this past year was the first we have spent among southern people I believe some substantial gains have been made within the church. We are sincerely hoping for larger gains during this year and we believe it will be possible, as we know people and field better and they know us better.

We were very fortunate in securing the services of Brother Coleman to lead us in our evangelistic campaign this year. He came a total stranger to the church people here, but it was not long until he was well acquainted. We appreciate the privilege of having him in our home and when he left it seemed as though one of the family had departed. It is needless to say that he preached the truth fearlessly and that his sermons were appreciated. I have only heard the warmest kind of expressions since he left relative to his work among us. Roanoke church can never be what it was before he came, as it has been lifted up in a spiritual way. The numerical results of the meeting were thirteen. Twelve of these will be united with the Brethren church and

We believe that the Hagerstown church has a real field ready for expansion in a large way and that it only waits for the members of the church to realize it and rise up and take advantage of the opportunity. Hagerstown is in need of the gospel which the Brethren church teaches, one which is pure and free from all drift toward the lifeless formalities of many more unworthy religious bodies.

During the meetings the folks from nearby Brethren churches showed a splendid spirit of brotherly interest by frequent attendance. Brother Benshoff and his people from Waynesboro, Brother Baker and his folks from St. James, Maryland, Brother Homer Kent made the eighty mile trip from Washington, D. C., with some of his folks one night, and to cap it all a delegation of over forty came with their Pastor, Brother Rohart, forty miles from Winchester in a driving rain. There is certainly a fine spirit among the churches of this southern district.

I dare not start mentioning their hospitality, for I could not find superlatives equal to the occasion! This will suffice to describe: I ate but one meal a day while there and gained two pounds in spite of it! My home was with Brother and Sister Bentz who did everything that could be done to make my stay happy, and I shall never forget them for it. Hagerstown is the home of Brother Tombaugh, former President of Ashland College, and I found him to have recovered splendidly from his last illness and to be in vigorous mind and gaining in strength bodily. The offering I received was most generous, but just what you would expect from such people. May the Lord bless our dear folks at Hagerstown and keep them faithful to himself until he appears to claim his church from earth. R. PAUL MILLER.

P. S. Am now in a meeting in Washington, D. C., where Homer Kent is pastor, and will go from here to Masontown, Pa., on December 1st. R. P. M.

LOYALTY DAY AT DAYTON

It occurs to me that a brief report of "Loyalty Day" at Dayton might be of interest to Brethren young people everywhere as the idea is entirely original and well worth while trying.

It seems that in view of the quite common complaint that young people are unconcerned about the church, it occurred to a group of them at Dayton that they would try to demonstrate to the church and especially to their new pastor, Brother Barnard, that they were loyal and willing to work. As they began to plan, their plans grew and assumed quite large proportions, culminating in their demonstration of loyalty in a very fine program last Sunday. They took complete charge of the Sunday school and church and had the finest rally and program that I have ever attended. The program was preceded by a week of splendid advertising and personal work. Newspapers carried articles during the week and printed posters and arrows leading to the church covered the section of the city. The effect of the personal work was sent in the fact that while the average attendance at Sunday school in the immediate past was less than five hundred, over a thousand were present on that day. Myron Kem who instigated the program acted as Superintendent of the Sunday school for the day and the other offices were filled by young people with several of us being asked in from the outside to teach the older classes.

Orchestra music and other fine special features were given by the young people. After classes, the merged service continued with Congressman Fitzgerald, myself, and the pastor as speakers. The whole service was very completely worked out and carried through. The young people are to be congratulated upon the success of the entire program and also the older people for being willing to let them go ahead with it—a thing which, strange as it seems, the older people are not always willing to let them do. The spirit and enthusiasm manifested by all was exceptionally fine and an inspiration to the writer, as well as, I believe, to all that were present. R. R. HAUN.

THE NOBILITY OF WORK

Can you tell me, my pastor, what part of God's likeness clings to a man longest, and closest, and best? No! Then I will tell you. It is the love of employment. God in heaven must create himself a universe to work on and love. And now we sons of Adam, the sons of God, cannot rest without our mundus peculiaris of some sort—our world subjective, as Doctor Musophilus has it. But we can create too, and make our little sphere look as large as a universe.—C. Kingsley.

OHIO CONFERENCE MINUTES

Wednesday Evening

The Wednesday evening session began with an organ prelude by Miss Charlotte Teeter. After singing, "Jesus Shall Reign," Dr. J. Allen Miller read the Second Psalm and after a brief comment led in prayer.

Rev. Chauncey Sheldon, returned Missionary on furlough from our African field, spoke very impressively of our work on that dark continent. He made a comparison of the size and population of the country with our own. He then gave a brief account of their religion. However, in the face of the obstacles and enemies the field is promising and challenging. Fields are being opened as a result of faith and prayer. "May we as a Brethren church not lose these opportunities open to us in Africa," was his final appeal.

An offering was lifted which amounted to $8.05. Miss Hurdle, director of voice at the College sang, "If God So Clothed the Grass."

The evening sermon was brought by Rev. A. E. Whitted of the Louisville church. He spoke from the words of the text: "We Would See Jesus," choosing as his theme: "Vision and Victory." In this splendid message he answered the following questions: "Why would men see Jesus?" How can we see Jesus? and what are the results of seeing Jesus?"

After this inspiring message and the singing of "Oh, Zion Haste Thy Mission Here Fulfilling," Rev. Whitted pronounced the benediction.

Thursday Morning

The Thursday morning session began at 9:00 with the singing of "We'll Work Till Jesus Comes" and "Standing on the Promises." Rev. Wm. Gearhart led the devotions, reading from Phil. 4:1-13 and then led in prayer.

Minutes of previous session were read and approved. Credential committee reported additional delegates, bringing the total to 39 ministerial with 26 present and 50 lay. Report accepted.

Committee on Committees reported the following: College Trustees: B. F. Zercher, D. S. Workman, N. G. Kimmel; Church Comity: Dr. Geo. S. Baer, Rev. L. V. King and Dr. Martin Shively. Report accepted by Conference. Rev. R. D. Barnard made a brief report on the Shipshewana Booster Committee's work for the past year. Open discussion followed. Conference then authorized the paying of the Brethren Publishing Co.'s Bills as follows:

Conference Programs, $12.00; Report of Mission Board, $4.50; Semi-Centennial Programs, $2.50; Constitution and By-Laws, $16.50; Total, $35.00.

Dr. Miller spoke in behalf of Ohio's Semi-Centennial Program of Progress in regard to financing the program. Moved and carried that expenses of the Promotion Committee be drawn from the Conference Funds not exceeding $100.

Place of next year's conference then taken up. An invitation was received from Brother Sibert to meet at Ellet, Ohio. Conference accepted the invitation.

Time of next year's conference was then discussed. After a lengthy discussion the matter was referred to a committee of five appointed by the Moderator, and to report at a later session.

The Secretary was allowed the usual fee of $10.00.

Song, "Sing the Wondrous Love of Jesus." Prayer by Rev. A. L. Garber. The meeting was then turned over to an open session of the W. M. S. After a song and devotions by Mrs. Sarah Keim, Mrs. Sheldon gave an address on Africa and then showed many African relics and curios.

After singing, "I Love to Tell the Story," Dr. Miller brought the second Bible Lecture of the Conference. He gave an exposition of Hebrews 1:1-4, centering his thoughts around the general theme, "God has spoken to us through his Son Jesus Christ." He stressed four main points,—namely, God, Jesus Christ, Man, and God's message. After this message the benediction was pronounced by Dr. Miller.

Thursday Afternoon

The afternoon session began at 1:30 with songs, "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name" and "In the Cross of Christ I Glory." Rev. O. C. Lemert, pastor of the Bryan church read from 1 Corinthians 9 and then led in prayer. Song, "We Praise Thee, O God."

The afternoon program centered around the theme, "Congregational Responsibility." Prof. Chas. Anspach spoke on "Congregational Responsibility to our Publishing Company." Rev. Floyd Sibert on "Congregational Responsibility to our Mission Work." After a splendid number on the organ by Mrs. Lyon, Prof. Haun spoke on "Congregational Responsibility to Reform Movements." These addresses were timely and instructive. Conference recommended the printing of Prof. Haun's manuscript in the Evangelist.

The afternoon conference then adjourned and the W. M. S. had a session in the main auditorium addressed by Mrs. Briscoe, while the ministers held a session in the basement of the church.

Thursday Evening

After a very beautiful organ prelude by Miss Teeter the conference was opened by singing, "His Way With Thee" and "We're Marching to Zion." Devotions were led by Rev. Everett Neiswonger, pastor of the Rittman church. He read from the second Chapter of Ephesians and then led us to the throne in prayer.

Mrs. Loren Black read for us a beautiful selection entitled "Legend of a Twilight Bell." Rev. Floyd Shirey was then ordained to the ministry. This service was in charge of Dr. J. Allen Miller, Rev. Dyall Belote and Prof. Melvin Stuckey. This was a very sacred and touching service. The first address of the evening was brought to us by Rev. Dyoll Belote, pastor of the entertaining church, on the theme: "If the Church Has Lost Her Grip on Her Young People, Wherein Does the Failure Rest?"

This was a splendid defense of youth today. What youth needs is an example on the part of adults rather than unhelpful rebuke. Conference requested this manuscript be published in the Evangelist.

An offering was lifted which amounted to $8.70. Announcements were then made after which Mrs. Haun sang very impressively, "The Lord is My Shepherd."

The evening sermon was brought by Rev. H. C. Marlin, pastor of the Pleasant Hill church on the subject: "The Power of God." After showing in a striking way the failure of programs, organizations and churches apart from the Cross of Christ, he stressed the need of preachers and church workers seeking the power to be found in the Cross of Christ.

Congregation sang, "In the Cross of Christ I Glory" and benediction was pronounced by Rev. Marlin.

Friday Morning

The Friday morning session began at 9:00 o'clock with Vice-Moderator Dr. R. R. Teeter, in charge. After singing, "How Firm a Foundation," Rev. Flora read from Job 28 and 40:3-5, and then led in prayer.

Minutes of Thursday's session were read and approved. Credential Committee made its last report bringing the total of ministerial to 43, with 28 being present and 59 lay. The report was accepted and Committee discharged with thanks.

The election was then held which resulted in the following: Moderator, Dr. J. C. Beal; Vice-Moderator, Rev. R. D. Barnard, and Secretary-Treasurer, L. V. King. Committee on Committees: Dr. Geo. Baer, Dr. Teeter and Prof. Monroe.

The Ohio Mission Board offered the following quarterly apportionment, which was accepted by conference:

	Amount per Quarter

West Alexandria .....	13.50
Williamstown .....	15.00

The Resolutions were then read and accepted, as follows:

Whereas God has blessed us in the past year and permitted us to assemble in conference we deem it our privilege as well as our duty to return unto him praise, honor and thanksgiving, be it therefore resolved:

1. That we reaffirm our faith in him, not only as a source of blessing, but also as the proper recipient of our undivided allegiance, and that in testimony thereof we as members of the Brethren church, lay more emphasis upon those doctrines and practices which characterize our attitude toward him and his teachings.

2. That we as a Brethren Church of the State of Ohio, pledge ourselves to the loyal support of Ohio's Semi-Centennial Progress, as adopted by our State Conference.

3. That we as a conference express our appreciation for the inspiring messages brought by Brother and Sister Sheldon; that with this broader vision we pledge greater loyalty to our Foreign Mission programs; also to our Home Mission program and for the extension of our Home Base.

4. That we extend to the members of the Faculty of the College our thanks and appreciation in behalf of their faithful and loyal support to this conference program.

5. That we express our deep appreciation to the Brethren and friends of Ashland for the efficient and hospitable manner in which they have received and entertained the members of this conference, and pray the good Father to shower upon them his richest blessings in the years to follow.

O. C. LEMERT,
G. E. McDONALD,
W. S. CRICK.

Rev. R. D. Barnard, Chairman of the Promotion Committee of Ohio's Semi-Centennial Program of Progress gave a further report of the Committee's work. Dr. Beal, Chairman of Committee on time of next year's conference reported the first full week after closing of high school and college in June. Moved and carried that the matter be deferred to a special called business session at the afternoon meeting.

The 10:00 o'clock hour was given over to problems of the rural church. Rev. Wm. Gearhart spoke on the theme: "Can it Have an Adequate Leadership? How and Who?" Rev. Geo. Pontius, "Can it have an Adequate Program, How and What?" Rev. Grant McDonald, "Can it have an Adequate Equipment, How and When?"

These timely messages were helpful and all stressed the need of having adequate leadership, program and equipment in our rural churches. This is possible and the rural church should receive the support of the church as a whole. Open discussion followed by Brethren Baer, Barnard, Stuckey, Miller, Gearhart and Teeter.

After singing "I Love to Tell the Story" the third and last Bible lecture was brought by Dr. J. C. Beal on the subject, "The Names and Nature of God." He referred to two of the four names given in the Old Testament for God and gave the meaning of each. God reveals himself by his names. (1) He is a covenant keeping God, the God of Love. (2) He is the God of truth and righteousness.

After announcements the session closed with benediction by L. V. King.

Friday Afternoon

The afternoon session began at 1:30 by singing, "Draw Me Nearer." Rev. Grant McDonald read from Romans 8:1-17 and led in prayer. Business was then taken up. Previous motion in regard to time of next year's conference was then further considered. The motion was then put to a vote and carried.

There was some discussion in regard to laymen's work in the State.

The Auditing Committee reported that books of Ohio Mission Board were found correct.

Minutes of previous session read and approved with vote of thanks for secretary's work.

At the 2:00 o'clock hour Rev. Q. M. Lyon brought a message on the topic: "World Peace—the Churches' Responsibility There-to." This was a very vital and timely message. The congregation then sang, "Throw Out the Lifeline," after which Prov. Melvin Stuckey led in a round table discussion on Sunday school problems. Rev. Belote, Whitted, Beal, Sibert and Marlin entered into the discussion. The hour spent was a very profitable one.

After announcements and singing, "I Love to Tell the Story," the benediction was pronounced by Dr. Teeter.

Friday Evening

The evening session was opened at 7:30 with an organ prelude by Mrs. Lyon. The devotional period was conducted by Dr. Martin Shively by singing "Wonderful Words of Life" after which he read from Matthew 7:13-27 and led in prayer.

Mrs. Harvey Amstutz from the Smithville church sang, "The Old Rugged Cross." An offering was lifted which amounted to $11.61. This offering was turned over to Rev. John Locke. The College Quartette sang, "Jesus Savior, Pilot Me."

Prof. A. L. DeLozier in his unique and very interesting way spoke on the theme: "The Ability of the Church to Readjust Herself to a Changing Order."

Rev. John Locke, secretary of the Virginia State Religious Education Association, and pastor of the church at Harrisonburg, Virginia, gave a very entertaining message on the subject, "The Church's Responsibility for Religious Education." The conference session was brought to a close by singing, "God be With You Till We Meet Again" and the benediction was pronounced by Dr. J. Allen Miller.

Thus has ended another splendid conference of the Ohio Brethren churches. The conference attendance was not as large as some due to the very rainy and snowy weather. Yet the number of delegates was exceeded only by the conference held at Clayton in the year 1924.

L. V. KING, Secretary.

took care of its premium winning posters. The department had seventeen when I visited it. All had a definite story to tell and were worth preserving. An inexpensive frame had been made for each, thus protecting the card and its attached ribbon, and these adorned the walls of the main assembly room of the department, also some of the classrooms. The frames were made by two men of the church who took pride in the accomplishments of the boys and girls. While it might not bet well to give such framed posters the most prominent place in the room decorations, still there ought to be a corner where they may be hung.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

The effort to supply the mountain schools of the South with helpful Christian literature, by the Bible Institute Colportage Association of Chicago, is meeting with marked success. Already this literature, consisting of the Moody Colportage Library books, the Evangel booklets, Pocket Treasures, Gospels of John and Gospel tracts, has been placed in over 2,000 of these schools. It is the desire of the Association to reach 5000 such schools in this way, if possible. In this plan, the Association gives a New Testament to any scholar who memorizes certain Bible verses.

Any one who desires this splendid Christian literature for free distribution in the Mountain or Pioneer schools is invited to address the Bible Institute Colportage Association at 843-45 N. Wells Street, Chicago.

OSCEOLA, INDIANA

The Brethren church of Osceola, Indiana, will hold dedication services Sunday, December 1st. Brother Irvin Duker of the Elkhart church will be the speaker. We extend a special invitation to the churches of northern Indiana to be with us on that day.

On December 2, we will begin our revival meeting. Brother C. A. Stewart of Mexico, Indiana will conduct these meetings, and Brother Glenn Wagner of Goshen will have charge of the song services. We are a small body here and need your help and your prayers. Pray for us.

MRS. MABEL HUMES,
Church Correspondent.

Osceola, Indiana, Route 1, Box 68A.

ELLET, OHIO

The First Brethren church of Akron (Ellet) Ohio will observe Holy Communion on Monday evening, December 2. All Christian people of like faith are invited to participate in this service.

FLOYD SIBERT, Pastor.

THE TIE THAT BINDS

HUMMEL-MILLER—On October 19, Mr. Carl Hummel, son of Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Hummel and Kathryn Miller, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Miller, were united in marriage. The ceremony was performed at the home of their pastor, Rev. George Pontius, at Ashland. After the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Hummel left for a trip through the east. On their return they will make their home with the groom's parents. We join with a host of friends in wishing them joys of joy and happiness and pray that God may further use them in his work.

GEORGE PONTIUS.

IN THE SHADOW

SOLOMON—Silas Walton Solomon was born April 24, 1861, at Mill Run, Fayette County, Pennsylvania. Left an orphan at an early age he was educated at the Soldiers' Orphan school at Unionville, near Uniontown, Pennsylvania, and later attended Madison Academy at Uniontown. He was married to Miss Annie M. Davis, to which union seven children were born, and all of whom grew to manhood and womanhood. He passed away at the home of his daughter, Mrs. A. R. Baer, at Muncie, Indiana, on Monday, November 11, at the age of 68.

In early years Silas Solomon united with the Baptist church, but later cast his lot with the Brethren church, being a charter member of the First Brethren church, of Uniontown, Pennsylvania, in which group he served as a deacon through all the years.

"Decease" Solomon, as he was lovingly called by his friends, was a victim of the White Plague, and death came to him as a merciful release from intense suffering. He is survived by his widow, two sons, four daughters, fifteen grandchildren. A daughter and two grandchildren were waiting on the other shore to welcome his home-coming.

Funeral services for Brother Solomon were held at the First Brethren church, at Uniontown, Pennsylvania, on Thursday afternoon, November 14, in the presence of a large concourse of relatives and friends. By the special request of the deceased the undersigned had charge of the services. Comfort was brought to the bereaved from Psalm 17:15, and assistance was rendered in the service by Elder George H. Jones, a friend of the family and Elder Frank Gehman, pastor of the Uniontown church. Burial was made in Park Place Cemetery.

And so another of God's servants has entered into the rest which is the heritage of those who have been faithful, and who know him are left with but memories to cherish. May those memories serve to spur us to greater constancy and devotion. Peace to the ashes and God rest the soul.

DYOLE BELIOTE.

BICKLEY—Elias G. Bickley passed away very suddenly October 21, 1929, at the home of his son, Dr. W. H. Bickley of Waterloo, Iowa. Mr. Bickley was born at Meyersdale, Somerset County, Pennsylvania, December 11, 1848. At the age of 12 he came with the rest of the family to join his father, Elder E. K. Bickley, in Blackhawk County, Iowa. In 1875 Mr. Bickley was united in marriage to Miss Arabella Schuck of Orange township. Mrs. Bickley and a daughter, Alice Margaret Bickley, have preceded him in death. A son, Dr. W. H. Bickley, survives.

Funeral services were conducted by Elder A. P. Blough, of the Church of the Brethren, and the undersigned.

S. M. WHETSTONE.

TRENT—Mrs. Jennie Stutzman Trent, daughter of Elias and Susanna Coleman Stutzman and wife of Geo. H. Trent, died October 25th, 1929.

Mrs. Trent was born at Listie, Pennsylvania, July 4th, 1862. She was a life-long member of the church and was ever faithful to attendance to the services. Her many friends discovered in her quiet, unassuming life beautiful characteristics of the Christian life.

She is survived by her husband, Geo. H. Trent, of Listie, Pennsylvania, and by three daughters, Mrs. Carrie Ayers, Los Angeles, California; Mrs. Nettie Palmer, Uniontown, Pennsylvania, and Mrs. Millard Shaffer, Listie, Pennsylvania. The funeral was conducted by the writer.

H. W. NOWAG.

YOUNG—Bertha Young, fourteen-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Young of Ellet, Ohio, died at her home in North Arcene, November 10, 1929. She was baptized and received into full fellowship with the First Brethren church, January 22, 1928. She was a faithful and loyal worker for her Master and remained so until death. Though she came without her parents, Sunday found her "in the Temple about (her) Father's business." "And a little child shall lead them." This she endeavored to do but our hearts are saddened by the fact that a parent has failed to heed the pleading of a little child's heart now grown still. Brethren who read this, pray that her last request might be granted.

Oh! call it not death, 'tis new life begun,
For the waters are passed, and home is won;

NOTICE OF CHANGE OF HOME MISSION HEADQUARTERS

ON AND AFTER DECEMBER 20 ALL OFFERINGS AS WELL AS OTHER MATTER PERTAINING TO THE WORK OF THE HOME MISSION BOARD SHOULD BE ADDRESSED TO
R. PAUL MILLER, BERNE, INDIANA

Anything sent to Brother Gearhart in Dayton after that date will only have to be re-mailed by him to Berne, for the office of the Board is being moved to Berne at that time.

If Pastors and Church Officers will carefully keep this in mind it will avoid a great deal of delay and misunderstanding.

XXXI—WHITE GIFTS FOR OUR KING

By S. M. Whetstone, Vice President, National Sunday School Association

As we approach the season made joyful by the birth of our Lord Jesus, some questions come before us. For example, Whose birthday is it? Who gets the gifts? Are we consistent in our giving? Do we give because of God's gift to us, or are we giving expecting a gift in return? Is it not true that something is wrong about Christmas? Everybody is complaining; clerks, mail carriers, fathers, mothers. Something must be wrong when people spend more than they can afford, when so many are complaining and dreading the Christmas season.

It is the birthday of our blessed Lord, but with all our spending and all of our giving, he gets mighty few of the gifts. How would you feel if on your birthday your friends would bring their gifts and give them to each other and none to you? Is it not time that Christian people put Christ in Christmas, and let the day really mean something?

Your National Sunday School Association comes to you with the appeal for White Gifts for our Lord Jesus. We urge you to make this a real birthday of the King of kings, and Lord of lords. This you can do properly by the three-fold giving; SELF, SUBSTANCE, and SERVICE. How proper that at this season you should give YOUR-SELF to Christ and his Church! How fitting that you should give of your SUBSTANCE to the National Sunday School Association for Kentucky Missions, Christian Education and Field work! What a wonderful opportunity for you to offer to him YOUR SERVICE in his Ministry, Missionary Service, Teaching, or Young People's Work!

Your Sunday School Association appeals to you to make this Christmas REAL. Place at the head of your Christmas list him whose birthday it is. Make it a HOLY DAY, not merely a holiday. Give Christ a place in your HEART and your HOME. Sunday schools, Superintendents, Pastors and Teachers, we appeal to you to make the influence of this Christmas lasting. The day demands it, the cause needs it and our King is worthy of it. May this be the greatest Christmas in the history of the Brethren Church because of our three-fold gifts of SELF, SUBSTANCE and SERVICE.

Signs of the Times

by
Alva J. McClain

INTEREST in the Bible

The signs of the times are not all discouraging. On every hand there is a deep hunger for the Bread of Life, a real desire to know more of the things of God. A class in Christian Doctrine, begun in Long Beach a few weeks ago by the writer, has an attendance which runs between two hundred and two hundred and fifty. Of these, ninety have registered to do the assigned work and take regular examinations. In the group, seven different denominations are represented.

Another class, dealing with the somewhat technical subject of "The Sources and History of the English Bible," is attended by about two-thirds as many as are in the Doctrine class.

Long Beach offers a wonderful field for this kind of work, but the same hunger for Truth exists everywhere. Opportunities were never greater for the "teaching Church."

THE "Miracle" Shrine

Newspaper headlines announce that hundreds of thousands of the sick and infirm are visiting the grave of a Catholic priest in Massachusetts, hoping to receive miraculous healing. Among the seekers after health are people prominent in American life. The caretaker of the cemetery keeps a record of "cures."

Anyone who follows the history of these "miracle shrines" will notice that they generally appear in Roman Catholic cemeteries, and that they are always well advertised.

No thoughtful Christian will scoff at the pathetic crowds of seekers after healing for the body. But they should be reminded that God has promised healing in answer to prayer, and that God is able to answer prayer offered up from any spot on earth. He is not bound to Roman Catholic cemeteries. The sole condition is that the prayer must be according to the Will of God. Meet that condition, and your prayer will be answered even though it be offered, like Jonah's, from the belly of the whale. The power of God is not tied up to "holy water" and "relics of the dead."

But at that, this Catholic system of healing is not so dangerous as the system used by some modern cults. If you go to the "miracle shrine" in Massachusetts, you will at least find sympathy. You will not find even that in Christian Science. Their expert "practitioners" will tell you calmly there is nothing the matter with you, except that you have a wrong opinion.

Furthermore, Roman Catholic authorities in Massachusetts will not tell you, if you fail to secure healing at their shrine, that there is something seriously wrong with your relation to God. But Mrs. McPherson will tell you that. Thousands have gone away from her unhealed, and bearing the added burden of being told that they would have been healed if they were right with God and had the proper kind of faith. The burdens laid by Roman Catholicism upon its worshippers are heavy, but it does not add this kind of a burden.

How wonderful it will be when the Lord

Jesus returns from heaven! In his day the people will gather about him for self, and not one will be turned away empty. Not an inhabitant of the land shall say, "I am sick" (Isa. 38:24). But don't forget that it is better to be well of soul than to be well of body. "It is better for thee to enter into life halt or maimed, rather than having two hands or two feet to be cast into everlasting fire" (Matt. 18:8).

MORE World Progress

A well known writer reports that in New York City "more than fifty well-known jazz orchestras have disbanded in the past few weeks." That is the most encouraging thing I have heard for a long time. If the report is true, the world is improving in some respects, at least. I do not know what will follow the "jazz age" in music, but nothing worse can be imagined. Many will devoutly hope that the reform wave will reach the Pacific coast. The other night, feeling hungry for a bit of good music, I tried fourteen broadcasting stations. On twelve of them, jazz orchestras were at work, and from the other two emanated the "cat-yowling" of these jazz orchestra "singers." I turned off the switch, more than ever convinced of the "total depravity" of the race.

Of course, the defenders of jazz will immediately accuse me of being unable to appreciate "modern music." My reply to this accusation is a story told by a newspaper reporter. He says that he was eating, not long ago, in one of these places where dining is interspersed with dancing. The jazz orchestra was resting for a few minutes. A waiter, who had gathered up a great armload of dishes, started for the kitchen and tripped over someone's foot. As he hit the floor with a tremendous crash, the diners leaped to their feet and began to dance, thinking the orchestra had begun to play. That is exactly what jazz sounds like to me.

There is a fortune waiting for some genius who will invent a radio which will automatically shut itself off whenever a jazz orchestra or a "blues" singer comes on the air. Necessity is the mother of invention.

A Life Lost

J. Campbell White tells the story of a rich man who was murdered a couple of years ago. The motive was robbery. The murderer supposed that just at that time the rich man had a large amount of money in his personal possession. A daily paper describing the case said: "Fortunately for the deceased, he had deposited the money the day before." All he lost was his life. And that is what many men are losing because they are absorbed in selfish quests and follow no higher vision.

Mr. White quoted some one who said that when a Christian begins to prosper it is always a question whether the kingdom of God is going to gain a fortune or lose a man.

The appalling indifference of many Christians to the tremendous task confronting the church can only be explained on the theory that the god of this world has blinded their eyes. They have been ensnared by the perils of prosperity, and while they are gaining the world they are forfeiting their lives. These are times when every man who claims to be a follower of Christ must stand up and be counted. Whatever the Christian's daily work, he is an enlisted soldier in the army of the Lord. Failure to be loyal just now is reprehensible to the last degree.—The Christian Intelligencer.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS AND CITIZENSHIP

"The State of Washington has enrolled in its public schools 840,000 pupils who are taught by 12,000 teachers. This institution represents the common meeting place of the childhood and youth of all the people. It sets up standards of school government which become a directing force in preparing our youth for the responsibilities of that larger citizenship which must be assumed later in life," writes W. W. Showler, Superintendent of Public Instruction, State of Washington, in the "United States Daily."

"It stimulates ideals and ambitions which lead on to success," he continued. "It develops the native tendencies of childhood and turns them into a dynamic force. It discovers the capacities of pupils and undertakes to fill each one with courage and with the noble attributes of the race.

"It urges the necessity of duty, points out the importance of obedience, and explains the necessity of good citizenship as a prerequisite to happiness and to highest and best individual achievement. It urges the recognition of the rights of others and of accepting the best ideals and customs which society has developed.

"Education is one of the paramount responsibilities of government. It is so recognized by mandatory provisions of our State constitution. It is decreed non-political and non-sectarian. Its doors are open to all the children of all the people. ... It belongs to the people alike and all have a responsibility in shaping its aims and objectives."

If we do our best; if we do not magnify troubles; if we look resolutely, I will not say on the bright side of things, but on things as they really are; if we avail ourselves of the manifold blessings which surround us, we can but feel that life is indeed a glorious inheritance.—Sir John Lubbock.

The first anti-religious university in the world was opened October 10, at Leningrad, Russia, with 300 students, forty-seven of whom were women. Following the action of Leningrad, the Society of Militant Atheists opened a similar institute in Moscow, with more than 400 students. Christian people will need to put forth some extra effort to counteract the baneful influence of these educational centers.

Books--Why? and What?

As we were preparing this Book Number we were counseled by our friends in two diverging ways, and in our reading of the magazines that come to our desk we noted the same paradoxical statements, namely, that people do not read, on the one hand, and on the other, that books are the most appropriate and universally acceptable gifts, particularly at the Christmas season. Concerning the latter statement, The Living Church feels so certain that it says it is "almost a truism." While bearing on the former contention Dr. Frederick Lynch fears that "reading is becoming pretty much of a lost art." Dr. Lynch has ground for his contention and introduces his point in The Presbyterian Advance as follows:

Not long ago a book was published which has set a great many people to thinking about the trend of American life. The book was a study in contemporary American culture. A city of 35,000 inhabitants was chosen by the authors—they called it "Middletown"—and a careful survey of its habits, customs and chief interest made.

It is not an encouraging book. If what was revealed in Middletown is true of the greater part of America, the country is in a parlous state. Considerable space is given to the reading habits of "Middletown," and this is almost the most discouraging disclosure of all. Practically all of the citizens, including the ministers, read nothing except the most ephemeral stuff: the daily papers and cheap magazines—cheap in price and cheaper in contents. I note that several citizens of other towns have protested against classifying their towns with "Middletown." They say that in their cities they do read. But I understand that "Middletown" is a rather representative city and I am inclined to think that should other cities be surveyed, the findings would not greatly differ.

According to Dr. Lynch's contention, it would seem that before we can sell books, and before people will in very large numbers give books, they must be convinced of the importance of reading, and we must admit that there are many evidences that such is the situation. Not only do the great mass of people not read books, but they do not read anything else except the newspapers to any considerable extent. Possibly the so-called trade journals are read most widely after the newspapers, but even here the readers seem to be comparatively few. And when it comes to religious magazines, and especially church papers, we must get our consolation and encouragement from the quality of the readers rather than from the number. Every church leader of experience has learned to his sorrow how few are the church members who read their church paper. In every denomination, high church or low, large or small, rich or poor, the church paper editors congratulate themselves if they are able to secure even a Gideon's band of readers out of the large but indifferent army that the church has mustered. And there is little doubt but that vastly more people are numbered even among the church paper readers than among book readers.

And the fact that so few are given to the reading of books is cause for alarm among some of our outstanding religious leaders, because it indicates that few people study thoroughly and think through the problems that face us. And an ignorant constituency whether in church or state presents a danger that we do well to be concerned about. And in no church is an uninformed constituency to be accounted a greater weakness and the possible source of greater danger than in a church of democratic type of government, such as ours. And that is the point that Dr. Lynch makes with regard to the state. He says:

Of all people in the world, the citizens of a democracy should be readers, for the solution of grave problems is in their hands, the decisions on momentous questions rests with them, the trend of national life is determined by their attitudes, and the influence of the nation in the world for good or ill is created by the people.

All this means that every citizen in a democracy is bound to familiarize himself with the problems with which the country has to deal and in the solution of which he has, or ought to have some share. Furthermore, the success of democracy depends upon the high intelligence of the average man. In Italy it does not so much matter whether the average man knows anything or not for his country is run for him. In a democracy the country is run by him, and how successfully run depends not on the greatness or wisdom of some one man or even of Congress, but upon his degree of intelligence and wisdom and his familiarity with all questions and problems his country has to face. An ignorant democracy is no better than an unscrupulous Facism. The only thing that saves us is that so many are intelligent. We would be the most wonderful nation the world has ever seen if our whole citizenry were intelligent and wise enough to understand great problems and situations. One reason that so many great movements move so slowly is because there is the great uninformed crowd that have to be wearily and slowly dragged along.

Now the only way to create an educated, informed, thoughtful, wise democracy is by schools, lectures, preaching, newspapers and books, and books are the only agency, which in the nature of the case can go exhaustively and thoroughly into the great problems of the day. When the people stop reading books they disqualify themselves for the intelligent conduct of government and you have the end of democracy.

It may be that Dr. Lynch states his case a little too strongly, that he gives too much importance to lengthy discussions of problems such as are possible only in books. An understanding of all the intricacies and the minutia of problems that face the church and the state is not necessary to wise judgment on the part of the people; they decide on principles and courses in the main and leave the details to be worked out by their leaders. And the information necessary to intelligent democratic control may be gained in large measure through various other means at hand. But while we may not view the situation with regard to book reading with such fearful anxiety as does this eminent writer and world-renowned religious leader, yet it is evident that he puts his finger upon a weakness that may well give concern and move us to seek to correct. There certainly is need of a growing number of thoroughly informed people among both our religious and political constituencies, and the greater the number the greater will be the check upon those leaders of ulterior motives and the more quickly can the rank and file be brought to an intelligent decision regarding the problems that come before them from time to time. It certainly is important, therefore, that people shall come more widely to read books and the giving of books will do much toward the encouragement of reading.

But the statement of our esteemed Episcopalian journal, cited at the beginning of this article, may also be accepted as largely true, namely, "that books are the most universally acceptable and appropriate Christmas gifts is almost a truism." For Christmas is the one time in the year when books are bought by the masses to any great extent, and even though there is a large trade in them then, that does not make people very extensive readers of books. Gifts of some kind must be gotten then, and there is developing quite a general tendency to turn to the purchase of books for that purpose. A good book is a compliment to the intellectual tastes of the giver as well as of the receiver. We like the sense of self-respect that comes to us individually from the purchase of and the possession of good books. Besides there are many indications of a growing consciousness of the importance of more extensive reading of books, which fact (and we believe it is a fact, though it may not yet be very prominently manifest throughout the year) prevents us from going quite as far as does Dr. Lynch in his fear for the consequences of our lack of reading. And one outstanding reason for the increase in the purchase and the reading of books is the book makers themselves. There is no end to the making of books these days and the most high powered salesmanship is being employed to pass them on to the people.

This vast multitude of books pouring from the presses of every land both yields a benefit and presents a problem. We must select the books we would buy. The problem is more acute with regard to gift books than with those we purchase for ourselves. The book we give reflects on our taste as well as upon that of the one to whom it is given. And not only so, but the book we give helps to make the one to whom it is given what the book itself is. Therefore the selection should be made with the greatest care. As James Russell Lowell says, "There is a choice in books as in friends, and the mind sinks or rises to the level of its habitual society—is subdued, as Shakespeare says of the dyer's hand, to what it works in."

There are many agencies ready to guide people in the purchase of books. There is the public library, the published book lists and book reviews. Miss Patten Beard says in The Congregationalist, "Nobody needs to be ill-informed, or needs to make the mistake of a cheap book, ill-chosen, unfitted for its mission of happiness. The books that are 'altogether vanity' are easily weeded out. The purposeful constructive books are easy to secure. But it takes some time and thought to see, to read, to make sure, to buy." But many people are too busy to take the time to make proper selection, or are not in touch with those agencies that are set for the guidance of people's reading, and they find themselves puzzled with the question, "What shall I buy?" It is to aid such of our readers in the solution of this problem that we have prepared the book lists and invited others to prepare the approved lists published in this issue.

Miss Beard in the above mentioned publication points out three things to be kept in mind in the selection of children's books, and the same will hold for older folks as well. These three—the mental, heart and spirit development of the person to read the book. "The book shall be first of all entertaining—a book that sustains real interest suited to the child; a book mentally adapted to the age and interests and development; and the development shall be moral and spiritual and full of growth deeper than surface value. The child's book shall have all these qualities in mind. Nor does this mean that there shall be 'morals' in the book that appeals to and the Church of the Brethren people are worshipping together be an uplift, a true guide, a standard of Right, true in its expression of fact, of teaching, of the values of life and living. True standards of life in understanding, in feeling, in moral values must be sought under the text and illustrations of each book." Judging books by such standards there should be little occasion for disappointment.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

---

When we can get the wells of sympathy to flowing, we have taken the first step toward the transformation of the desert of human hearts.

If you ever expect to give, give now, as you cannot send gifts back from beyond the grave.

Unavoidable circumstances caused a week's delay of our Book Number, but we hope it is still early enough to be helpful to Evangelist readers in selecting their Christmas books.

Brother J. L. Gingrich, secretary of General Conference, writes that he is having difficulty in getting the reports that are necessary from the district conference secretaries to be included in the Brethren Annual. Every such official ought to cooperate by sending in the needed information immediately, if it is to appear in the Annual.

Brother W. S. Baker, pastor of the church at Lydia, Maryland, writes that the work there is progressing satisfactorily. The Sunday school has shown an increase in average attendance and the Rally Day attendance was unusually large. During the year seventeen have been added to the church by baptism, sixteen of which came in response to a special meeting conducted by the pastor in February.

Brother James S. Cook reports for his churches at Martinsburg and McKee, Pennsylvania. Special Rally Day programs planned for Sundays in November, included at each church the celebration of the communion in the evening, which services were largely attended. At Martinsburg there was the added feature of raising money to apply on the church building debt, the result being quite satisfactory.

Brother W. R. Deeter, pastor of the church at Carleton, Nebraska, tells us of his activities and it is evident that he is making himself a very positive force for community upbuilding. His interest in boys' work and his success with boys is especially worthy of mention. The church is maintaining a good interest in its various departments. The Sunday school made an average attendance record during the last quarter of 100.

Our good correspondent at Teegarden, Indiana, referring to the recent first page message of Brother F. C. Vanator, appealing for a larger interest on behalf of the young people, calls for a leader to give to the splendid group of young folks in that church the leadership they need. Some of these small churches have made fine contributions to the church at large, as has the little Teegarden church, and ought in some manner be taken care of.

The church at Limestone, Tennessee, recently enjoyed a revival under the leadership of Brother James S. Cook, who reports a very pleasant visit and successful effort. The church is making progress under the leadership of Brother M. D. Early and is planning larger things. This is the home church of Sister Mary Pence, who also was its pastor for a number of years. We shall be glad to learn of the definite results of the revival.

Dr. J. L. Kimmel, pastor of our church in Fort Wayne, Indiana, tells of a revival effort recently conducted in his church with Sister Edna Nicholas of Elkhart as the evangelist. She proved a very effective speaker and consecrated worker, one who is able to divide aright the Word of truth. The communion service following the series of meetings was largely attended. The Rally Day program was especially interesting, and for the afternoon service Brother E. M. Riddle of Warsaw was the special speaker, also, the Church of the Brethren minister, Elder Blough, was a participant.

Brother George T. Ronk tells of the special union evangelistic effort recently put forth at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, under the leadership of Dr. Charles A. Bame, resulting in the addition of several members to both groups of the Dunker fraternity. He commends very highly the work of Brother Bame, who was invited to return to the city for another campaign covering a larger scope. One of the noteworthy features of this field is that the Brethren people and the Church of the Brethren people are worshipping together in the same church, having all things in common. This is as it should be. We sincerely hope it proves a splendid success that it may be an encouragement to other places where both branches of the Dunker church are struggling for a separate existence and competing for the same territory, whereas they ought to be recognizing their common interests and working for common ends.

Next week we will publish, with the cooperation of the National Sunday School Association, and with the counsel of its educational superintendent, Prof. M. A. Stuckey, a special White Gift number. We trust that the schools throughout the brotherhood are planning to make a generous contribution to the support of the great work being done by this Association. Christmas is naturally the giving time of all the year, and we ought to make a special effort to encourage people to be more largely unselfish and Christian in their giving. Very often much of our giving at the Christmas season turns out to be merely a trade that caused worry in the planning and brings disappointment in the outcome. The season would bring more of joy and satisfaction if we would give more to those from whom we expect to receive nothing in return and less to our friends who do not need our gifts and feel duty bound to give to us because we are in the habit of giving to them.

PRAYER REQUESTS FOR THIS WEEK—

Pray that the Sunday schools of the brotherhood may seek truly to honor the King on his birthday by the consecration of gifts of self, service and substance.

Pray that the Lord may continue to prosper his work at Lydia, Maryland, is the request of the pastor, Brother W. S. Baker.

Pray that a leader may be found for the pastorless church at Teegarden, Indiana.

To Know!

By Prof. W. I. Duker, President National Sunday School Association.

"To know as we are known!" What a wonderful anticipation! Nothing more sublime was ever offered to mortal man as an incentive for future struggles. Our greatest sages have suggested that the highest effort of man is an attempt to "know thyself." Then comes the blessed comforting promise that eventually we "shall know." What may we offer to our oncoming generation, blood of our blood and flesh of our flesh; more entrancing than the opportunity to "know?"

The Book is full of such plaintive wails as "Oh that I might know him." "That I might know him and be satisfied." Surely any effort that has for its purpose to teach men to know God, is worthy of our greatest respect and regard. Often men meet God and find him a Savior, one who saved them from their past sins but here they stop. Any idea of a "Growth in Grace" is foreign to their plans and purposes. It is true that our salvation is of infinite worth, but our knowledge of the goodness and glory of God makes for still greater blessing.

What better may we do, what finer effort may we put forth, than to teach our fellow men to know God? Our usual revival effort which results in bringing men to Christ is invaluable and of tremendous worth, but what are we doing to bring about a continued acquaintance between man and his Savior? What are we doing to cause our fellow man to know "more and more about Jesus? Surely anything which is being done is worthy of our love and support.

Jesus was the "Great Teacher." Nothing has dignified teaching more than the fact that of all teachers which have graced the profession as such, Jesus stands supreme. Never have I listened to any man among teachers, as he attempted to impress his hearers with the worth of their chosen profession but that he insisted over and over that "Jesus was the Great Teacher." So the world regards Jesus. How do we regard him? Surely our regard will be indicated by our attitude toward the propagation of this great fact.

Our church has one aim but many avenues of approach. The "eye can not say to the hand, I have no need of you." In our enthusiasm for any given approach we must not be selfish. The more we love, the more our love is increased. The more we help along any given approach the more interested are we in any other approach. It is extremely difficult to understand one who becomes so interested in Missions that he forgets teaching, or becomes so lost in evangelism that he forgets missions. When this seems to be the case, a close scrutiny of the "one sided man" will often reveal insincerity and selfishness.

Our church has, since its beginning, been a "teaching church." Our only excuse for a separate continuance lies in that fact. As we teach, we grow. As we fail to teach, we die. Many of our members have but little knowledge either of their Master or of his church, little knowledge of his character or of his church's doctrines. What better may we do than to increase their knowledge and enlarge their vision? What a wonderful field for service! Often we say of some one whom we have met, "Why yes, I have met him." And then a friend exclaims, "Oh, but you ought to know him!"

May we feel that we "Know him" busy ourselves with the altogether lovely task of causing others to know him. In this we surely do not refer to a formal introduction or to a brief knowledge of his saving power. We refer to a knowledge that grows and grows until every waking thought is filled with the wonder of his person and the beauty of his "face."

This splendid work is expressed in the work of the National Sunday School Association. Here is one positive agency of the church which has to do with the "teaching project." To neglect it is to neglect one of the most important agencies of the church. There is no time like unto the Christmas season to give gifts. Surely the Christ whose birthday we celebrate, will be pleased to have us not only remember his birth but better still remember his life. And how may we remember his life when we know so little about him?

Your gift at Christmas will be a measure of your desire to make him known. How can you escape this truth? We may not be able to do much but what excuse have we to offer for our complete neglect? Some of us determine the policy of the mother Church in our local congregations and then wonder why we fail to grow. Cooperation to an accepted plan of the church requires more than some of us have done. Most of the churches have found the pleasure in giving to the "White Gift." Will your local church stand out and suffer?

Goshen, Indiana.

"Might we but hear
The hovering angel's high imagined chorus
Or catch, betimes with wakeful eyes and clear,
One radiant vista of the realm before us,—
With one rapt moment given to see and hear,
Ah, who would fear."—Edmund Clarence Stedman.

Christian Education

As Christians, we are deeply concerned in the preservation of Christian ideals in the world; in the continued acceptance of Christian truth; and in the sustained activity and growth of the church of Christ. All our hopes for the real welfare of our human race are involved in the carrying out of this high and holy program. By divine grace we have ourselves come into the inheritance of this sacred responsibility. We must pass on the torch which was placed in our hands, that the flame of Gospel Truth may continue to enlighten the world and make plain the way of salvation.

We must educate and train the children and young people of today so that they may be inclined and prepared to take up the work of Jesus Christ and his church. If they do not, they will have broken down in the real purpose of life and destructive failure will come to the cause that is of most precious importance. If so, our own lives will be marked by failure. What are we for but to occupy our place for a time, serve the present day, our calling fulfill, and see to it that the coming generation is trained to carry on the work! Then we can go in peace.

What are we doing to secure the proper training of the coming generation, from whom in the next ten, twenty and thirty years must be drawn the religious leaders of our people, if life is to go on spiritually in our own time and in the days that are to follow? In making such provision, the home, the school and the church are involved.—The Presbyterian.

Indiana Conference Moderator's Address

By C. A. Stewart

Delegates of the conference and friends: I realize the largeness of the place in which you have placed me and the task that is before me, and my inability perhaps to bring you a thought-provoking message concerning some of the vital issues of the church. But considering the large field in which we have been placed as a church, and the responsibilities that are ours, we tremble because we are making such little progress, and feel that we cannot lay too much emphasis on the fact that we need to put our strength and prayers into the work.

One year is now history since we met in like manner to discuss our problems and to lay plans for the future. Some of our plans have been carried out, and some victories won, and also some defeats experienced. New conditions confront us every day and seemingly new and larger problems to grapple with, and we are in no less danger than those in the days of Jude to whom he wrote and said, "contend for the faith once delivered unto the Saints" and perhaps we are in no more danger than they. But we are convinced that some of the same conditions exist today and if there ever was a time that we ought to stand true and work, it is now. We believe the Brethren church has a place in God's program and a message that has been vitalized by the Holy Spirit, and that she must fill that place and give to the world that message or she has failed in the purpose of her existence. We also believe that her message is vital to the world, though peculiar it may be. If we did not believe that, we certainly would go to other fields which give more alluring opportunities for service, or get out of the work, and advise our brethren to do likewise. There are no known laws which compel a man to stay within the confines of the Brethren church if he does not agree with the principles upon which she was founded and still stands. Believing then that the church has a place in God's plan and purpose in the world and that she has a message, she should consider:

First, Her ministry. Believing though I do that no religious body has a higher class ministry than our own beloved church, yet she cannot set the standard too high, and certain demands should be made upon the ministers by every church. Many times serious mistakes have been made because all that was taken into consideration in the calling of a pastor was his ability to speak and his personal appearance. Some churches have lost their influence and their standing in the community because their pastor's conduct did not command the respect that it should. No church is able to live down and blot out the stain, and be of any great service to the Lord when the pastor's conduct is such as to cast a shadow upon the church. He is looked to as a leader in spiritual things and the affairs of the church. In their leader they should demand honesty and a high moral character. They should make it possible by an adequate salary for him to meet his obligations without contracting debts which he is not able to pay. It is a reflection upon the church to give their pastor merely a living wage and then make demands upon him that would force him to spend twice that amount. To make the greatest gains, and to be of the greatest service in the plan and purpose of God, the church should keep the standard high, and the laity and ministers should join hands in trying to make it such. When Jesus said, "Ye are the light of the world" and "Ye are the salt of the earth," he meant it to apply to every member, regardless of position in the church, and we do well to remember Paul's teaching in Romans 12:1—"I beseech you, therefore, brethren by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service." The ministry of the church does not fall entirely upon the pastor, but as a body they occupy a field that no one individual can fill. And every member of the church either strengthens or weakens it.

This leads me to my second point—the spiritual state of the church. It goes without saying that the greatest need of the church is a higher standard of spiritual life. If this could be obtained, all other problems would vanish like the mist of the morning. The question of finances and church extension would be solved. There are too many people that seem to think that God has no claim upon their lives except on the Lord's day, and there is a large class that act as if the Lord could only claim a part of that, and that God ought to be glad when they give him any of their time at all. And there is still another class that seem to think that God is so far away that he does not see them, and that he is not conscious of their acts. It almost seems sometimes that the church has forgotten that she is the body of Christ, and God's method of work in the world is through her. A God-consciousness has almost passed from the minds of many of the members and with it goes the consciousness of sin. Many have pitched their tents toward Sodom, and have lost their power and influence for God. The church cannot set her standard too high, and keep herself too far from the precincts of Satan. Every year the work of the church is more difficult, and we employ every method that it is possible for us to use, some that may be all right, others that are not, but if the church could only see how necessary it is for her to stay close to God she would make greater gains. It is not the power of men but the power of God that saves, and unless the church shuns the very appearance of evil she has no attraction for the man who is bound down by evil. If church members act the same and do the same things that the men of the world do, they have nothing with which to attract men.

In summing up the test of all true religion James used these words—"And to keep himself unspotted from the world." And that is what Paul had in mind when he said, "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service." The spiritual life of the church is the foundation of her success. Upon that she must build or she is building upon sand. It is to the church what the heart is to the body. Remove it and the church becomes a dead thing. The church is a living institution only because there are those who are in touch with Christ, who is its living head. The Brethren church would do well to lay emphasis upon a deeper spiritual life.

Third, Evangelism. I would also recommend that the church lay greater stress upon evangelism, because that is the program which Christ gave to the church in the great commission. The church with the evangelistic spirit is the church that is always active and is adding to her ranks throughout the year. We read of the early church that they were adding to the church daily such as should be saved. We are aware of the fact that the world is always putting on a program which is attractive, and the church must meet it. The church should be the center of interest for every member and show to the world that we are interested in a big and worth while program. Unconcern and lack of interest never made an appeal. We cannot expect to interest others if we are not interested ourselves.

The gospel is good news for men, for it lights up the pathway for all mankind. Men that walk in darkness may walk in the light. Those that had no hope now have the star of hope to guide them. Those that were aliens from the commonwealth of Israel now may be adopted into the family of God. It reveals to man the only way of salvation. If it is so important then we ought to put forth every effort and use every legitimate means to reach every soul possible. Jesus said to the Jews, "If ye die in your sins, ye cannot come where I am." They were lost, and so are men today without Christ. The great commission was given to the church only and that means that the church has a big program, and if she shirks and does not do her work, it will never be done and she will be held to account.

Fourth, Missionary interests. Our church is to be commended for her missionary spirit, and yet there is room for improvement. I find that there are still a few in our ranks that have not that zeal and when we take our offerings for missions they look upon it as a burden and give it grudgingly, rather than looking upon it as a privilege and as worship. And there are still some that are unworthy to pray the Lord's prayer, for no one should pray, "Thy kingdom come," and stifle benevolent purposes, for the coming of the kingdom depends upon the evangelization of the world.

There are large centers in our own district where we would do well to center our interest as a church. Our church is being drained year after year because of the lack of vision and effort. Our national statistician's report shows that there has been a large ingathering each year with very little increase in membership, due to the fact that each year we have a heavy loss by members moving to those centers where we have no church, some going to other churches and others not to any church at all. This should not be. There should be some plan to conserve and save to our church those that go out from among us. And the best method that I can see is to plant churches in those centers. If we would sacrifice half of the money that we spend for luxury and pleasure each year, we could build a church and our problem would soon be solved. People are going to those centers by the thousands and thousands in our own state are untouched by the church. This makes a great field for missionary efforts. And as important as our foreign work is, the facts are that we have about reached our limit unless we build up our home base. Christ left no room in his program for selfishness, and yet we are giving it such a large place in our lives. We see the need and the large number of souls that are lost and our heart goes out to them, but when some one makes an appeal for money, then we become tight-fisted and by the cry that goes up one would think that we needed to enlarge our county farms. But no home is complete without the latest radio, and very few would venture out without the very latest make of car, and no one stays at home for the lack of tires, and yet souls are lost because we are so generous as to leave the work of saving them to some one else. As a life saver and a stimulant to many churches I would recommend that they give more to missions.

Fifth, Christian education. There is a large field of service in Christian education, for it is appalling to see how little we really know about the word of God, and it is the most important thing in the world for us to know, for "It is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." It is important that the children go to school, so much so that the state says that they must do so. It is important that they study the sciences but all the knowledge they receive and all the science that they study will not save their souls. It is not fair to the individual to let him grow up in ignorance of the most important thing in the world. It is important because it reveals to us the will of God, and it is the revelation of God. While it is important for all classes both young and old, it is more important for our young people, for the things that they learn in their youth become a part of them, and what is more important than the high ideals and Christian principles as taught by Christ? There is much worry today about the future and what is going to become of our young people. We need not worry and fret about the future if we prepare our young people for the future, and not try to prepare the future for them. The time to begin is in their youth and to keep everlastingly at it. We are mighty careless in both precept and practice in the Christian education of youth, and what they are tomorrow will depend upon what they are taught today. And since it cannot be made compulsory it ought to be made as elaborate and attractive as possible.

Sixth, Our educational interests. We are wonderfully blessed and very fortunate in having a Christian college that holds such a high place in the educational field. And I am sure that none of us need to feel ashamed of our college. While it has cost us hard labor, and a large sum of money it was worth the effort and should have the support of every member of the church. It stands as a memorial to those that have gone before and for their far sightedness and to those of today who have a vision of the future church. We cannot place a value upon such Christian institutions when Satan is seeking to get a monopoly on them. Where Christ is revered, loved and served, and his teachings are believed, taught and practised is a mighty good place for our young people to go. No other school on earth is going to train them for leadership in the Brethren church. And if we expect to exist as a church we must have trained leadership. But the battle is not over—they must have our support in every way, our finances, our prayers, and our young people. We have helped her up, and now I would urge that we help her to stand.

Seventh, Our publishing interests. Our publishing interests also need our financial and moral support. We cannot get along without Brethren literature. Every institution that is worth while and has anything worth while for the public makes it known by sending out literature telling the public what it has, and giving all the information possible. Through our Brethren literature we receive the information concerning the church in every part of the world, and we know everything that is being done in the various churches that concerns us as a whole.

Not only the news from the field but good sermons from the brethren of our own denomination and others, also a program for Christian education and the Christian Endeavor and various items of interest to the church.

We cannot understand why members of the church are willing to get along without the church paper and at the same time would not think of farming without their farm paper, or following some trade without their trade journals, or doing without the daily paper. If we are really interested in the work of the Kingdom we want to know what progress the Kingdom is making. But some say, I am not satisfied with our church literature, which may be true, but have you tried to make any contribution to it that would make it better, and where is there a paper that we are satisfied with in every detail? and have we ever registered our complaints to the proper authorities to try to make our literature what it ought to be? We can make our literature what we want it to be by backing up the publishing house with our finances so they can make the changes that are necessary and equip the publishing house with the equipment that they must have to make such changes.

I would urge the delegates of this conference to go home to their respective churches with a greater determination to carry on the work of the Lord through the various avenues of the church, believing that by so doing we can make greater headway in the advancement in the work of the kingdom. We cannot be provincial in our work, but must move forward as one great body, realizing that what effects one effects all, and that what we do as individuals is either helping or hindering the cause we represent. The reason we are not making the progress that we should is because some have never joined the regular army but have gone in for bush-whacking, expecting to win the war alone. The world may seem small, but when we proceed to drive out evil we will find that Satan is well entrenched, and no force in the universe will ever dislodge him aside from the power of God. And God cannot work except he works in and through his children, and a united effort on their part under the leadership of him who said, "Lo I am with you always" will bring the desired results. There is no place in the work of the church for selfishness, either on the part of the individual or a local church. There must be a united effort and the line unbroken going forward with no thought of pitching tent and resting on our laurels. Neither must we recognize the flag of truce from the opposite side. Satan no longer uses the method of persecution, but falls back on the method he used in the days of the rebuilding of the walls of Jerusalem—"Let us help you."

We cannot whip the Devil with his own weapons and do the work of the Lord with his tools, and yet we find many trying to use his tools and methods. We must earnestly contend for the faith, for the work of the Lord is no less important today than it was in the day that he left heaven and came to earth to "Seek and to save that which was lost." He sacrificed and suffered untold agony for lost souls, and the least that we can do is to work and pray while the opportunity is ours, before the night cometh when no man can work. And all the anguish and suffering that we may be called upon to endure will vanish in thin air, and our efforts will seem as nothing when we meet him face to face. Let us be spurred on by his words, "Be thou faithful unto death and I will give you a crown of life."

"Go forth! go forth for Jesus now,
Be working! Be watching! The Lord himself will teach you how To watch and pray.

'Tis not for thee thy field to choose;
No work he gives must thou refuse;

Go forth! go forth! to all the world,
O stay not! Delay not! But let love's banner be unfurled,
And grace be told.
O let redeeming love be sung,
A song of joy on every tongue;

Go forth! Let heart and hand be strong!
Be working! Be watching! O stay the mighty power of wrong
Where'er ye may.
Equipped with love and strength divine,
The victory is surely thine,

Be working! Be watching! Be praying!
Go forth to work, to watch and pray;
'Tis Jesus who calls thee;
The harvest waits for thee today,
Go bring some sheaves for God."

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

HE HOLDS HIS SOUL CHEAP

According to press despatches from Jerusalem a curious "record of sale" was reported in the Hebrew newspaper of that city. A young patient in the Hadassah Hospital in Jerusalem agreed to turn over his share in the next world for approximately $10. Payment by the purchaser, an older man, is to be made in monthly installments of a few cents. Selling his soul for ten dollars! But many American youths are selling theirs for less. Selling souls is not really new. Every man who covenants with evil is selling his soul. But we wonder just what that purchaser thought he was getting out of the purchase?—The Evangelical-Messenger.

RUSSIA'S RELIGIOUS REVOLT

A century or two ago, religious enthusiasts from Germany and Scandinavia, hearing of rich lands to be had in Russia, migrated into the Volga Valley and the Ukraine (south Russia), took up land, founded communities, prospered. A decade ago, came the Soviets, breathing hate against religion, imposed anti-religious laws, harried these devout farmers. Now—and for five years past—a steady stream of emigrants has gone from Russia into Canada or back to Sweden. On the outskirts of Moscow, at the present time, a company of 7,000 Mennonites awaits permission to shake the dust of red Russia from their feet, and trek to the Canadian Promised Land. But the Soviets are loath to see them go. Mennonites refuse to bear arms. That irritates the Soviets. But they raise good crops. And that pleases the Soviets. Whether arms-bearing or food-producing will weigh more heavily in the Kremlin remains to be seen.—Christian Herald.

The Christian Century informs us that the Moscow government has "granted the desired permission on condition that each adult pay 220 rubles ($110) for an exit visa. This is equivalent to refusal in so far as most of these farmers are concerned. Accordingly they announce that they will stay where they are until the government opens the way for them to leave the country, or until starvation overtakes them." Let us hope that they may not be driven to such desperation as to bring about a tragedy.

CLEMENCEAU, THE TIGER OF FRANCE HAS NOW FOUND OUT

Georges Clemenceau, the celebrated French statesman who came to the heights of his fame during the World War, died Sunday, November 24, at the age of 88. His long life was full of storm and excitement caused chiefly by the fiery disposition which got him the nickname "The Old Tiger." He loved a fight whether duelling, struggling with antagonists in French politics, or engaged in the World War. We read, however, no great ideas which he originated. His power seems to have been chiefly in the fury and dash of an intrepid spirit. It is said that nobody remained neutral about him—they either loved or hated him. He was not a pilgrim of eternity in his own aim. In his autobiography published a little while ago he called death "a dreamless sleep." Both his turbulent disposition and that phrase mark him as a child of the French Revolution whose leaders wrote above the gates of the cemetery, "Death is an eternal sleep." Clemenceau died at 1:45 A. M., Sunday, November 24th. He realized a moment after his heart ceased to beat that death is not a dreamless sleep. He had called the great achievements of life, or fame, "wisps of smoke which they call glory." We believe at least some of Clemenceau's deeds were more substantial.—The Christian-Evangelist.

KEEPING CHRIST IN CHRISTMAS

If one were to form his judgment on the basis of the Christmas cards that have been current in recent years, he might easily conclude that Christmas no longer has anything to do with Christ. Yule logs, holly, mistletoe, snowy landscapes, stage-coaches, taverns, banal verses—these and many other trivialities, to say nothing of flip-pant jokes about drinking parties and prohibition—we have all seen overloading the shelves of stores and shops. Conspicuous only by their rarity have been the greeting cards that call to mind him whose natal day Christmas is meant to celebrate, or that suggest anything of his inexhaustible meaning for human life, here and hereafter.

When a representative of the Federal Council of Churches interviewed officials of the Greeting Card Association on this subject, he was informed by them that the manufacturers "give the public what it wants." They added that during the present season not a few numbers will be offered which bear a distinctively religious message or are in some way related to the deeper meaning of Christmas. "We shall be interested to observe," the spokesman for the manufacturers said, "whether there really is any considerable body of people who will call for this kind of card; we are willing to be shown."

Probably almost everyone who reads these lines will be purchasing Christmas cards in the next few days. Why not make a special point of asking your dealer for cards that carry the true significance of Christmas time? If Christian people in all parts of the country would insist on this, we might reasonably expect to see next year a great improvement in the quality of cards offered for our patronage.—The Moody Monthly.

CHINA'S WAR CONTINUES

Uneasy rests the head that wears a crown—or, in China, the hand that holds the Presidential seal. It is more than two years now since General Chiang Kai Shek—young commander of the victorious Nationalist troops—ousted the Communists from party control, became President, moved the capitol to Nanking, and, with the aid of many good advisers, set about it to govern China, in peace. But there has been no peace. Just now—in Central China near the industrial city of Hankow—rebellious troops, instigated, some say, by Communist propaganda, are at war with Nanking. To the north Gen. Feng Yu-Hsiang—Christian General—is moving to join the rebels. The fight seems to be going hard with Chiang and the Nanking authorities. Should he be defeated China will, once again, be at the mercy of ambitious warlords and the masses, perhaps, will be the prey of malicious Red propaganda.—Christian Herald.

IS DEMOCRACY STILL THE SOCIAL HOPE OF MAN?

It has grown to be something of a fashion in the United States to disparage democracy and the maxims of liberty, equality and fraternity. The "spirit of '76" is the cynics' target. Be assured that such a fashion of thought does not fit American history or the present world tendency in government. Assemble the constitutions of states and compare them with a similar collection of twenty-five years ago. In spite of temporary dictatorships in Russia, Italy and elsewhere, the only manifest tidal movement in human affairs is a tendency toward freedom and democracy. Russia, facing the option of rule by the plutocrat or by the proletariat, has chosen the latter with the express ultimate aim of democracy. For the moment Italy has sacrificed freedom to order, but it is building up a national discipline which in the end will prove useful to an effective democracy. In fact both Russia and Italy are creating a community technique which will prove later a priceless contribution to a free community life. What the world is discovering is that freedom and democracy are not achieved by slogans and by the run of the wilds, but by acquiring the art of living and laboring together with special privilege and for the common good.—The Baptist.

Daily Readings and Suggestions

(Keep with your Bible)

MONDAY

John 13:1-17. O that the world might learn something of the amazing truths of this passage! That the Father had given all things into the hands of Jesus, and that he was come from God and went to God; that, knowing his exalted position and also the nearness of his humiliation and suffering, he should institute this blessed ordinance for his church; that in him we find the cleansing from our daily walk which this blessed ordinance symbolizes. O Father, may all those who call thee Master, and Lord, no longer hold back in stubborn pride and self-will, refusing to follow thy plain teachings, even betraying thee; but may they gladly follow thy example in all things, finding that in the doing of thy commandments there is great joy, not only for those who do them, but for all the world—even unto the uttermost parts of the earth. Amen.

TUESDAY

John 13:18-30. Today, as then, it is often the one who has been closest to Jesus who betrays him. However, we know that we shall never betray him in word or deed if we allow him to fill all our life, for then there will be no room for Satan to enter in. "Ye are of God, little children, and have overcome them because greater is he that is in you than he that is in the world." May our lives be filled with thy holy presence!

WEDNESDAY

John 13:31-38. We thank thee, Father, that in Spirit thou art with us now, and shalt abide until thou dost come to be with us in person. As thy Spirit is given sway in our lives, we will be loving one another, even as thou hast loved us. Keep back thy servant from presumptuous sins, but may we count the cost and be willing to lay down our very lives for thee—in death, if need be, or in daily loving service. Amen!

THURSDAY

John 14:1-7. Scarcely ever have I attended a funeral service where these words were not quoted, in whole, or in part. It is little wonder, for we can conceive of no more comforting words. O God, we pray that all those with hearts bowed beneath their load of sorrow may no longer let their hearts be troubled, but may find comfort in the thought that thou hast passed through death to prepare a place for us all with thee, in the Father's house, and hast showed us the path that leads to our heavenly home. Help us all to walk therein, in Jesus' name, Amen.

FRIDAY

John 14:8-14. Again this positive identification of himself with the Father! And this wonderful promise to prayer! For your meditation, consider what it means to ask anything "in my name." May we yield ourselves fully to thy Holy Spirit, that we may do the great works that thou wouldst have us do, as thou art interceding for us at the throne of grace.

SATURDAY

John 14:15-24. There is given here one of the supreme tests of love: that we keep his commandments. As we do his bidding, we are promised many blessings: the Spirit of Truth, our Comforter, to abide with us forever; the love of the Father, and of the Son, and his promise that he will manifest himself unto us. Help us, Father, to so demonstrate these great blessings before the world that they may be led to a knowledge of thee and thy blessings.

SUNDAY

John 14:25-31. On this new Lord's Day, Father, we praise thee for thy Holy Spirit which thou hast sent. May our hearts today be open so that he may bring to our remembrance the things of Christ. May our troubled hearts be freed from the cares of this life, and may thine own peace enter in. We thank thee again for thy promise to return unto us, and pray that we may so live from day to day that we need not be ashamed before thee, at thy coming. Bless thy precious word as it shall be proclaimed throughout all the world today, we ask in Jesus' name, Amen!—T. C. L.

Children's Division Questions

I should like a suggestion as to how to prepare a perpetual calendar for the use of the Cradle Roll members. Our department is not large, and so I prefer to have all the names entered on one card, with some suitable designation of the birthdays.

Perhaps you would like to carry out this plan which I saw not long ago. In the back of the Primary room, just opposite the door, was a vacant wall space between the two windows. A stout wire was strung between the two windows and from this were hung twelve lengths of satin ribbon. A card at the top of each bore the name of a month. Small white cards on which was mounted a snapshot of the child, his name, and birthday underneath, were pinned to the ribbons. Of course they were pinned to the proper month. This was a calendar easy to keep up to date and attracted attention. When a child was promoted or for any reason ceased to be a member of the department, his card was removed and given the mother. At least once a year the ribbon runners were renewed, thus keeping the calendar always clean and fresh looking.

Another good looking calendar had twelve small cards arranged on a large sheet of cardboard. These were held in place with dainty rosebud seals, with the edges touched up with gold paint. The names of the months were lettered in gold, and the names of the babies entered under the proper month. This was a dainty calendar and served for an entire year.

Is there any advantage in having the mothers of a particular department unite in a Bible class? Is it not just as satisfactory to have the mothers who accompany their children go into an Adult Bible Class?

That depends. Both plans work out quite satisfactorily. Where the mother has a timid child who does not like to be left alone, then it is well for the mother to join others who may be situated in a like manner and unite in a class. Again, it is often well for the mothers of one age or group to be together. I recall one very fine group of mothers of Beginners' children. They remain in the room with the children for the opening songs, then slip out quietly to a corner of the entrance room or hall. Here they study, first the International Lesson for the day, then a chapter in a good book on some phase of child training. Many of the mothers testify to the benefits they have derived from this discussion when solving complex situations that arise in the home. This kind of group is particularly good where the school is large and scattered over much space. It enables the mother to remain close to her child, and she can easily reach him at the close of a session. On the other hand, many workers prefer to have the mothers entirely absent from the room, and where there is a good class of women, then this is the place for them.

In my opinion it is largely a question of leadership; one class under a splendid consecrated teacher is far better than several smaller groups. If the leadership is lacking, then the smaller groups may lead to the discovery of the needed leader.

Our church is planning to remodel the quarters occupied by the Junior Department. There is a difference of opinion

The Intermediate Department

By Harry C. Munro

The Intermediate years from twelve to fourteen are a period of most rapid change. The greatest physical upheaval and the most spasmodic growth of the entire period of development occur during those years. Corresponding mental readjustments are taking place. The social interests and attitudes undergo profound changes. This plasticity and change render it a crucial period in religious experience and development. These are the years of golden opportunity for religious leaders. The personality or individuality is just emerging. Character is taking the form in which it will soon "set." Religious attitudes are developing which may become permanent.

Aims

In view of these peculiarities of the Intermediate pupil the following specific aims have been designated for this department, in addition to the general aim stated for the Young People's Division as a whole.

The aims are to realize in the life of each individual pupil the following results:

1. The acceptance of Jesus Christ as a personal Savior.
2. A knowledge of Christian ideals as expressed in noble lives.
3. A personal acceptance and open acknowledgment of these ideals.
4. A public acceptance of the privileges and opportunities of church membership.
5. The development of the social consciousness and the expression of physical, mental, social and religious life in service to others.

We suggest that at least once a year the department counselor and teachers check up the work done in the Intermediate Department to see how largely they are accomplishing in the life of each individual these results.

Organization

The organization of an Intermediate Department of the church and church school is proposed not for any inherent value which it may have for its own sake, but solely for the bearing which it may have upon the above results in the life of Intermediate pupils.

Boys and girls of this period are naturally much interested in organization. Gangs, cliques, "little scorpion clubs" and all sorts of group units develop among them spontaneously. Without proper leadership such organization is fraught with grave danger. The Boy Scout movement and similar agencies have made most effective use of this interest in organization by building programs upon it which have high moral value.

The church which fails to capitalize these social energies for character building is missing one of her strongest leverages for the development and controlling of the lives of her youth. Careful attention should therefore be given to organization so that all its values may be realized.

The loyalty of the Intermediate will not be evenly divided among several organizations or groups. The one which has first place because of its strongest appeal to his interest will be the most effective character-builder during these strategic years.

One danger which the church faces is over-organization. If it asks the Intermediate to divide his energies and interests among several overlapping and unrelated groups, some are sure to be neglected. The changes are that all will, and some non-church organization will dominate him, with tragic loss to the church but more tragic loss to the boy or girl.

It is highly important, therefore, that confusing and overlapping machinery be simplified and unified in a single organization of a type which will lay the most effective claims upon his interest. This does not mean that the range of his interests must be narrowed or important ones ignored, but simply that they shall all function through one organization which can then hope to claim his major loyalty. . . .

A simple, flexible form of organization is desirable. Three or four officers, a few standing committees and many short-lived ones, each with a specific duty to perform, are preferable to a more elaborate organization. A half year term of office with the possibility of but two terms in succession will bring more pupils into official relationship with the department and act as a stimulant to a progressive program.

Because these Intermediate years mark such rapid growth and change in the life of the pupils there will be wide differences with corresponding difficulties of organization and relationship, even though the department be rigidly restricted to an age range of three years, from twelve to fourteen. In the smaller schools there will always be the temptation to combine the Intermediate group with other groups. In the school with limited equipment the tendency to care for the needs of the children and the adults but to ignore the special needs of Intermediates by seeking to combine them with either the one group or the other. The average school loses more pupils during the Intermediate period than at any other time. Likewise more pupils come into the church from the Intermediate Department than from any other department. These significant facts seem to demand a separate department for Intermediates whatever other combinations seem necessary.

The origin of sex differences during the Intermediate years with their special problems and needs renders separate classes for boys and girls highly important in the Intermediate Department. The sexes can probably be combined better in any other department than here. Consequently even the smallest school should by all means have an Intermediate Department consisting of at least two classes, a boys' class and a girls' class.

To be fossilized is to be stagnant, unprogressive, dead, frozen into a solid. It is only liquid currents of thought that move men and the world.—Wendell Phillips.

among the powers that be regarding the furnishing. One group wants to make the assembly room bright and attractive while the other side is in favor of making it more like a church. Which is proper?

I have in mind three Junior Department assembly rooms that I visited recently. One is a large, light, airy room, attractively decorated with posters and such things. The Juniors meet here on Sunday morning during assembly, then go to the adjoining classrooms for lesson study. During the week the room is frequently used for socials of one kind or another. And the Juniors love "our" room.

A second assembly room has been fitted up with the walnut pews from the old church auditorium, cut down to the proper size for a Junior. Here the boys and girls assemble for twenty minutes on Sunday, and during the week the room is used for prayer meetings. Aside from the lowered seats there is nothing in particular to designate this as a room belonging to the boys and girls.

The third room I have in mind is most worshipful in atmosphere. Beautiful stained glass windows allow a rich mellow light to play on the platform. Here is a Junior sized pulpit and chairs. All the furnishings harmonize. When the Juniors come in here from their classrooms there is no noise or confusion. Reverence is suggested by the room. And how every single boy and girl does love this, his sanctuary! It appeals to the hunger in their hearts for worship. The worship program is carried on in this room. All social affairs are held in the gymnasium. If it is possible to have a separate place for the necessary social life of the department, then I prefer the sanctuary plan. —From The Sunday School Times.

Devotional Reading—Matt. 7:1-5.

Golden Text—As ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise.—Luke 6:31.

Comments on the Scriptures

We have today several widely separated selections showing the Bible views on industry—the labor question. It is manifestly as unwise as it is impossible to go deeply into this question, which has been in the thoughts and hearts of men ever since the dawn of history, and doubtless long before. First after the individual labor for the individual, came the slave and his master. Centuries later the hired servant whose condition was but little better, and in some ways not as good; crushed by oppressive legislation. Finally the class unions of the workers, with a future we cannot quite foretell.

Ex. 1:8-14 gives a good idea of the condition of the Israelites as slaves in Egypt. This condition, well-remembered by those to whom the law was first given, was the great argument for mercy toward their own slaves later; for slavery was the recognized labor system universally then.

Ex. 20:17 forbids all coveting, by any one. Some consider that it applies only to the rich who win their wealth by oppression of the poor. It is not so. It is much forbids the coveting of the wealth of the rich by the poor, or the possessions of those a little better off by their poorer neighbors. It is broken every day by those socialists who wish to see the wealth of the world redistributed so that they themselves may have more.

Deut. 24:14, 15 gives a rule for masters of hired servants which is just as important and applicable today and here as it was when and where it was first given. When your servant is needy do not delay paying him his wages when such payment is possible. It is a sin which is taken into account by the Judge of all mankind. This applies to the paying of bills where they are due to small tradesmen, who are often forced into bankruptcy by such delays by those who could pay, were they careful to arrange it.

Amos 5:6-15. Right and justice did not prevail in Amos' day, as this selection shows. The Israelites had forgotten the sorrows of their ancestors in Egypt; the rich were oppressing and grinding down the poor. They were living in luxury through the evil things they had done and the injustice they had practised against the poor; and God would deal with them as they had with their fellows. It was justice, not charity, for which he pleaded; and it is just the same today.

Zech. 8:16, 17 also demands truth and justice with one's neighbor—between labor and capital. No oppression of the poor; but no labor war through a lack of knowledge as to the true state of things. If this was carried out today some things would be different.

Thus the Old Testament appeal is to truth and justice between master and man.

In the New Testament the same is true, but there is the added point of the equality of both before Christ, and the fact that in the life to come the rewards are to be given according to worth, not according to wealth and position on the earth. The Golden Rule applies equally to both sides.

Matt. 20:1-16 the story of the workers in the vineyard, working different periods, but all paid the same. The emphasis seems to be on keeping one's bargain, whatever bargain is made with others; working not for gain alone, but with the proper motive; and the fact that the master has a right to pay what he pleases to those who would gladly have labored before had they been able to find the work to do.

Mark 12:1-9 gives the instance where the laborers plan to gain possession through violence of the vineyard in which they are working, and run it for their own profit. Here success is attained at first, but retribution is not long delayed.

Luke 3:14. John the Baptist gave to the soldiers the advice to "be content with your wages." The idea holds good today so far as it was then intended. Do not be discontented; do no violence in order to supplement your pay; make yourself into a faithful and able worker, and your pay is more likely to be increased, without the retribution which is certain through breaking the laws of man and of God.

Eph. 6:5-9. This is the principle for all Christians: for the laborer, and for the master. Remember these were slaves. Do faithful honest work, knowing that your future reward will be for your character and not your wealth; that you and your master are equal before God, and your rewards will be on the same principle. And the masters must not take advantage of this willing service, for the same reason.

1 Tim. 6:16, 17. Here is one selection entirely for the rich. If you have wealth see to it that you do not trust in your riches, or be miserly with them. Give to God's poor as well as pay what you should for service done; then will you lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven.

Industry and Religion

At the rise of the evangelical movement in the eighteenth century the Wesleys had no sooner raised that standard of reality in religion than they found themselves face to fact with this same imperative industrial problem. The Methodist chapels and class-meeting trained both the leaders and the mass of the working people for their trade-union movement, which was one of the incidental and most far-reaching results of the revival in England. The rise of the great middle classes to their activity in social reforms is due to this same evangel which brought the sunrise of a new day out of the leaden skies of eighteenth-century England. Further, the rise of the factory system suddenly put the Christianity of the nineteenth century to the test of its supreme crisis. It was the evangel of the Seventh Earl of Shaftesbury, of Frederick Denison Maurice, and of Charles Kingsley, which, more than the Duke of Wellington's battalions, saved England from the revolution threatened by the Chartist movement to the evolution which has sanely and surely developed the magnificent municipal and social progress of Great Britain in the last quarter century.

"The present crisis in industrial relationship tests the capacity of the Christianity of the churches to adapt itself to the modern conditions of life, and marks the point at which it will either make another great advance or suffer a sharp decline." (Graham Taylor).

A Prayer for the Social Distress

The following prayer is taken from an old prayer book of Queen Elizabeth of England: "They that are snared and entangled in the utter lack of things needful for the body cannot set their minds upon thee as they ought to do; but when they are deprived of the things which they so greatly desire, their hearts are cast down and quail for grief.

"Have pity upon them, therefore, most merciful Father, and relieve their misery through thy incredible riches, that, by removing their urgent necessity, they may rise up to thee in mind.

"Thou, O Lord, providest enough for all men with thy most bountiful hand. But whereas thy gifts are made common to all men, we through our selfishness do make them private and peculiar. Set right again that which our iniquity hath put out of order. Let thy goodness supply that which our meanness hath plucked away. Give meat to the hungry and drink to the thirsty; comfort the sorrowful, cheer the dismayed, and strengthen the weak; deliver the oppressed, and give hope and courage to them that are out of heart.

"Have mercy, O Lord, upon all forestallers, and upon all them that seek undue profits or unlawful gains. Turn thou the hearts of them that live by cunning rather than by labor. Teach us that we stand daily and wholly in need of one another. And give us grace by hand and mind to add our proper share to the common stock; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen."

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

Our Lord's Greatest Apostle
was a great correspondent

CARLETON, NEBRASKA

We like to note each week in the news columns of the Evangelist how the Lord's work is growing in many sections of our land, so make our contribution to this department of our valuable paper.

Things are moving along through the efforts of our faithful workers. Our church school made an average of one hundred in attendance the last quarter. Since then there have been some rains and snows, making bad roads and we have fallen below the one hundred mark a few times. However we hope to get back up again. The attendance held up well during the summer season. We are planning a Christmas program for Sunday evening, the 22nd of December. The Methodist Episcopal and Church of the Brethren have the cooperative spirit and will give their programs on Monday and Tuesday nights. We are also having union Thanksgiving services at the Church of the Brethren, and your humble servant is doing the preaching.

We have been on the field a bit over a year now, and note some progress in the church. Sixteen new members have been added to our list. However, none since our last report to this paper. We are trying to observe all the special days and offerings. Promotion day and Home coming day went over good, with a fine spirit accompanying. We are enjoying the help of Prof. Van Miller, one of the High school teachers, in church work, Christian Endeavor and church school. His home is in Kearney, Nebraska. Through his goodness and willingness he had the Gospel Team here for one Sunday morning and evening, from Hastings College. These six young men brought messages from God's Word, and rendered musical numbers and songs. They are preparing themselves for different fields of labor—one a doctor, one a music teacher, one a minister, one a Y. M. C. A. worker and two teachers.

Time brings changes in leadership and working forces. Some of each have moved to larger towns for work, and some are away teaching, thus making it necessary to enlist others for the local places. Our own sons are away from home, Loyde engaged in his chosen work and Vail preparing for his vocation.

The W. M. S. and S. M. M. are both doing good work under good leaders, filling their place in the routine of general church activities, in a commendable way.

We are still working with a group of boys, having twenty-four from the various churches in the community. Recently they gave a public program and demonstration in the city hall. Special awards were given those who kept their work up, and to those who had gone twenty or more times to church school during the preceding six months. Three boys missed nine; several went 23, two 22 and some 20. Others went less. There were none but went from three to sixteen Sundays. We also require one church attendance for each Sunday. Many of them made a commendable record here also.

We are trying to fill our place in the community activities in other ways. We speak at the high and grade schools once a month along with the other ministers who take their turn. We belong to the Community Club which promotes good things; sponsoring the Community Father and Son program, improving streets by grading and graveling, and getting a new highway by town connecting other state and national roads; just now we are making efforts to get natural gas piped into town from a main which comes from Texas, across Kansas and through our county on up to Grand Island on the Platte River.

We are making use of some outside space by the church for advertising. Some of our signs are, "Today is the Day of Salvation," "John 3:16 is for ALL," "Park Here and Stay for Church," "Garments of Righteousness Never Wear Out," "Worship With Us," "Find God, and His Love." Our church is located on the "lead-in" street from the new highway.

We enjoyed our District Conference at Mulvane, it making our fourth visit to this southern Kansas field. It was here we held our first revival in the earlier years of our ministry—1913. There are some good people down there all right.

May God bless his work and workers in every field. W. R. DEETER.

LYDIA, MARYLAND

It has been some time since the readers of the Evangelist have had a report from the church at St. James, Maryland. This is not because there was nothing to report. But may be due to the fact that as we grow older writing becomes more and more burdensome, and therefore we allow other things to crowd out this duty. Or, perhaps, it was due to the garden and the care of a small flock of chickens, both of which we have here and enjoy very much after about fourteen years' residence in the city where we could have neither. However, I shall attempt a brief report of the work here.

We have been on the field for a period of eighteen months. The congregation is made up largely of a rural people, who are widely scattered. This makes the matter of getting acquainted somewhat slow, and attendance at the services irregular. However, the attendance has been up to the average of recent years.

The different departments of the church are keeping up their part of the work nicely. The W. M. S., though small, is alive and active. The same can be said of the Sisterhood of Mary and Martha.

We maintain a prayer meeting during the winter months with an attendance of from fifteen to twenty.

So far, this year there has been an increase in attendance at our Sunday school, over that of last year. On Sunday, November the tenth, we observed rally day in our school. We had set our goal at 150 in attendance. But when the reports came in we found that we had gone over the top with an attendance of 169. The entire morning service was given over to the Sunday school. The program was in two parts. The first consisted of the regular Sunday school session. The second part was devoted to several selections of music by an orchestra from a neighboring Sunday school, and some songs and recitations by some of the primary and intermediate scholars. There were some short addresses by several of the teachers and officers of the school. We were glad to have with us the superintendent of the Disciple Sunday school at Downsview who made a very interesting talk on the subject, "The Value of the Sunday School to the Community."

In February of this year we conducted a two weeks' evangelistic campaign. The attendance and interest, during these meetings, was good. The results were sixteen young people added to the church by confession of faith and baptism. There had been one accession preceding the meeting, making in all seventeen additions for the year.

We rejoice in the victories that are being won throughout the brotherhood, and pray that God may continue to prosper his work.

W. S. BAKER.

LIMESTONE, TENNESSEE

I have just returned from an evangelistic meeting with our church located near Limestone, Tennessee. This is the home of our sister, Miss Mary Pence. Miss Mary, too by the way, has been the faithful pastor and teacher here for several years. I might say in passing, that if there is a church or group who would like to secure a good Bible teacher and personal worker, you might do well to get in touch with Miss Pence, as she is faithful to the Word.

About a year ago this church called Rev. M. D. Early, who was at that time engaged in the work at Lost Creek, Kentucky, as pastor for part time. For several months Brother Early took care of the work by making monthly visits from Lost Creek to Tennessee. Brother and Sister Early are comfortably located on the field and are doing splendid work. They are much loved by the church and the people in the community. It was the writer's experience also, that these dear people are untiring in their efforts to make one comfortable. Our fellowship together was ideal, and I am truly grateful for the hospitality of these dear brethren.

As to details and visible results of the meeting we will leave for some one on the field to report. However, it was very gratifying and there was an urgent invitation by pastor and people that we return soon for another meeting. This of course we would be glad to do if the Lord tarries, and so leads.

After visiting in practically every home and observing the work from various angles, I feel confident the work will go forward in an acceptable way. The church is being brought together in such a manner as to give new courage and hope, and has greatly enlarged their vision in plans for a greater work. May the blessings of God be upon you, and rest assured that your labors will not be in vain "IN THE LORD."

JAS. S. COOK.

MARTINSBURG AND MCKEE, PENNSYLVANIA

The work at both these churches is moving along in a very gratifying way. On November the 10th we observed rally day at Martinsburg, with splendid results. Two years ago on the 20th of the same month we rededicated the church with a small indebtedness, and the 10th day of November was set aside for the raising of an offering to be applied on this debt. The Rose Circle

Class, a class of young ladies, who had planned a gift of $110.00 was awarded the privilege of taking charge of the opening and closing session of the Sunday school and it was done in a very beautiful and effective manner. Special music and song was another feature of the morning service. Without any special appeal $460.00 was raised to be applied on the church debt.

Our communion service was observed in the evening. Despite the rain that began to fall late in the evening there was a goodly number present to enjoy these blessings.

The following Sunday, November the 17th, a similar program was followed at the McKee church. There was at least one exception and that was the weather. It began to rain some time early in the morning and rained hard all day and evening. Yet our attendance and offering was good. The communion service in the evening was well attended, 73 taking part in that service. The young ladies rendered a short but splendid program between the Sunday school and preaching service.

For the program and the success of these two services, it should be said, much credit is due the superintendents of these two schools, Brother J. E. Dilling at Martinsburg, and Brother William Wertman at McKee.

Plans are already made for evangelistic meetings to be held at both of these churches. Brother R. Paul Miller will begin a meeting with us at Martinsburg, January 23. And Dr. J. C. Beal is to be with us at McKee in the spring. We are looking forward to our Lord for greater blessings if he tarries.

JAS. S. COOK.

FORT WAYNE, INDIANA

We closed a two weeks' revival effort in the First Brethren church of Fort Wayne, November 17th, Sister Edna Nicholas of Elkhart doing the preaching. Sister Nicholas is the daughter of Elder Puterbaugh of Dunker fame and is thoroughly rooted and grounded in the faith and doctrines of the Brethren church. She is also a very consecrated woman and loves to be in the service of her Lord.

Mrs. Nicholas and I did quite a good deal of personal work, calling on people in the church and out of the church.

Her sermons were good and she had the best of attention while she preached, and while there were no accessions to the church, no doubt many lasting impressions were made and the church was very much revived.

Personally I should like to see Sister Nicholas have greater opportunities to develop her talents and devote her whole time to the preaching of the gospel.

We had a very blessed Communion service the last day of the meeting. More of our people were at the table than ever before since the church has been built. This was very encouraging to the pastor and to all our workers. One week later we had "Homecoming" and an all-day meeting at the church. The morning service was in charge of a number of the C. I. C. Class. These ladies gave a complete history of the mission work in Fort Wayne from its infancy to the time of the dedication of the church. This proved to be very interesting and impressive. At the noon hour a bountiful meal was served in the basement of the church. At 2:30, Rev. E. M. Riddle, pastor of the First Brethren church of Warsaw, brought the message of the day.

Elder S. S. Blough, pastor of the Church of the Brethren of this city, also gave a very earnest talk. Supper was served in the evening also, and the physical man's wants were abundantly supplied as well as the spiritual. It was also a great day for social intercourse.

At 7:30 the ladies gave a playlet giving us a concrete example of the work in the beginning and the difficulties they met with in their mission experience. This proved to be a great day for the mission workers in Fort Wayne.

J. L. KIMMEL, Pastor.

LEADERLESS AT TEEGARDEN

After reading what Brother Vanator had to say in the November 23rd issue of The Brethren Evangelist, I am made to wonder how many of our church leaders are really taking an interest in the young people of today. Are they really trying to be leaders of these young folks, or are they just neglecting them, thinking, "Oh, well, let them have their good time; all will right itself some day when they get older?" They need to have a good time, all right, but they need to be directed and led into the right ways, and interested in the service of the church. We need such a word as Brother Vanator gave, for the young people are not getting the thoughtful attention they deserve.

Now I want to appeal for leadership in our own church at Teegarden, Indiana. I am wondering if there is not some one who would like to sacrifice a little to help us, or to be a leader for our young people. We have a fine bunch of young people here, and they are doing a good work, especially for not having a leader to help them. We need a pastor here by all means.

I know our church is small and some may not think we amount to much, but I want you to think what our little efforts for the church in general have accomplished. There have been five boys to go into the ministry from our Sunday school. Three are working in the Brethren church. They are Brother O. C. Lemmert and Brethren Omer and Floyd Sibert. And Brethren Floyd and Roscoe Wilson are in the United Brethren ministry. So do you not think our little church pays? I say, Yes. And right here in our little community are more young people who will do just as well, if we can only have a leader to guide them. We must look to our young people for our future leaders. My heart is anxious and greatly concerned about it because my health has failed so that I am unable to help any more as I once could. Is there not some one who will help us?

MRS. SIMON RENSBERGER,
R. F. D. No. 1, Walkerton, Indiana.

CEDAR RAPIDS NEWS

The unorganized group which constitutes the Brethren church at Cedar Rapids has been worshipping with the Church of the Brethren for two years past, having all things in common including Sunday school, Prayer Meeting, Communion Service, finances and women's work alone being separate. The Brethren church pays one-half the pastor's salary, the present pastor being a member of the Church of the Brethren. Brother Bame of the Brethren church has recently closed a union meeting for both congregations which obtained all the things in sight we had hoped and planned for.

Many members of both churches were stirred to new zeal, several members being added to each church by baptism and relation. Brother Bame's messages were sound in doctrine, thorough in scope and uplifting in their nature. After his years of experience and maturity in the ministry he is able to bring strong and constructive pressure to bear on local problems. Fads in evangelists come and go with the Brethren church, many times without any proper consideration of merit.

I wish to commend Brother Bame's work very highly to the brotherhood. I trust while he is free for this evangelistic season he may be used to the fullest measure. I wish to give him unqualified endorsement for service in any kind of a Brethren church I have ever visited and that is quite a large percentage of our denomination.

Since the close of the meeting interest has been maintained with unflagging fervor, large crowds attending Sunday services, both morning and evening, as well as the prayer meeting. The meeting which has just closed has been the most noteworthy event in the life of this church since its founding.

Brother Bame returns to Cedar Rapids for a short time for a union meeting under the auspices of the Sunshine Mission, a sort of Civically supported rescue work which has the support of all the evangelical churches in the City. With a full committee representing all the Protestant denominations in the City and with the assistance of regular radio broadcasting, we feel he is in a position to do a large work for this entire City of 60,000 people.

I trust he may be open for some further union efforts between the Church of the Brethren, such as that held here. I am sure no cause of complaint can be found in either body, as Brother Bame has his heart in just this kind of work and possesses both tact and diplomacy. GEORGE T. ROK.

Good Books for All Ages

(Any book in this list may be ordered through the Brethren Publishing Company, Ashland, Ohio).

BOOKS FOR CHILDREN

A Boy of Galilee, by Mildred Whitney Stillman (Duffield, $75). An exquisite little Christmas story of the boy Jesus, very attractive in red and silver and in its little red box.

Stories Jesus Heard and Stories Jesus Told, by Carrie Burr Prouty (Wilde, $1.50). Pleasing Bible stories told in modern narrative form. They start away back in the Old Testament and lead down into the life of Jesus. They include Jesus' parables recast in form that cannot fail to delight the children of our day.

The Book of the Bible, by John W. Flight (Oxford University Press, $1.00). Prof. William Lyon Phelps of Yale University, in a vigorous foreword, notable for its own fine tribute to the Bible, commends this book by Dr. Flight. "The cream of the literature of the Bible is given here," he says, "and the description and explanatory passages are so briefly and clearly written that the young student would follow the whole course of the Bible story with ease and intelligence." The book is finely illustrated, and its price is amazingly low.

Jesus of Nazareth, by Agnes Adams (Oxford University Press, $2.00). Stories of the Master and his disciples told for young folks in attractive pages and richly illustrated in color by W. H. Margetson. A distinctive book.

The Fairy Caravan, by Beatrix Potter (David McKay, $2.00). Beatrix Potter is author of the famous "Peter Rabbit" books. The twenty-three tales of this book are sure to please those who have found her former books delightful for their literary quality and for the quaint way in which they blend imagination with reality.

Short Poems for Short People, by Alicia Aspinwall (Dutton, $2.50). About 100 poems in a book of pretty binding and fine typography, illustrated by Fanny Y. Cory.

Three Little Kittens, Puss in Boots, Red Riding Hood, The Three Bears, Little People's Sound Primer, Jack and the Beanstalk, The Little Red Hen, Jack the Giant Killer, The Three Pigs, Bow-Wow and Mew-Mew, and Hop o' My Thumb, are separate volumes in the Action, Imitation and Fun Series, all written by Mara L. Pratt-Chadwick (David McKay, $.60 each). They are large-type, pictured primers or story books each with an introduction for teachers.

My Grandpa's Farm, by Mary Wolfe Thompson (Stokes, $1.50). A little girl's own story of a year on her grandfather's farm in northern New Jersey. An interesting description of farm-life happenings, with a number of illustrations by Edna Potter.

Peep-in-the-World, by F. E. Crichton (Longmans, $1.75). The story of a little English girl who spends a year in her uncle's old castle in the mountains of Germany. This is the tenth impression of a book long popular with young readers, and it has the attraction of new illustrations by Frank McIntosh.

Æsop's Fables (David McKay Co., Philadelphia, $1.50). An edition of the Fables in large and excellent type, with choice illustrations, many in color, by Nora Fry.

Alice's Adventures in Wonderland, by Lewis Carroll (Dutton, $2.00). The illustrations by Willy Pogany make this edition of the children's classic quite unique. It must be seen to be appreciated, for no description could convey an adequate impression of it.

For Boys and Girls

The All Holidays Book of Jane and John, by Clara G. Dennis (Marshall Jones, $2.50). A round-the-year book of holiday good times in the lives of two little children, unique from cover to cover, and interestingly illustrated by Beatrice Stevens.

Boys' and Girls' Book of Outdoor Games, by A. Frederick Collins (Appleton, $2.00). One would hardly think there were as many games as Mr. Collins writes of, but he knows them all and gives the details concerning them.

Go Tell You Guess, by Amos R. Wells (Wildes, $1.00). A Bible recreation book, following the plan of the game of "Throwing light," designed to fix Bible facts in the minds of young folks.

Sally in South Africa, by Gulielma Day Orr and Henriette Schiele (Century, $1.75). A story based on an actual trip made by a fifteen-year-old American girl into the heart of Africa. The accurate descriptions and real adventures have woven with them a plot of thrills and suspense.

All About Pets, by Margery Bianco (Macmillan, $2.00). A somewhat unusual book, telling young readers just how to take care of their pets. Perhaps all children may not be interested in how to pick up a baby mouse, or in hobnobbing with rats, but every boy or girl who has a dog, or a kitten, or a rabbit, ought to know just how to take care of it—to say nothing of birds, guinea pigs and other pets.

American Animals, by David Newell (P. F. Volland, $1.25). This book, telling of American animals in interesting verses, with the author's own fine illustrations on every page, is a marvel of attractiveness, and of book-making at its price. It is a veritable compendium of American animals, yet is entirely on the level of the young reader. It is the sort of book that is a pleasure to commend.

Boy Scouts on the Green Mountain Trail, by Walter Pritchard Eaton (Wildes, $1.75).

"A story of the long trail," in an interesting series of Boy Scout books by a well-known author. Illustrated.

Three Points of Honor, by Russell Gordon Carter (Little, Brown, $2.00). A book based upon the principles of the Scout Oath and Law, awarded the $4,000 prize in the Boys' Life—Little Brown & Company competition.

The Black Arrowhead, by Caroline Dale Snedeker (Doubleday, Doran, $2.00). A very attractive book for children of from eight to twelve years, in which the legends of Long Island are skillfully interwoven into a story of historical background and interest. It has many illustrations.

For Older Boys and Girls

Pirate's Port, by Alida Sims Malkus (Harper, $2.00). An historical novel of the Dutch period of early New York, when piracy and freebooting had hardly come under the ban of law. Two girls are the center of unusual scenes and experiences in this picturesque and thrilling story.

Susanna and Tristram, by Marjorie Hill Allee (Houghton Mifflin, $2.00). A story of the exciting experiences of the "underground railway" in the 1850's. Sixteen-year-old Susanna and her ten-year-old brother rode to Cincinnati searching for their cousin, Levi, head of the "underground." Here in the river town Susanna became involved as a "conductor" in assisting slaves to freedom. A most interesting book.

Bob Bartlett, Master Mariner, by Fitzhugh Green (Putnam, $1.75). A book for boys, with thirty-one illustrations, about Peary's famous Polar skipper, who has had about as many and varied adventures as any man living. He went to the rescue of Fitzhugh Green's expedition in 1917. His advice to American boys is, "Go to sea if you will, but give it up in time."

Welcome Stranger, by Neil E. Cook (Appleton, $1.75). A tale of the Arizona desert for men and boys. Its chief characters are a fifteen-year-old waif and an old miner of a fiery, independent spirit, who supplies much of the humor in the story.

The Chumash Indians, by Gale Ewell (Harr Wagner Pub Co., $1.80). A story of adventure for young people, dealing with some interesting explorations and discoveries in California archaeology and ending in a happy love story. An interesting book.

A Patriot Lad of Old Saratoga, by Russell Gordon Carter (Penn, $1.50). An historical tale for boys of from seven to twelve years, the latest of a series of Patriot Lad books in which the boy heroes are discovered to have had a notable part in historic happenings.

Fran of Albania, by Elizabeth C. Miller (Doubleday, Doran, $2.00). A story for those of high school age. Fran is a girl of the Albanian mountains, and the book tells of her adventures in wartime, life in the refugee barracks at Skodra, and her love story. The author has lived in Skodra and writes from knowledge of the daily life of the Albanian mountaineers.

Under Two Eagles, by Helen Coale Crew (Little, Brown, $2.00). A story of present-day Poland. Vasily Milneff, son of a poor fisherman of Warsaw, is an active and ambitious boy who finds his opportunity with General Pilsudski. Vasily later comes to America—hence the title of the story. There are many illustrations by Henry C. Pitz.

The Winning Hazard, by Allen Chaffee (Century, $1.75). A story of machine logging in the Pacific Northwest, written by a woman acquainted, by a long visit to a lumber camp, with the scenes and experiences which form the background of a thrilling book.

The Red-Headed Halfback, by Earl Reed Silvers (Appleton, $1.75). In Part I, "School," and Part II, "College," this book tells the story of three star players, who learn through many interesting experiences to play the game of life. It has the qualities that has made the author a popular writer of school and athletic stories.

A Frontier Girl of Virginia, by Alice Turner Curtis (Penn, $2.00). An interesting historical novel for girls of from ten to fifteen years.

A Girl from London, by Rachel M. Varble (Little, Brown, $2.00). The "girl from London" was sent by a bachelor uncle to relatives in Old Virginia in days when the Revolution was stirring. Her Tory convictions clash with her Revolutionary environment until a distinguished gentleman, as the story narrates, won her to the cause of the Colonies.

Prize Books for Young Folks

Carmelia Commands, by Walter S. Ball (Harper, $2.00). This book won the Harper-American prize of $2,000 for the best book of fiction for girls. It is the story of a fourteen-year-old girl in the Italian quarter of an American city—a problem story of two generations, the parents retaining their language and ways, the children becoming "Americanized," with all the dramatic situations that follow. Adults, as well as young folks, will enjoy the book.

Courageous Companions, by Charles J. Finger (Longmans, $3.00). This tale of life before the mast, by a master of narrative writing, is based upon the historical documents of Magellan's Cruise. It is the story of Osborne, a young English boy, who shipped with the Spaniard on his first voyage around the world. It is full of vivid and stirring incident, narrated with care for geographical and historical accuracy. The book was awarded the $2,000 prize in the Longman's Juvenile Fiction Contest, and though interesting for all, has been written particularly for those of ages twelve to sixteen. The illustrations are by James Dougherty.

The Jumping-Off Place, by Marian Hurd McNeely (Longmans, $2.00). A story of pioneer life in the Dakotas, and of the courage and persistency of the young Linvilles, Becky, seventeen, and Dick, fifteen, who had the task of homesteading, and of caring for an orphaned brother and sister. The children won out in spite of blizzards and many dangers and handicaps, including the jealous intrigues of an unscrupulous neighbor. The author has herself been a homesteader in South Dakota and vouches for the accuracy of her narrative. The book was runner-up in the Longmans' $2,000 Prize Juvenile Fiction competition.

Books for Adults

Christ in the Poetry of Today, compiled by Elvira Slack. "This anthology is of genuine merit and significance."—Contemporary Verse, $2.50. The Woman's Press.

Book of Services for Group Worship, A Services on special subjects adaptable to almost any occasion. $1.00 The Woman's Press.

The Girls' Every Day Book. Thoughts for every day that will challenge every girl. $1.25. The Woman's Press.

Love, the Law of Life: Toyohiko Kagawa. Kagawa is a name to conjure with; his influence reaches millions, now that he has taken the lead in the great religious awakening in Japan. This book gives the whole "gospel" of Kagawa, teacher, orator, mystic, personality. (2.00. Christian Century).

The Shakespeare Songs, edited by Tucker Brooke (William Morrow & Co., $10.00 and $1.50). This is first complete collection of the lyrics of Shakespeare, edited with scholarship and good taste and published in unusually attractive form.

Lincoln's Mary and the Babies. By Bernie Babcock. (J. B. Lippincott Company, $2.00). Another Lincoln book by the popular author of "The Soul of Ann Rutledge."

Twice-Born Ministers by S. M. Shoemaker, Jr. (Revell, $1.50).

Dr. Shoemaker, author of "Children of the Second Birth," presents a wealth of testimony from his own ministry as to the need for kindling the fire of devotion in other lives.

F. B. Meyer, Preacher-Teacher—Man of God by A. Chester Mann (Revell, $2.00). Dr. Edgar W. Work says: "A beautiful story beautifully told." The biographer has entered into the life depicted, has felt it for himself, has become its interpreter. Illustrated.

The Jesus Road and the Red Man by G. E. E. Lindquist (Revell $1.50). A course of Scriptural Studies by the Field Secretary of the Society for Propagating the Gospel Among the Indians.

The World's Greatest Things by Edwin L. House, D.D. (Revell $2.00). Addresses on Supreme Values of Human Life. The "warm, practical gospel of good cheer which is needed today."

Doors of God by Frederick F. Shannon, D.D. (Revell $1.50). A new "Shannon" volume which the "Baptist Standard" calls "thought-food which will start the machinery of the mind to working with vim."

The Gospel According to Matthew by G. Campbell Morgan (Revell $3.50). A study of the life of Christ—His words, His ways, His Works, His life and His eternal triumph.

The Other Shepherd, A Tale of the First Christmas Among the Shepherds of Bethlehem by Ernest C. Wareing (Abingdon $1.00 net). Illustrated. Stirring, living pictures are here presented depicting the unusual events that us in the advent of Our Lord. The book is happily adapted to the spirit of Christmas.

The Road to Christmas by Clough A. Waterfield (Abingdon. 75c net.) The old yet new story of Christmas told in a different way.

Christmas Legends and Stories, by Phebe A. Curtiss (Meigs $1.50). The power of a good story well told is shown by the fact that the beautiful Christmas service "White Gifts for the King" was suggested by a very short story—The Legend of Cathay. This is the first story in the book and the other nineteen that follow are just as full of suggestions and truths to impress as this one is.

Sham, by Joseph Hocking (Revell $2.00). A story of today with its roots in the immortal parable of the Prodigal, irresistible in its fresh appeal, by the author of Prodigal Daughters."

Citizenship and Moral Reform, by John W. Langdale; the Abingdon Press, New York. Prohibition, divorce, poverty, crime, industrial relations and other great social problems which are concerning the nation and will concern it for some time to come are here discussed. This is not a new book but is a new edition issued in 1928 of a work which is probably more significant now than when it first came from the press. Any of the themes discussed by Dr. Langdale would require a series of volumes for exhaustive treatment, but the author has, with commendable brevity, set forth the essential elements from the standpoint of the Christian citizen.

Give Prohibition Its Chance, by Mrs. Ella A. Boole, Ph.D., (Fleming H. Revell Co., $1.50). Mrs. Boole, President of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, has written a most interesting and valuable book. She definitely states her purpose in the foreword where she says: "The purpose of this book is to record, without statistics, the part the women of America have had in the progress of the prohibition movement; to analyze, if possible, its psychology, and to show why women are determined that prohibition shall have its chance." Mrs. Boole does not attempt to disparage the work done by mere men in this reform movement, but makes it clear that this is not her theme. Throughout the book she sets forth the invaluable services rendered by women from the beginning of this fight when "liquor and drunkenness were making the headway of rank weeds and there appeared to be no way to stop this evil until out of a clear sky the women began to march and pray against the saloon."

Drink Nationalization in England (Review of "Drink Nationalization in England" by Wilson Stuart; James Clark & Co., London). Wilson Stuart, late fellow of Manchester University and well known author—ity upon Great Britain's liquor questions is the author of "Drink Nationalization in England and Its Results: The Carlisle Experiment" in which he sets forth the very important evidence which he gathered and presented to the Southborough Committee on "Disinterested Management of Public Houses" showing the failure of state ownership and so-called "disinterested management" in spite of ten years of experiment under an absolute monopoly and with an enormous expenditure of money. The Carlisle experiment is one of the most interesting bits of laboratory work that has been done in Great Britain in connection with the liquor problem. Its proposers believed that they had found an ideal area on which to commence an experimental scheme whereby the sale of liquor might be taken over and its consumption controlled by the state. Mr. Stuart has not merely collected the statistics which bear upon the character of the results obtained, but also has joined to these the most lucid exposition and explanation. His pages are starred with citations from official reports supporting his thesis. (Order through the Brethren Publishing Company, Ashland, Ohio).

TO THE QUEEN

*Courage that kept unflinching guard
Ready at instant need;
That sprang to life at his lightest word
Or his bravest deed;
Faith that could arm his soul to live
In the pit of hell—
Faith and courage were his to give,
And he gave them well.*

*There is no flaw on his high renown
Untouched by friend or foe—
He has fought his fight, and his lists are down,
And the sun sinks low.
Look in his eyes where nothing clings
But weariness stark and wan;
Lancelot draws to the end of things,
But I go on!*

*But I go on—to a sure reward
And a fate that is yet to run;
Seeing your smile in the flash of my sword
As it wheels in the sun;
Seeing your eyes in the faultless blue
Of perilous seas—
The whole of a life I bring to you
And not the lees.*

"THY KINGDOM COME"—A REWARD OF MERIT

The South Dakota Council of Religious Education gave sixty-eight copies of THY KINGDOM COME, the Report of the Tenth Convention of the World's Sunday School Association, to that many County leaders at its recently held Annual Convention in Pierre. This book was the award chosen with which to recognize meeting the quota of delegates in the respective counties. Last year a Christian Flag was presented for similar success.

A representative from each County was called forward, presented with a book and remained on the platform until all had received their gifts. A brief synopsis was given of the book "Thy Kingdom Come" by the General Secretary, Mrs. A. L. Grebel. The President of the Executive Board, Mr. George L. Kemper, then presented the books. A plan was also given whereby the County Secretary could form an itinerary for circulating the book throughout the County. This will give to the South Dakota people a general idea of the Sunday school work throughout the world. These books were very much appreciated and the delegates were delighted to see their County receive this recognition.

The World's Sunday School Association represents the outreach of the organized Sunday school work to the foreign mission fields where upwards of twenty-four native secretaries and field workers are developing the general program of Christian religious education. THY KINGDOM COME is a volume of over four hundred pages and gives the leading reports and addresses presented by the representatives from fifty nations at the World's Sunday School Convention which was held in Los Angeles last July. The Eleventh Convention will take place in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil in July, 1932.

THE MESSAGE OF LIFE

Every human life that fails to hear its message and learn its lesson, or fails to speak it out, keeping it locked in the silence of the heart, leaves this earth a little poorer.—Dr. J. R. Miller.

If you wish to show how well you would undergo trials from which you are exempt, show it by your way of sustaining those to which you are subjected.—Archbishop Whately.

History shows that wrong never works out toward right, but some people keep believing that it does, just the same.

NOTICE OF CHANGE OF HOME MISSION HEADQUARTERS

ON AND AFTER DECEMBER 20 ALL OFFERINGS AS WELL AS OTHER MATTER PERTAINING TO THE WORK OF THE HOME MISSION BOARD SHOULD BE ADDRESSED TO
R. PAUL MILLER, BERNE, INDIANA

Anything sent to Brother Gearhart in Dayton after that date will only have to be re-mailed by him to Berne, for the office of the Board is being moved to Berne at that time.

If Pastors and Church Officers will carefully keep this in mind it will avoid a great deal of delay and misunderstanding.

Signs of the Times

by
Alva J. McClain

WHOM could you trust?

The morning newspapers of America feature an interesting suggestion made by Edward N. Hurley, former chairman of the United States Shipping Board, for the abolishing of war. Mr. Hurley thinks that by the control of the basic raw materials essential for the conduct of modern warfare, belligerent nations could be denied the means of carrying on a war. Among these materials he lists iron ore, coal, rubber, manganese, nickel, aluminum, petroleum, news print, tungsten, chromium and mercury. He urges the industrial chiefs of the world to take concerted action to control these materials.

But the question arises, after these basic materials are properly "cornered," into whose hands shall the control be placed? Whom can we trust? History has taught us not to expect too much of men.

Furthermore, history teaches that you cannot keep men from fighting by taking away their weapons. As a noted statesman once said, "Take away all the guns, swords, battleships, tanks, airplanes, and bayonets, and men will tear up the very cobblestones out of the streets and fight." Hannibal and Scipio knew nothing about tungsten and chromium, but they fought just as ferociously as Hindenburg and Foch. There are no short cuts to peace. "The carnal mind is enmity against God," and also against man. The Kingdom of God will not be brought in by the World Court or the League of Nations. "Except a man be born from above, he cannot see the Kingdom of God." That is the only hope of the world, until the coming of the Son of God to enforce peace among the nations.

When he comes, we shall have someone who can be trusted with all the natural resources of the world, not merely with the ten raw materials mentioned by Mr. Hurley. And he will administer them in the interest of peace. Upon rebellious nations, we are told by the prophet Zechariah, "there shall be no rain." Rain is more essential than nickel or petroleum.

WHAT is a creed?

A Unitarian preacher, advertising his church in the daily papers this week, says in heavy black-face type, "A creed is a religious fossil. It represents the dead faith of the past. . . . The Unitarian Church has no creed. You can never outgrow such a church."

The Unitarian church has gone to startling lengths in order to make good this boast; so far, indeed, that old time Unitarian leaders like Channing would shudder if they could be here. Not long ago, a modern Unitarian preacher declared that one need not believe even in the existence of God to be a member of his denomination. He is right, if the Unitarian church has no creed. For if you affirm your belief in God, you have a creed, with one article in it.

But even the Unitarian Church, in spite of its frantic denials, has a creed. It says, We believe creeds are bad. And that is a creed, shorter perhaps than the Westminster Confession, but a creed nevertheless. Look out for the man who is always crying out against creeds. He is not really against creeds, as such, but is probably trying to substitute his own little creed for the great historic creeds of the Church.

What you believe religiously is your creed. If you believe the Bible, you have the most perfect, the most complete, and the most dogmatic creed in the world. The first commandment of Christianity is "BELIEVE." And you cannot believe without believing something. No man can believe the Bible, preach the Bible, or teach the Bible, without believing and preaching and teaching a creed. Hold fast your creed, if you are a Christian. Be dogmatic about it. It is no crime to be dogmatic. Don't be afraid to say, I BELIEVE. The creed-haters are not afraid to say it.

THE "progress" of America

Some time ago, Bertrand Russell, English philosopher and mathematician, spoke to a representative audience in San Francisco. When the introducer spoke of Russell as a pacifist, there was slight applause. When he was spoken of as a socialist, there was a bit more applause. When he was introduced as a pro-German, the applause grew. And when he was described as an atheist, the applause was general and prolonged.

A few days ago, Bishop Hamilton of the Methodist Episcopal Church, came to Los Angeles. To his interviewers he said, "The world is continually growing better. The influence of the church is increasing."

It all depends upon the standard of your judgment. The world has more bath-tubs, more Fords, more laws, more books—and more nervous breakdowns. But the heart of humanity is no more inclined toward God than it was in the days of Hammurabi. Nineteen hundred years ago, the world hung the Son of God on a Cross. We don't do that any more in civilized countries. Instead, we found colleges and then turn them over to "wise" professors who bow Jesus Christ out of the universe with a polite sneer. If you do not believe this, read the latest book by Dr. Barnes of Smith College entitled "The Twilight of Christianity."

But all the scepticisms of man cannot get rid of Jesus Christ. The day is coming when at the Name of Jesus "every knee shall bow." And that includes Dr. Barnes and Mr. Russell. The man who sits in judgment upon God will find at the last that, like Pilate, he has sat in judgment upon himself. "He that sitteth in the heavens will laugh."

Big ideas make big men.—Geo. H. Knox.

It is ideas utilized that makes the desert bloom.—George H. Knox.

The man with an idea has ever changed the face of the world.

Your idea or ideal is not fully yours until you have expressed it.—Henry C. King.

He who wishes to fulfill his mission must be a man of one idea—that is, of one great, overmastering purpose overshadowing all his other aims and guiding and controlling his entire life.—C. A. Bates.

Missing Link Not Yet Found

Gerrit S. Miller, curator of the division of mammals of the United States National Museum, said recently that "if a human missing link is to be found at all, it must be sought among fossil remains of mammals long ago extinct, since there is no living animal known which possesses the required peculiarities. As a result of 70 years of effort investigators have made exactly two 'finds' which can be seriously regarded as furnishing the evidence of man's blood relationship with animals resembling in some general manner the present day gorilla and chimpanzee. These are the Java apeman, Pithecanthropus erectus, and the Piltown dawn man. The former was discovered in 1891-92 in central Java, and the latter about twenty years afterward at Piltown, Sussex, England."

The Java apeman find, Miller says, consisted of a skull cap, a femur bone and two lower molar teeth. All authorities agree, he points out, that the skull cap is strangely different from that of all other known mammals, both recent and fossil. Beyond this there has been no agreement, so that the public assumption that the relationship between Pithecanthropus erectus and man has been established is not well founded."

Regarding the "dawn man" Miller says that the "find" consisted of four pieces, reconstructed from nine fragments of a cranium and an imperfect lower jaw bearing two molar teeth, while afterwards a pair of nasal bones and a canine tooth were found. Still, later two more fragments of a skull and a third molar tooth made their appearance.

"According to the different reconstructions," he goes on to say, "the form of the cranium may be completely human in striking contrast to the apelike jaw, or it may have partially simian features which cause this contrast to become less."

"While awaiting further discoveries we should not hesitate to confess that in place of demonstrable links between man and other mammals we have nothing more than some fossils so fragmentary that they are susceptible of being interpreted either as such links or as something else," he insisted. —The Evangelical-Messenger.

A Review of White Gift Appeals

Many times we have written appeals in behalf of the White Gift offering, as others have written also. This time, instead of writing an extended appeal of our own, we are giving what we have called "A Review" of some of the appeals others have made, together with comments therewith. Manifestly we have not been able to dip into every article that has been written, and from those we have touched it has been necessary to quote most briefly. Though coming from numerous voices, these sentiments are not conflicting; rather they register a striking harmony, strong and moving.

Making a White Gift offering has become a fixed event in our church calendar. It is a call for support of the great work of the National Sunday School Association, and we can say without equivocation or hesitancy that the Association deserves our support, because it has proven a good servant of the brotherhood. And generally speaking, the support has been good. There are schools that regularly and with pleasure look forward to this offering, and not a few of them give with generosity. But taking into account the schools that give sparsely and those that give nothing at all, it may be a surprise to us to learn that our average per capita gift is quite small.

To verify this statement, turn to a statement made by the treasurer of the Association last year: "Just for fun, put your hand down in your pocket, or your purse, or your coffee-pot, or wherever you keep your money, and see if you have a dime. Look at it a minute. Suppose you drop it down through a crack in the floor. Would you miss it? Look at your dime again. What do you think of it as a birthday present for someone you love? Now let me remind you that the average Christmas White Gift offering last year was less than two dimes per member." And we notice that the total for 1928 did not measurably improve over that of the preceding year. So right at the outset we will all acknowledge the need of just such appeals as we are offering. We need to be stirred to a keener sense of our duty in this regard.

But mere gifts is not the first thing of importance, much as they are needed,—the quality must be considered. If it were just a collecting of taxes, like the government does, it would matter little about the spirit, just so the money was forthcoming. But we are interested not merely in the raising of money, but in the honoring of our Lord the King. And it takes gifts of quality to do that. They must be White Gifts. That is our first concern, as others have testified. Dr. W. H. Beachler, in December, 1924, said: "Let us make this coming White Gift offering the 'whitest' we have ever given. To do this we must give in the spirit of loving gratitude and worship. Moreover, we must place Christ's gift first. It would be superb if each and every Christian, before doing a single bit of Christmas shopping, would set aside his gift for Christ—a gift if you please of such size as would make it hurt a little and which would mean a little less for self. Certainly that would add to the 'whiteness' of our gifts." Rev. J. L. Gingrich in 1926 said: "The White Gift offering reminds us that our love should be pure and unmixed by reason of prejudice or selfish greed and material gain. The motive prompting any giving ought to be wholehearted and free from alloy." And Rev. E. L. Miller, defining a White Gift in 1927, declared: "So long as the gift is made with pure motives back of it and with no spirit of withholding, it is a White Gift, the kind that God can and will honor."

But no one definition tells it all. And we must not forget that there should be an utter lack of selfishness in our giving. Rev. A. V. Kimmel stressed this point in 1920, when he urged that it was not enough to be liberal, as one might be liberal and yet be selfish. "Self first and Christ next is selfishness and applies to our money as well as to any other form of worship. The argument is, 'a man has a right to take care of himself.' Yes, but when he takes care of himself first, he is selfish. The father who supplies all his own wants first and then provides for his wife and children is selfish even though he meets all the needs and the demands that may be made, and often those in comfortable financial circumstances are absolutely selfish. The Love Gift must be absolutely without selfishness. It was while we were yet sinners that Christ died for us, and in this God commendeth his utterly unselfish love for us. Now self must be in the gift always, but selfishness never!"

Furthermore, if our gifts are to be white, we must not treat them as if we were making exchange gifts with God. Mrs. O. J. Shively warned us against that when in 1922 she remarked that "It has become the custom for many people to exchange gifts on Christmas, and it is the privilege of all, but embraced by only a few, comparatively speaking, to give gifts on this happy day. There is a vast difference between exchanging gifts and giving gifts. The given gift is the love gift. God so loved that he gave all he had. Have we so loved that we have given him all and the best we have?" All too often it appears that we have not. We give a small portion with a half conscious sense that we have discharged an obligation, that we have made him a small gift in return for something he has given us, that we have in a measure squared accounts, so to speak. But we cannot exchange gifts with God; it is presumptuous to attempt it. Our gifts are never worthy of him except as they are made so by divine love and grace. All we can do is just to give him the best we have because we love him, because he has meant so much to us, because our lives are wrapped up in him and are wholly dependent on him. He is all worthiness while we have nothing of worth, nothing that will commend itself to him.

We base our appeal for White Gifts on God's own infinite love. On that basis no one can gainsay the right of our appeal, and on that basis appeals have been repeatedly made through the years. It was in 1925 that Rev. Freeman Ankrum reminded us that: "The Father of the world's first Christmas Gift, when he gave his Son, the Christ to the world, gave us the foundation of every good and perfect gift. Through him comes joy, peace, happiness, and without him comes baser selfishness and moral decay."

While gifts of substance have been prominent among the objects of our appeal, yet it has been by no means confined to such. Along with the offerings of money, we have sought always and usually first, the gift of self and of service. Prof. W. I. Duker wrote last year: "At the beginning of all gifts of true value, gifts that partake of the real Christmas spirit, is found the gift of self. That which we offer when we withhold ourselves is not a gift but rather a patronizing present. When we have given ourselves, then we are ready to give gifts that carry with them the very atmosphere of Christ." In the same issue of the Evangelist President Jacobs remarked that "this is a most appropriate time to bring a gift." And then said: "We cannot, like the Magi of old, see, adore, or follow his star, and perhaps it is just as well that we cannot, for today a greater privilege is ours—we may lay our lives and our all at his blessed feet. From this abundant store of treasure, he may choose what he will, but it is our duty, and it ought to be our highest pleasure, to surrender to him our fortunes and our lives."

Various motives have been held out to actuate our giving. Sometimes it has been denominational loyalty. Last year Rev. O. C. Starn said: "If you are happy that you are a member of the Brethren church, then don't you dare to allow her to fall down on this offering. Keep up her dignity. Boost the record of her Sunday schools." More often it has been for the propagation of the Gospel. That was the point to Prof. K. M. Monroe's appeal in the 1928 campaign: "Each individual in his White Gift offering aids in the proclaiming and propagating of Christianity. In this gift we have both a duty and a privilege." And there have been times when the hope of reward was set prominently before us, as in 1921 when Dr. Charles A. Bame wrote: "My brother, how do you hope to get a reward on the great Day of Days? Thousands of church members have never said a word in personal work. They have never personally tried to save a soul from death; they have never prayed a public prayer; they have been entirely silent along lines where many Christians work. Now many of these public workers are also the largest givers. Where will you come in when he comes to reward his servants? For many things he cannot reward you. For giving he will. Will you not seize your opportunity to do a thing that he cannot and will not pass in that great Day of Rewards?"

---

A man is saved by faith alone, but saving faith cannot abide alone.

Sometimes we find people who have joined church, but have not been joined to the body of Christ.

Word came to our office that the following members of our African Mission party have arrived home on furlough and are now on good old United States soil: Rev. and Mrs. Lester W. Kennedy, their two sons, Junior and Paul, and Misses Elizabeth Tyson and Mary L. Emmert.

We notice by a complimentary copy of the Long Beach Sun that the newspaper gave generous space to a story and pictures of the principals in the First Brethren church dedication of that city. We will soon be able to give our readers a splendid report and a glimpse of the beautiful structure.

Brother Willis E. Ronk, secretary-treasurer of the National Ministerial Association, gives us a brief history of the financial progress of that organization, as an excerpt from his annual report to the Association given at last National Conference and requested published by the ministers in session. Financially the Association shows prosperity.

Has fortune seemed to turn against you and you can scarcely see anything for which to be thankful? Consider yourself. Have you a fair measure of good health? Are your mental faculties unimpaired? Do you have the full use of your limbs? Do you have good eyes and ears? What more do you need to start a flow of thanksgiving?

The First church of Allentown, Pennsylvania has enjoyed a season of revivalism under the preaching of Brother I. D. Bowman, who for more than a half a century has been going up and down the land proclaiming the Word of God with power. No confessions were received, but it is hoped that ere long fruit will be born from the good seed sown. Brother S. E. Christiansen is the zealous pastor of this flock.

It is time now to begin to get the fact in mind that there will be a change in National Home Mission secretaries, effective December 20th. Brother R. Paul Miller takes over the work of Brother William A. Gearhart at that time, and the retiring secretary is anxious that our people shall see the importance of sending the mail, especially the money and checks to the proper party. It is possible that Brother Gearhart will be away from home for a time after January first and any mail or money sent to him there may have difficulty in reaching Brother Miller, whose address is Berne, Indiana.

We are again permitted to publish a report from the Field Secretary of the College Endowment Campaign, Dr. W. S. Bell, who tells us of his canvass of the church at Spokane, Washington, where nearly a decade ago, he did the initial work in the launching of a Brethren mission. This church is not strong financially, but it is endeavoring to maintain its own work without help from the mission board, but they did what they could for the College. Their gift was $628.00, which leaves the total of the Endowment Fund at $227,495.20.

A recent communication from Rev. A. J. Ramey of Manassas, Virginia, informs us that he was in Washington, D. C. not long ago and while there visited the Brethren church and assures us that he "found all alive, none dying, but all trying to do their best." Then he comments on the pastor as, "a workman that is worthy to lead, a good shepherd of the sheep." It is not only good to hear such encouraging comment concerning our churches and pastors from visiting brethren, but it also speaks well of the visitors to have eyes to see and spirits to appreciate the good. That, we are glad to say, is quite characteristic of our visiting brethren. Sometimes it may be necessary to criticize, but it is seldom necessary to do it publicly, and less seldom is it as effective as a word of encouragement or kindly comment.

The evangelistic campaign recently held in our church at Washington, D. C. was a splendid success, according to reports from both the pastor and the evangelist. Brother Kent says, "there were sixty-one who made decisions," many of which took the step to witness their resecration and some their decision for full time service. At the time of writing twenty had been baptized and others were soon to receive the rite. Pastor and church alike greatly enjoyed the services of Brother Miller, who believes the Washington church under its present leadership has a great future and deserves the help of the brotherhood in erecting a suitable church plant. And according to the plans of the last General Conference the brotherhood will be given opportunity to contribute to such an end. Brother Kent is proving himself a very capable leader of a big undertaking.

Brother Frank Gehman, pastor of the church at Uniontown, Pennsylvania, is building up a habit of frequency in reporting which is destined to redound to the success of his own work and also to the encouragement of that family spirit in the brotherhood which is a strong cord of unity. Many people do not realize how much we are dependent on letter-writing for the maintenance of that intimacy that keeps us mutually interested and united. We suffer more than we know both in our social relations and in church affairs by our neglected correspondence. And they who are conscientious about writing frequently, even though briefly, for the Evangelist, are doing more than merely keeping the rest of us informed about their work, and making glad the heart of the editor by helping him keep the paper filled with things of interest—they are helping to keep strong those cords of fellowship that bind our hearts together. Among other things of interest in Brother Gehman's letter is the mention of his effort to interest the children in the church services by the telling of Bible stories. We believe that wider attention ought to be given to such an end. There is more than one side to the story of the absence of children in the church services.

Sister Mary Pence reports from Limestone, Tennessee, where Brother James S. Cook recently conducted a campaign, and concerning which he made mention in a previous issue. Fourteen were added to the church as a result of this effort, eleven of which came by confession of faith and baptism. Brother M. D. Early is the pastor of this church and the church is showing progress under his leadership. This church boasts the unique distinction of having a family of thirteen, all members of the same church. We imagine there must have been some home religious instruction in that family and that the parents were not averse to "prejudicing" their children's minds towards the church of their choice, before they were old enough to weigh the matter of church preference and make a decision for themselves. There are some folks who are under the false impression that out of fairness to their children, they must not seek to influence them to join their church, but should let them grow to the point where they will make their own decision, without previous effort to indoctrinate them. Of course, the children must of necessity make their own decision, but to assume that they can make a better and permanently more satisfactory decision without previous instruction and proper influence on the part of parents is folly. A parent has not done his full duty to his child until by instruction and example he has sought to lead him into the possession of his own precious faith. He whose religious faith is not vital enough to cause him to want to bring up his children in it, very likely has not enough conviction about religion to make it worth sharing.

From every school---WHITE GIFTS FOR THE KING---from every person

Making Our Gifts White

By N. V. Leatherman, General Secretary

We hear a vast deal about White Gifts at Christmas time. The idea for White Gifts is gotten from the Legend of Cathay, the story of which is here quoted from "White Gifts for the King," a Christmas service prepared by Mrs. Phebe A. Curtis.

"The strange country is called Cathay, and the ruler thereof is one Kublah Kahn, a mighty warrior, who by reason of his strong will and trusty sword has made himself lord of the whole land. His government is both wise and just, and his administration to rich and poor alike, without fear or favor. On the King's birthday the people observe what is called the White Feast. Then are the king and his court assembled in a great room of the palace, which is all white, the floor of marble and the walls hung with curtains of white silk. All are in white apparel and they offer unto the king white gifts, to show that their love and loyalty are without stain. The rich bring to their lord pearls, carvings of ivory, white chargers, and costly brodered garments. The poor present white pigeons and handfulls of rice. Nor doth the great king regard one gift above another so long as all be white. And so they keep the king's birthday.

This legend has been used many times to create in the minds and hearts of Christian folks the WHITE MOTIVE for Christmas giving. It is all too true that Christmas has been so commercialized, and giving and receiving of presents have been so emphasized and urged in our present social order at Christmas time that many really do need to study their motives in it all.

Truly our Christ does not regard one gift above another. He receives that from the poor with the same grace as that from the rich. He receives the gift from the rich too, with the same grace as that from the poor. Jesus wept for the rich young ruler as well as praised the widow with her two mites. We need to remember that "Man looketh on the outward appearance, but the Lord looketh on the heart." Our Lord regards the heart more than the gift and its amount of material value. He searches and knows our motive. Is our motive WHITE? Is our motive LOVE? If we cannot give because we love to give, and because we love the one to whom we give, then surely we had better not give, but should hold our gifts for those whom we do truly love. If the gift we offer cannot be made white with true love, and if we do not love Christ enough to give some offering to him, let us at least learn to be honest in our own hearts and admit it. First, let us learn to love him, then will our gifts take care of themselves in our own hearts. Too much has the church been guilty of scheming, shamming and bluffing its followers into giving to her support. Let it not be so this Christmas.

But there is every reason why we should all love our Christ. Everybody loves a baby. We remember Christ at Christmas time as the heavenly Babe, as God's great gift and expression of his love for us. John three-sixteen tells the story of God's love. And we read elsewhere, "God is LOVE." God has done everything he can do for our salvation, for our peace and for our lives. To know him, is to LOVE him. To love him, is to worship and adore him. The wise men from the east brought their gold, frankincense and myrrh, bestowed these gifts and worshipped him, departing with joy in their hearts.

Our National Sunday School Association has a budget of $5,250.00 to be raised this year. Each dollar represents a need that lifts its hand beseechingly for your help.

The chair of Christian Education at Ashland College, filled by Prof. M. A. Stuckey receives $2,000.00 out of this budget. The College Library receives $500.00. The Memorial Endowment Fund receives $500.00. The National Home Mission Board receives for Kentucky Missions $1,000.00. The International Council receives $100.00. The Shipshewana Young Peoples' Training School receives $300.00. For secretarial work there is allowed $120.00. For general promotional work, institutes, conferences, etc., there is allowed $500.00. And for printing, postage and supplies, etc., there is allowed $230.00.

Now we simply cannot send our gifts material up to heaven where Christ is at the right hand of God's throne. Christ never intended it to be so. But he did intend that we should give our gifts to help his cause and our fellow men here. It is our conviction that in this budget we will both help his cause and his brethren and ours. But please remember this is not merely an appeal for you to contribute to this budget. It is that; but it is far more. We have presented the items of this budget to gain your confidence in your special stewards and God's, over this budget, to assure you that your gifts will indeed be received by our Father.

Our earnest appeal is that you make your gifts White as the snow that is falling this beautiful December morning, and that you make them WHITE with the MOTIVE of LOVE.

South Bend, Indiana.

The Treasurer's Pigeon Hole

By Prof. M. P. Puterbaugh, Treasurer National Sunday School Association

Every year about this time the decks have to be cleared for action, the pigeon holes cleaned out, and everything fixed up for the flood of White Gifts. Before I throw out some of this old material I am going to set out a few exhibits. In the last five years we have had offerings of $3,932.16, $4,657.08, $4,680.15, $4,206.28, and $4,420.85. If I were to draw a curve or graph as I do for so many things these days I could show how we are on the "up-grade" again. And yet I have to shiver a little when I think what a narrow squeeze we had this last year trying to make a $4,400 offering cover a $5,000 budget! It was only because some of the departments effected some economies that were very timely. I have been thinking of recommending these folks to the poor politicians of this great city who are always bankrupt!

But in spite of all this I am worried a little. Fourteen churches gave less than ten dollars. Only five churches west of the Rockies gave any report at all and there were twenty churches that failed to report last year that had reported in other years. As near as I can figure from past reports they withheld about $285.00 and that would just about have put us in the front rank. But there is a bright side too. The Mid-West District gave a 100% report—every church sent a gift—and the total for the district was at least $100 higher than before!

Now we must face the music. In the face of not quite reaching our budget of $5,000 last year the Board has nevertheless voted a budget of $5,250 this year. And they voted it for two reasons I believe. First they think the churches can reach it if they have a will to do it and the real Christmas spirit and second, some phases of our work can be put off no longer. Here is the Budget for the coming year.

Department of Religious Education at the College .....	$2,000.00
Kentucky Missions .....	1,000.00
Ashland College Library .....	500.00
International Council of Religious Education ..	100.00
Shipshewana Young People's Training School ..	300.00
Ashland Memorial Endowment Campaign .....	500.00
Secretarial work .....	120.00
Promotional work .....	500.00
Miscellaneous, Printing, postage, supplies .....	230.00

Total Budget .....$5,250.00

One item needs special attention. PROMOTIONAL WORK! Several churches agreed that if the Board would do more of that they would help us more. It seems as if the past Conference took not one but three or four steps in this same direction, so it is high time that the Sunday School Association plan a larger program along this line. But last year's offering didn't justify too big a jump at first. So we are making a modest start at $500 for field work and at National Conference churches were told to ask the Sunday School Board for field work. Will you give us the confidence we need on this program? Will you call on us for help in your local needs and then will you give generously this year so that next year we may take a real step toward extensive field work among our schools looking toward a full time field secretary?

A glance at our budget again reveals our field as the teaching ministry of the Church. Wherever the Church is engaged in teaching our Brethren young people there the Sunday School Association gives its hand, and heart, and help.

Now I have just read what I wrote last year and I want to say that I still feel the same way about it and I ought to simply reprint it here. But I realize that you don't need more facts, more figures, more articles to read, more "pep," more "arrousements," more arguments! All you need is the Christmas spirit, the startling realization that this is your King's birthday and that he deserves the best, a desire to cooperate in this program of one of our national boards. If you have all this we will have the greatest White Gift this year we have ever had. What are you going to give Jesus for his Birthday this Christmas, Self, Service, and Substance?

Honor Him whose birth we celebrate

Making Our Sunday Schools Really Count

By S. M. Whetstone, Vice President National Sunday School Association

Ours is a great task. None greater! We are dealing with precious souls. Ours is the task of molding, not alone for time; but for eternity. Therefore, we can not be too careful. We must give this great work our personal attention; in time; in prayer; and in service. Any worthwhile task should have our very best support, and certainly the Sunday school challenges our best. We merely desire to offer some suggestions with the hope that they may be of value to someone who is earnestly trying to build up a Sunday school.

The key to the whole situation rests upon a few essentials. These I wish to deal with in a few words. First of all, they who successfully lead in this great task must be above all things Christian in every sense of the word. Let us consider now the leaders in this important work.

Teachers

Each letter is very suggestive. Take the word teacher and notice what every letter suggests. T-ruthful. Surely everyone who stands to teach the Word must have this virtue. E-arnest. Perhaps too many are lacking just here. Perhaps too long we have just played at the job. A-ffectionate. By this we have in mind not alone friendliness, but rather being attached—attached to the Word; the pupils, and the cause. C-heerful. H-appy. Teachers, do you carry with you these great attributes? Are you of that sunny disposition as you go about your task, because you are really happy in the work? E-arly. Do you come in at the last minute, or are you there early to greet others when they come? R-egular. This is a mighty important factor in Sunday school work.

Officers

Follow the same suggestion with the word Officer. O-n Time! My! how important that is. You should be a stickler for being on time. Nothing will deaden the spirit of the work like dragging. Dignify your position by being on time. F-aitiful. In all Christian work it is largely

*Honor the Son of God by your gifts of the faithful who put it across. It may be easy to excuse yourself, but are you justified in doing it? F-amiliar. Know the lesson. Know your job. Know your place. Be able to assist any who need your help. I-nterested. Sometimes there is a lack of interest on the part of our Officers. You can not inspire others, or interest them, unless you are deeply interested. C-areful. Many times we have not been careful enough. Look after the details. E-nthusied. This is one qualification we must have to make our work really count. R-egular. In this respect Teachers and Officers must be alike, regular.

Organization

Our schools should have enough organization to run them, but not more than they can run. The organization is simply the machinery, not the finished product. Keep the organization going, but be sure it all leads to souls saved.

Waterloo, Iowa.

The Christmas Challenge to Our Young People

By George H. Jones

One of our most beautiful legends gives its name and significance to our Christmas season, the White Gift service. Many of our Sunday schools and churches will no doubt give one of these programs. There is no service of the year richer and more influential in moulding young life. To the young people of the Church there is no better occasion for the dedication of self and substance. Its need is obvious in the face of so many distractions through the social life of young people in High School and College. The increasing claim of the compulsory forces on their life must be met with the noblest objectives we can create, in home and church.

In the several sessions which the Board of Religious Education held at Winona Lake during the last National Conference, there was a persistent feeling that the Sunday schools of our denomination needed a more definite and progressive program than they had. In fact the consensus of opinion was that many of our schools had none and most of the others seemed to be satisfied with marking time or managing to keep up to last year's standard. If this is the case it is a rather depressing outlook.

With no challenging task or program, any institution is handicapped, until some farseeing leader can muster a sufficient number of interested workers to provide one. In the writer's recollection the national programs of the past years were productive of splendid results. A five year or a two year program, as the case may be, furnishes a goal and helps to revive old activities. Where there is life, there is hope.

If a school has no definite objectives that call for advancement wherever possible, that school is retrogressing. No wonder our enrollment decreases and our supply of leaders is diminished. Youth must be challenged to do its best. Where there is no vision, there is no progress. Enthusiasm must be aroused if there is to be conquest. Too often other interests are allowed to steal our initiative. Leaders are side-tracked by too many subordinate duties. New leaders are developed too slowly and the old are overloaded until a new way can be secured and the easiest way out is to let matters stand.

Honor Him With Gifts of Self, Service and Substance

One of the most insidious dangers is to allow the public school to encroach on the church programs, taking the time of the young people and using their authority to gain the pupils' attendance to the detriment of the church program. Frequently the program is semi-religious, nevertheless the time is taken and the church program suffers.

Our Young People's work for the coming year has included some forward steps that are not possible without faith and enthusiasm. This 1929 White Gift service is depended upon to give renewed vision and progress. The goals of our National Sunday School Association are

"And the Great King regards not one gift above another so long as all are White"

linked with almost every interest of the church and includes some attractive plans for an enlarged leadership. Local programs of training and the national program at Shipshewana Lake have in view this desired end.

Those who were fortunate enough to be at National Conference will remember how largely we gave to the College and Missions, beside other worthy objects, but the plan for the near future involves giving less to these varied interests and more to the cultivation of our own field—arousing more interest from east to west in a better trained executive force, in the local school; the fixing of concrete goals, that can be realized; and the coordination of each District with a National program.

If the nation is moving toward a great revival of interest in religion and religious institutions, what a blunder if we are not ready with leaders, objectives and enthusiasm! Our White Gifts this year will mean little unless there is an awakening toward these goals. If there is to come an awakening, it must come through our young people. There is too much pessimism among the older, the optimism that arouses to effort must come through the youth of the church. Will it get its start through our Nativity programs, or will we have to look elsewhere?

Lost Creek, Kentucky

By G. E. Drushal

Again the Christmas season is coming on, and we have been asked to make a contribution for the National Sunday School Association, since some of the Christmas offering which they take goes to the Home Board for the support of the work at Lost Creek.

We are not at all unaware of the conflicting thoughts and emotions now prevailing about the work at Lost Creek. Neither are we unaware of what was intended by the cut in the support of the work; nor are we unaware of the present day trend of things, the chain store, big business, big human achievements, and the tendency to centralization, only the big things surviving. A college president recently put it this way: The day of the small denominational school is about over because of the difficulty of supporting it. These schools will either have to become a sort of subsidiary to the state universities, or else the denomination will have to have its own central university, and the colleges fraternize with it, etc. Well, if we had only to look to man, we would most certainly get scared, load up our tools, and run, for we are not unaware of what is on in a human way.

But God! Is it not true that when God is in and behind anything that human tendencies will not avail against it? Once when Peter and some of his helpers had been arrested and the crowd would have done them violence, a certain Gamaliel stood and said, "If this work be of men it will come to naught; but if it be of God, ye cannot overthrow it."

Well, when our good brother at National Conference in the fall of 1928, representing the Home Board, told us what the Board would allow, we at once said, "Well that finishes it," and so we thought, just as much as anything could be, for it was impossible from the human viewpoint. But God had not spoken. Four of those from the field soon retired for a prayer service over the matter, just to let God speak. At the conclusion of that service, nothing ever came any clearer to the writer than this, "Accept it and go forward." We did.

The whole work continued right through last year, and now is nearing the half way mark for this year, the holiday season marking the half way place. Now, how have we progressed this year with the whole work going on? Not a bill on hand thirty days old: and we have now discounted bills on the ten day two per cent discount basis. Nothing like this has ever before happened in the work, at least for years. Then also, a splendid porch has been added to the boys' dormitory, making much more room there for the boys. Also another room has been added there, a kind of reception room for the boys with a grate

You cannot honor Christ with the gifts you withhold, nor with those you trade for gifts in return

fireplace for heating it; also two light plants now on hand in working order, so that when one is down the other is running, making light always on hand. Not all yet, the rooms at both dormitories all have been papered, hallways painted, thus making the places look so much better and also warmer. Then also we have the largest number of young folks we have ever had in school here, and a fine lot too. And then better still, fine harmony and cooperation everywhere prevails, thus making the moral standard higher. Our God has done all this.

And then that Clayhole Christian Endeavor meeting! Clayhole is six miles away from Riverside, where Miss Barnhoeft and some of the teachers are conducting a Sunday school. The Sunday before Thanksgiving a goodly number of our young folks walked there and back for a Christian Endeavor service. It was a Thanksgiving service. Many gave testimonies as to what they were thankful for. Many of them thanked God for the privilege of such a Christian school as they had at Riverside, where they could learn the Bible as they went on in their school work. One arose and said that she had been a Christian about one year, having joined the church at Riverside where she came to school. She said that the thing she was most thankful for was that now this year she had learned the secret of overcoming temptation in her prayer life. Brethren and sisters, is this worth while?

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

THE BIG FRENCH SUBMARINE

With the least possible publicity, the French government recently launched a submarine beside which all existing boats of that class are pigmies. It bears the name of the French naval officer, Surcouf, who won fame by his exploits in preying upon British merchant shipping during the Napoleonic wars. The "Surcouf" is 400 feet long, with a surface displacement of 3,257 tons. On the surface, its Diesel engines will drive it at a speed of nineteen knots per hour. Electric motors enable it to do ten knots submerged. It has fuel capacity for a non-stop voyage of 13,000 miles. It carries five 5-inch guns for surface fighting, making it more than a match for destroyers and light cruisers. A unique feature is a water-proof hangar, in which a small airplane will be carried. It is announced as being designed for colonial service and not at all for offensive service, but some observers see in it France's big No! to the proposal for the elimination of submarine craft.—The Presbyterian Advance.

PRINCETON AND LANE PROPOSE MERGER

Conferences are being held between Princeton Theological Seminary and Lane Theological Seminary in Cincinnati, looking towards the union of the two institutions. Final decision rests with the Board of Trustees of Lane, who meet this month to discuss the proposed merger.

President J. Ross Stevenson, of Princeton Seminary, recently went to Cincinnati to confer with the Lane officials, and a committee from Princeton has also been meeting with a similar committee from Lane. The Princeton committee is headed by Rev. Dr. William L. McEwan, of Pittsburgh, Pa., of the Board of Control, and includes President Stevenson, William P. Stevenson, Esq., of Rosselle, N. J.; Thomas W. Synnott, Esq., of Wenonah, N. J.; Rev. J. Harry Cotton, of Columbus, Ohio, and Paul C. Martin, Esq., of Springfield, Ohio. Lane is one of the oldest divinity schools of the Church. It has recently celebrated its one hundredth anniversary.—The Presbyterian.

EXPENSIVE CIGARETTES

A most expensive cigarette was lighted by an Ohio workman. Doubtless many of our readers will recall that on November 9, and at Elyria, Ohio, some workmen entered a gas-filled room. The foreman had called out a warning, but one of the men struck a match and lighted a cigarette. Almost immediately there was a blinding flash and a terrific explosion. Six persons were killed and damage to the plant was estimated at $100,000. Arresting as these facts are, they are of the kind that follow cigarette smoking. In its last analysis, cigarette smoking is responsible for many fires and so for great property losses each year. But greater than the property loss, is that of loss in human life—either directly as in the case of the accident cited, but more generally in lowered vitality and blunted incentive.—The Gospel-Messenger.

COMPOUNDING WITH HEATHENISM

The Fellowship is Dr. Stanley Jones' monthly organ. In the February, 1929, number (during Dr. Jones' absence in America) an inquirer wrote: "Why do Christians oppose idolatry? Hindus do not worship idols but use them to direct their thoughts toward God."

The answer given was, in part: "It is quite legitimate to use a representation to help one to think of God. . . . an image showing his love, as a crucifix would be helpful.

... If we really only intend the image to help us to think of God and are opposed to the worship of such images, then we must make sure that no ceremony of consecration (pranapratishta) is performed upon it. According to the Hindu tradition it is this ceremony which is regarded as making the idol sacred by bringing God into it. Before this ceremony it is only a piece of wood or stone. ... The best thing that reformers can do, therefore, is to start a movement for the abolition of pranapratishta. If this once disappeared it would become clear afterward that those who still used idols used them only for the help they gave in directing the thought to God."

The command was "Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image." It was not merely a command not to worship.—S. S. Times.

PRESIDENT HOOVER COMMENDS WORK OF MISSIONARIES

When the Woman's foreign missionary society of the Methodist church recently celebrated its 60th anniversary, President Hoover sent a message expressing his high appreciation of the work of the missionary. In a letter to Mrs. W. F. McDowell, one of the officers of the society, Mr. Hoover said: "I have had occasion over many years to witness the actual labors in the field of the American missionary societies, and have come to have the highest regard for their self-sacrifice and their single-minded devotion. I wish for their continued activity and success."—The Christian Century.

INDIAN MINISTERS RECALL NEW TESTAMENT ARDOR

Most of the missionary gifts of the Dakota Indian churches go to the Native Missionary Society, an organization which supplements the work of the American Missionary Association among the Indians. Last year the receipts of this society were about $1,500. At present three missionaries are supported with these funds. One of them, Earlwin Frazier, is pastor of the new Upper Wososo church. His salary is only forty dollars a month, but in return we expect only Sunday services and perhaps one other day a week for calls. Mr. Frazier adds to his income by working out as opportunity offers, and he also farms our church allotment. This year he raised thirty bushels of potatoes, two hundred bushels of field corn, some squaw corn and cabbage, and about ten tons of hay. He would have done a good deal better if we had not had a very dry season.—The Congregationalist.

LONG PASTORATES

We believe in long pastorates, but we have only a few instances bordering on really long pastorates in our church. Too many churches (Or is it the pastors?) have the habit of making a change about every so often and they are thereby deprived of the invaluable benefit of the rich accumulation of experience and friendship that result from many years of labor together. The following instance, while it is unusual, nevertheless suggests an ideal to which we might well more widely aim at. The Christian Century says:

Rev. W. F. Skinner, minister at First Presbyterian church, Gouverneur, N. Y., for the past 42 years, has resigned, because of ill health. Mr. Skinner graduated from Princeton Theological seminary in 1887, and came immediately to the New York pastorate. During his ministry the congregation was largely increased and a fine stone church building and a parsonage were erected. Mr. Skinner's son, W. Sherwood Skinner, a student in Princeton seminary, occupied the pulpit of the Gouverneur church the two weeks following his father's resignation.

Daily Readings and Suggestions

(Keep with your Bible)

MONDAY

LUGGAGE—"Building coming down; excess luggage for sale." a suggestive sign on one of Chicago's larger stores. This building in which we live is coming down, although some act as though they expected it to last forever. We have a tendency to accumulate much luggage that we cannot possibly take with us when we move, and some of it must be disposed of, even at great loss. Let us dispose of it now, that the shelves of our lives be not burdened with it now, and that we may be prepared for the day when we must move—perhaps sooner than we think! 1 Thess. 5:14-24.

TUESDAY

THE OPEN BRIDGE—A few days ago as I was about to cross the Chicago River, the bells began to ring, red lights to flash, and the drawbridge was raised. In a few moments a great crowd of pedestrians hurrying to their work, had been halted, and a long line of autos and streets cars formed—all that a small tug with two sand barges might pass! When the bridge was again lowered, traffic was badly jammed, many were late to their work, and in ill temper. As the tug proceeded up the river, the same thing occurred at each bridge. In the same way, God's work is often held up and hindered by the insignificant plans of men. God grant that we may not hinder the work of thy kingdom, but that we might avail ourselves of the privilege of being workers together with thee. Heb. 3:7-19.

WEDNESDAY

FIRE!—At the sound of the fire siren, all ordinary traffic was forced to the curb to make way for the passing of the fire trucks. The saving of life and property from destruction has the right of way over all ordinary traffic. It ought to be so in spiritual things, yet we often neglect even our own spiritual safety for trivial things, and are utterly blind to the peril of others. God help us to realize the danger, and to act! Acts 20:28-32.

THURSDAY

THE STRIKE—Some women garment workers had been on strike for several weeks. One of them was picketing her place of employment, offering handbills to the passersby. Just as I passed, the owner of the establishment rushed angrily out, tore the handbills over her head, and with a string of oaths ordered her away. All this, repeated many times throughout the world, is one indication of the injustice that must prevail until the Just One reigns. Lord, hasten the day! Psalm 97.

FRIDAY

WAGES—Repeatedly in recent months, gunmen have been shot down on Chicago's streets. The wages of sin is still death, whether by sudden violence, or in the separation from God and his kingdom for all eternity. But the gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ, our Lord! Rom. 6:15-23.

SATURDAY

ELECTION—Preceding an election here, one is sure to hear a callopie proceeding through the streets, with an inscription on its sides: "Vote for —!" So corrupt has the city government become that no matter who is elected one may be pretty sure graft and vice will continue to flourish. It will not be so when the kingdoms of this world have become the Kingdom of our Lord and his Christ. Rev. 11:15-17.

SUNDAY

WORSHIPERS—Of the great throngs I pass daily on the city streets, most of the faces are hard and tense. They have arisen early, while it is yet dark, that they might proceed to the temple of Mammon and worship. They serve him with diligence all day, offering many sacrifices to him. May it no longer be true that the children of this world are wiser than the children of light, but may we this day worship thee in spirit and in truth. And do thou give us grace and strength to worship THEE, and not mammon, through all the days to come. Amen. Matt. 6:24-34.—T. C. L.

The Senior Department

By Cynthia Pearl Maus

AIMS

The real test of development in boys and girls is always to be found in life and conduct as they grow from day to day, and year to year in the Christian life. In order that we may know, however, that young people are growing in their spiritual experience it is necessary that we have certain clearly defined aims or goals toward which the work of the department strives, and by which we may test the effectiveness of the program of development. The specific aims of the Senior Department are to realize in the life of each individual the following results:

1. The acceptance of Jesus Christ as a personal Savior.
2. The testing of his earlier Christian ideals in the light of his enlarging experience and the consequent adjustment of his life choices and conduct.
3. The expression of the rapidly developing social consciousness through the home, church and community.
4. The development of initiative, responsibility and self-expression in Christian service.
5. A knowledge and application of Christian principles in choosing a life-work or vocation.
6. The realization of opportunities for life-work that are open in the field of full-time Christian callings.

We suggest that the department superintendent or counselor and the teachers' check up the work done in the Senior Department from year to year to see how largely they are accomplishing these results in the lives of individual young people. The organization, program, equipment and activities of the department should all be standardized and evaluated in the light of their contribution to the realization of these aims.

ORGANIZATION

Organization is essential to the fullest development of young people because it provides opportunity for both the individual and group expression which growing life demands.

The ideal in work with young people is one comprehensive program in the local church for each normal group of adolescents, each of these organizations to provide all the necessary worship, instruction, and training through departments made up of classes. The classes should be organized for specific tasks and individual and group training, and the departments organized for group activities and for the cultivation of the devotional life through prayer, praise, and discussion.

In many churches there already exists a department of the Sunday school, and one or more other organizations such as Societies of Christian Endeavor, Triangle Clubs, etc., each attempting to build a program of religious training for the same group of young people. Of necessity there is constant overlapping both in organization and activities. In order to avoid this duplication, and to provide an adequate program of Christian education, the leadership of these organizations should be unified and a correlated program of worship, instruction and training worked out that will touch every phase and interest of boy and girl life and that will tie their loyalty to the church rather than to organizations.

Where the building permits, there should be a separate assembly room for the Senior Department providing opportunity for training and expression in worship both in connection with the Sunday school and the Christian Endeavor vesper service. Where the building does not permit of departmental assemblies, the worship program of the Senior Department may be combined with that of the Intermediate or the Young People. Where such adjustments are necessary, however, responsibility for conducting the service from week to week, or month to month should be rotated among the various departments combined, thus affording opportunity for graded worship and for the development of initiative and leadership on the part of each departmental group.

The president or one of the vice presidents should preside over all meetings of the department. If the session of the Sunday school is one hour in length, twenty minutes should be given to departmental worship and forty minutes to the lesson period. If an hour and a quarter is used the worship period may be lengthened to thirty minutes and the class to forty-five; or a brief closing service of the Senior Department.

The Intermediate Department

By Harry C. Munro

Program

An adequate program for the religious education of Intermediate pupils includes at least three distinct elements, worship, instruction, and activities both service and recreational. The well-balanced program will give each of these factors a proportionate place.

Worship.—Intermediate pupils have much greater capacities for genuine worship than they are usually credited with. The worship program must be carefully adapted to their own needs and interests. It must not be a children's program, nor an adult program, but one well within the comprehension and experience of Intermediate pupils. Only the best of dignified and wholesome music should be used. Certainly jazz should be banned. There should be much opportunity for pupil activity, such as in responsive readings, reading in concert, prayer in concert, and so forth. The pupils themselves in a large measure should build the worship programs and conduct them, with the guidance and counsel of the advisor. Where it is necessary to combine the Intermediates with some other department for worship programs, it is highly important that the needs of Intermediate pupils be safeguarded and that their own participation be secured. Each worship program should be built around a given theme which has a more or less universal appeal.

Instruction.—In no department is carefully graded and well adapted instruction more necessary than with Intermediates. Most pupils will be brought into life-long loyalty to the church or will be lost permanently from it during this period.

Activities.—All the activities of the department should be under and related to the executive committee or counselor. Provision should be made that all worship and instruction shall issue in service in the home, community, church and world. This makes it necessary for each department to have not only a graded course of study but a graded program of activities that will touch every phase and interest of boy and girl life.

The remarkable results accomplished in the lives of boys through the Boy Scout movement has been due in no small measure to the "Daily good turn" which is a part of the daily habits of every loyal Scout. The Intermediate Department should either make use of this plan or discover some similar means by which the habit of service shall become a part of the life of every boy and girl. There is a distinct value in certain common service enterprises in which the whole class shall participate as well as in individual service. Construction and wholesome recreational activities are of course equally important. The Boy and Girl Scouts and Camp Fire Girls are effective activity programs which may be taken up by the classes as such.

Equipment

Ideal equipment for the Intermediate Department will provide both for an assembly room and separate class rooms for each class within the department. If either must be sacrificed, however, it should be the assembly room. The departmental room should be attractively furnished. On the walls there should be a few well-chosen and well-framed pictures which appeal to this age. Good portraits of great Bible characters, national heroes and missionary heroes are the best. The following are suggested:

- "Christ in the Temple," Hoffman.
- "Men of the Bible."
- "Women of the Bible."
- "Six Great Modern Missionaries."
- "Frieze of the Prophets," Sargent.

The assembly room should be seated with pews, if possible, and in other ways should be furnished so as to resemble a regular church auditorium. The class rooms may well be furnished with writing-arm chairs. Tables arranged in the form of a hollow square are also good, pupils being seated on only one side of the table. Class rooms should be furnished with blackboards, maps, and a cabinet in which books and supplies may be kept. The neatness, orderliness and attractiveness of both the worship room and the classroom is a very important factor. —Taken from The Workers' Manual, Abridged in part.

Editor's Select Notes on the Sunday School Lesson

(Lesson for December 22)

The Child in a Christian World

Scripture Lesson—Matt. 18:1-6; Mark 9:36, 37, 42; 10:13-16; Luke 2:1-20.

Printed Text—Luke 2:8-20.

Devotional Reading—Isa. 11:1-9.

Golden Text—Suffer the little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me: for to such belongeth the kingdom of heaven.—Matt. 19:14.

LESSON LIGHT

Christmas is the day of the child; first, of the child Jesus, whose birth it celebrates; then of all the children whose lives have been made better and happier through the Christ.

It is interesting and most profitable to note the attitude of Jesus himself toward the children. At that time, as for many a long year since, the adult was the important one, the child must and did remain in the background.

But Jesus (Matt. 18:1-6; Mark 9:36, 37, 42) told his disciples "Unless you turn from your pride and self-seeking and become as humble, trustful, obedient and loving as a little child you shall not even enter the kingdom. It is the one who humbles himself most, not unconscious of his powers but not seeking honor or praise for them, who is greatest in the kingdom." This is not the false humility of Uriah Heep, but the desire to help others, the forgetfulness of self, which comes from love.

Mark 10:13-16. Another time Jesus and his disciples were in Galilee, teaching and preaching. Some mothers were very anxious that their children should have the honor of a blessing from this wonderful teacher, and were pressing near, Jesus was very much engaged in what seemed to the disciples a far more important matter than a few small children. He was discussing certain matters with a delegation of Pharisees who had come from Jerusalem for the purpose. The disciples thought they were doing Jesus a favor to protect him from interruption in this important discussion by rebuking the mothers and sending them away with their children.

But Jesus was "moved with indignation" that they should have so misunderstood his character and his work as to think that the children, and their mothers, were of less consequence than the controversial Pharisees. He took the children in his arms and blessed them, saying to his disciples the words that have been so loved by children all down the ages since: "Suffer the children to come unto me and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." And he repeated the statement he had already made, that only those who accepted him with the loving trust of a little child could even enter the kingdom of heaven.

Luke 2:8-20. The Babe of Bethlehem, whose birth we celebrate on Christmas Day, and whose coming made such a marvelous change in the world of children, and of adults as well, came in a very humble way and to a very humble mother. Born in a stable among the beasts, because there could be found no better place; his mother Mary a simple peasant girl, with the loveliness that comes from close communion with God; her husband, Joseph, the village carpenter of Nazareth.

But heaven itself came to earth that night. Not only was the Savior of the world there, though disguised as a little child, but heavenly beings declared his greatness, and sang his glory.

The story is so familiar to all save the youngest scholars, to whom it must in the nature of things be told today by an older person who is familiar with it, that we will spend little space in what may strictly be called explanations. Let us, in all classes where the story of the angels is familiar, spend the time in practical application of its lessons to us, now at the close of the year 1929 A. D.

Note that the angels came to the shepherds while they were performing their regular duties. As David's psalms, that have been making music down the ages, came to him in and through the daily cares and experiences of life, so to these shepherds feeding their sheep came the most glorious revelation and heavenly music.

Note that Jesus lived in heaven, the eternal Son of the Father, before this. (See John 1:1-3, 14; Heb. 1:1-3.)

Whoever takes away the pre-existence and divinity of Christ takes away the largest part of the power of Jesus to redeem men, and clouds the stars of heaven that reveal to us the immortal life.

Note what it means to us that the Son of God came into this world a little child.

It shows that Jesus is close to us in feeling and experience. He has had the whole range of human life in his life. Nothing that belongs to man is foreign to him.

It shows him to be the children's Savior.

It has sanctified childhood and motherhood and the home, giving them a new meaning and power, and has shown the importance of childhood in the training of the human race.

It has revealed and emphasized the infinite possibilities in the child.

The Joy of the Angels was so great because it was so great a blessing to us that he came to save us from sin and punishment, and bring us to so happy and useful a life and so glorious a heaven.—Illustrated Quarterly.

The Importance of the Child

"If we could grapple with the whole child situation for one generation, our physical health, our economic efficiency, the moral character, sanity, and stability of our people would advance three generations in one."—President Hoover.

"When I see a child he inspires me with two feelings—tenderness for what he is now, respect for what he may become hereafter."—Louis Pasteur.

In 1875 the total population of the United States was 44,000,000. In 1924 there were that many boys and girls and young people under twenty-one in the United States. Many millions of them come to voting age every year. Among them are the future leaders of our nation. Somewhere among them are the Presidents who will control the destiny of our nation in approximately the last forty years of this century. Among them are the legislators, authors, college presidents, judges, ministers, teachers, musicians, and fathers and mothers of tomorrow. They are the hope of tomorrow and the hope of the world.—Cecil Daniel Smith.

"In this new order the nations must be saved by their youth. Old age makes for rigidity and conservatism. Middle age makes for caution and compromise, for 'safety first' for 'watch your step.' Youth makes for adventure, for faith in progress, for courage to set sail, for that kind of unquestioning enthusiasm which will look the Lord in the face and say, 'Master, I will go with you wherever you go.' The youth of America, Europe, Asia, and Africa; the youth of white races, red races, yellow races, black races, hold the future of those countries and races in their hands and hearts, their minds and wills. The church must master them in the days of their educational development, must train them for leadership and guide them for high service in Christ's name."—Bishop William F. McDowell.

The Possibilities of a Child

In a book entitled "The Price of Africa," the story is told of a young Scotch minister, who, one day in the year 1849, was standing in his library, studying the map of Africa. Without being heard, a servant entered bearing a baby boy. The minister was so absorbed in the map that he did not hear her knock or see her enter. "I've brought ye a present, sir." Still absorbed the minister answered, "Do you see this pear-shaped continent, Annie? The Gospel banner will yet be planted in the very heart of this continent, although not likely in your day or mine." "But maybe it'll be in your son's, sir, and who will say he'll nae hae a han' in it?" The minister looked quickly around and saw his baby. "A boy! bring him nearer the window and let me see him." The boy grew up into the famous missionary pioneer of Uganda, Alexander Mackay. Today the Bagandas, whom he evangelized, have their own missionary society and are preaching the Gospel in the very parts where, in Mackay's day, they went on their slave raids.—The Illustrator.

Some Problems of Intermediate Christian Endeavor

Perhaps the problems which have come to us in Intermediate work are not peculiar to that branch of Christian Endeavor, but at least they are most noticeable in that department. One of the outstanding problems is the social life—to what extent should it be carried and is there not a grave danger of its overshadowing the spiritual side of the society? We all realize that, to hold the interest of these children of adolescent age, it is necessary to give them plenty of social meetings but too often when a social meeting is in the offing the entire lesson period before is taken up with the discussion of the coming good time.

It is true that it takes a great deal of ingenuity to keep the lessons full of life and interest but many helps may be secured along this line. Our own Intermediate superintendent has used very successfully memory Bible drills and other things, such as used in the Daily Vacation Bible School, to supplement the lessons outlined in the Christian Endeavor World and in the Angelus.

Another weighty problem in our Warsaw society is the deportment during the study hour. This is even more difficult to take care of than in the Sabbath school because there the teacher only deals with possibly one-fourth as many pupils and yet what teacher of a class of boys from eleven to fourteen years has not had to face this problem? The only solution we have found is to make the lessons vitally interesting and bring in as many lessons as possible along the line of good conduct without making the subject obnoxious.

Just recently we faced the problem of irregular attendance at the Sunday evening meetings. The attendance had not built up as it should after the summer vacation and so the superintendent announced that she would entertain at a chicken dinner at her country home every child who did not miss Christian Endeavor for a certain number of Sundays. You can imagine how this boosted the number of regular attendants and now next Saturday they are to go to their feast of chicken and pumpkin pie. We feel sure that, after several evenings of regular attendance, they will continue the good habit rather than fall back into the bad habit of irregular attendance.

As National Superintendent I would be very glad to receive suggestions from local Intermediate Superintendents as to their methods of solving these problems.

A Double Present-day Miracle in Korea

By Dr. A. G. Fletcher, Taiku, Missionary of the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A.

The following story of how two churches were established in Korea gives some idea of this work:

The island village of Sai Nai and its little sister Cham Sil were pictures of desolation where we visited them for flood relief. The mad river had torn away the banks of the island, buried the fields under heaps of sand, carried away the crops, destroyed many homes, drowned many people, and had left the living without hope of food, clothing, or shelter. The people were despairing. There was not a Christian on the island and moreover they said they did not want to hear anything about a God who sent such calamities. So desperate were they, so hopeless, so sinful that after two visits we felt that we did not want to go there again.

Sai Nai was the first village visited on the island. We had come out in search of an island village beyond Duk Sum, where people were reported to be starving to death. We did not even know the name of the village but we found it. Thirty or more so-called homes: dugouts, bare shell-like shacks, tiled roofed houses with little left but the room. The people were hungry, cold, bitter. A blind man lived in a pit in the ground; his only furniture was an old oil tin in which were the dead embers of a fire. Six little children in various stages of nakedness were huddled in an unheated mud hut—the parents had gone out to beg food. An old, sick grandmother complained of being left to live, cold and hungry, after the days of flood horror when she had seen her husband, son, and three other members of the family drowned. A young woman, widowed by the flood, lay with her newborn baby on a cold, damp floor, with no fuel, and no way of getting any. On our second visit we took food and clothing to these poor people, not enough, but still sufficient to keep them from starving or freezing. As we came in that afternoon feeling sad over the state of things, another party passed us going to the same island. They found a village just beyond Sai Nai, smaller but in even more pitiful plight. The girls of the Evangelistic Center gave up their Christmas in order to clothe and feed this village of Cham Sil. At Christmas time when they went out with their gifts an evangelist went with them to preach. At that time many villagers expressed a desire to be Christians though they knew little about Christ except as his love had been revealed to them by the loving gifts and in the words of the evangelist.

How to teach them the Gospel was indeed a problem, as the nearest churches were at that time leaderless. But a young evangelist was found who was willing to live in Cham Sil, enduring any hardship in order to bring his Savior to the villagers. He lived in a dugout, ate miserable food, and shared all the privations of the people. He taught old and young to read, got Bibles and hymn books for them, and trained them as little children in Christian life and in worship. After they had learned to read he had a Bible reading contest. One man over seventy years old read the Gospel of John ten times in a week and then began reading through the New Testament. Seven of the children read the Gospel of John several times, memorized scripture, hymns, the Lord's prayer. Most of Cham Sil became Christians. As they collected material for rebuilding their own homes in the spring they each set aside beams for a church building. They found a good site and began to pray that they might have a building.

We rejoiced at the events in Cham Sil but our faith concerning Sai Nai was small. The evangelist, however, began his labors there. Ere long we heard that scores had been converted, the saloons had gone out of business, and Sai Nai, too, wanted a place worship. A Bible woman went out to live on the island for two months and teach the women. One of the evidences of the change in their lives was the doing away with the enmity between the two villages and their uniting in building one church in the larger village. The men and boys had no money to give toward the church but all pledged a certain number of days of labor. Altogether the men of that village, weakened by cold and hunger and with even then not enough to eat, gave several hundred days of labor to the building of the church. A tumbled-down house was bought and set up in a little popular grove on high land and this gradually grew into a church. Funds were found by the missionaries for the necessary new materials and other expenses.

What a different day it was late in September, when we went out to join in dedicating this church! A day of dazzling sunshine beauty. The roads were not so rough, the sand was neither blazing hot nor blowing into our faces with stinging cold. It was a joy to be out on such a mission. When we reached the river's edge a ferry was just coming to the shore but we were told not to take it. Another ferry with a great orange-colored sail was seen leaving the opposite shore. As it came nearer we saw in it a group of happy-looking, well-dressed young men standing up to greet us. It was our special boat and those who manned it were the same young men who had suffered during the winter. We could hardly believe the testimony of our own eyes. A dozen or so men in Sai Nai making their living by running ferries but they would never accept any fees from us after our first relief trip, though every sen was precious to them. A faint sound of "Jesus Loves Me" reached us across the river and we could see a long line of white on the shore which as we drew nearer resolved itself into the Sunday school, drawn up to meet us, fifty strong. They saluted us and took our books, coats, and other burdens while we marched across the sand to the church. Some one said we were like the children of Israel crossing the desert.

The church was prettily decorated but we were happier in greeting the grown-up members of the congregation than in viewing decorations. Our crowd was so big that we could not get into the church and we dedicated the building from the outside! The mats and few benches were carried out into the court and there in the shade of a great tree, which for years had been a devil tree, feared and worshipped, we worshipped God. The memory of the bitter winter with all its sadness and the former hopeless life of these people who were now our own brothers and sisters in Christ, made the joy of this transformation so poignant as to be almost unbelievable. The people who had sat in darkness had come out into marvelous light. It is impossible to put down in words on paper the joy and wonder of the miracle we have seen on the island. These people, who had lost all but life in the flood, had found all in Christ after the flood. They are now glorifying Christ in their hearts and lives. We found an island in dire need and Christ found that island and supplied its every need. He is still a miracle-working God.—Missionary Review of the World.

ASHLAND MEMORIAL ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

SPOKANE, WASHINGTON

It had been eight years since I last visited this place and it was with interest that I returned. I recall how the work was started when I was in Sunnyside, Washington. Sister Mellinger, who at the time was a member of the Church of the Brethren, wrote, asking me to come and see if something could not be done to organize a Brethren work. At that time there were only three families in the city—Brower's, Goughnour's and Graybill's. I had the honor of preaching the first Brethren sermon, baptizing the first converts and holding the first Communion. Sister Detwiler came later on the field and did a valuable work and was followed by Brother Paul Miller, under whose labor the present church was erected.

They have a very nice brick structure and a fine group of people here. The work has not made as fast progress, as it should, as some of the time they have been without a pastor and there have been other hindering causes.

Brother Broad did a good piece of work here and is being ably followed by Brother Flora, the present pastor. The future looks promising.

Only a few of the members own their homes, but all are doing their best to make the work succeed. This heroic group are endeavoring to maintain their own work financially without aid from the Mission Board. I found them with their pastor in full sympathy with all the general interests of the church and gave the fullest support to my work for the college. It was a pleasure for me to work with Brother Flora again. While their gift was not large, it shows their interest and is in proportion to their ability. The total gift was $628.00.

THE NATIONAL MINISTERIAL ASSOCIATION

A little History taken from the Secretary's Annual Report

The report which I now submit brings to a close ten years of service as your Secretary-Treasurer. Perhaps these years of service merit some observations and meditations. These ten years constitute nearly a third of the entire life of the Association. I was preceded in office by Elder Martin Shively, who served for a period of eight years. He had been preceded by Elder Marcus Witter, who served in this capacity for four years. The previous fifteen years, from the time of organization had been filled by Elder R. R. Teeter. For length of service then, we must award the penant to Brother Teeter, and I have no personal ambition to take the honors from him; I trust that the Brethren shall feel no hesitation in removing a menace to that record. I will be only too glad to be relieved of the responsibility of this office.

Looking back over the history of the Association, one finds some interesting facts.

(for Berlin church) 33. This has necessitated the sending through the mails of at least 15,000 pieces of first class mail. Our balance is $5,590. During this period we have spent over ten thousand dollars ($10,000).

Membership

A comparison of the membership of today with that of ten years ago, is at first a bit disconcerting, but on second thought it need not be. In ten years we have lost 42 men by death, and during the eighteen year period a total of sixty-five deaths. To begin the eighteen year period there were a hundred and seventy-five members, as there was likewise to begin the ten year period. In addition to this, we have lost in five years, as follows:—Fifteen left the Church, 19 delinquent, who are still in the Church, five have become associate members, five were dropped by request, and three lost (whereabouts unknown) or a total of forty-seven. Here then are eighty-nine, we can account for immediately. All of this need not alarm us, for while we have only one hundred and fifty-three members all told, we have a larger percentage of active ministers as well as a smaller percentage of older men. The rate of mortality for these years had been high, but high because we willed it so. We willingly received into our ranks the older men, because we knew that they or rather their families needed the benefit, and because we were willing to contribute to their necessity. What we have been able to give, has been very small compared with what they deserved. For years admission was open to all ministers of the Church whether young or old on a like basis. This was fair in those days, for with a new organization every man had opportunity of membership. Conditions today have changed, for those who have been members of the Church have the right of membership. If they have neglected their opportunity, or refused their responsibilities, then it is only fair that they pay on the sliding scale, according to their age.

It was voted by the National Ministerial Association, that the historical sections of this paper be submitted for publication.

Sincerely yours,
WILLIS E. RONK.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

Our evangelistic meetings with Brother R. Paul Miller came to a close last Sunday night, December 1, and we are glad to tell the story of them. Surely the blessing of the Lord was upon us during those days. The Spirit of God moved upon the people in a mighty way and many prayers were answered. Interest in the meetings was keen from the very start. There was not a poor crowd during the entire three weeks.

As to visible results, there were sixty-one who made decisions. Many found the Lord for the first time. Some came for whom the church had been praying for years. It was a joyous experience to strike off one by one the names upon our prayer lists. To date twenty have received the rite of baptism and others will be baptized next Sunday night. Many came for reconsecration. Also a fine group signified their desire to give themselves for full time service.

The church feels that it has been greatly blessed and will go forward with added impetus to further victories. It was a privilege to have a man like Brother Miller with us. His positive preaching, his love for souls, and his ardent zeal make him a splendid workman. The pastor found him to be an ideal fellow-worker and shall not soon forget the hours of fellowship so richly enjoyed with him.

Now that the campaign is over we trust that we may have so profited by it that we may indeed give a good account of ourselves in the service of our Lord.

HOMER A. KENT.

THE REVIVAL AT WASHINGTON, D. C.

Leaving Hagerstown, Maryland, we came to Washington, D. C., beginning there on November the twelfth with a real good audience the first night. By request we began with a few messages on prophecy and then turned to strict evangelism. The plan must have been wise for the results were certainly fine. Only a very few nights had less than a full house and most of the time the building was full. I can truly say that I never faced a people who seemed to get more real joy out of the Gospel than the folks at Washington. It was an inspiration to have the privilege of speaking to them for three weeks. Brother Kent is a fortunate man to have such a people. And I can add right here that the folks there are fortunate to have a man like Brother Kent as pastor. I never saw a young man in his first pastorate perform like a veteran as this young man is doing. He has the confidence, esteem and good will of all his people as well as that of those outside the church. He has a record of accomplishment in organizing, purifying, and general progress that is enviable. I received testimony of his ability as an expository preacher that was worthy of a man many years his senior. We speak for this man a fine future. The work of this important point could hardly be in the hands of a more capable leader.

One thing is certain: this church is not merely an effort to establish a work in the nation's capital. This work has one of the most promising fields I have ever seen. The church has a reach into the homes of countless people and has a large residential district all around it that gives every reason to expect a continued growth for many years to come. Therefore, the effort that the brotherhood is being asked to make in order to provide a fitting building for a church in the Capital of our Nation is fully justified by local favor. Of course, the church itself is under a responsibility to erect a structure somewhat more in keeping with their circumstances about them because of their location. This responsibility should rightly be shared by all the rest of us who sympathize with them and who also desire to have a fitting structure erected by the Brethren in Washington.

The way these people took care of the evangelist was beyond description. The finest of hospitality, the warmest fellowship, and the wholesomest of foods were on every hand. My home was with Brother and Sister Kent during my stay and it would have been impossible for me to have had a happier experience. It was as near home as any place could be apart from my own hearth. Mrs. Kent is gaining in strength right along and is again becoming active in the work. We shall ever remember those three weeks and pray for the Brethren church in Washington.

R. PAUL MILLER.

ALLENTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

The First Brethren church of Allentown, Pennsylvania had the blessed privilege of having Brother I. D. Bowman in our midst for an evangelistic campaign. Because of lack of preparation, and the feelings of the people in the community (being Jews, Catholics and Lutherans) towards the doctrines taught in our church, we were unable to accomplish visible results. We have had the opportunity to teach their children, but, as soon as they are eligible for church membership they are removed to be confirmed in their own church.

The messages of Brother Bowman were clear forcible, instructing and uplifting. Some people came once, but, due to clear, convincing statements as to sin and its consequences, stayed away afterwards. Others have acknowledged as true the Bible doctrine observed by the Brethren church and are expecting to be baptized and unite with the church in the near future. We expect some fine young people as the result of Brother Bowman's faithfulness to the Word of God.

The campaign closed with the Communion Service Sunday evening, November 24th, with fifty-two (52) surrounding the tables. It was a feast of spiritual blessings long to be remembered. All who looked on the face of our dear Brother Bowman as he spoke of the significance of the observance could see as well as feel that his experience was a living reality in the deep things of God. Our prayer is that there may be a blessed time of reaping from the seed which he so abundantly and faithfully has sown.

MRS. JAMES KAMOIE,
Corresponding Secretary.

UNIONTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

The Lord continues his blessings upon his work. The faithful sowing of the Word will in due season bring forth its fruits. We may well be thankful that all we have been made responsible for is the sowing; God himself cares for the increase. Even for the sowing he provides the necessary strength and wisdom. We are always needing to be further seeking both this super-human strength and the heavenly wisdom.

Our work at Uniontown moves forward apace. We thank the Lord for the faithful who desire both to know and to do his will. Our Sunday school is making some very nice marks in attendance and interest. The writer has sought to gain contact with those of the Sunday school who leave before worship service (a very bad and infectious habit) by telling Bible stories to the children at the conclusion of the study hour. This appears a successful attempt. Were it in the hands of an experienced story teller it would be yet more so. The mind of the growing child is the most fertile soil for the seed of the Word. May we be truly diligent in planting that Word there in its truth and simplicity.

Our general church activities carry forward. Prayer meeting is given to an earnest study of the Word and to prayer. The W. M. S. is quite active. Attendance at worship services is good; we hope to see it better. Our mutual desire is to be more profitable servants in the future than in the past.

FRANK GEHMAN.

LIMESTONE, TENNESSEE

It is appointed to me to give an account of our church here. Brother James Cook of Martinsburg, Pennsylvania, having been chosen to hold our fall revival duly arrived October 13th and preached for us about two and a half weeks, ending with a splendid communion.

Brother Cook's teaching is largely of a dispensational and doctrinal nature, using as he does a large chart of his own contriving, and small ones as well to illustrate his teaching. His sermons were the delight of the whole church. Much prophetic truth was made plainer to us. Two lines of truth were made prominent: The imminent coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and, the clear call of God for separation, cleansing, and consecration on the part of his people in the light of his Coming.

Such teaching always bears fruit and the immediate result was eleven young people baptized and added to the church; one sister returned to the church who had once belonged here; and a young brother and sister moved their membership from another church to ours as their parents are members. In all there were fourteen additions. Among these was Jack Gwin, aged ten, the youngest and last member of a family of thirteen to come into the church. Not many churches can boast of having that many living members from one family on their church roll. And now for a crop of grandchildren, the oldest of which is now a member.

We can recommend Brother Cook to any church wanting the unvarnished truth. Nothing less will build up a church.

Many homes were opened to Brother Cook with Brother and Sister Early but we do not think the meeting was "Cooked" to death as some often are. It was a genuine pleasure to your scribe to hear Brother Cook again as we had scarcely so much as seen him since our years of service in adjoining missions in Kentucky.

Brother Early and wife have fully entered upon their work here and in every way are endeavoring to discharge their full duty. Brother Early is giving us sound doctrine on which to stand.

The children of the church now form a choir for the Sunday school. Steps are being taken to forward the Sunday school interests. A simple program is planned for Christmas, and an all-day meeting for New Year's.

While we are somewhat isolated we feel a keen interest in the work of the brotherhood and rejoice in its successes. We wish we might do more to help in the work it is doing in maintaining the Gospel in the homeland and in the carrying of it to foreign parts.

THE WISE MEN BRING GIFTS TO JESUS

Long, long ago some wise men came to the city of Jerusalem. They were called wise men because they used to study the stars and read many books.

One night a bright new star appeared in the sky. They were sure that it meant that a new king was born, and they decided to follow the star and find him.

For days and days they traveled over the hot sandy deserts, and always the star kept just a little way ahead of them, showing them where to go. When they reached the big city of Jerusalem, they went to the palace of the king and said, "Where is he that is born king of the Jews? We saw his star in the east, and we have come to worship him."

When King Herod heard this he grew very jealous. He was afraid that some day the baby Jesus might grow up and be king in his place. He called the wise men to him and said, "Go find the baby Jesus. Then come back and bring me word, that I too may go and worship him."

The wise men followed the star. It led them to a house in Bethlehem. There they found the baby Jesus with his mother. They gave him some beautiful gifts, and they knelt down and worshiped him.

The wise men were warned by God in a dream not to tell King Herod where they found the baby Jesus. So they went back to their own country by another way.

We may not ride on camels

And bring him myrrh and gold;

We may not hear an angel,

As the shepherds did of old;

But each may bring a present

As priceless as the rest,
If we be sure the gift we bring
Is just our very best.

—Picture World.

This is the time when all may bring gifts, children as well as grown folks, in honor of him who was born in Bethlehem's manger. He is no longer the Baby Jesus, but King Jesus, who from his throne in heaven rules our lives, protects us, guards us and gives us all good things which we enjoy. To him we may bring gifts of love at this Christmas season, gifts that will help to spread the "good news" of love and care to those who know him not. Join your Sunday school in its White Gift Offering and you will thereby honor the King on his birthday.

NOTICE OF CHANGE OF HOME MISSION HEADQUARTERS

ON AND AFTER DECEMBER 20 ALL OFFERINGS AS WELL AS OTHER MATTER PERTAINING TO THE WORK OF THE HOME MISSION BOARD SHOULD BE ADDRESSED TO
R. PAUL MILLER, BERNE, INDIANA

Anything sent to Brother Gearhart in Dayton after that date will only have to be re-mailed by him to Berne, for the office of the Board is being moved to Berne at that time.

If Pastors and Church Officers will carefully keep this in mind it will avoid a great deal of delay and misunderstanding.

DON'T LET IT PASS

Your opportunity to put THE BRETHREN EVANGELIST in every home of your congregation at the special price of 25 cents for 3 months.

This is an opportunity to show your loyalty to your church paper and to take advantage of what it has to offer you without a sacrifice. You have been wanting to take the Evangelist, but perhaps you felt you could not afford it. You cannot afford to do without it at this price.

Put Your Church on the Honor Roll

If you wish to make a number of excellent Christmas gifts that will be appreciated and will cost you little, consider The Brethren Evangelist at 25 cents per. Thirteen weekly gifts to your friends instead of one! And you are doing missionary work, besides.

JONAH Not Easily Surprised

The other day, the head of a large telephone organization asked a telephone operator to connect him with the captain of the Steamship Leviathan. A few minutes later he was talking over the telephone to the captain who had his ship two hundred miles out to sea. An editorial writer, commenting on the incident, thinks that this would surprise Jonah, if he could know about it.

But that is not so certain. It would take considerable to surprise a man who was swallowed by a great fish, and who prayed to Jehovah out of the fish's belly, and who was heard, and whom God answered by sending the fish back to vomit Jonah upon the dry land. That beats the radio and wireless control of ships. Jonah probably would not think much of talking to a ship a few miles out at sea.

THE Pope Speaks

A great deal of flattering publicity has been given to the present Pope, lauding his "generous and liberal spirit," and predicting a greater measure of tolerance on the part of the Roman Church under his leadership. Now he has spoken in a couple of public utterances, clearly and vigorously, upon some questions which are of interest.

First, the Pope declares that "nationalism is a real evil" and a "malediction in the mission field." This sentiment should be remembered against the time when Roman Catholicism again becomes an issue in American politics, as it surely will. But the memory of man is short.

Second, the Pope says of Protestantism that it is "getting more and more exhausted," that it "goes from denial to denial," and he rejoices because this sterility of Protestantism is sending man back to Catholicism. This should be read with interest by the Modernists who are responsible for the "negations" of Protestantism. And it should strengthen the determination of Protestant Churches to purge themselves of the "negationists," if it is not too late. For Modernism, strange to say, is the initial step toward Romanism. Once Protestantism has cast away its great affirmations of Christian faith, its adherents will search elsewhere for authority, and the day of Rome is come. The religious intellect, robbed of its proper resting-place and walking in dry places, will hear the voice of Rome saying, "Come unto me and rest." The Vatican knows that and waits with patience for Modernism to do its perfect work. Strange allies.

A PESSIMISTIC Young Minister

In a late issue of Scribner's magazine, an anonymous author writes on the subject of "One Year in the Ministry." He is very much discouraged after preaching for one year and wonders whether the Church, after all, has any worthwhile mission in the modern world. He entered the ministry with great enthusiasm, having heard from the lips of Dr. Fosdick himself that the youth of America is "crying for religion," but he finds after a year's pastorate that the "youth would rather revel in the cute antics of Clara Bow than attend a church service where Saint Peter himself was scheduled to preach."

The reader of this young preacher's lament will wonder about two things. First, whether one year in the ministry is a background of experience large enough from which to pass judgment upon the church and the world. And second, whether his pessimism is not the result of listening to Fosdick instead of Paul.

Men who enter the Christian ministry should count the cost, and they cannot do this unless their teachers tell them the truth. The Apostle Paul, for example, would not tell the young ministerial candidate that youth is "crying for religion." But he will tell you that "There is none that seeketh after God . . . no, not so much as one" (Rom. 3:11-12). It is not a pleasant situation, but once it is faced frankly those who are courageous enough to enter the ministry will trust in God for their success, and not in some alleged crying for religion on the part of a fickle humanity. The preacher will find often that he must create a spiritual hunger for the Bread of Life, and this is done only by preaching the Word in the power of an infinite God.

The young minister writing in Scribner's concludes wistfully, "Sometimes I think a conversion such as Paul experienced, or the rebirth of which Jesus spoke, is necessary." And this sentence explains the entire article.

Civil Legion Supports President

The Civil Legion is composed of a body of men who rendered service to the country during the World War in a civilian capacity and therefore they are chiefly men past the age when they would be available for military duty. At their recent meeting in Washington they came out unequivocally in favor of President Hoover's international program, especially in support of the Peace Pact of Paris, the coming conference on reduction of naval armaments, and American adherence to the International Court of Justice. This is significant in view of the fact that often the boosters of the war system are men who are past the age of availability for war duty.

The statement, as adopted by the Civil Legion, was in part as follows:

"The President of the United States, together with other statesmen of vision and faith in our own and other lands, is leading our Nation, in association with other great nations, upon large ventures in behalf of our entire humanity for the consummation of whose ideals all men and women of good will have long devoutly hoped and prayed.

"The first of these is the Peace Pact of Paris, by which the nations 'condemn recourse to war,' and promise to seek the solution of their controversies 'by pacific means.'

"The second of these significant events is the coming conference in London on reduction of armament. It is indeed implicit in the Peace Pact and the Past will gain in moral force measurably in proportion to the results of the conference.

"The Civil Legion expresses its confidence and faith in the sincerity of our President and other statesmen who are preparing for this conference and its hope that competition in armament may altogether cease and that there may be the largest possible reduction consistent with mutual security, the preservation of order among the nations and the protection of their proper interests.

"The third measure of world interest and importance is in turn essential to the fullest result of the Pact of Peace and the conference.

"International differences will continue to arise. The nations have agreed that they shall not be solved by armed force. There must be some method to take its place.

"To make the Pact of Paris finally effective and to make naval reduction possible, the World Court appears to be the only possible provision.

"The Civil Legion is ever prepared to render service in defense against any power that breaks faith with the Pact.

"More important still is it that we should help to create that moral influence which is ever needed among our own people and those of kindred nations to realize those ideals of justice and peace among mankind on which our Commander-in-Chief has set his heart and to which he has consecrated his mind and will, and we are at one with him in his recent utterance, 'We must clothe faith and idealism with action.'"

THE POET

By H. W. Longfellow

I heard the bells on Christmas Day
Their old familiar carols play,
And wild and sweet the words repeat
Of peace on earth, good will to men!

I thought how, as the day had come,
The belfries of all Christendom
Had rolled along the unbroken song
Of peace on earth, good will to men!

And in despair I bowed my head;
"There is no peace on earth," I said;
"For hate is strong, and mocks the song
Of peace on earth, good will to men."

Then pealed the bells more loud and deep:
"God is not dead, nor doth he sleep!
The wrong shall fail, the right prevail,
With peace on earth, good will to men!"

Till, ringing, singing on its way,
The world revolved from night to day,
A voice, a chime, a chant sublime,
Of peace on earth, good will to men!

DEMANDING CONDITIONS

Some men will follow Christ on certain conditions—if he will not lead them through rough roads—if he will not enjoin them any painful tasks—if the sun and wind do not annoy them—if he will remit a part of his plan and order. But the true Christian, who has the spirit of Jesus, will say, as Ruth said to Naomi, "Whither thou goest I will go," whatever difficulties and dangers may be in the way.—Richard Cecil.

What Is the Spirit of Christmas?

People are talking and writing and singing much about Christmas these days. Christmas is everywhere, and in every phase of life. It is manifest in hundreds of ways. It is in the churches—we would expect to find it there. It is in social life—of every grade and character. There are Christmas dinners, Christmas parties, Christmas card games, Christmas dances, and Christmas—everything-else in the way of social affairs. Christmas is also in business, and much money is spent to remind the public that Christmas is the time for the spending of money, the time for the buying of presents for friends, the time for the exchanging of gifts. By no other means is the presence of Christmas so baldly and persistently forced upon us as in the multiplied ways by which Christmas is commercialized. There is no one spirit that runs through all the varied expressions of the season, no one message that it speaks that would give one an understanding of the spirit of the day. After experiencing all the varied appeals of the season the mind is left in a state of confusion as one attempts to discover the meaning of it all. And we are warranted in inquiring and asking very definitely, What is the spirit of Christmas? the spirit of the real, the genuine, the authentic Christmas?

In the first place the real spirit of Christmas is one of worship. That was the attitude of all connected with the events of the first Christmas. The spirit of holy awe and worshipful submission characterized both Mary and Joseph as the heavenly messengers made known the will of God for them as related to that wonderful event. The shepherds set the world an example of sincere and unaffected adoration such as has never been surpassed. The wise men brought with them a spirit of devotedness and consecration that is the challenge of all mankind. And never has there been a more beautiful expression of spiritual rejoicing and ecstasy than that shown forth by the aged Simeon. And the music that the occasion inspired speaks of divinely worship. The Overture of the Angels, the Magnificat of Mary, the Nunc Dimittis of Simeon are still the inspiration of the world's most heavenly symphonies and of its most worshipful song. Worship is the only proper attitude with which to approach the Christmas season. Only in that attitude can we catch the spirit and receive the message of the real Christmas.

In the second place the spirit of Christmas is one of peace and good will toward men and among men. That was the dominant note of the angelic promise, and though the day of its complete fulfilment is not yet come, yet it is hastening fast. The very nature of the situation regarding the visit of the wise men on the occasion of that first Christmas bears witness to the power of the universal attractiveness of Christ to bind men of diverse tendencies together in a common purpose. For legend tells us that the three wise men who followed the star came from Greece, Persia and Egypt, that one was fair, one was swarthy and one was black, and that they were enemies by reason of race and immemorial wars. Yet the spirit of that Holy Night fell upon them and caused them to journey together and finally to present their gifts together at the feet of him who was to give a new commandment—that men should love one another. And that spirit of peace, which is by very nature an inseparable part of the Christmas spirit is steadily entwining itself in men's hearts and expressing itself more and more in their individual and group relationships, so that we have reason to believe that the prophecy of that first Christmas is destined to become the glorious realization of all mankind in God's good time. The day will come when the nations of the earth will stretch out their arms and receive the peace that Christ offers to all, and they will cease their wholesale slaughter, selfish nationalism and over-reaching ambition will no longer actuate in international relations and men will no longer be moved by fear and jealousy and hatred and distrust, but good will and mutual confidence will prevail and fair dealing and service will become the motivating objectives. Call it the millennium or not, it is the word of prophecy, and it is ours to hope and to work for it. And it is coming—coming as the light breaks forth at the dawning of a new day; coming as the fruit comes on the growing grain—first the blade, then the ear, then the full corn in the ear. Be not impatient with God's method, but render every man his full measure of responsibility for bringing in the consummation of Christ's reign of peace.

In the third place, the spirit of Christmas is the spirit of service. We are thrilled with joy over the circumstances surrounding his coming, but let us bear in mind the purpose of his coming and then rejoice that we are permitted to become sharers with him in that purpose. "The Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many." Again we read, and the words are from the lips of our blessed Lord himself: "I am among you as one that serveth." And Paul says that he who was "in the form of God . . . took upon himself the form of a servant." Service was the spirit and passion of his holy life and the purpose of his coming into the world. And for every man service should be life's big objective, and he who makes it so will find it in every way most rewarding. No man can be said to have caught the spirit of Christmas until he has caught the spirit of service, and has come to count it greater joy to serve than to be served.

In the fourth place, the Christmas spirit is the giving spirit. It has taken us a long time to find our way into the heart of that truth, and we seem yet not to have arrived in very great numbers. For all too many Christmas time is still the "getting time" rather than the "giving time" and the success of the season is measured by the worth of the gifts we get in exchange. To the extent that that spirit prevails we have not caught the true Christmas spirit, for it is said of him whose birthday we celebrate, "He gave himself for us." Again, "For ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that, though he was rich, yet for our sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich." It was a realization of the worth of that truth that caused the Indian man, whose heart had been touched by the Gospel message, to say, "I must give Jesus something. I will give him my dog." That was a big gift for a poor Indian hunter to give. His dog was his companion and helper in the chase and he loved him. The Indian listened to more about the wonderful love of the wonderful Savior and he said, "I must give him my gun." His gun meant his living, but he was willing to give that to the One who had given so much to him. A little while passed and the Indian said, "I give Jesus myself." Now the Indian had reached the place where God wanted him—the condition of mind and heart where he was ready to give all, even self, to the Son of God. When a man has reached that point he has come into possession of the true Christmas spirit.

And finally the Christmas spirit means the Christian spirit, or the spirit of Christ. There could have been no Christmas without the coming of Christ, and there can be no real celebration of his coming without Christ in the heart. That seems to limit in a very drastic way the possibility of a real Christmas celebration, but just a little serious thinking will convince any one of the truth of the statement. All Christmas celebrations on the part of those who have not received Christ in the heart are merely lip celebrations and not genuine. In the highest sense the Christmas spirit is the spirit of those whose lives have been yielded to the Christ and who partake of his nature. And this Christmas season should be a challenge to every one who has named the name of Christ to make the celebration real by making his Christian profession genuine.

It is a beautiful spirit, this spirit of Christmas! Lofty and noble, attractive and inspiring, it is worth all the restraint and disciplining and sacrifice necessary to possess it. It is a spirit that is not to be put on and off with the occasion. It is not a seasonal spirit, but perennial. He who attempts to adopt it for a day or a week or a month only, will find himself in possession of a very poor representation of the real thing. He who would take it on at this season must be ready and willing to project it far into the new year, and he will find that its genuineness will grow with every serious effort to put it into practice.

The Universal Week of Prayer

(January 5-11, 1930)

There is inspiration to be gotten from the thought that Christian people the world around are joining in united, concerted prayer to the throne of grace. Not only so, but there is power in such prayer, for the promise is to the two or three who agree or symphonize together, and the emphasis is on the word agree rather than the number participating. It is the blessed symphony of prayer that gives it its power. And no one can share in such power without getting unto himself blessing. It is well therefore that our people unite with other Christian people in the "Universal Week of Prayer" and thus participate in the calling down of power and in the consequent blessing.

Following is the suggested program for the week, with accompanying scripture references:

Sunday. Texts suggested for sermons—Psa. 133:1-3; Eph. 4:3; Psa. 72:18, 19.

Monday. Thanksgiving and Confessions—Psa. 65; Dan. 9:3-9, 17-19; 1 John 1.

Tuesday. The Church Universal—Psa. 133: 1 Cor. 13; Eph. 3: 14-21.

Wednesday. International Friendship and Cooperation—Psa. 46; 1 Chron. 16:23-36; 1 Tim. 2:1-8.

Thursday. Missions—Psa. 67; Isa. 55; Eph. 3:1-12.

Friday. Family and School Life—Deut. 11:18-21; Psa. 112; 2 Tim. 3:14-17; 4:1-8.

Saturday. Home Missions and the Salvation of Israel—Rom. 11:1-11; Rev. 22:12-21.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

---

Intemperance is a skeleton key that will unlock the gates of any cemetery.

The way you spend your money is a pretty good indication of the nature or quality of your major life interest.

Money itself will never build the Kingdom of God, but it is a great means to that end.

Brother James S. Cook reports the holding of a series of preparatory services and a communion service in the Second church of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, which is without a pastor since the resignation of Brother Dyoll Belote to take charge of the First church of Ashland. The communion was well attended. He urges that some one be found to take up and carry forward the splendid work accomplished there by Brother Belote.

Brother H. F. Stuckman, pastor of the splendid Goshen, Indiana, church tells us of a recent meeting, their "gather-up" campaign, with Brother B. F. Owen of the Nappanee church doing the preaching. Right through some of the severest November weather in many years they kept going and succeeded in leading fifteen souls to a confession of Christ. Mrs. Owen assisted in the campaign with her singing of Gospel songs.

Brother Homer A. Kent is not only the efficient pastor of our church at Washington, D. C., but is also the service superintendent of the Brethren National Christian Endeavor Union. He answers a question about the division of the membership into the various types of Christian Endeavor in this issue. Any young people having questions relating to Christian Endeavor work will find him ready to answer them. Address him at 1335 E. St., S. E., Washington, D. C. Send your society report to Brother Thomas Hammers, Ashland, Ohio, departmental editor of Christian Endeavor.

Dr. W. S. Bell, field secretary of the College Endowment Fund, writes this week from Sunnyside, Washington, where he served as pastor for a period of years. It is of interest to note that Brother Bell came to these people in 1909 when they numbered about fifty and had no place of their own in which to worship and he led them forward until in six years they had four hundred members and a church and parsonage of their own—a fine record. Naturally he would feel at home among the Sunnyside Brethren. Their finances have not been so good for several years, but they made their contribution to the College. Their gift was $3,067.00, which brings the total of the campaign to $230,562.20.

Brother G. E. Drushal of Lost Creek, Kentucky, writes correcting the discrepancy between his report of the result of the recent meeting and that of Brother R. I. Humberd's, and we are glad to note that the total was one better than either reported, or fifty-five. He also informs us of a remarkable instance of God's provision of their need, when there seemed no way of providing it. God does answer prayer, when his children pray according to his will and when they seek to live according to his will. And no doubt in response to their prayer, God supplied them with the needed bookkeeper and one who in addition to that service, is a helpful missionary also.

President E. E. Jacobs gives us an interesting installment of College News, the outstanding item of which deals with the effort to get things in shape to make the grade in college standardization. Dean Anspach and Dr. Jacobs are bending every nerve to bring all things to conform to the requirements. The big problem, of course, is finances, and at that point the membership of the church can help. Those who have Endowment pledges can help by paying on them as far as possible. And churches can help by seeing to it that they have done their best to boost the Educational Day offering. We have hoped and believed that the college would go over the top, but the outcome largely depends on the brotherhood's support in the ways above indicated.

Brother N. V. Leatherman, pastor of the First church of South Bend, Indiana, writes of a successful evangelistic campaign with Brother A. T. Ronk doing the preaching. He speaks highly of the work of Brother Ronk and says the meetings resulted in a real revival of the church. Also sixteen made the good confession, ten of whom have already been baptized, and six others were received by letter, with another letter soon to arrive. The song service in charge of their regular choir director was a contributing element to the success of the meetings. Brother Leatherman is fortunate to have in charge of his music regularly a musician who has the rare quality of being able to direct a choir both efficiently and harmoniously.

Our good correspondent of the Second church of Los Angeles tells of some of the interesting activities that evidence the spiritual growth of that church under the leadership of Brother A. V. Kimmell. A Bible Conference was conducted and brought to a close with a well attended and highly spiritual communion service. A community Bible class taught by the pastor is one of the unusual and influential features of this church's activities. A congregation that maintains five working Christian Endeavor societies ought surely to be taking good care of its Endeavorers of all ages. Brother Kimmell is leaving Los Angeles soon after the first of the year to take charge of the First church of Philadelphia. Brother Kimmell has accomplished a great work in Los Angeles and at Whittier, and has been a very vital part of the organization and life of the Southern California district for many years, and not only the Second church but the entire district will greatly miss him. But Pennsylvania and the First church of Philadelphia will be the gainers.

PRAYER REQUESTS FOR THIS WEEK—

Brother G. E. Drushal of Lost Creek, Kentucky, asks: "Pray for us that we may be kept in his will in all things."

Pray for Dr. Bell in his College Endowment campaign on the Pacific Coast. The indications are for a splendid response.

Brother G. W. Chambers writes: "We earnestly beg for your prayers for the work at Mount Olive, Virginia."

Pray for the effort at Columbus, Ohio, to work out a cooperative mission undertaking with the Church of the Brethren.

“The Sweetest Story Ever Told”. Luke 2:1-20

By Dr. John F. Cowan

Why do we never tire of the Christmas story?

Because it is a story of a babe. Every babe one sees is interesting. It doesn't matter if ten thousand babies are born in your city, when the ten thousand and first baby is announced there are a mother and a father, perhaps brothers and sisters, uncles and aunts and cousins, maybe grandparents, neighbors, a doctor, a nurse perhaps a minister, and maybe others to whom the coming of that baby is an interesting event.

Babyhood is Perennially Interesting

Middle-aged people do not have the same fascination for the average person. Aged people interest, but you would pass an octogenarians' convention with swift feet to go to a baby show.

That is one reason why the coming of Jesus Christ into the world as the Babe of Bethlehem has held the centre of the stage for two thousand years, and is likely to hold it many centuries longer.

Had Jesus come into the world a full-grown man, one of the primal laws of psychology would have been disregarded—that the interest of the human mind tends to be more intense about beginnings of things.

That is why little fuzzy chickens just out of eggs, and kittens and puppies and colts, always excite an interest that nature animals do not.

We have no stories of Mohammed as a child. India nearly always has a “messiah” whom many revere. A traveler going abroad recently tells of meeting India's latest “messiah,” Krishnamurti, on the steamer returning to his native land after a visit here. He describes him as being dressed in yellow shoes and a light-gray sport suit, with cuffs on the bottoms of his trousers, and a flashy necktie.

The Magnetism of the Manger

Such a vision of a “messiah” could never appeal to the imagination of the average person as does that of an innocent child born in a manger.

Why does the manger especially appeal?

For the same reason that a picture of the log cabin in which Abraham Lincoln was born appeals much more powerfully to the fancy of the average American than would the picture of a brownstone mansion on Riverside Drive, New York, as the birthplace of a great American and the deliverer of millions of humble slaves.

But the feature that appeals most to adults in this Christmas pageant is the twofold one of Jesus as Savior of sinful men and Jesus as the Prince of peace.

“Saviour” is a Word with a Great “Pull”

Why?

Because this is an unsaved world. It appeals in the same way as that other name Jesus applied to Himself—physician. In time of an epidemic in London there were not enough doctors to attend to a hundredth part of the sick. The city was like one great hospital, and any one who looked like a doctor was eagerly laid hold on by dozens of pairs of hands, and tongues besought: “O doctor, doctor, please help me. Me first, doctor.”

The world that Jesus came to was in the midst of a moral plague, and there were no doctors to heal, so the word “Saviour” has a magic about it. We have a sense of our need of moral purifying and healing. We have given up the job, the world over, of doing it for ourselves. And the name strikes a chord in the hearts of men everywhere. So the missionaries everywhere have found that when they could make men understand that Jesus came into the world to save sinners, men began to be interested in this man of Galilee.

“Jesus Saviour”

It is like being on a raft afloat on the high seas. Food and water are gone, and the sharks are showing their fins above the water, expecting soon to have a feast.

Then there is the cry of “Sail! sail!” Why, that patch of dirty canvas looks more beautiful

Than the Finest Oil-Painting in any gallery in the world. Because it stands for salvation. And Jesus stands for salvation.

But the reason on which just now the world's deepest hopes hang is that Christmas comes emphasizing anew the promise, not only that this Jesus should “save his people from their sins,” but that he would

Worship of the Magi

Bring Peace and Good Will to Earth

In all the ages there has been nothing the nations needed more than peace. And it was such a relief to be told of this deity who did not have to be offered gifts to reveal whether it was to be war or peace! People went to their gods to be told when to fight, and whom.

Here was a deity who stood always and everywhere for peace. What a relief! What a joy!

How strange it is that the rulers and the great of the nations should not be the first to welcome and invite to their courts this Prince of peace! You would think the cities of the world would as our cities bid for the political conventions and other gatherings.

But war was the trade of kings and princes. When the weaver's loom was invented, the hand-weavers mobbed the inventor, and broke his machine to kindling-wood. They were afraid they would lose their trade.

That is one reason, now, some think, why it is so hard to get common consent to disarm.

The Munitions-Makers Would Lose their Trade

Why should not a disarmament convention be sought after as a convention for nomination of a presidential candidate? Mr. Hughes says that agreement about the desirability of disarming is hard to reach because of misunderstandings and jealousies.

A part of this misunderstanding is the aftermath of the abominable teaching of the German philosophers and economists that a nation grows stronger and more virile by having millions of its weaker men butchered in war. The fallacy of this is that

War Takes the Fittest Men

There is no possible danger that the world would become overpopulated, or that the unemployment of men would become a menace, were it not for the slaughter of wars.

There are many other ways of fighting that call for all the man-power of all the nations. The 75,000 young Americans who were sacrificed in the World War might now find a splendid challenge facing them to enlist in a war for subduing the floods of the Mississippi River. A small part of what the war cost us would remove forever the annual menace of this rampaging river. What tasks for the engineers who built camps and roads and railroads for the bloody war! What work for physicians and nurses! What leadership for generals

Charging to Glory Against Seething Floods

that would endanger the lives of helpless women and children! What heroism for soldiers with pick and spade, saving life instead of taking it!

As a newspaper says, "One housetop with its little family floating down the river on it has more heart interest than all the glory of roaring cannon and dashing cavalry. Even an animal drifting in the flood should have an appeal stronger than the butchery of hundreds of artillery and cavalry horses in the shambles of war."

Let Inventors of Deadly Gases

set their inventive genius at work exterminating the corn-borer and the cotton-boll weevil, as men are now doing with the prospect of increasing the productiveness of the country by millions of dollars.

What is the duty of believers in Christ?

I do not think we should rush into any fatuous, impossible idealism, expecting an instantaneous transformation. We must police the world and the seas as we police cities and boulevards. But we must keep to the front the teaching of Christ that the ultimate destiny of the world is to be peaceable, and we should push that as fast as is practicable, and so bring in the real Christmas.—C. E. World.

Things By the Way. XXIV

By Dr. A. D. Gnagey

"Come Home. My Son, I Miss You."

This is not exactly a Christmas story, yet its sweet tenderness entitles it to a place among our Christmas meditations. Twenty-five years ago when the writer lived in Pittsburgh some one in the quiet of the late evening hour walked into the post-office. As he approached the window he noticed a letter on the floor and picked it up. It had been opened and lost no doubt by "the boy" to whom it was addressed. His curiosity prompted him to read it. The next day he sent it to the Editor of the Gazette-Times with these comments: I trust its contents may have struck the "tender chord" in the boy as it has in me. Many years ago I got a letter just like that. I didn't think much then about "going home," where I knew I would find my mother waiting for me. Fortune has smiled on me since then, but how many times would I give up all could I go "home" tonight. I send this letter to you. It is something that takes the older boys like me, and possibly yourself, back to days before "papa" died and we were told, when things went wrong with us in the city, we could "come home." I trust this boy may love, cheer and venerate his good mother and that Thursday he will be with "her." Whether he goes in velvet or rags, prince or pauper, the welcome is royal. The letter follows:

Monday Evening.

My Dear Son: William just brought your letter to me and it makes my heart ache to read what you write. It seems hard to think that you, who are honest and have never done harm to any person, can't get along as well as you thought you would. I am afraid, my son, that the city is not what you thought it would be. You are too young to be among strangers. Come home: I miss you as only a mother can miss her first born. Come home; we are poor, but we will make the best of it. Yesterday was your papa's birthday. I went to the cemetery. It was cold; and as I stood near his grave my thoughts were of my boy in a strange city. I wondered if you thought of your papa and how badly mamma must feel with you not coming in at supper time. It almost breaks my heart.

Yesterday I was in the front room looking for something to make carpet rags out of and I found an old pair of pants of yours that you wore with that blue suit before papa died. I put my hands in the pockets and found some marbles, a piece of colored glass and two pennies—perhaps pennies that papa had given you. The tears came, for I saw you again, all dressed with that suit, going to grandma's to spend the day. I can't give you up. Don't stay in Pittsburgh; come home. You and William are all I have. No one will take the care of you that mamma will. I know that you are ambitious, but you are young yet. The city is full of temptations, and you might fall in with bad companions and perhaps forget mamma and brother, and that would break my heart. Never mind looking for work. Come home. I send you a dollar to buy your ticket. Tell Frank that you can't stay any more. I want you here.

Will look for you by Thursday. Good bye, dear. Come home to where you will be happy with mamma and brother.

MAMMA.

An Idea Worth Thinking About

If the principles upon which true family life is based could be extended to the entire human race, and if these principles were put into actual practice in all Christian and civilized lands the problem which perplexes thousands of homes at this Christmas time would be solved. True family life is the nearest realization of the highest ideals humanity has ever had. Where, save in the family, will you find the best examples of all those virtues upon which no price can be placed? Where will you find such willing self-sacrifice? Where such care, devotion, affection? The family is the oldest, as it is the best of all the organizations or institutions of society. Before the church was the home was. In its earliest history, in its primeval state, it held the virtues of duty and devotion. Even the Stone Age Father fought to defend his family. And the earliest mammalian mother stayed by her child to death. There always has been something divine in the family idea. The relations that exist between the members of the family have always been the most tender and beautiful known to the race. The more one thinks of these common every day facts respecting the family life—the brooding, faithful caretaking, the mutual dependence and love, the bonds that bind so true—the more one comes to realize and cherish this priceless heritage of humanity. It is the one garden in which the full flower grows. It is said this is a commercial age. It is. The dollar mark is upon everything, always excepting the family life. The mercenary spirit is stayed when it reaches that sacred circle. Surely it is true that if the life of the family at its best could be extended to the race there would be the universal brotherhood of which poets have dreamed and sung. Is it too much to hope that such a leaven may some day, some sweet day, leaven the whole lump?

Love While the Lights are Glowing

Would you look at one of the grandest pictures of the holiday time?—at this Christmas time? It is spread out in a panorama for you and it is seen at its best when dusk is falling and the lights are glowing in a thousand thousand homes. There are the little gatherings, home folks, neighbors, relatives. Here is a room filled with laughing children, with maids and matrons, with gray heads and beards, and in the corner by the grate is a patriarch, his head crowned with snow, surrounded by little ones who beg: "Grandpa, just one more story about when you were a little boy." It is fine there. There is warmth and sincerity. The hand clasps are strong and the laughter honest. Makes you think of heaven. Here's music. A girl is playing and young voices sing not only the notes before them, but the joy of living. Here's mother's little home. There is holly in the window and a boy with crutches watches the gathering gloom. You wonder if he is happy. Are folks good to him? Does he cry? Will he ever be well? O, thank God for health and strength! and as you turn away, the curtain falls, but not until you see the sheltering arm of a woman with a Madonna face adjusting the pitiful crutches. The world is growing kind because Jesus once lived in it, yes, lived and ate and laughed and worked and played and grew. The world is discovering that it is good to serve and that human love is the greatest gift that ever came to humanity. These little gatherings are the expressions of that human love. They are the logic of life, the excuse for existence. They show how happy we can be when we try—and, most of us try, at least once a year, at the Christmas time. If your spirit is disturbed at the prevalence of crime and scandals and atrocities which characterize so much of life today, cheer your perturbed spirit on this coming Christmas eve by taking a peep, in the quiet of the evening hour, into a humble home where love reigns,—then take courage. So long as these homes abide the nation lives and is safe.

The Christ Reborn

Into a world of ignorance and superstition and barbarism and bloodshed, Jesus, the holy child was born 1900 years ago. Now into a world of materialism and pleasure and greed and competition and strife let him be reborn.

For though Christ a thousand times
In Bethlehem be born,
If he is not born in thee,
Thy life is all forlorn.

Though the Christ a thousand times
Be risen from the tomb,
If he is not risen in thee,
Thy life still lives in gloom.

Has the Christ been re-born in us, and does he re-live in us? When a man says "I believe," if it has any value, it must mean that he believes in the gospel as interpreted in its relation to the life of his own day. It is the same gospel, a dateless gospel, but an ancient creed, once instinct with meaning for those whose faith it originally expressed, however true in itself, becomes a hollow lie for him who repeats it as an echo, but whose soul does not find expression through it. We must believe in the Christ of today going out to minister to the present needs of the world; we must believe in Christ's gospel expanded and applied to the present problems of individual and social life. Our creed must be a worker's creed, a creed adapted not merely to the apostles of the first century, but to the apostles of the twentieth century. The modern Christian, looking life steadily in the face, must be able to say, "I believe in a Christ and a gospel adequate to meet all needs and solve all problems. Let him be re-born in us and rise again in us on this Christmas day as our thoughts go back to the Holy Manger and linger there for a season amid its hallowed and humble associations.

The Wise Men

The Wise Men! There is something peculiarly appropriate in that designation. Wise men in all ages down through the centuries since Jesus was born have sought the young child. The Wise Men showed their wisdom by seeking him in whom dwells all wisdom. To scoff is a sure mark of shallowness. Flippancy and an empty head go together. Any light mind can be indifferent and irreverent. It requires no brain power to scoff and ridicule. The Wise Men from the East were the thinkers and scholars of their day; they knew the need of the world and the need of their own souls. With Socrates and the prophets they felt that there was no hope unless some one should come, and they eagerly followed the sign that God gave them. No man is either wise or normal who neglects the spiritual,—for the spiritual is a vital part of our humanity; it is the thing that hakes us human and links us to the divine, and to neglect it is to make ourselves one-sided and unbalanced, which is the antithesis of wisdom. The greatest quest in the world began when the wise men in the East started on their thousand mile journey in search of him that "is born King of the Jews," and when the shepherds said, "Let us go even now to Bethlehem." Both the wise men and the shepherds were rewarded for their search. Ever since that day men and women and children, the world over, have been seeking the Christ; and they have been of the noblest and the purest among men. No truer or more beautiful exposition of this quest has been given than Henry Van Dyke's story of "The Other Wise Man." Read it at the Christmas time. The faith of the Wise Men and the shepherds at the birth of Jesus is more remarkable than the faith of the dying thief at the crucifixion. Commenting on the case of the Wise Men from the East, Canon Ryle says: "We read of no greater faith than this in the whole volume of the Bible. It is a faith that deserves to be placed side by side with that of the penitent thief. The thief saw one dying the death of a malefactor, and yet prayed to him and called him Lord. The Wise Men saw a new-born Babe on the lap of a poor woman, and yet worshiped him, and confessed that he was Christ. Blessed indeed are they that can believe in this fashion!" How utterly incredulous are the people of our time! They think it hard to believe in the Christ and to love him, even after twenty centuries of indisputable credentials of his power to save and to heal. Think now of what lies back of him, a story without a parallel in all history. And yet people refuse to believe. At this Christmastide may every soul fling wide the door, fall at his feet and cry, "Go never more from me, O Jesus! but stay, stay with me forever, for all the room in my heart is thine own,—to have and to hold forever."

Worship—And Gifts for the King

These are inseparable—worship and giving. They were joined in holy wedlock at the manger cradle and have never been divorced in the thought of God. The first act of the Wise Men when the star led them to the place was one of reverence. They felt the vast importance of what had taken place and bowed in adoration and worship. This is the feeling Christ always incites in those who come near him. When the impulse to worship and the feeling of reverence die out of a man's heart he becomes earthly and animal at once. In these days when the restraints of the home are loosening and sacred things are treated lightly, double care should be taken by Christian parents that their children grow up in an atmosphere of worship and reverence. Make worship a part of the genius of your home life. After worship comes giving. The Wise Men worshiped, then gave gifts. They worshiped the child as divine and honored him as King. There never has been a time when Christ needed the spirit of giving as much as now. Everything he stands for in the world would be vastly stronger if his people would today open "their treasures" for him. Worship without the gift is incomplete.

hibition nation, it could pay us with the greatest ease what it borrowed from us.

"The British liquor bill is greater than the total of the nation's receipts from income taxes. Without the liquor bill its incomes would be vastly greater and its revenue from them proportionately increased.

"The British liquor bill is half again as large as the receipts of all its railroads. Under prohibition these receipts would be largely increased.

"The average British family of five spends every year for intoxicating liquor $150, which means, of course, that the drinking families pay much more than that. If the prohibition policy were adopted, the nation would be spared most of its unexampled expenditures for the relief of the poor, the unemployed, and the aged.

"And all of this is a reminder of the even greater sums that we should be paying as tribute to King Alcohol if it were not for the Eighteenth Amendment."—The Evangelical-Messenger.

THE GOLDEN RULE IN BUSINESS

With the approaching Christmas spirit permeating every department of life, it is refreshing to read the action of the head of an immense business notifying the Executive Secretary of the Massachusetts Industrial Commission that he would guarantee that there would be no wage reductions in his plant for six months, and that he would be willing to operate without profit during that period if by that decision there would be employment found for workers. We do not quote the personal names, for it is the spirit of it all that awakens within us such intense gratitude. When men inquire if the world is growing better or getting worse, we recall the parable of the wheat and the tares, in which the great Teacher affirms: "Let them both grow together until the harvest." If criminals are increasing in numbers, so is also the long procession of true philanthropists. Never were so many minds of large calibre inquiring whether the Golden Rule can be put into practice in a material world like ours. Dreamers are in danger of attempting to live by a superficial sentiment, but the New Testament rule is not thus to be wasted. As Paul interpreted that rule, it runs thus: "Not slothful in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord." Favored indeed is the employer who catches the deep notes as well as the lofty ones in life's strange music. It is being demonstrated that the Golden Rule is a workable idea.—The Presbyterian.

THE GIFT

*Oh, there be many candles bright
Upon thy tree on Christmas night;
What need that I should add a light!*

*Oh, there be many stars that shine
To make thy Christmas heaven fine;
What need is there of gold of mine!*

*O, Little Lord, O Little King,
With men and angels worshipping,
What gift is there that I could bring!*

*(The angels turned their eyes on me;
The Shepherd looked surprise on me;
The King flung cold surmise on me!)*

*"Give gifts," he said (and looked no blame!)
"Not unto me, but in my name; Tell some one why it was I came."*

—Laura Spencer Porter, in the Woman's Home Companion.

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

BRITAIN'S DRINK BILL

Amos R. Wells, in a recent issue of "The Christian Endeavor World," gives us this bit of information as to what Britain pays for liquor. As one reads it there will well up a prayer of thanksgiving that the United States has the Eighteenth Amendment and the Prohibition law on its statutes.

"The British drink bill for 1928, the latest period for which figures are available, was $1,441,000,000. This is the expenditure for drink alone, and takes no account of the indirect cost of the trade, which is vastly greater even than this direct cost.

"The British liquor bill is nearly equal to the interest on the staggering national debt; remember this, the next time there is talk of forgiving England the debt it owes the United States. If Great Britain would become a pro-

IN A SENTENCE

Austrian archeologists, digging at Ephesus in Asia Minor, declare that they have uncovered what appears to be the tomb of Timothy, companion of Paul and the first Bishop of Ephesus. . . . Westerville, Ohio, cradle-town of Prohibition, has voted 685 to 473 in favor of Sunday movies. . . . Two negro denominations, the African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church, with a membership of 450,000, and the African Methodist Episcopal Church, membership 600,000, have under serious consideration a plan of union. . . . Their latest picture boycotted by the Chinese because it was said to reflect upon the dignity of China, Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Pickford have shortened their projected visit to Shanghai from four days to one. . . . With no jail, no police, no liquor, no tobacco, no radios, no automobiles, the little Hawaiian Island of Niihau is owned by an Englishman, supports, in prosperity, a population of 130 people, confesses that it is fifty years behind the times and has no regrets because of it. . . . Despite war, revolution and famine in China, the General Motors Company reports that it has sold more automobiles in that land in the first six months of 1929 than in any previous twelve-month period.—Christian Herald.

PENTECOST

The year 1930 marks the 1900th anniversary of Pentecost and the founding of the Christian Church. In celebration of that event American churches are preparing a nation-wide evangelistic campaign—a second Pentecost. First fruit of that religious awakening was born, last week, in Baltimore, where the Federation of Churches, under the leadership of Dr. Nolan R. Best, called upon Dr. Daniel A. Poling to conduct an evangelistic mission to the church members of the city. As a result, writes Dr. Best, "it is not fanciful to believe that a positive religious revival, not cultivated as a movement, but springing direct out of spontaneous church earnestness, is at hand in Baltimore." Most remarkable, however, were meetings with the city's preachers which, Dr. Best declares "traversed the highest regions of ministerial aspiration and the most intimate recesses of ministerial responsibility."—Christian Herald.

GENERAL SMUTS AT OXFORD

General Smuts is in England clearly with a policy to commend to us. In his Rhodes memorial lecture last Saturday he unfolded his thesis with all his customary skill and eloquence. In the course of his lecture he made certain criticisms of missions in Africa, the work of which after a hundred years had not profoundly changed the African, so he claimed; but it is not a mere rhetorical argument to inquire what the white settlers of his own race and of the British stock have done for the African during the same hundred years. To this hour well over 95 per cent of the education which is provided for the natives of Africa is provided by missions. Nor is it enough to say that the missionaries have been left alone; they have been thwarted and misrepresented, and often their work has been almost undone through the failure of the other settlers to carry through to a finish the enterprise which missions have begun.—Edward Shillits in Christian Century.

A REMNANT OF PRIMITIVE BARTER

Where the members of a congregation can be persuaded to meet their budgets by direct contributions of cash, and where activities to provide fields for church work are furnished, the dangers of depending on suppers and sales are eliminated. The church is not a market, and the method prescribed by the Apostle Paul in the New Testament is that of laying by in store from one's income a portion for the Lords' work. More and more we are substituting weekly gifts in envelopes and on special occasions for the laborious, uncertain, aggravating, often un-Biblical forms of meeting church expenses.

But we personally are not prepared to advocate the complete prohibition of indirect contributions. That some church councils have allowed the Ladies' Aid Society to hold a bazaar to pay the coal bill or even pay the pastor's back salary, instead of visiting the members and advising them to give regularly, is entirely wrong. Raffling an article is just gambling and nothing else. Getting donations from one's grocer by hinting the wisdom of his making a donaton, lest Mrs. S—take her trade to another dealer, certainly has no scriptural defense unless it is found in the collection made from the Egyptians by the Hebrews before they departed for the Jordan Valley: and that does not apply to the merchants we know. They are not Egyptians and we are not their slaves.—The Lutheran.

Daily Readings and Suggestions

(Keep with your Bible)

Christmas always has been, and always will be, a time of giving. While much of the season's giving has no real relation to Christmas, the spirit of Christmas is the spirit of giving. The gift of God's Son was the world's first and greatest Christmas gift; his life consisted of giving, and when he ascended up on high he "gave gifts unto men" (Eph. 4:8). Suggestions for this week center around some of the gifts that are ours because of Christmas.

MONDAY

Matt. 1:18-25. "For he shall save his people from their sins." Sin had brought with it the penalty of death; salvation from sin, then, is one of the most precious gifts, since it brings with it eternal life. When we think of the difference between life and death, between being "without hope and without God in the world," and the hope that springs from the certain knowledge of forgiveness by a loving Savior, we more fully appreciate God's gift of salvation.

TUESDAY

Luke 2:8-20. After all, the greatest gift of all is himself! The One altogether lovely, the Fairest among ten thousand, the bright and morning Star—and yet our loving Friend, who suffered all the heartaches we could ever suffer, who loved as we could never love, who heals the broken hearts and bodies of men as in days of old and offers our only hope in time of sorrow and death—what would life be without HIM!

WEDNESDAY

Rom. 8:28-32. Having given his very life for us, why should we suppose that he would not give us the lesser THINGS of life? ALL things? It is well to pause occasionally to think of some of the gifts direct from God which we commonly accept as a matter of course. We suggest a few: our homes; friends; our measure of health, and strength for each day, whether of joy or sorrow; the precious revelation of God; a church that is true to the Word; each breath of life itself—let us praise him for ALL things!

THURSDAY

John 14:25-29. The message of the angels on Christmas eve was, in part, "on earth peace, good will to ward men." In today's passage, the message of the angels finds its fulfillment, and we may find its fulfillment today in our own lives. HIS peace. We cannot conceive of our Lord as hurried, worried, or excited. Deeply moved by the passions of men, yearning over them, yet he was at peace. And we have found it in HIM!

FRIDAY

1 Cor. 10:1-13. Another gift which we too lightly appreciate is daily deliverance. Having saved us once for all from sin, he does not forsake us, but each day provides strength for the task, and deliverance from the snares of the devil. We are "kept by the power of God!"

SATURDAY

Matt. 28:16-20. The secret of daily deliverance is largely the fact of his daily presence at our side. This is one of the most precious promises of all scripture, but it is well to remember that this, like all scripture promises, is conditional: "Go ye . . . preach . . . teach . . . and lo, I am with you always." May we ever do thy bidding, if for no other reason than the joy in the consciousness of thy presence!

SUNDAY

Many of the fine old hymns so breathe the message of the scripture that for today we have chosen only to quote the words of an old hymn:

"I gave my life for thee, my precious blood I shed,
That thou mightst ransomed be, and quickened from the dead;
I gave, I gave my life for thee, What hast thou given for me?"

"And I have brought to thee, Down from my home above,
Salvation full and free, My pardon and my love;
I bring, I bring rich gifts to thee. What hast thou brought to me?"

The Young People's Department

By H. L. Pickerill

The Young People's Department of the church includes adolescents approximately eighteen to twenty-four years of age. The upper age limit of the department, however, is not so easily fixed since the interests of many beyond the twenty-four year, group them in this department. This very fact makes it all the more imperative that some definite standard of gradation be adopted. Otherwise, this department, in the course of a few years, finds itself serving a great number of adults. Their presence usually prevents the younger members of the department from securing the training and development for which the department exists. In many churches this department includes the young, unmarried people.

This group will be found doing their higher educational work, establishing homes, and entering the trades, business, industrial or professional life.

Their needs, interests and capacities are unlike that of any other age group and the successful leader must make a careful study of their characteristics. A study of the individual is the only correct point of departure in any leadership activity. This brief statement cannot treat the psychology of the pupil. You should become familiar with the contents of these books if you desire to become an efficient leader of young people.

Aims, Standards and Tests

A successful leader of young people must define his objectives. Aims or goals serve the following purposes:

1. To give direction and to point out the objective.
2. To determine a method which will secure the ends sought.
3. To provide a standard for measuring results and checking up progress.

The establishing of well defined aims and a vigorous effort to realize them give to the conscientious leader a pride in the task. This pride should challenge the leader to constantly seek, through work and study, a higher skill in the art of directing youth.

General Aim.—In addition to the general aim stated on page 51, leaders should constantly keep before them John 10:10, "I came that they may have life, and that they may have it abundantly." This abundant life is defined in a four-fold way in Luke 2:52, "And Jesus increased in wisdom, and in stature and in favor with God and with man." This fourfold development of the boy Jesus should be the constant challenge of all young people as we seek to lead them into abundant living.

Specific Aims.—Those who have made even a partial study of the psychology of young people will see in the following specific aims the close correlation between the needs, interests and capacities of youth and these aims:

1. To win to Christ each young person who has not already dedicated his or her life to him.
2. To help these young people maintain their tested Christian ideals in relation to the practical work of life in and through the disillusionments that are bound to result, as they face the realities of economic and industrial independence, in a social order that is not yet wholly Christian.

3. To prepare them for and to help them to assume the duties and responsibilities for home-making and citizenship.

4. To prepare them for and help them to assume their place in the work of life (business, professional, industrial), that in and through their daily work they may do the will of God and help to promote his kingdom in the world.

5. To prepare them for and to enlist them in applying Christian principles in choosing a life work or vocation.

The Senior Department

By Cynthia Pearl Maus

PROGRAM

The program of study and activities for Seniors should develop them on all sides of their nature,—physical, intellectual, social and religious. It should include Bible study and correlated subjects such as missions, church history, stewardship, etc.; the cultivation of the devotional life, training for leadership, and service through stewardship, recreation, community work, citizenship, evangelism and missions.

Worship programs for Seniors should provide opportunity for both training and expression in worship. The programs should be built around themes that have a more or less universal appeal, such as faith, gratitude, love, reverence, humility and service. All the elements in the program should be correlated around the themes chosen. The pupils should be largely responsible both for building and conducting these programs; and all the items in the program should be assigned sufficiently in advance to make it possible for young people to contribute their part in such a manner as to become an aid to others in worship.

Instruction.—The course of study for Seniors should be graded according to the needs and interests of the pupils. The International Graded Lessons are perhaps the best available curriculum for the Senior Department of the church school because they are practical, progressive, Biblical, evangelistic, and so planned as to meet the needs of pupils at each and every stage of their development.

Activities.—The activities of the Senior Department should be many and varied. They should touch every phase and interest of life in relation to the home, church, community and world. It is necessary to have not only a graded program of worship and study, but a graded and correlated program of service as well. "Missionary Education

7. To bring to them a realization of opportunities for life work that are open in the field of full-time Christian callings.

Standards and Tests.—Young people have a profound regard for educational institutions and business enterprises that have high and exacting standards. The desire to achieve is instinctive in young life. Therefore, standards are essential in the Young People's Department. Standards will be based on the course of study and the service activities projected. Inasmuch as several elective courses are available we are not able to suggest definite standards here. The leaders and teachers should carefully evaluate the contents of elective courses and determine in the light of the departmental aims the parts of the text that should become a permanent possession of young people. An observing leader will be able to test the acquired skill, attitudes and ideals as he observes his pupils in their daily life and work. If there is not an evident religious growth the religious educational process is somewhere at fault. We have proceeded far enough in educating young people religiously to know that they will respond positively to an efficiently trained leadership that offers a challenging and exacting program.

in Home and School," by Diffendorfer, "All-the-Year-Round Activities for Young People," by White, and "Promotion Day Plans in the Young People's Division," by Hodgdon, will be helpful.

Teachers and Leaders.—Trained leadership is the vital need for the Senior years. Efficient leadership for this period will have several qualities—Christian character, ability to direct and at the same time keep in the background, aims, plans, willingness to train, patience, persistence, sympathy and understanding. Anyone who is unwilling to try, at least, to develop these qualities, and to pay the price for power to lead, should not be entrusted with the lives of Senior boys and girls. Teachers and leaders in this department should be graduates of the First Year of the Standard Teacher Training Course or its equivalent, and should continue their specialization by study and attending conventions, institutes, Leadership and Community Training Schools.

EQUIPMENT

Ideal equipment for the Senior Department will provide an assembly room and separate class rooms for all classes within the department. The assembly room should be equipped with filing cabinet or bookcase

Fellowship Through Worship

Scripture Lesson—Neh. 8:1-12; Micah 4:1, 2; Psa. 122:1-9; Matt. 23:18-20; Heb. 10:19-25.

Printed Text—Psa. 122:1-9; Heb. 10:22-25.

Devotional Reading—Rev. 7:9-17.

Golden Text—He entered, as his custom was, into the synagogue on the sabbath day.—Luke 4:16.

Comments on the Text

Neh. 8:1-12 describes an ancient Bible school. We studied this more in detail on September 15 of this year. All the community attended. It was held in the open air, and probably in the largest square of the city of Jerusalem. Its superintendent was Ezra, the head of the religious organization in fact, though not the High Priest. The teachers were the Levites, who both on the platform and in the crowd aided in making the lesson clear. Nehemiah the royal governor of the land was present. The result was what would be expected: a great increase in religious fervor, a great joy following the great sorrow of repentance. Nothing of this sort would have come from a few people meeting together; it takes a mass of people to get this degree of enthusiasm.

Micah 4:1, 2. Micah sees a vision of a vast throng pouring out of all lands of the world into the temple of Jehovah at Jerusalem, to worship together. The vision was never fulfilled literally; very probably never will be. But more and more people from all lands are worshipping the God of the Jews in a spiritual worship, in a spiritual temple in a spiritual Jerusalem. The world will at some time become the kingdom of God and of his Christ.

Psa. 122 is one of the songs of church-going. It is attributed to David, and is one of the group known as "Songs of Degrees" or "Step-songs," because they were sung by the Jews on their pilgrimages to Jerusalem for their several feasts. They are all full of joy, and this not the least.

1. I was glad. We should not attend church upon compulsion. Even in childhood it can be made, by the parents, a reward of good behavior, something to be looked forward to. More and more the church is making things during the morning service pleasant for the children.

2. Are standing. The verb has the idea of habit—have stood and are standing—it is our custom to attend these services.

3. City ... Compact together. Coverdale's translation was "one at unity within itself." Probably, however, it is intended to call attention to the difference between a compact walled city, such as those of the time were, and the small, straggling villages, with the broad fields around them.

4. Up. Referring to the high ground on which Jerusalem was built. However it is most frequently the custom to speak of "going up" to the metropolis, even if it's lower than one's own home. For an ordinance. It was the command of God that they attend these services. To give thanks. We have, all of us, much to thank God for. And by going we put ourselves in the way to obtain an added blessing.

5. Thrones for judgment. The civil and the religious capital were the same in Israel. The church and the state were one. Only as we consider Christ the judge of mankind do we put these together.

6. Pray for the peace of Jerusalem. Jerusalem means the city of peace, and there is almost a play upon words here—"Pray for the peace of the city of Peace." They shall prosper that love thee. The prophecy for Jerusalem was that through it should come the blessings for all mankind. All that sought its good should prosper. This is true of our spiritual Jerusalem, the church of Christ.

8. For my brethren. The poet has spoken of the national side of worship; now he turns to the more intimate, friendly, side; the human fellowship to be found within it.

Heb. 10:22-25. Let us draw near through Jesus the Great High Priest who provided a way by which all may enter unto the throne of God. This is only possible, however, if we do it with a true heart no pretense at worship will pass the infinite judge; and in fulness of faith for the only will we obtain what we desire. Hearts ... body. The inner and the outer man are to be purified from all evil. There may be a reference to baptism, that symbol of cleansing.

23. Let us ... waver not. There was difficulty and danger in following Christ in those days; only those who had a strong belief in him and the courage of their convictions could stand firm. There had most probably been a good many among those to whom the author was writing who had at least wavered in their allegiance. He is faithful. Christ is faithful; if the bond between him and his people is broken it is not Christ's doings.

24. Provoke unto ... good works. Emulation; pitting one against another; brings out much more than simple quiet moving along the beaten track. But note that love is put first. Good works without love are of no value. See first who can love most; then the good works will come of themselves; and the one who loves most will, other things being equal, do the most.

25. Not forsaking our own assembling together. No fire of scattered sticks will remain blazing; the coal that slips from the grate soon cools off. One can be a good Christian away from church influences; but it is so much harder it is not fair to our souls to make them try it unless it is necessary—and it rarely is, entirely. Even the writings of others will give the shut-ins some share in the fellowship of worship, though they cannot attend the services themselves.—The Illustrated Quarterly.

Aims of Worship

In a manual on "Training Adolescents in Worship" O. S. Gates gives the following aims of worship, as the Church School Journal quotes:

"1. To bring the worshipers into conscious fellowship with God, to make him real and present and approachable.

"2. To develop and express social attitudes and aspirations to the end that the individual will may be conformed to the will of God.

"3. To lead the individual into such a consciousness of his relations with God as will center his ideals and aspirations in the desire to follow the Christ way of life and invoke a full and free dedication of the entire being to God, which involves making habitual one's Christian purposes in worthy, daily, purposeful conduct.

"4. To stimulate the Christian growth of the individual by consciously sharing with others (in group worship) the purposes of God."

Things Worship Should Accomplish

In the same pamphlet above mentioned, Mr. Gates enumerates some of the things that worship should accomplish. We quote them adapted in at least one particular:

"1. We may expect real worship to produce the realization of God in the life of youth and to deepen the sense of his presence as a living, working Spirit.

"2. Christian worship ought to clarify the idea of God as a loving Father; intensify the feelings of love, dependence, gratitude, and affection; and transform feelings of fear and dread of a sultan's despot into awe, admiration, and confidence.

"3. Group worship should stimulate thinking on common social interests and problems and should transform motives of self-seeking (individual and group) into those of love, unselfishness, and altruism.

"4. Worship should promote the organization of the individual's life around Christian, social, worth-while principles.

"5. The worship program should tie its experiences up with the big task of building the kingdom of Christ into the local community."

6. We add another item to these results of worship. True worship should be a foretaste of heaven. It should bring freshly into consciousness a realization of the importance and worth of spiritual verities and should fill one with anticipation of that time when, freed from the restraints of mortality, we shall worship in spirit and in truth and shall dwell with Christ in heavenly glory.

Active, Associate, and Honorary Members

Sometimes the question is asked, Is it advisable to divide the membership of a society into Active, Associate, and Honorary members? The answer is, Yes, if possible. Some have thought that to so divide the membership would tend to create dissatisfaction among the members. Experience, however, has taught that quite the reverse is true.

The Active membership includes those who have been willing to take and abide by the C. E. pledge. These are and ought to be the spiritual leaders of the Society. They should elect the officers and have full charge of the administrative duties of the society.

But there are those who, though not ready to sign the Christian Endeavor pledge, are interested in the society and will give it a limited support. In many cases these will be non-Christians and a splendid field for evangelism. Such as these should be invited to connect with the Society as Associate members and should be encouraged to become Active members as soon as possible.

Honorary members will be those who have passed the age of the Society but still wish to be connected with it. It is wise as far as possible to keep the Society within the age limits. It makes for efficiency. For instance, young people will not take part in the meetings readily where older folks are taking part.

Lost Creek, Kentucky

In the reports of the meeting which Russell Humberd held here last fall, his report and mine conflicted in the number of conversions, etc. He had fifty-four and I had it thirty-nine. Clearly someone was wrong. After more careful investigation, it was found that I was wrong or the nearest so. The total number was fifty-five. Brother Humberd was about right, and I am glad to make this correction as he was so near right, and very sorry that the error occurred.

There is also another matter that should have appeared in one of our former Evangelist articles, but which was omitted in some way. This has to do with the evidences of God's attitude toward this work. When the plan for the care of the finances was changed again, one of the serious questions confronting the workers was, who could and would act as secretary? None of those who had been secured for the year, had had any training for such work, and then they also had all the work that they could possibly take care of. This matter of the proper keeping of records is very important. It was one of those situations when human resources were at their end.

With no one in sight, and no funds also in sight to support such a person, it was indeed a real question. When no one in the usual way has been in sight, we have in the past appealed to the Moody Bible Institute, for such. We have gotten some mighty fine workers through them, as we know that morally they are right toward the Bible. We had corresponded somewhat with a Brother Hall there about the matter. Finally we had a letter from him stating that he was sending a worker to us, and if we did not need her here, to try and place her for religious work out beyond us. He also stated that this person was also a very competent bookkeeper, and if we had any need of such, she could be of valuable help to us. "God within the shadow keeping watch above his own."

About the time the letter arrived, Miss Anna Barnhoef also arrived. It seemed the clear leading of the Lord that she stay here with us, at no expense to the work but her board. How the Lord does provide. How we could have gotten along without some such person, now we do not see. She has proven herself a most excellent secretary, and also looks after the sale of clothing, goes out for Sunday school work at Clayhole, and also a Bible class on Saturday afternoon in another direction. Again we thank our God for this visible evidence THAT HE CARETH FOR HIS OWN.

We approach this Christmas season in the confidence that our God is caring for his own. Some clothing has arrived, but none too much, as the demand has been very heavy for it. This helps both ways, and HOW WE DO THANK YOU DEAR BRETHREN FOR YOUR GIFTS IN THAT WAY. We have just passed through the coldest weather ever known here for the time of the year, one degree below zero, and the last day of November zero.

May the Christ who made this happy season of the year possible become more real to all of us, and we ask and thank you that your prayers have availed. Pray for us that we may be kept in his will in all things.

 G. E. DRUSHAL.

TO BAR CHRISTIANITY

In Moscow, last week, watchful police arrested Princess Sophie Lieven, hustled her to the Lubianka prison, held her there without trial. On the police record it was written that Princess Sophie had offended against the laws of the Soviets by reading Bible lessons to the children of Moscow workers' families. An Englishwoman, Princess Sophie's brother is Sir Kynaston Studd, recently Lord Mayor of London. Religious interest is a family characteristic. It was Sir Kynaston Studd who, as an Oxford student, came to the United States, met John R. Mott, a student at Cornell, and first turned him toward Christian work. Princess Sophie, despite British intervention, has been unable to secure a passport to leave Russia.

A similar move against Christian teaching comes, now, from the Chinese city of Hankow, where orders have been issued to forbid the teaching of religion in the mission schools of the district. It is announced that the authorities will "rigorously suppress the cultural invasion of Christianity in education."—Christian Herald.

ASHLAND MEMORIAL ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

SUNNYSIDE, WASHINGTON

This place is like home, as I spent about six years here in the developing of our work. When I came to Sunnyside in 1909, we had a group of about fifty members who worshiped with the Presbyterians and Congregationalists in the Federated building. Under the blessing of God and the able assistance and united co-operation of our people here, we left a well equipped church building and parsonage with a membership of about 400. The credit is due to men like S. J. Harrison, W. S. McClain, Joe and D. M. Early, C. Rowland, H. M. Lichty, John Miller, P. J. Lichty, Ben Hoover, Julia Zook and others who could be named, that laid the foundation and gave their time and money. "Honor to whom honor belongs."

It was a pleasure to meet the faithful ones of those early days who are left. Many changes have taken place since I was here last. The last few years have been the hardest the Yakima Valley has ever experienced. Many have lost their homes under business depression—not on account of crop failures but on account of not being able to get a market for their products. There have been removals, deaths, changes in leadership and direction. The church at Sunnyside has felt severely these conditions and has been effected but with it all, still has a fine working body of faithful men and women and is a good strong working church. With the fine group of consecrated young people it has a future.

Brother Fry recently became pastor and gives every promise of acceptable leadership. I anticipate better days ahead for the church there and the Yakima Valley.

Brother Fry gave me every aid in my work as he is in sympathy with the college. The people responded in a fine spirit and gave as they were able. I was showered with hospitality and kindness. There were plenty of good eats—among many things on the menu the unusual were elk steak, black bass, pheasant and turkey—"Nuff said."

The total gift to the endowment was $3,067.00.
 W. S. BELL.

GOSHEN, INDIANA

Brother B. F. Owen was with us for eleven days in our fall gather-up campaign. Incident to building and a heavy evangelistic budget last year, we felt we must do more of the work ourselves. Brother Owen came in what is said to have been the roughest November weather in sixty years. We moved on from night to night, as though nothing were happening, although I cannot say that folks in general did so. The faithful came, prayed, worked. Brother Owen with Mrs. Owen preached and sang inspiringly and fifteen people confessed Christ. Thanksgiving came on and we closed. We did enjoy Mr. and Mrs. Owen, and bear testimony to his sincere presentation of the truth as it is in Christ Jesus. They seem to be especially fitted for evangelistic work.

SECOND BRETHREN CHURCH, Los Angeles, California

As we come to the close of another year we look back with thankful hearts for the many blessings we have received.

A Bible conference under the direction of the Bible Institute of Los Angeles, was held in our church in November, giving us a week of spiritual activity. The church as well as those of the community who attended received a great blessing and much helpful instruction.

Our Love Feast which was held at the close of the Bible conference was well attended. The spiritual atmosphere which was prevalent expressed the loyalty of our members, as well as their deep devotion for the house of the Lord.

We are glad to have Henry Rempel, our former music director, back with us again after his vacation spent in Canada. Many people come to our church to hear the splendid numbers of special music given either by the Ladies or the Male quartet, as well as the duets and solos, which are in evidence at every service.

A Men's Community Bible Class has been organized under the auspices of the Men's Brotherhood of the Second Brethren church; which has the outlook of success, and our pastor, Brother A. V. Kimmell, is their teacher. The writer not being eligible to the class, will submit a poem by Brother John C. Hummer—

Well, Men, here we are at last,
With an established Men's Bible Class.
We pray you will help us carry through;
'Twill be good for us as well as you.
'Tis a good recreation and then
It will make us all better men.

So let us put our shoulder to the wheel and work,
Everybody do something, nobody shirk.
If you have an opinion and think you know—

Out with it and, we will make this class a "go."

Don't be afraid to have your say,
Even if your neighbor does think another way.

It will be good for us to argue things out,
And then we will know what it is all about.
There is no one here who knows God's Word to the letter;

But if we come here and listen, and read, and study we will know it better.

If it is read more and better understood,
It won't harm us any, but will do us good.
You know if you go away to the mountains or sea.

When you get home you are as tired as can be;

Sometimes you don't get home 'til way in the night,

And you feel in your heart you haven't done right;

Striving and tugging with a worldly horde,
When it were better if you had communed with your Lord,

For he is your Master, to whom you owe all,
And sooner or later will have to heed his call.

You may think that yours is the right way,
But you may realize different—too late, some day.

So think it over while yet there is time,
And bow to the will of your Master sublime.

He is the one who knows all things best;
He is the only one in whom you can rest;
He is the one who is always willing to give;
He is the one who can and does let you live;
He is the one in whom you can rely;
He is the one whom you can't defy;
He is the one who is always nigh,
Even until the day you die.

He always did love you
And he wants you to love him too,
And serve him the best you know how.
Won't you do it; and do it now?
He sacrificed his Son Jesus on the cross,
That you and I might not be eternally lost.
This is not only I talking to you,
But the Holy Spirit is pleading too.
So don't grieve him o'er and o'er,
But accept Jesus forevermore.
That you might forever be
With him in eternity.

Our Sunday school is in fine working condition, with live-wire teachers and officers in all departments; also we have five working Christian Endeavor Societies.

Our Thanksgiving service was well attended. However with all these blessings our hearts are made sad when we realize we will lose our beloved pastor, Brother A. V. Kimmell shortly after the first of the year. It was the wish of the church to retain him here, but he feels the Lord has called him elsewhere so we can only pray the Lord to bless him in his new field; and send us a suitable pastor to fill his place.

We have lost some splendid workers the past year by death. Also some who live near the new church at South Gate will go to help that work. We pray the Lord to bless Brother Polman in his work at South Gate.

We are going forth in the strength of the Lord to build up our broken ranks and spread the gospel of Christ to those who know him not. IDA MORRISON.

THE KINGS OF THE EAST

By Katherine Lee Bates

The Kings of the East are riding
Tonight to Bethlehem.
The sunset glows dividing,
The Kings of the East are riding;
A star their journey guiding,
Gleaming with gold and gem
The Kings of the East are riding
Tonight to Bethlehem.

To a strange sweet harp of Zion
The starry hosts troop forth;
The golden glaived Orion
To a strange sweet harp of Zion;
The Archer and the Lion,
The watcher of the North;
To a strange sweet harp of Zion
The starry host sweeps forth.

There beams above the manger
The child-face of a star;
Amid the stars a stranger,
It beams above a manger;
What means this ether-ranger
To pause where poor folk are?
There beams above a manger
The child-face of a star.
—The World's Great Religious Poetry.

SOUTH BEND REVIVAL

The South Bend congregation believes in having a revival campaign, or series of evangelistic meetings each year. This year we were privileged to have as our evangelist, Rev. A. T. Ronk.

The meetings began Sunday, November 3, and concluded Sunday, November 24. The first week the sermons preached dwelt on the person of Christ. The second week sin was made to appear as sin, and its awful consequences were revealed from the Word. While the third week the response unto God, so necessary for man to make was declared gracefully, but in no uncertain terms. Brother Ronk is a clear and forceful speaker, making his messages interesting and helpful to young and old alike.

His services accomplished a great deal of good for us. There was a revival. The members of the church received new interest. Many strangers were attracted to the church and attended regularly. The young people were encouraged. Nearly a score of the members renewed their vows to their Master. Sixteen souls confessed their Lord and Savior Jesus Christ for the first time, ten of whom have been baptized and received into the church. Six others were received by letter, and another letter is on the way from our Long Beach church. Besides there were other benefits which we cannot here enumerate.

Brother Ronk proved a fine co-worker. He was always ready for any call or service we suggested. Many homes were called upon while he was with us. This is a large field and many brethren from our other congregations reside here in South Bend. Many of these are very neglectful of their church when they move to the city. Our evangelist helped make additional contact with these good folks. He made many and true friends while he was with us here. This was very splendidly demonstrated, when at the close of the last service nearly every member of the congregation as well as strangers bid him farewell and best wishes. The pastor truly appreciated his friendship and fine Christian spirit of brotherliness.

The song service was in charge of our regular choir director, Mr. Lewis Long. This is Brother Long's fifth year with the South Bend choir. During this time not one ripple of disturbance has ever been noted. That is negatively stated. The positive reason for it is that Brother Long is a lovable young man who knows how to get what he wants; that is, music. His choice of hymns during the entire three weeks were always appropriate. He was assisted every night with a very faithful choir. We have both young and older folks in our choir. They like each other and the congregation enjoy and appreciate them. Much credit for the music in the church is due to an efficient Music Committee of which Miss Lillie Garwood is chairman. The music program contributed very largely to the fine spirit manifest and the results that were cleaned.

Our interests are continued in the further program for the year; towards which this end this revival has made no small contribution. N. V. LEATHERMAN, Pastor.

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

Events at the College are going forward as usual. We are approaching Christmas when there will be two weeks of vacation. The school will close December 20 and reopen, Tuesday, January 7.

The attendance has kept up well, although a few dropped out after the mid-semester examinations just before Thanksgiving. There will be a few new enrollments at the beginning of the next semester, the first of February, and some will be dropped due to failure.

Professor Anspach has been to Columbus several times on business relative to the affairs of the College and he and I were at Akron recently consulting with an officer of the North Central Association. I have been working on a very detailed report for that association recently, the report dealing in a very exhaustive way with the finances and with the academic standards of the College. We are no longer a law unto ourselves but must meet many exacting standards.

I am allowed to make an auxiliary financial report as late as March first. I asked for this extension so that as much of our endowment might be paid as possible and also so that churches which may not yet have sent in their complete Educational Day offering might do so. WILL ALL THOSE WHO READ THIS AND OWE ON ANY OF THE TWO ABOVE ACCOUNTS SEE TO IT THAT THE MONEY REACHES THE COLLEGE AS SOON AS POSSIBLE?

The Association of American Colleges meets this year in Washington, D. C. Ashland is a member but I am not planning on attending as it is too costly, although I must be present at the North Central meeting in Chicago in March.

In keeping with the best academic customs, we have organized here several departmental clubs, viz., one in Education and one in Sociology. Also, the Faculty has a book review at every Faculty meeting which is held every other Wednesday. I am to review Morgan's new book on the History of the Gene, at our next meeting.

At the next to the last meeting of the Faculty Club, Dr. Ullman of the department of education read a paper on education, and at the last meeting Mrs. Leslie, dean of women, read a paper on the topic of segregating homogenous pupils in the various grades in the public schools. Both were excellent discussions.

The classes in Sociology and Criminology, taught by the way by Dr. Caldwell, one of Dr. Gillin's pupils, visited some of the penal institutions at Columbus recently.

Our Faculty members have been making the usual number of addresses here and at nearby meetings.

All Ohio Players

It is with great pleasure that I announce that the Associated Press and the Ohio Coaches placed one of Ashland's football players on this year's All-Ohio team, Ray Novotny, of Cleveland. Novotny played right half. Moreover, he led all individual players in scoring in the state. Ashland

IMMANUEL

By Rev. Donald Gordon Stewart
"And they shall call his name Immanuel; which is, being interpreted, God With Us."—Isaiah 7:14; Matthew 1:23.

"His Name shall be Immanuel"—
But in the silent years
No Saviour came with such a name
To quell men's doubting fears.
Then, in the fulness of Gods' time,
A virgin bore a Son!
And angels brought the tidings—
"Immanuel" had come!

Wise Men heard the message
Shepherds listened, too!
And heavenly Hosannas
Rang out the whole night through!
To low and high and rich and poor
The anthem was the same:
"God with us" is the meaning—
"Immanuel!" His Name!

And still the promise lingers—
He is with us 'em' today!
His star guides through eternity;
He is "with us" when we pray!
Though humble be our household,
The Scriptures still foretell!
A King will cross our threshold ranked sixth in the nation in the total number of points scored. Baker, our center, was given a place on the All-Ohio second team and Wartzler, left end, was given honorable mention. But what is more, these boys are all honorable and clean and are an honor to any team.
If we love "Immanuel."

The Girls' Glee Club broadcast over the Mansfield station last Monday evening. The reception here was fair.

Last Wednesday night the College debated Capital University here at home on the question of present day advertising. While no formal decision was given, it was the general opinion that Ashland more than won easily. Hoyt, Shiery, and Weimer, of the seminary, and Noble of the College, represented Ashland.

The Dramatic Department of the College recently gave a very high class minstrel show at the high school auditorium. It was under the direction of Miss Thelma Slack, of the department of public speaking.

The Fall Bulletin has recently been mailed.

Dr. Bell has been reporting satisfactory progress in the West.

The Y. W. C. A. is active as usual, giving some baskets to the needy at Thanksgiving and now holding a bazaar for the benefit of their Chapel Fund.

The Women's Club of the College recently met with Mrs. Haun when Mrs. Jacobs read a paper on the Stone Fences of New England. This information was first hand as we lived a year there while I was in Clark University.

We have recently placed a very beautiful new filing case in the Library. Also, we are installing a new system of student accounting here. We are introducing the most approved method of keeping student records as these must be open to inspection. The cost will be about $200.00.

The President of a state college was on our grounds recently and expressed his great surprise at the well-kept and well-equipped plant. He had been at many church colleges and he said that he expected to see this school as many such schools are, poorly equipped and not well kept. His words were very encouraging.

Professor Otto, professor ad interim of Chemistry, was married recently and has moved to upper College Avenue, near the College.

A check came recently from the treasurer of the National Sunday School Association in payment of their pledged support and no one knows how welcome it was just at this time, for December is a hard month financially here at the school. I want to express my deep appreciation for this timely aid.

The department of conservation of the Federated Women's Clubs of Ohio, has gratuitously set out some very handsome shrubbery on the College grounds.

Muskingum College several years ago won the state championship in Basketball and is always a runner-up. Last night we defeated them on our own floor, 18 to 28.

EDWIN E. JACOBS.

THE BEAUTIFUL THING

Did it ever strike you that goodness is not merely a beautiful thing, but the beautiful thing; by far the most beautiful thing in the world; and that badness is not merely an ugly thing, but the ugliest thing in the world, so that nothing can be compared for value to goodness; that riches, honor, power, pleasure, learning, the whole world and all in it, are not worth having in comparison with being good; and the utterly best for a man is to be good, even though he never were rewarded for it; and the utterly worst thing for a man is to be bad, even though he were never punished for it; and, in a word, goodness is the only thing worth loving, and badness is the only thing worth hating.—War Cry.

CHRISTMAS

By Florence Harrell

Lets' linger near the manger bed
And hear the angels sing
And watch the lonely star that led
The wise men gifts to bring.
Lets' spread the news both far and wide
To those who doubt his birth—
Let peace and happiness abide
And sing good will on earth.

When the winds, tides, and currents of life buffet us, we need an Anchor that will hold.

It is as foolish to try to form character without God as to make automobiles without steel or bricks without straw.—Elliott Speer.

RISE, CHEER FOR CHRISTMAS

—Christmas cheer at the close of the year!
—It is a happy time.
—It is the time to think of others.
—It is time to exalt the lowly.
—It is the time for expressions of good will.
—It is the time for gift-giving.
—It is the time to think about God.
—It is the time to value the little child.
—It is the time to find the neediest child.
—It is the time for the rich to give to the poor.
—It is the time to remember mother.
—It is the time to appreciate father.
—It is the time to fan the heart with a breeze of smiles.
—It is the time to be ashamed of your littleness.
—It is the time to disown your selfishness.
—It is the time to discard your pessimism.
—It is a time to forgive and forget all the ugliness of life.
—It is the time to resolve to be optimistic and to thank God you are alive.
—It is the time to love your enemies and to cultivate your friends.
—It is the time to proclaim your faith in Jesus Christ as Lord and Redeemer.
—It is the time to acknowledge your allegiance to the church and to make your confession at the altars of the sanctuary.
—It is the time to give expression of appreciation for those who, in their love for you, sacrifice in toil and self-denial for your comfort and well-being.
—It is the time for you to resolve to begin to be a better man.

The Senior Department

for the necessary departmental records, teaching materials, maps, pictures, etc. There should be a table for the presiding officer, a piano or other musical instrument, maps, hymn-books, a blackboard and chairs. Where the department room must also be used as a class room the broad-armed chairs such as are used in business colleges are ideal. The American and Christian flags should be a part of the room's equipment; and a few well-chosen mottoes, attractive in form, will be helpful in securing a department atmosphere. Recreational and service posters will find their place from time to time. On the walls there should be a few well-chosen and well-framed pictures. The following are suggested:

"Christ and the Rich Young Ruler"—Hofmann.

"Return from Calvary"—Schmalz.

"Head of Christ" (detail)—Hofmann.

"Six Modern Missionaries" (8½x29).

There should be a uniform system of records and credits for all the classes within the department. The following list is merely suggestive: Attendance, thirty per cent; On Time, fifteen per cent; offering, seven per cent; Use of Bible, eight per cent; Assigned work, twenty per cent; and church attendance, twenty per cent. The assigned work may be divided into two or three parts, if desired, as Home Work, Recitation, and Service, in which case the twenty per cent would be divided.

The credit cards should be kept in the department during the quarter, but each Sunday the total record of enrollment attendance, visitors, new pupils, offering, etc., should be sent by the departmental secretary to the general secretary of the school.

Some schools use the scholarship plan to encourage effort on the part of young people. These range from $25.00 to $50.00 and pay the way of the boy or girl who makes the highest average for a given period to a Young People's Conference, Older Boys' and Girls' Week-end Conference, or a convention. An additional "Fellowship" scholarship is sometimes offered, which may be applied on one's college education.—Taken from The Workers' Manual, Abridged in part.

OUR LITTLE READERS

HOW THE CHRISTMAS TREE CAME

Have you heard the story of the first Christmas tree? In the year 724 a company of Christian pilgrims made their way slowly through the great forest land of central Germany. At their head marched Winfried of England, better known since by his Roman name, St. Boniface. He carried a strong staff fashioned like a cross at the top. Close beside him strode a brave young lad named Prince Gregor, on his shoulder was an axe, with a broad shining blade. Suddenly the road opened a broad heath, at the further end of which stood a hillock, crowned by a giant oak tree. There it towered far above all the other trees.

A mighty throng of people were gathered about the sacred oak, before which a great fire had been kindled. The little band of Christians advanced calmly across the heath, and Winfried's voice rang out, "Hail, ye sons of the forest, a stranger claims the warmth of your fire on a winter night."

Swiftly a thousand eyes turned to the speaker—the semicircle opened silently—Winfried and his companions entered; it closed again behind them. There they stood close to the great stone altar before the tree, surrounded by rank on rank of men, women, and children, all clad in purest white. An old priest, Hunrad by name, was speaking to the people: "This night the great god Thor, the god of thunder and war, to whom this oak is sacred, is angry with his people. It is long since the roots of this holy tree have been fed with blood."

A murmur of approval rose from the great multitude. Swiftly the priest moved towards the children, and laying his hand on the foremost boy, bright and handsome, the finest of them all, he cried: "Here is the chosen one, the eldest son of the Cjoef, the darling of the people. Harken! Bernhard, wilt thou go to Valhalla, where the heroes dwell with the gods, to bear a message to Thor?"

The boy answered clear and swift: "Yes, priest, I will go if my father bide me."

Then the priest bound the child's eyes with a white cloth, and bade him kneel with his silver-tipped bow beside the stone altar, with his face to the east. The priest lifted aloft, with all the strength of his withered arms, the sacred black stone hammer of Thor, and swung it high above the child's head. But swifter than the falling hammer was the hand of the descendant of Winfried's heavy staff smote the hammer with wondrous skill, and caused it to glance sideways, so that it struck sharply on the edge of the altar and split it in twain! A shout of mingled joy and awe arose from the watching crowd. As the shout died away, the leaping flames of the great fire revealed Winfried, his face shining like an angel's, standing upon the altar.

Conflicting shouts and counsels rent the air, but at last the chief's voice obtained silence with its stern command: "Let the stranger speak!"

"This is the counsel," said Winfried. "This is the birth night of the White Christ, Son of the All-Father, Savior of mankind. Since he has come to the world, all bloody sacrifice must cease. The power of Thor, the cruel and evil one, is broken. See! You call this tree his oak. Does he dwell here? Does he protect it? His power is broken!"

The people stirred uneasily. Hunrad lifted his head, muttering: "Thor, take vengeance! Thor!"

Winfried beckoned to Gregor. "Now, young woodsman, show thy craft. This king-tree of the forest must fall, and swiftly, or all is lost!"

Clang! Clang! The strokes rang out on the cold night air. Then the greatest wonder of Winfried's life occurred. Out of the still winter night a mighty rushing noise sounded. A strong whirling wind gripped the oak by its branches and tore it from the roots.

Winfried bowed his head in wonder and thankful prayer. Then he turned to the awe-struck people and cried: "Here is timber, already felled and split by the hand of God. On this spot you shall build with it a church of the White Christ. And there," said he, his eyes turning to a young fir tree, straight and green, "here is the living tree, with no stain of blood upon it, that shall be a sign of your new worship. See how straight it points to the sky. Let us call it the Tree of the Christ-Child. Take it and carry it to the chieftain's hall. You shall go no more into the forest to keep your feasts with shameful rites. You shall keep them at home, with laughter and songs, and rites of love and goodwill."

So they took the little fir tree and carried it to the Chief's home made happy again by Bernhard's rescue. There they kindled lights among its branches, and Winfried told them again the story of the Holy Babe of Bethlehem.

So began the beautiful custom of the Christmas tree. Whenever we look upon one, let us remember the glorious courage of Winfried and young Gregor, and their great love for Jesus.—From Following The King, by A. D. Belden.

The Simplicity of Jesus

FROM AN ADDRESS BY ROBERT E. SPEER

A MESSAGE FROM YOUR WINDOW

By Irene Recknagel

It may be just a holly wreath or candle burning bright,
Let's put it in the window to send out Christmas light.

A stranger passing by your way may reap the seed that's sown,

The Christmas thought expressed by you may be the guiding stone

To turn his mind to Jesus' birth—the lowly manger stall,

His mother may have cradled Him with Christmas madrigal.

A very little thing to do—no visible reward,

But each minute reaction will be noted by our Lord.

—The Lutheran.

This was the simple principle of Christ. He said not a word to Pilate who might have released him, and called not once on the legion of angels girded with angelic sword which waited his bidding; but quietly and alone endured his cross and redeemed mankind; and silently and alone rent the bars of death and hell, and rose the triumphant conqueror.

Not only in action, but in thought we need to return to the simplicity of Christ.

It is our right and duty to think as far as we can into the revelation of God in Christ, and into the nature of God and God's mind and God's world. But we need to remember that only one thing is needful, and "Mary hath chosen that good part." "Thou, O Christ, are all I want! More than all in thee I find." Jesus alone is the fundamental and adequate theology. What was enough for Peter and James and John when Jesus was transfigured before them, is enough for us. Christ and Christ alone is the sufficient essential and the essential sufficiency. He is our only and our deepest need. All the buildings of Palestine suffice merely to cumber and conceal. The spirit strips them away to see again under the blue sky Jesus talking with the woman by Jacob's well, Jesus kneeling beneath the olive trees in Gethsemane, Jesus standing before the governor, Jesus hanging upon the cross, Jesus risen from the empty grave.

Jesus is the one bond of union. No agreements will hold us together without him; no common fears, no combinations, no organizations. He alone will hold all men across the line of race and nation and sex and condition—Jew and Gentile, Greek and barbarian, Roman and Scythian, black and white, rich and poor, bond and free, male and female. Christ can unite them; Christ only and only Christ.

All One Body

I am writing these words on a ship in the Mediterranean, a British boat home-coming from the farthest seas. Over my head in the stained glass window of the writing-room is the motto of the company, Quis separabit? Who will separate? No one, please God.

*Around our hearts there closely twine
Those ties which naught can sever,
For I am his, and he is mine
Forever and forever!*

If each of us is in him, we are each in one another and members one of another in his indivisible body, in the pure simplicity of Christ.

One of our difficulties is awe of greatness, of bulk, of power. We exalt what is complex and massive and organized; we set out in every enterprise to enlist influence and wealth. We need to rise to freedom by returning to the simplicity of Jesus and unlearning this reliance upon the great.

How good and simple the life of Jesus was! It was lived in one of the smallest countries in the world. It is forty miles from the Jordan to the Mediterranean, and eighty from Jerusalem to Nazareth. Apparently only once did he venture out of his own country; then he went into the coasts of Tyre and Sidon. Only a score of towns and villages where he traveled are mentioned in the Gospels. The scale of time, too, is slight and simple. All the distinct events and teachings recorded in the Gospels took place, it is said, in less than seventy days.

Holy Night, Silent Night

Rightly do we sing of his birth, "How silently, how silently, the wondrous gift is given!" and of that night as the "Holy night, silent night." The quiet world welcomed quietly the simplicity of the incarnation; God coming not as an army but as a little child.

The same God who made the flowers made the mountains and the seas and the stars. All greatness is to be consecrated to him with all weakness. But all greatness is littleness to God, and all weakness is strength; and we shall do well to follow more bravely and completely the simplicity of Jesus. "For the first time in history," to quote the words of my friend, Principal Cairns, "there appeared on the earth One who trusted absolutely the unseen, who had utter confidence that love was at the heart of all things; utter confidence also in the absolute power of that absolute love and in the liberty of that love to help him."

Alva J. McClain

ETERNALLY" is a Long Time

With an extensive advertising campaign there has been placed on the market a fountain pen which the manufacturers declare is "GUARANTEED ETERNALLY." That is a long time. Of course, no one (not even the manufacturer) expects any pen to last forever. The advertisement merely means that when the pen breaks down, it will be replaced, no matter when that happens. Even so, the guarantee is presumptuous. Many things can happen in eternity. The manufacturing plant may burn down; or the company may fail; or the secret of how to make an eternal pen may be forgotten, if there is such a secret. If the Almighty makes a record of the words of men, the manufacturer may have quite a few pens to replace in the Day of Judgment. But he probably figures that the pen will last as long as the buyer can keep from losing it. Hence he is safe, for the present at least.

Generally, when one investigates these grandiose guarantees, he finds a number of reservations for the protection of the guarantor. Last summer I found an interesting specimen. It was an article of furniture on which was stamped the trademark name, "THE EVERLASTING—." Underneath this name was printed in smaller letter the statement, "IT WILL NEVER WEAR OUT." And beneath this statement, in very small letters, "GUARANTEED FOR TWO YEARS!"

Then there is the story of the lady who started a "beauty shoppe" against the protest of her husband. She began to advertise a hair wave "Guaranteed to be Permanent." The husband had a vision of bankruptcy as the aftermath of such a guarantee, until the lady explained the system. "We do not guarantee how long they will be permanent," she said. There is always a reservation of some kind.

Only God can make good an eternal guarantee. "My sheep hear my Voice, and I know them, and they follow me: and I give unto them eternal life, and they shall never perish." There are no hidden reservations about that.

THE Logic of Modernism

Harry Emerson Fosdick, high priest of "Modernism," after a stormy experience trying to be a Presbyterian pastor, went back to his own Baptist denomination and became the pastor of a church built and sponsored mainly by the Rockefeller millions. His latest move is to drop the name "Baptist" from this church.

The Baptist denomination, congregational in government and without formal creed, has always been regarded as a roomy place for men of variant opinions. Its general work and policies are at present largely controlled by the "Liberal" element. But Dr. Fosdick apparently finds himself cramped for room and solves the problem by unshipping the Baptist label. As the wronged girl used to say to the villain in in the melodrama of by-gone days, the Baptist denomination might say to Dr. Fosdick,

"You have helped to make me what I am today, and now you spurn me."

Members of the Brethren church should study this case with interest. Denominationalism is not an ideal state. Christian unity and union would be better, if it could be attained without the sacrifice of truth. But denominationalism has this much in its favor—it is based on the principle that it matters what one believes. Modernism says that it doesn't matter what you believe. Some Protestant leaders had the childish idea that "Modernism" could be harbored without any danger to denominational existence. The Baptists have now discovered that a man who regards the Deity of Christ of no consequence is not likely to attach much importance to distinctive Baptist principles. That is the logic of "Modernism." And the Brethren church should clearly understand that this particular type of religious thought, if harbored, will destroy all justification for denominational existence. You can not teach men that the great historic truths of Christianity are not essential, and then get them to live and sacrifice and die for the ordinances which are based upon these truths.

If they are wise, the Baptists will not worry too much over the defection of Dr. Fosdick, even if the Rockefeller millions go with him. It is regrettable that there are not more Rockefellers. Perhaps then the denominations could get rid of more Fosdicks.

HENRY Ford's Old-fashioned Quadrille

Although Henry Ford is quoted as remarking that history is the "bunk," he seems to be deeply interested in the things of the past, especially the things of his own past. Among other things, he is now trying to revive an interest in the old-fashioned dances of his youth. Perhaps it can be done. One can believe almost anything after reading about the changes alleged to be taking place in styles of dress for women. Mr. Ford, it will be recalled, made a heroic effort to revive public interest in the ancient car he once made, but finally surrendered and gave the public what it wanted. And the public will get what it wants in the matter of dances, notwithstanding the efforts of Mr. Ford. Perhaps he will not surrender so easily as he did in the matter of the automobile. But then he is not spending so much money to popularize the quadrille as he was spending to maintain the old Model T.

Back in the year 1909 Mr. Ford announced that a customer could have any color of car that he wanted from the Ford factory, "as long as it was black." But he has changed his mind, and now the public can get what it wants. Human nature will continue to dance the way it wants to dance. The only way to change that situation is to change human nature. And that, by the way, can be done. "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creation; old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new."

The Unimportant Mr. Barnes

Professor Harry Elmer Barnes has broken loose again. This time he has written a book entitled "The Twilight of Christianity." The contents of the volume may be summed up in a single sentence condensed by the publishers from the text itself. "It is the thesis of the writer that the orthodox religious complex is the most active and pervasive menace to civilization which confronts mankind today, compared with which war and poverty are unimportant and incidental details."

We are not quite sure what "the orthodox religious complex" is, but assuming that Professor Barnes is right, it must be the real thing in the way of diabolism. "If war and poverty are only unimportant and incidental details," by comparison with this monster which the Smith pedagogue has produced from the depths of his imagination, we are surely in a bad way. Mr. Barnes claims to be a scientist, but any chemist or biologist who dealt in this kind of exaggeration would speedily lose cast with his fellows. When we think of what war and poverty really mean to the human race, we can appreciate how "unimportant and incidental" a writer must be in order to trifle with them in this fashion. Mr. Barnes takes himself too seriously. His part in the interpretation of modern life is to honk. He is the whistle on the steam engine, and not the governor. What he says is generally incidental and always unimportant. His most useful function is to provide a dash of humor in the turgid stream of sociology. Religiously speaking, it would be flattery to style him the absolute zero.—Dean F. D. Kershner, in The Christian-Evangelist.

HALF-MINUTE SERMON

Without shedding of blood is no remission. Heb. 9:22.

You may have wondered why Cain's offering was not just as acceptable to God as Abel's. But one took God's way and the other took his own. Cain took that which God had cursed and laid it on the altar. Perhaps he said to himself: "I shall certainly not bring a bleeding lamb. I don't like that doctrine at all. Here is the grain and the beautiful fruit which I have raised by my industry, and I'm sure it looks better than blood." And there are a great many Cainites in the church today. They are trying to get into heaven their own way. They bring their own good deeds to God. They prefer what is agreeable to the eye, as Cain did his beautiful corn and fruit; they do not like the doctrine of the Blood of the Atonement. ... But assured that any religion which makes light of the Blood is of the devil.—D. L. Moody.

If ever I preach again, I will leave out every bit of flourish and preach nothing but present truth, hurl it at the people with all my might, live at high pressure, and direct all my energies to the salvation of souls.—Spurgeon.

Lessons I Have Learned from the Old Year

The past is a great teacher and he is a poor pupil who does not learn therefrom many helpful lessons. Many principles one may gather, if he will, that will guide him in the coming days and bring great blessing into his life. Happy is he who has a willing heart and a ready mind to receive and to profit by the wisdom that the sage of experience has to give.

There are many things I have learned from the year that is past; so many are they that I could not enumerate them all. But these are among them:

I have learned that one must seize the opportunities as they present themselves, for, once they are past, they are gone beyond recall. I cannot recover the time I have let slip by; I cannot repossess the talents I have squandered, nor regain the life I have wasted. That which the past has carried away is gone forever. That is always the way, so whatever possibilities of profit or improvement the present holds out to me, I must seize it while yet the hand is outreached.

Newell Dwight Hillis reminds us of a passage in Virgil which he says made a deep impression upon his college days. He recounts: "Evander, the soldier, has come to the end of his career. Looking backwards with bitter tears and regrets, he recalls the past. The present moment was big with opportunity, but he was unequal to its overture. Responsibilities were there, but his shoulders could not bear them up. An unexpected crisis had come, and he could not meet it. It was an hour for a leader who had a giant's strength, and lo, Evander finds the grasshopper a burden. In his grief he exclaims: 'Oh, that I were in the day when I led my army out in the Valley of Praeneste.' How pathetic the hero's cry, piercing the heart like a sword! Gone forever the physical energy that in his youth never tired. Gone the zest of living—life had run to its dregs. Gone the passionate ambition, burning out like candles. . . . The things that Evander had lost were lost forever. We can revisit old scenes, reopen old books, seek out familiar friends—we never can recover our lost years, and the opportunities that have fled." And the story of Evander is but a chapter of human experience. It is your experience and mine. And because lost opportunities can never be gathered up, I have learned that I should lay hold on them while they are at hand.

I have learned that good aims and high resolves are important to one's success in life. Notwithstanding the tendency on the part of many to decry the making of resolutions, I have decided that they are worth while, providing they are sincere, and that it is important to set before oneself certain definite things to be accomplished. It is my opinion that we all ought to make good resolutions on New Year's day and then keep them daily renewed throughout the entire year. Thomas a Kempis once said: "A life without a purpose is a languid, drifting thing; every day we ought to renew our purpose, saying to ourselves: This day let us make a sound beginning, for what we have hitherto done is naught." Russel Sewall says there are many vicious proverbs, and one of them is: "The road to hell is paved with good intentions." Rather, he declares "the road away from hell has that sort of asphalt." And he continues, "At our house, when the water pitcher gets broken we don't give up drinking water; we get a new water pitcher and pitch right in again. That is the thing to do with broken resolutions. They do not represent luxuries, they represent necessities. Go to the shop and get fresh ones." The life without resolution is without aim and direction, and will be largely fruitless. We shall not accomplish anything this year if we do not expect to accomplish anything, if we do not fix our hearts upon something definite. When a man walks along a road he sees a thousand things he did not expect to see, but he sees them because he started out. So whoever launches forth on God's promises may not get where he thought he would, but he will get somewhere.

I have learned that, however much I try, I cannot make the most of this year, or any year, without more than human strength and wisdom. And so I have decided that it is best to depend for the keeping of my New Year's resolutions on the power of God. "God worketh in you" is the secret of power. Jeremiah exclaimed: "O Jehovah, I know that the way of man is not in himself; it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps." And the Psalmist declared positively: "A man's goings are established of Jehovah." Then the singer of Israel gives us that satisfying promise of Jehovah: "I will instruct thee and teach thee in the way which thou shalt go; I will counsel thee with mine eye upon thee." And with a consciousness of personal need, every sincere Christian heart cries out: "Lead me, O Lord, in thy righteousness." He indeed is able, and he only is able, to lead us on safely and victoriously so that we need never fear. I have learned that I am not able of myself, but that he is abundantly able. Therefore I will readily and courageously make the good resolutions that my heart tells me I should make, for I am persuaded that the Lord Jesus is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day—unto the very end. This have I learned.

For Next Year

Prof. Alva J. McClain will continue his highly appreciated "Signs of the Times" department. One of our leading pastors said one of Brother McClain's articles is worth the price of the paper for a year. Dr. J. Allen Miller will continue his "Question and Answer" department and though his heavy work has prevented him from writing every week, yet the very practical nature of the department and satisfactory answers have been much appreciated when it did appear, and he promises to endeavor to keep the questions answered quite promptly this coming year. So send in your questions. The very popular first page feature—"Heart Throbs of our Church Leaders"—will be continued, except when the first page is needed for some seasonal or other special feature. Brother Thornburn C. Lyon will continue to write the devotional column, and with the thought of laying greater emphasis on the family altar, he is changing the department heading from "Our Worship Program" to "The Family Altar." Brother Lyon has shown himself a splendid writer for this department and we hope there are many who are following his helpful suggestions and scripture readings in their daily worship. Prof. M. A. Stuckey will continue to edit the Sunday School Magazine section, which treats some important phase of Sunday school work each week. It is really a page of instruction and every Brethren Sunday school worker can afford to take the Evangelist for that page alone, if he cares for nothing else. The Christian Endeavorers are to have a live department edited by Brother Tom Hammers and he hopes to have something fresh from the national, departmental and sectional Endeavor leaders as well as from societies each week. Every Endeavorer should read the paper. One of your national goals is "Twenty-five per cent of membership in touch with the C. E. Page of the Brethren Evangelist." In addition to these special features, we are able to offer another which we believe will prove popular. Brother R. I. Humbert has kindly volunteered to write a series of fifty short articles which will be published under the heading, "Studies in the Scriptures." He expects to deal with a wide variety of subjects that properly come under the above title, beginning with the inspiration of the Scriptures, and later taking up Bible prophecy, types and symbols, and Brethren practices, etc. His kind offer answers very well a call for a department of this nature and for the supplying of which we were endeavoring to plan. We bespeak for it a wide reading. Also the editor will continue his Sunday school notes and you can count on an editorial review each week of the work and news of the church, as well as a frank, sincere, Christian treatment of timely topics and vital themes such as a church paper ought to treat. Besides these regular weekly features, we have the promise of Dr. Shively to continue his interesting and informing occasional sketches of our early church leaders as he knew them. And Dr. Gnagey will continue his spiritually inspiring "Things by the Way" at intervals. We believe these, to say nothing of the news from the churches and the mission fields, the sermons and articles and special numbers, merit the support of the entire brotherhood and will prove of sufficient value to warrant any pastor or church leader endeavoring to put The Evangelist in every home of his parish.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

---

We wish a very happy, prosperous and divinely guided new year to every member of the Evangelist family.

We call the attention of Christian Endeavorers to the message of their national president this week. Brother Riddle challenges the young people to service and to cooperation with the undertakings of the national organization during the coming year.

If you want to teach the Whole Gospel, do not leave out the doctrine of Christian stewardship. Too long we have been negligent at that point, and as a result we have a great many people who do not know how to give, and do not have the spirit of giving. If you want to start a campaign of instruction on this theme, you can get good help from The Layman Company, Chicago.

We are getting new members to the Evangelist family right along these days. A number of our friends are taking advantage of our special offer of "25 cents for 3 months" and sending the paper to their friends. In one letter just at hand from a former parishioner of the Editor, the brother encloses his personal check to cover the cost of sending the Evangelist to a list of his friends scattered throughout several states. He tells us he appreciates the paper and thinks it carries a message worth passing on.

The church at Falls City, Nebraska, under the leadership of Brother H. H. Rowsey, has undertaken an excellent educational enterprise in what they term their Church College Night. It is "a week day educational work" extending over two terms of six weeks each. Four different classes and a special address were features of each night's program. They purpose to make this a part of the regular annual program of this church. We commend them for this forward step.

A successful revival meeting is reported from the Mount Olive church in the Virginia valley. The Evangelist was Brother H. E. Eppley, the pastor of the church at Roanoke, Virginia, and the pastor for ten years has been Brother G. W. Chambers. He insists that though Mount Olive is a rural church it is not to be numbered among the "dying," as we are accustomed to class most country churches. And doubtless one important reason for its life and aggressiveness is its pastor. Good preparation was made and when the evangelist came on the field God used him to get a splendid victory for himself. There were twenty-seven confessions, and that in a much overchurched and well-gleaned community.

Brother W. A. Gearhart, retiring Home Mission Secretary, reports the Home Mission receipts for the three months closing with November. This seems to be a splendid report considering the fact that the Thanksgiving offerings could not have been coming in at the time of the making of this report. Doubtless they have since been coming, however, and we may be sure that Brother Gearhart took care of them in his usual good style. But it should be remembered that he has announced that he is turning over the books to his successor, Brother R. Paul Miller, on December 20th. That time is now past and all communications and monies should be directed to the new Home Mission Secretary at Berne, Indiana. Church treasurers and pastors should take note of this change and guard against sending money to the wrong place.

We are privileged to give our readers this week several views of the large and beautiful new church equipment of the First Brethren church of Long Beach, California, also a history of the work and pictures of some of the leaders connected with the church. They started out with the purpose of building a Sunday school structure, but before they got through they had greatly enlarged the church auditorium and added a new pipe organ. This is doubtless the largest and most complete church plant in the brotherhood, and in keeping with their extensive equipment, this aggressive church has launched out upon the most pretentious religious educational project of any church. In addition to the pastor, Dr. Louis S. Bauman, who has been the leader of the church from its beginning, the church supports a minister of religious education in the person of Prof. Alva J. McClain. In addition to the great work of leadership which Dr. Bauman has accomplished, two outstanding laymen are worthy of special mention in connection with this consummation of a great undertaking. They are Brethren N. C. Nielsen and Henry V. Wall, the former having been the original agitator of the Brethren cause in that city and the latter having joined himself and his splendid talents to the cause at the time of its organization. The way the entire membership of this church has cooperated and sacrificed to bring about this great achievement is worthy of emulation. We congratulate pastor and people on their success, and bespeak for them under the dual leadership of Dr. Bauman and Prof. McClain a still larger future.

The Editor's home is in receipt of an announcement of the golden wedding of Dr. and Mrs. A. D. Gnagey, to be held in the Brethren church of Altoona, Pennsylvania, where Dr. Gnagey is serving the sixth year of his second pastorate of that church. This fiftieth anniversary celebration will take place on December 27th and so will be a matter of history when this paper is being read by the vast majority of the Evangelist family, but it will not be too late for the many friends of these long-time and faithful servants of the brotherhood to write them a word of congratulation. Their street address is 2934 Maple Avenue. In behalf of the Evangelist constituency as well as personally, we extend hearty congratulations to Brother and Sister Gnagey on this occasion. Nothing is more fitting than that we should do this, in view of Dr. Gnagey's long service as editor of the Brethren Evangelist and also of the Sunday school literature. And in the marked success of the service which he rendered, Mrs. Gnagey had no small part. She was his intelligent critic, counsellor and helper in the days when one man was required to do all that was supposed to be done in the way of making the church's periodical literature as well as in the latter days when the work was divided and Dr. Gnagey was given the task of preparing and developing the Sunday school publications. No one has done so much to give character and style to our church literature as has Brother Gnagey and the church owes a debt of gratitude to him and to his faithful help-meet as to few other servants of the brotherhood. We do not think of them as old, notwithstanding their years of leadership in the church, and we wish them many years yet of joyous service and of happy home life.

THE QUEST

I asked for bread!

*Life led me to a plain,
And put a plough at hand,
And bade me toil until my bread I earned.*

I asked for drink!

*Life led me to a sand
As dry as tearless grief—
Forced me to find the springs of sympathy.*

I asked for joy!

*Life led me to a street,
And had me hear the cries
Of wayward souls who waited to be freed.*

I asked for word!

*Life led me to a wood,
Set me in solitude
Where speech is still and wisdom comes by prayer.*

I asked for love!

*Life led me to a hill,
And bound me to a cross
To bear and lift and to be hanged upon.—Selected.*

Philip Brown's "Merry Christmas"

By Louis S. Bauman

(Editor's Note: This belated Christmas story has a great message. We are sorry we did not have it sooner, but if the Christmas spirit is to be perennial, as it should be, this story is in time to inspire us with the right attitude of mind and heart as we face the new year.)

Philip Brown was a big, overgrown boy, whose over-indulgent parents awoke one day to the fact that they had a spoiled and selfish son. In a desperate attempt to remedy the great fault, Mrs. Brown sought for advice from the wise old pastor. As a result, we have a real story to tell.

It was Christmas Eve. The good people of the old-fashioned church back in the hills of Pennsylvania, had arranged for the giving of their gifts to each other by the Christmas tree route. The church was filled. Great strings of popcorn hung about the tree. Candy, showing temptingly through the mosquito-bar bags, was piled high below. Mysterious packages weighted down the tree or were stacked below. A Christmas program was rendered.

At its close, an old, bearded Santa Claus stepped forth and began scattering the mysterious packages. Sleds, skates, books, pictures, shirts, neckties, dolls, dishes, games, and every other what-not known to Santa Claus, were distributed right and left. When the last mysterious package had left the hands of old Santa Claus, there was just one most unhappy and thoroughly miserable soul in the church—Philip Brown!

Not a single gift had carried the name of Philip Brown. Every Christmas he had ever before known, sent him away from the church the envy of all the youth of the town. He could not understand it now! With a heart filled with resentment and disappointment, he went from the church and burst into tears. Arriving home, he found his father and mother had retired. Creeping sullenly into his own bed, he could not prevent sobs that were heard by a father and a mother who were doing anything but sleeping.

Next morning, a most unhappy boy, with eyes somewhat red and swollen, crept forth into the dining room for breakfast. The mother broke the silence:

"Merry Christmas, Philip!"

"Merry Christmas yourself!" snarled the spoiled boy.

"Phil," sternly said Mr. Brown, "that is no way to speak to your mother. Try again!"

"Well, then, Merry Christmas! How's that?"

"That's better!"

"How were the exercises last night, Phil?" asked the mother.

"Blamed bum!" growled Philip, almost breaking into tears. "Where were you and Dad, mother?"

"We were tired last night, Philip. We felt we would have a better time today if we retired early last night."

"Maybe so! But I don't see no 'better time' in sight! And I'd like to know what you folks did yesterday to make you both so tired! Didn't buy out any of the stores, did you?" asked Philip rather sarcastically.

"Well, Phil, you are surely out-of-sorts. This is Merry Christmas Day!"

"Mebbe so! I'll admit I'm about as merry as a bedbug in an empty bed, I am!"

"Phil! What on earth has happened?"

"Happened? Nothin's happened! But how can a fellow feel merry when no one cares for him?"

"But, my boy, I am sure some one cares for you."

"Huh! Very likely! But I don't see no signs!" snapped Phil.

After breakfast, the mother said: "Phil, the minister sent word that he would like to see you this morning. He says that there is a gift for you that could not be wrapped in a package or hung on the tree last night. You had better go get it. Will you?"

There was a sudden change in Philip's expression: "What do you reckon it might be, mother?"

"I can't tell; but, I am sure it will be something that you do not have, and want very, very much."

In a jiffy, Philip Brown was into his heavy coat and overshoes. Pulling down his cap, he started for the door.

"Just a moment, Phil," called his mother. "The minister said you should bring along some money of your own, and also your big sled."

"Wonder wha' f'r?" queried Philip, with a puzzled expression.

"I don't know, but the pastor must have a reason."

Philip got his sled and started. Soon he drew up in front of the parsonage.

"Good morning, pastor," said Philip.

"Merry Christmas, Phil," rejoined the man of God. "Say, Phil, there is a gift here for you,—a gift that cannot be wrapped in a package or hung on a tree. But before you return home with it, there is something I would like for you to do for me. Will you?"

"Sure,—if I can!" replied Philip.

"Over in the east end of town," continued the parson, "a man died several weeks ago; and he left two sweet little girls with no one but a very sick mother to care for them. Some one must make this Christmas merry for them. I want you to help. Would you mind going down to Williams' Store and getting the things I have jotted down here on a list, and take them on your sled down to this family? Take 'em in, set 'em down, and come back here for your own gift. Williams will open the store for you. Tell Williams to send the bill to me."

"I'll do it, pastor—I sure will!" And the better nature,

Another Year is Dawning

*Another year is dawning!
Dear Master, let it be,
In working or in waiting—
Another year for thee.
Another year in leaning
Upon thy loving breast
Of ever-deepening trustfulness,
Of quiet, happy rest.*

*Another year of mercies,
Of faithfulness and grace,
Another year of gladness,
In the shining of thy face.
Another year of progress,
Another year of praise
Another year of proving Thy presence all the days.*

—Frances Ridley Havergal.

that had long lacked proper cultivation, seemed to rise in Philip's breast.

When Philip was through at the store, he had his sled piled high with bread, sugar, butter, oranges, apples, raisins, canned fruits, chicken, cranberries, nuts, a big sack of mixed candies, some articles of wearing apparel, several dolls and a number of toys and picture books, such as gladden the hearts of children. Then he started on his errand.

Arriving at the door of a humble little cottage, Philip knocked gently. A tiny little hand struggled at the door-knob. Finally, the door opened.

"Mamma home, little girl?" inquired Philip.

"Yes! But Mamma's sick," was the reply.

A faint voice was heard: "Come in, will you, please?"

Philip walked in, and there, on a cot in a corner, lay the pale, worn form of a young mother. He said:

"I've got some Christmas stuff out here for you, ma'am! Where do you wish me to put it?"

"O, God bless you, my dear boy! My Heavenly Father sent you in answer to my crying unto him all through last night. I just knew he would! I feared he might weary of my asking,—but he never wearies! Praise his dear Name! God bless you! Just lay the things on the table there. O, my babies,—God heard us!"

Philip felt a strange sort of lump creep up into his throat; but with a quick, light step, he soon had the sled-load piled high on the table within. The fair but thin form on the cot reached out a hand. Philip took it as if to say good-bye. But the thin, white fingers entwined themselves about his, and held:

"My dear boy, God will surely bless you! But—how did you know—how could you know—that—we were so hungry—so lonely—so sad—me and my babies—today?" Then Philip's great, brown hand was lifted tenderly to the lips of the mother, and she kissed it again and again. Then she closed her eyes and prayed: "O thou God of the widow and the orphan, bless this hand,—this loving hand,—this hand that did not forget,—this hand that brought life and joy to me and my little ones this Christmas Day. Yea, my Father, for Jesus' sake, bless—thou—this—hand!"

And, as that mother held, pressed, kissed and washed with her tears and patted Philip's big brown hand, a bright-faced little girl, ruddy now with the joy of a "Merry Christmas," crawled to the feet of the boy and reached up her little arms. Her lips were smeared from munching some soft chocolates that she had pulled from the bag of candy.

"Me want 'oo, dood man! Me tiss a dood man!"

The free arm of Philip lifted her, and instantly her little arms twined about his neck, and his red cheek was covered with genuine chocolate kisses. Before he could disengage this little pair of arms from about his neck, two other little arms were thrown about one of his legs, and a little voice called from below:

"Me 'uv a good man, too, me do! Me 'up the good man, too! Good man come from God! God sent 'im, 'tause Mamma an' me ast him to! Mister, did 'oo tum right down from heaven?"

Something came into the heart of Philip Brown as he stood there,—he hardly knew what,—a something he had never known before. Before that newly found something, all the resentment against those who seemed to have forgotten,—all the bitter disappointment that darkened his heart during the night before,—went out as the shadows of the night fled before the rising of the sun. The Sun of Righteousness had arisen in Philip Brown's heart!

As soon as he managed to disengage himself, he was not long in getting back to the home of the parson.

"Pastor," he exclaimed, "tell me, do you know another sick mother and two kids like that in this town, that some one forgot today? Hurry up, and tell me!"

The old preacher smiled. "How much is the bill, Phil?" he asked, pulling out his purse.

"Bill? Don't say 'bill' to me! Say 'Merry Christmas' and tell me where to find another bunch like that!"

The old man of God smiled, looked straight into the eyes of Philip Brown, and said, "Phil, you've got it now!"

"Got what?" exclaimed Phil; "O,—er,—I see! The gift! You couldn't wrap it nor put it on the tree!" And laying his hand over his happy heart, he said: "Yes, I've got it—wrapped up,—in here! Thanks, pastor! Mother was right,—I needed it very, very much! It's 'Merry Christmas' now, all right!"

Philip Brown returned home with the greatest of all Christmas gifts—his Master's joy! He had learned the secret: "IT IS MORE BLESSED TO GIVE THAN TO RECEIVE!"

Long Beach, California.

Conforming to the Pattern

By Thomas Gibson

When the Lord called Moses into the Mount to receive instructions concerning the building of the tabernacle in the wilderness, he said to Moses, "Look that thou make everything after their pattern, which was shewed thee in the Mount." The Lord would impress upon the mind of Moses the importance and the necessity of following his directions, to the smallest detail. God is very exacting in his requirements. Nothing less than he requires will he accept. Remember Aaron's two sons, who offered strange fire in their vessels. They offered a substitute for the genuine. They would deceive the people, but they could not deceive the "all-seeing eye of God, which is running to and fro throughout the whole earth, seeking out all those whose hearts are perfect towards him, and desiring to manifest himself strong towards all such." And so, it cost Aaron's sons their lives.

Moses was careful to carry out the command of the Lord, with the result that when the tabernacle was dedicated, "the shekinah glory of the Most High filled the tabernacle," signifying that Moses had made everything according to the "pattern shewed him in the Mount." Had Moses deviated, substituted, or changed in any way the pattern, the shekinah glory of the Most High would neither have been seen nor felt in the tabernacle.

Does the shekinah glory of the Most High fill God's house today? Does the Holy Spirit fill the house of God today?

Moses received from the Lord, in Mount Sinai, the pattern to build the tabernacle. The disciples received from the Lord Jesus, on Mount Olivet, the pattern to build his church. Let us look at the pattern.

"Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you."

If the church would build after this pattern, she would dominate the world. She would be an invisible force. But she has departed from the pattern. Divisions, schisms, and doctrines of men have rent the church, so that she has lost her power. She neither observes nor teaches the "all things that Jesus commanded her to teach and observe." How quickly she abandoned the pattern. "The doctrine of the Nicolaitanes was hated by the church of Ephesus, but was tolerated by the church of Pergamos."

The Lord Jesus said he hated the doctrine. "Repent, therefore," said he, "or else I will come quickly, and will fight against them with the sword of my mouth."

How divinely significant is the likeness of Moses receiving instructions from the Lord on Mount Sinai as to how to build the tabernacle, and the disciples receiving instructions from the Lord Jesus on Mount Olivet, as to how to build his church. Moses told the Israelites that, "A Prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you of your brethren, like unto me; Him shall ye hear in all things whatsoever he shall say unto you. And it shall come to pass that every soul which will not hear that Prophet shall be destroyed, or cut off from among the people."

How literally that prediction was fulfilled. When Peter rebelled against the command of Christ, Christ threatened to cut him off, saying, "If I wash thee not, thou hast no part with me."

Let us return to the old paths. "Where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls." And wherever we see the church is not building after the pattern given by the Lord Jesus on Mount Olivet, let us fearlessly and heroically stand for her reformation, like Melancthan, Luther, Knox, Whitefield and others of more modern times.

What Difference Does Reading the Bible Make?

From a Leaflet Published by E. P. Gates, General Secretary, International Society of Christian Endeavor

That the reading of the Bible has made more difference in the world than the reading of any other book ever printed is a high claim indeed. But we believe it will stand through all time.

No other book has been in so many hands—over 600,000,000 copies of the Bible have been published in whole or in part.

No other book has been in so many lands—it has been published in over 835 languages and dialects. During the past decade some portion of the Bible has appeared in a new language at the rate of one every six weeks.

No other book has so greatly changed human life for good, with messages of forgiveness, faith, hope, truth, and divine love.

No other book has so permeated literature, music, and art.

No other book has so profoundly affected human governments. President Coolidge says:

"The foundations of our society and of our Government rest so much on the teachings of the Bible, that it would be difficult to support them if faith in these teachings should cease to be practically universal in our country. . . . It has been the source of inspiration and comfort to those who have had the privilege of coming in contact with it, and wherever it goes it raises the whole standard of human relationship."

In the Individual

An eminent jurist of New York has declared that "not one in a thousand of youthful criminals ever received Sunday school or religious training, and of 55,000 young criminals one in six had never heard of the Ten Commandments."

A Sacramento daily paper says:

"The training received by the average pupil in Sunday school pays better dividends and costs less than any training acquired elsewhere."

A representative of the American Bible Society left a copy of a Bible in a village store in eastern Ohio years ago. A small boy working in the store read the Book first through curiosity. He became a minister when grown and is now pastor of a large Methodist Episcopal church.

In a survey of two of the great state prisons in America, it was found that of 974 prisoners in one prison only one had studied the Bible. In the other prison, where there were 1,750 inmates, only six had studied the Bible.

In Literature

In nearly every instance the literature of modern European nations began with the translation of the Bible.

Six hundred and fifty-one Biblical references were found in the poetry of Whittier, according to a thesis by a university student.

John Bunyan, the tercentenary of whose birth is being celebrated this year, wrote "Pilgrim's Progress" with no knowledge of English other than that gleaned from God's Word.

In most Near East countries, the Bible has been used for centuries as the basic textbook. It is the standard book in language teaching.

"In the Philippines," says a United Press despatch, "one-third of the total number of Bibles are in English. and for this reason the Bible is one of the most powerful factors in the spread of English to all parts of the islands. In thousands of instances the Bible is the only book in English that students have seen before reaching Manila."

A professor of English literature in the Imperial University of Tokyo, wanting to take his class into the study of the great classics of English speech, sent for Bibles, as "they cannot understand this literature unless they know the Bible."

When the Bible was translated into the despised Mandarin, the language of common speech in China, the same thing happened as when Latin and Greek were translated into English, German and other great tongues. It made literature accessible to all.

In the Home

A minister gave up his pastorate and entered into the work of going from door to door with the Scriptures. "In the anthracite coal regions," he writes, "I feel that the awakening among people from countries in which the Bible is not distributed is a splendid omen."

"There are groups of men and women in these valleys who are congregating in their homes to read the Bible and are forming missions and building churches. Many have been established in the past six or eight years."

"You don't remember me," said a workman to a colporteur from whom he had just bought a Bible. "Several months ago you gave me a penny Gospel, although I did not want it at the time. But, since we began reading the book we have joined the church, and our children go regularly to Sunday school."

Through a Bible, more than half destroyed by fire, a man and his wife were led to Christ. When clearing away the debris from the cellar, the man found the dilapidated fragment of Holy Scriptures in the charred remains of an old trunk.

He took it home and, after showing it to his wife, started to put it into the stove, but she stopped him. After supper she began to read such portions as were left. They were interested immediately, and not long after the man and his wife timidly entered the nearby mission, where they were won to Christ.

In National Life

About ten years ago, when a telegraph line was being constructed in the interior of the Republic of Panama, a lineman gave a Bible to a native along the road. It remained an unknown book in that man's house for several years. Two years ago some one told him that there was a group of people in Panama City who could explain to him the contents of that book. Traveling some eighty miles, he spent two weeks at the Sea Wall Methodist Mission at Panama City and took an intensive course of study under the mission pastor. He then returned to tell others what he had learned. Recently, the superintendent of the mission received word to send him a minister and a school teacher. Three preaching points have been opened up. This man has evangelized the country for many miles around his home.

A hundred and fifty years ago, there was the French Revolution and an outburst of rationalism. Immediately there arose, for the first time, the Bible Societies, which translated this volume into almost every language, whether written or unwritten, on the face of the earth; and momentous have been the results.

All recent Prime Ministers in Britain have been men of the Bible, and every recent American President has taken good care to be acquainted with the volume on which he swears his loyalty to the United States.

One of the strangest things about the widespread distribution of the Bible is the fact that it penetrates into Mecca, the most sacred city of the Mohammedan world. Christian missionaries are not allowed to enter her gates, but the gospel they preach is carried in by many people.

The Rev. Samuel M. Zwemer, D.D., has said: "The Bible Society has done three things in the great Mohammedan world. In the first place, it has created a new mental attitude. . . .

"Not only has the Bible created a new mental attitude, but the Bible has created a new moral sense among Mohammedans. . . .

"In the third place, throughout the whole Mohammedan world the circulation of the Scriptures, which is the work of the Bible Society, is producing a new spiritual hunger for the living Christ."

Dr. James L. Barton, of the American Board of Foreign Missions, has said: "Without the Bible in the vernacular, no permanent work could be anywhere established in any non-Christian land. The Bible Society is the inevitable coworker with every missionary society at home and abroad."

In India and the East, the Book is more read than any other book ever has been or ever will be; China alone has absorbed more than ninety million copies. Gandhi, the mystic, is a reader of the Bible. So was the former Chinese statesman Sun-Yat-Sen.

TO CONNECT EUROPE AND AFRICA

The latest proposal in the field of engineering is that of a tunnel connecting Europe with Africa. We learn that the beginning of such an enterprise has been started by the Spanish Government, which is supervising operations a few miles west of the Rock of Gibraltar. Next month a similar shaft will be swung in Morocco, and all sorts of experiments will be made in the hope of discovering what the soil beneath the stretch of the land is like and whether it is suitable for a tunnel. This is a very venturesome enterprise and will be considered commendable by students of the hour. Even the least knowledge of the immense holdings of France in Africa will make a man think seriously of this enterprise. Slowly the civilization of Europe is saturating Africa. Christian ideals and ideas, customs and practices, are impacting the old order. Africa in the next hundred years will take its place by the side of the other continents supporting the world's present-day civilization.—Western Christian Advocate.

MRS. DOWIE RETURNS TO ZION

About twenty-five years ago John Alexander Dowie lost control of Zion City which he had founded on the lake shore north of Chicago. A central doctrine of his teaching was faith healing. His great church on Michigan Avenue was decorated with crutches and canes taken from crippled folks and invalids that he was supposed to have healed. At his death in 1906 Wilbur Glenn Voliva became his successor, and it is reported has paid little attention to faith healing. Now Mrs. Dowie returns to Zion at the age of seventy-three to lead a little group who have remained true to the memory of her husband in this particular. We can imagine that Voliva's troubles will now begin.

Many of us in this section believe that Dr. Dowie deceived his followers and perhaps we have been congratulating ourselves that the people of our section had gotten beyond that sort of thing now. Dr. E. B. Allen gave me a post card the other day that indicates that folks are still gullible. This card carries offers of spirit pictures of the following: Houdini, Bernhardt, Voltaire, Confucius, Ingersoll, Uncle Joe Cannon, and a picture of a baby 37 years old in spirit, a picture of an angel blessing a mortal and a picture of a halo produced by spirit. The word is added: "Any two, postpaid $1; all ten, $2. Evidence against those saying either of these are 'fakes' will bring damage suits for $250,000. Twenty per cent of amounts collected will be paid to informers." Here is a chance for some one to earn some Christmas money.—The Congregationalist.

MALNUTRITION

Four evils come from lack of food. They are weakness, pain, lowered resistance, and mental depression. All of these things at first make it hard, and then impossible to carry on one's daily work. The energy gradually lessens, unaccountable pain is felt, the body is open to disease, and, because of physical disturbance, the mind is often unable to see things in their true light. Solid nourishment is what is needed. The spirit as well as the body needs food, and many Christians today are suffering spiritually from the lack of it.

The Bible is the right nourishment for the spirit. When it is neglected, spiritual weakness, pain, lowered resistance, and depression are the result. There is no strength for service. If one is asked to speak there is a feeling of emptiness, and one thinks, "I have nothing to give." The thoughtless remarks and perhaps really unkind words of others cause a nagging and lasting pain. Doubts and error that Satan slips into the mind find lodgment, for there is no "It is written" to drive them out. The mind is depressed by shadowy troubles. Relief is often sought in exciting or humorous reading, in a continual rush of work, or in the conversation and companionship of bright and interesting friends. But such cures are temporary and unsatisfying.

The only lasting and sure remedy is offered in the gracious invitation of Isaiah 55:1, 2—generally understood to be for the unbeliever, but full of truth for the Christian—"Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money; come ye, buy, and eat; yea, come, buy wine and milk without money and without price. Wherefore do ye spend money for that which is not bread? and your labor for that which satisfieth not? Hearken diligently unto me, and eat ye that which is good, and let your soul delight itself in fatness."

—Sunday School Times.

MICHIGAN FARMERS AGAINST CIGARETTE

The Michigan Christian Advocate reports the following: "The Michigan State Grange, at its annual convention during October, took a big whack at the cigaret, indeed at the entire tobacco business. Grange leaders made scathing onslaughts on the whole tobacco outfit, and particularly the cigaret. The "Advocate" editors couldn't have said meaner things against Old Nicotine than did these crusaders. Then following, the five hundred delegates, representing chapters in every county of the state, adopted without a dissenting vote resolutions condemning the weed as the 'incubator of the booze business,' censuring the manufacturers for their strenuous efforts to promote sale of the cigaret, particularly their offensive advertising propaganda; deploring the smoking of the 'fags' by women and the stimulation of their use by young people and even children. The resolutions further demanded that the state and municipal authorities enforce the neglected law prohibiting the sale of tobacco to persons under twenty-one years of age; requested the next legislature to compel teachers to instruct children that smoking is harmful; urged the superintendent of public instruction to discharge teachers who indulge in the habit; besought broadcasting stations to discontinue putting on radio programs advertising the weed.

"The State Grange has certainly made its position as to tobacco clearly known. All honor to the Michigan Grangers!"

We have not seen so strong a statement against the cigarette and the tobacco business in general from any church conference as the Michigan State Grangers have made. We commend them for their courage and straightforwardness.

RATHER UNUSUAL

The will of the Rev. Alfred Duane Pell, former rector of the Church of the Resurrection, of New York City, who died a few years ago, reveals the fact that he left an estate placed at $2,207,230. Many art treasures that he possessed were bequeathed to museums in a number of places. But what interests us in this connection is that there actually has been a preacher who was a millionaire. Rather thrilling thought, isn't it?—The Evangelical-Messenger.

NO MONEY FOR BOOKS

Recently we received a letter from a firm which read: "We cannot pay our account yet as nobody pays us our accounts. Nobody seems to have any money for anything but automobiles."

This was not meant to be a humorous remark. It was a comment made in despair and crystallizes what many readers have thought for some time. Is it true that people do not read as much as they used to? Or it is rather that the trend of fashion has drifted away from books toward newspapers and magazines? This cannot be quite true, for never were there so many biographies read as during the last two years. Popular taste seems to be drifting away from the love novel. But if this is so, then how can we account for our customer's remark? Probably both statements are correct. There is a strong demand for more serious books among those who read books, but not so many people read books at all as formerly.—Oxford University Press Bulletin.

The Family Altar

Daily Readings and Suggestions

(Keep with your Bible)

With the New Year we have adopted a New Name, more in keeping, we believe, with the real purpose of this department. It is a time for new resolutions and beginnings in all departments of our lives, and it is hoped that in many new homes the Family Altar may be established. If this is done, we know that the New Year will be filled with new blessings, not only for the individual homes, but for the church, both at home and abroad, and for the nation. It is our prayer that this may be fulfilled in the New Year.

MONDAY

THE PROMISE TO PRAYER.—Many times in this column we have referred to our Lord's precious promises to hear and answer prayer. To those who do not pray, these promises are unintelligible; they may be realized only by experience. Perhaps the most precious of them all is John 15:1-7. The poet was not mistaken when he said: "More things are wrought by prayer than this world dreams of!"

TUESDAY

UNITED PRAYER.—Whether we understand the reason for it or not, there is a special promise to united prayer. Certainly, if the home life is what it should be, there is no other place where community of interests and desires should be so great, and consequently no other place where prayer may be expected to be so powerful. God bless every Family Altar, and guide us all in our devotions and our petitions! Matt. 18: 19, 20.

WEDNESDAY

MUTUALLY STRENGTHENED.—We thank God for Christian fellowship with those outside our family circle, such as that exemplified in Acts 20:32-38, but there is an added blessing when the fellowship of Christ may be had within the home. "We share our mutual woes, our mutual burdens bear," takes on a more personal and deeper meaning, and we are mutually strengthened for the duties of the day.

THURSDAY

INFLUENCE ON THE HOME.—One of the real problems of modern home life is the lack of understanding between different members of the family. There is nothing so calculated as to restore understanding and fellowship as gathering around the Family Altar and discussing and praying over one another's problems. Children are taught to realize God's presence, and learn to pray easily and naturally, their whole after life being influenced thereby. Prov. 22:6; 2 Tim. 1:1-7.

FRIDAY

INFLUENCE ON THE CHURCH.—In view of the many promises to united prayer, it is impossible to conceive of the results if every home in each congregation were fervently praying for the success of the local church. Equally far reaching would be the results in the church at large, on the mission field, etc. It is impossible to pray earnestly for anything for any length of time without giving whole heartedly of self and substance to bring that thing to pass. Acts 12:1-12.

SATURDAY

INFLUENCE ON THE NATION.—Read Dan. 3:36-45. The rise and fall of the nations of history have been determined by the level of the spiritual life of their people, and this principle is still active today. America is what she is today because of the spiritual ideals and devotion of her founders; if her people would now turn back to the spiritual life of our forefathers, there is no limit to what she might accomplish.

SUNDAY

Read Psalm 123:1, 2. Father, on this first Sunday of the New Year, we lift our eyes to thee. Thou knowest the problems of our local church, and of the church at large; of our home, and of the nation. Throughout all the world may thy believing people unitedly, in their homes, day after day, lift their eyes to thee for guidance each step of the way. So shalt thou bless us, and give us good success. Amen.—T. C. L.

The Young People's Department

By H. L. Pickerill

Organization

Wherever we find young people from 18 to 24 years of age, in their school, recreational, or social life, there is a very evident group consciousness. They have a desire to be separate from both the high school group and also the group beyond twenty-four who have assumed the duties of adulthood. To fail to recognize this inherent desire is to invite failure.

Human nature is such that we are predominantly loyal to only one organization. However, when we view our present church situation we are painfully aware of several organizations attempting to serve our young people. Obviously, there is overlapping and duplication in membership and function, and what is more serious, some outstanding needs are entirely neglected. As a result the loyalties of our young people are being built into organizations within the church rather than into the church itself. As our church is at present constituted it is necessary for our young people to join two or more organizations in order to get even the limited training afforded by the local church. As a result of this situation, only a few of the church's youth receive a training adequate for the development of a vigorous leadership.

In the light of the above facts it would seem that our task is to promote a separate, democratic type of organization for all the youth eighteen to twenty-four years of age. This organization must be church centered. It should develop a loyalty to the church itself. The values in the present numerous organizations must be conserved. The setting up of such a comprehensive organization demands a close correlation to our present competing organizations and activities.

Working closely with the officers of the department will be the adult counselor for the entire group of young people 18 to 24 years of age. Although this counselor would be officially appointed by the Committee on Religious Education, or whatever body appoints teachers and leaders, yet this counselor should also be a choice of the young people themselves. This should be equally true of the four adult counselors serving on the four standing committees. There is a real art in giving counsel to youth in such a way as not to permit them to run useless risks and at the same time challenge their genius and initiative. The only way they can develop is to actually lead and conduct their own affairs. The work of the counselor is to direct through suggestions which he draws from them rather than to make the suggestions himself.

Program

The experience of many generations has proved that certain elements in a program of religious education are essential to the development of spiritual personality. Worship, instruction, and service must all be employed with skill and understanding if we would enable youth to realize the fullness of the abundant life.

Worship has been almost entirely neglected in our religious education program in the past. Few church schools have thought of the "Exercises" before or after the class period as an opportunity for training the devotional life. When we come to see that worship has as important a part in developing religious personality as instruction we shall utilize the time we have wasted in the so-called "opening exercises" for the deepening of the devotional life.

It is much easier for the adult adviser or the superintendent of the school to plan the worship program than to take time and trouble to assist the young people to work it out. However, let us remember that much of the benefit from and interest in the program comes from their actual participation in its making.

Instruction.—Many schools use the graded lessons through the Senior Department but fail to remember that there are three years of graded work available for the Young People's Department.

In addition to these courses there is a wealth of material to be found in elective courses. If Bible study is to be made interesting and effective for young people it must be chosen with reference to the life needs and interest of the group. Most schools are using the Uniform Lessons in young people's classes because they have not informed themselves of the value of graded and elective courses. The following are a few of the many available courses:

Activity.—The very core of an adequate educational program for young people is schedule of activities around which all their work will be organized. This will include discussion, service, social life, and recreation.

The program of the Christian Endeavor Committee should be so correlated with the work of the department that the Sunday evening meetings will be a discussion growing out of the class and service work of the department. This would necessitate the co-operation of the adult counselor as these programs are built.

In addition to the making of maps, debates, writing of papers, and other forms of self activity used in developing lessons there should be a vigorous program of service in the Young People's Department. Too often the Every Member Canvass and similar activities are thought of as an adult project in the church. The young people need not only the training but their services are also needed in such important projects as the Every Member Canvass, evangelistic campaign, building enterprises and surveys. They are soon to assume the full responsibility of these activities and should be given the actual experience under a capable counselor.

Dramatization and story telling are coming to have a large place in the activity program of young people's work. The dramatic instinct is very strong in young people and the wise leader has an opportunity of not only holding and interesting the group through drama, pageantry, etc., but also a rare privilege of developing religious personality through active participation in such activities.

Personality cannot be developed without social contacts. The church should guide its youth in a vigorous and wholesome social and recreational program. In some communities the youth do not get the proper athletic opportunities. Church teams when properly managed are a real asset. There should be a once-a-month social in the department. The young people should have the major responsibility of planning and conducting Father and Son's Banquets, Mother and Daughter's Banquets, etc., as well as the seasonal social events such as a New Year's party, Hallowe'en Social, etc.

Equipment

Ideal equipment will provide an assembly room and separate class rooms, a library for reference work, blackboards, a musical instrument, maps, hymn books and chairs. When the assembly room must be used for class room purposes also, the broad-armed chair or movable assembly chair is to be preferred. The walls of the department room should be adorned with a few well chosen and well framed pictures. The following are suggested:

"Christ in Gethsemane," Hofmann.

"Ecce Homo," Ciseri.

"The Light of the World," Hunt.

"The Last Supper," Da Vinci.

Pictures of the great missionaries of the cross will find their place also, as will recreational and service posters.

Young people may well have as one of their service projects the equipping of their own departmental assembly room and class rooms. The fact that they have had a definite part in providing the equipment will give a new interest in the work of the department. Such a project should be followed through with an understanding that the materials provided belong to the church, rather than to a class or the young people in the department at the time. Otherwise difficulties may arise later when it is necessary to promote classes from rooms where they have provided their own equipment.—Taken from The Workers' Manual, Abridged in part.

The Childhood of Jesus

Scripture Lesson—Matt. 1:1 to 2:23.

Printed Text—Matt. 2:10-23.

Devotional Reading—Isa. 11:1-9.

Golden Text—Thou shalt call his name Jesus; for it is he that shall save his people from their sins.—Matt. 1:21.

Introduction to Quarter's Lessons

The first six months of this year will be given to a study of Matthew's Gospel, which is called the Gospel of the Kingdom. A very definite five-fold aim has been set before us:

1. To present a clear and comprehensive view of the entire Gospel of Matthew.
2. To keep in mind the Messianic character of the Gospel.

3. To observe the well-balanced relationship between Jesus' ministry of teaching and his ministry of mercy.

4. To develop faith in Jesus as the Son of God.

5. To indicate the way to complete Christian living.

"The Gospel of Matthew aims very obviously to show that Jesus was the Messiah, at once the normal and the unusual fulfiller of Jewish expectation, the outcome of a long historic process of Divine self-revelation, and the true answer to the prophetic anticipations of the completing of God's gracious purposes for the world." We therefore do not find any stories of the infancy or youth as in Luke; only the brief mention of the birth as recorded in Matt. 1:18-25; and the story of the Magi who came to do homage to the King of the Jews.

Introduction to this Lesson

Christ was born in Bethlehem of Judea in the year 5 B. C. (according to tradition, on December 25th.) Some occasionally inquire why it is that the date of our Lord's birth is not placed at 1 B. C., since his birth is said to be the event from which time is counted backward and forward. The reason is that when the date for the beginning of the Christian era was established several hundred years after Christ, a mistake was made and the reckoning was begun too late. It was Dionysius Exiguus (died A. D. 566), a Scythian by birth, who when abbot of Rome, undertook to establish the exact beginning of the Christian era.

The visit of the wise men is set at about January, B. C. 4. The flight into Egypt, January or February, B. C. 4, and the return to Nazareth, B. C. 2.

Comments on the Text

2:1. The days of Herod. Herod the Great, a native of Idumea and founder of the Herodian family. He was a Jew in faith though not in race. He was a man of great energy, but ambitious, unscrupulous, and very cruel. It was he who rebuilt the temple in great magnificence, and from him it was called Herod's Temple. He was governor of Judea at this time. Wise-men. Not merely learned men but "Magians" a definite class of great influence in eastern countries. The east. A plural word meaning the regions of the east. Very possibly Persia.

2. Seen his star. The eastern Magians were great students of the stars. There is a tradition in many countries of a brilliant star which appeared for a short time and then disappeared.

3. Herod ... was troubled. He was afraid this child would be king in his place. He was old, and hated by the people, and he feared a rival.

4-8. Chief priests. These should know if anyone did what the prophets had said about the Messiah. They made close investigation also of the age of the child.

10. Exceeding great joy. That their journey had not been in vain; and that they were allowed to do homage to the child who was to become the king of the whole earth.

11. Fell down. Bowed in the eastern mode of reverence. Worshipped. Did him reverence and honor. Three acts here—worship with body, with soul, with goods. Treasures. Chests or boxes containing treasures. Frankincense. A vegetable resin, from a tree, burned for its odors in offering incense; a symbol of prayer. Myrrh. Another aromatic gum, which distills from incis-sions in a small thorny tree; used in embalming the dead. Both are very precious.

12. Another way. The Wise-men returned to their homes without returning to Jerusalem. So God took care of the Babe of Bethlehem by not giving his great enemy the definite knowledge of his identity.

13-15. But this uncertainty as to his identity would not have saved the child if he had remained in Bethlehem. It put off the time when Herod would have sent the men to kill him, and gave Joseph time to arrange for the journey to Egypt and for the three to escape without being stopped by Herod's officers. Most probably it was the wealth of the gifts brought by the Wise-men which enabled the poor carpenter of Nazareth with his wife and the Babe of Bethlehem to take this long and toilsome journey, and to give them support in the foreign country. An angel of the Lord. Some divine messenger, we cannot at all tell of what sort. We read of him again in verse 19, when it was time for the child to be taken back to the land of Israel. A dream. Both here and at the time for the Return it was in a dream which came to Joseph that the command was conveyed to him. In both cases he recognized it as a message from God, and at once obeyed it.

16-18. Then Herod, knowing himself, the great ruler, to have been deceived and mocked, was exceeding wroth. Not only was this an insult to the majesty of the ruler, but it prevented him from learning which babe in the little city was the one whom he feared. So, in the despotic and cruel manner of many rulers of that age, and of Herod in particular, he ordered all the boy babes of Bethlehem within the possible age of Jesus to be slain, to make sure of killing him. Bethlehem was a small place, a mere village, and the number of boy babies under two years of age must have been very small. Some have put it as possibly 20, and even this might have been too large an estimate. How long the family remained in Egypt we do not know. Since his birth, and the other events, did not seem to the people of the time of great moment, there is nothing to make us certain of any date at this time.

19-22. The angel appeared in a dream as before, and Joseph at once obeyed the command and started for Palestine, without doubt with the plan of returning to Bethlehem, and living there. But Archelaus, one of the more cruel sons of Herod, had been given rule over that part of his father's possessions which included Judea—or Bethlehem. So Joseph was afraid. Galilee. The division under the Romans which included the northern portion of Palestine. Its ruler at this time was Herod Antipas, who later murdered John the Baptist.

23. Nazareth. A small city under a hill not far from the Sea of Galilee. It lay near the caravan routes to the east and west, and by his living there Jesus came far more into contact with the world outside of Palestine than he could have if he had spent his childhood in Bethlehem. "And by living there he fulfilled another of the prophecies which had been spoken by the prophets of the olden days.

Suggested Questions

What treasures can we present to Christ Jesus?

In what respects was the Christ Child like other children and in what respects was he different?

What do you think of the character of Joseph? Name some qualities that made him worthy of the guardianship of the Christ Child.

Why was Nazareth a better place than Bethlehem for Jesus to grow up in?

What reasons have you for thinking that the Nazareth home was ideal?

What other things besides family worship should be provided for the religious nurture of the young?

How far should democracy rule in the home, and what are its limitations?

Discuss the importance of each of the following items in the home nurture of the young: (1) books and reading; (2) music; (3) games and recreation; (4) home tasks; (5) conversation; (6) formal worship.—Church School Journal.

A New Year's Message

Greetings for 1930:

We come to the close of another year with many things in our minds for which we can be exceedingly grateful. With anticipation and youthful adventure, we look for the dawning of the New Year's day. To say the least, it is a challenge to every noble hearted young man and woman.

The ending of the old year should recall to our minds that our Lord Jesus has been our ever-present Helper, our Light, our Refuge.

He is the Light of the world and nineteen centuries are like nineteen candlesticks. Jesus lighted the soul of his own generation and then carried forward the torch; the light leaped from one generation to another, flinging its glow and radiance across these dark eras until time and history are glorious in the light of these Christian centuries. We therefore anticipate that this New Year shall be fraught and filled with that spirit of service, light and wisdom from on high that changes hearts.

Endeavors, there are opportunities, plenty, awaiting the steps of young people of keen minds, consecration of character and courage of convictions. Black is the contempt that awaits those who do not have the courage of their convictions. Too many of both young and old today there are, who stand midway between their courage and convictions, lacking that which will enable them to stand up to the cause they know to be right. What a word is this of Christ's "Of him will I be ashamed in the hour when he stands before the Father and his angels."

Endeavors: will you not give yourselves to greater plans for Christian Endeavor

Week, soon to be announced. We call everyone to be a volunteer in service to give emphasis to this Christian Endeavor Week celebration. We call you to set a date during the week, when you will give the amount of your pledge for the Krypton, Kentucky mission work. Remember, this is Christian Endeavor's field for concentrated action. Tithe for the week and bring your offering.

In closing, may we urge that we reveal a fine spirit of cooperation and service in the church during the year? Consecrate your gold and silver, your talent and strength; make them shine through service. Be loyal and generous to God, after the pattern of generosity that the Father has exhibited toward you.

A Happy and Prosperous New Year to All.
President E. M. RIDDLE.

THE HISTORY OF THE FIRST BRETHREN CHURCH OF LONG BEACH, CALIFORNIA

On the 24th day of June, 1877, in Denmark, there was a baptism. It was that of N. C. Nielsen. One year previously, the wife of this man was baptized, being the third person baptized and received into the Brethren church in that country. N. C. Nielsen was the first deacon of the Brethren church in Denmark. Mr. and Mrs. Nielsen later came to America, their pilgrimage finally leading them to Long Beach.

From the date of their arrival here, their enthusiasm for the faith of "a Whole Gospel" was the beginning of real history for the Brethren church in Southern California. The only Brethren church in Southern California at that date was in Lordsburg—now La Verne. There were a number of Brethren in Los Angeles, and Brother Nielsen was instrumental in gathering them together into the organization of the First Brethren church in that city; and, he has been instrumental in the organization of every Brethren church in Southern California since. For a number of years, he was the faithful Sunday school Superintendent of the First Brethren church in Los Angeles, traveling to and fro. That position he relinquished with the beginning of the work in Long Beach.

At the Southern California Conference of the Brethren church, in Los Angeles in 1911, Brother Nielsen asked the District Mission Board, of which he was President, to back an evangelistic campaign in Long Beach. He gave the first $1,000.00. There were but six members of the Brethren church in Long Beach, four of whom belonged to the Nielsen family. The other two were Herman Ferreebe and his sister, Miss Olive Ferreebe. On Sunday, October 13th, 1912, Evangelist L. S. Bauman and Professor B. P. Stout, well-known leader of Gospel song, began the first Brethren services ever held in Long Beach, in a tent on the southeast corner of Tenth Street and Walnut Avenue. At this meeting, 71 souls "stepped to the front," of which number 49 became charter members for a Brethren church in Long Beach. Others of the 71 entered into the fellowship of other local churches.

At the close of this meeting, an offering was taken for the purpose of purchasing a lot and creating a building fund. Members and friends responded with a total of $5,600.00. It is only fair to state that during this meeting, Mr. and Mrs. H. V. Wall became interested in our work and gave it tremendous impetus by their encouragement, financially and otherwise. These two names, Nielsen and Wall, naturally have been quite prominent in our work ever since.

Two lots were purchased at the corner of Cherry Avenue and Fifth Street, from Mrs. F. D. Planck for $3,000.00, she in turn kindly donating $200 of the purchase price.

A Building Committee was named as follows: N. C. Nielsen, Henry V. Wall, D. E. Waller, John E. Kellogg and William E. Kendig.

During the tent meeting, a Sunday school was organized, with N. C. Nielsen as Superintendent.

Evangelist Bauman was invited to accept the pastorate of this mission. He accepted, his pastorate to begin after the completion of his Winter's evangelistic engagements in the east.

Services were held in the tent during the Winter, and later in the Carroll Park (now Burbank) School auditorium. Local pastors from the various Brethren churches of Southern California conducted the services every other Sunday. Rev. Robert A. Haddon, the well-known Bible teacher, spoke on intervening Sundays.

The corner-stone of the new church was laid on March 2d, 1913, with Elder A. V. Kimmell, of Los Angeles, in charge of the services. On April 6th, L. S. Bauman arrived and took charge. The church was dedicated on Sunday, July 20th, 1913, having cost, in a very much uncompleted condition, above $22,000.00. Elder Charles A. Bame, of Dayton, Ohio, preached the dedicatory sermon. Elder George C. Carpenter of Warsaw, Indiana, preached the evening sermon. The pastor, at an afternoon service, took the special dedication offering. Nine days previously, July 11th, the church had been formally organized with 98 charter members, of whom the following are still among the living and on our church roll:

Mr. and Mrs. Louis S. Bauman, Mrs. Katherine Boldt, Mrs. Margaret Clark, Herman Ferreebe, Miss Olive Ferreebe, Mrs. Mattie E. Gritz Baker, Mrs. Rosetta Gritz Casey, Mrs. Nettie Harvey, Mrs. Mary M. Hopkins, Edward M. House, Mr. and Mrs. Norman L. Irvine, Mr. and Mrs. John E. Kellogg, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Madison, Miss Johanna Nielsen, N. C. Nielsen, Niels H. Nielsen, Edward Planck, Mrs. Sarah F. Powers, Mr. and Mrs. H. S. Reynolds, Miss Ada M. Visick, Mrs. Grace E. Visick, Clifford S. Wall, Mr. and Mrs. H. V. Wall, Bruce E. Waller, D. E. Waller and Mrs. Rose E. Whitney.

During the sixteen years of the church's history, God's blessing has rested richly upon the work. No pastor was ever backed by a more faithful corps of church workers than the corps that has stood by the pastor of the First Brethren church of Long Beach during these years. If space permitted, we should like to pay rich tribute to the faithful Sunday School Superintendents, who have meant so much to our work: N. C. Nielsen, Dwight E. Waller, Stewart P. MacLennan, Mrs. Una V. Mayell, Henry V. Wall and A. H. Kent. In turn, these have been backed by as faithful Department Superintendents and teachers as ever a Sunday school possessed. We must not fail to mention also the two most faithful and efficient assistant pastors who have served us—Rev. Percy L. Yett, now a missionary in South America, and Rev. Alan S. Pearce, now the Secretary of the Correspondence school of the Bible Institute of Los Angeles.

It is only just to say further that no true history of this church in its earlier years could possibly be written without paying some tribute to the name of Mrs. Henry V. Wall, the deaconess who all these years has stood faithfully by, just ready to take hold anywhere, doing oftentimes what few others were willing to do; and to the name of Miss Johanna Nielsen who was also ready, from the day our tent was pitched, to do anything and everything within her power, to say nothing of her presiding at the piano for many years without one penny of remuneration; and, Mrs. Margaret Clark, whose work among the youth of our church has been marvelously blessed of God. There are others that space will not allow us to mention here—saints of God to whose long years of faithfulness this building stands a monument today. Loyal and royal has their service been!

But there came a time when the pastor and others felt that if the church was to continue to grow, it must begin to plan for larger Bible school quarters. On May 10th, 1926, the church was called together, and entrance upon a larger program was proposed. The program was enthusiastically adopted at one of the largest business meetings ever held in the history of the church. Later, after the death of Dr. H. R. Smith, his will revealed the gift of a portion of his estate to the church. It is only fair to say that this gift helped materially in the matter of encouraging the church to undertake the erection of the structure which we dedicate today.

On May 25th, 1928, at a supper given in the basement of the old church building, it was decided that the church should proceed with plans for the erection of a new Bible school building. On July 17th, a Building Committee was appointed and approved. Reginald F. Inwood was chosen as Architect,—a choice that proved to be a happy one, indeed. However, it was not until February 1st, 1929, that plans were presented for final approval. A new and permanent Building Committee was appointed on April 14th, which, with several later additions, was as follows: Henry V. Wall, Chairman; Dwight E. Waller, Secretary; H. D. Yett, F. D. Planck, F. A. Keeler, H. R. Hinkel, N. C. Nielsen, J. I. Judd, G. C. Bulach, L. E. Christner, C. T. Belt, A. H. Kent, Ralyh Ryan, Ralph McConahay, A. Sorensen, W. T. Stettenbenz. Mr. E. L. Barry was chosen as the building superintendent. To Mr. Barry, the First Brethren church owes a debt of gratitude for his exceptionally fine management from beginning to end. And, to Dr. Henry V. Wall, the Building Committee Chairman, the church owes a debt that money cannot pay. At the risk of health and even life (as some of us know), he was on the job morning, noon and night, carrying the burden of this work as well as that of his own heavy business.

But for his exceptional business abilities, our building would have cost us many, many more dollars than it has.

The great steam shovel arrived on the scene to begin excavating for the new building on April 24th, 1929. The first shovel-ful of dirt was lifted at 2:20 P. M. that day.

At a business meeting of the church on May 21st, it was decided to install a pipe organ in the old auditorium. It was not until July 9th that the church, at a business meeting, decided to take another im-have seemed but a few years back, impossible except in a dream. "The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad." We only ask that God shall herein keep us humble, but greatly exalting the Lord Jesus Christ, to Whom we dedicate this House today. "He is altogether lovely." As we face the future, we realize that mighty tasks confront us. But, workers together with him, we are undismayed. Hitherto he hath graciously led us, and he will continue to lead, until "that day."

LOUIS S. BAUMAN, Pastor.

Description of Building

The entire building, its garden court and lawns, occupy three lots on the corner of Fifth Street and Cherry Avenue. The exact size of the three lots is 150 feet on Fifth Street by 147½ feet on Cherry Avenue.

The church building proper, as remodeled, is 100 feet by 76 feet, with two floors and a balcony.

The Bible School addition is 138 feet by 46 feet, and has four floors.

The actual floor space in the entire church building is 15,800 square feet, and in the Bible school addition is 25,392 square feet, —a total of 41, 192 square feet, or almost an acre.

There are 80 rooms in the entire building, including two foyers, two organ rooms, and eleven lavatories.

The Bible School Accommodations form a remarkable feature. Exclusive of the church auditorium, which will not be used by any classes, there is a total of 51 class rooms. These rooms are fully equipped with blackboards, tack boards, tables, chairs, etc., and are separated by sound-proof walls, ceilings and floors.

There is a large Social Hall which can be made to accommodate 800 people. Here Communion services will be held. Three Bible school chapels have seating capacities of 175 to 200, and the Prayer Room will easily care for 150. The smallest Bible school class room is 21 by 36 feet. There are five class rooms reaching in size well toward this last figure. All rooms are well ventilated and need no artificial light during the day.

The church auditorium is 73 feet by 54 feet, with a balcony extending around the sides and rear. The seating capacity is over 1,000, and, by crowding, 1,200 can be seated.

N. C. NIELSEN

A spacious foyer runs along behind the main auditorium, 12 by 54 feet.

A choir chancel, containing 36 chairs is set back of and raised above the pulpit.

The plastering of the auditorium is acoustical. All the rooms of the new building are plastered with California stucco.

The pulpit, pew-ends and choir rail are beautifully carved and are typically Gothic in design. The pews on the main floor of the auditorium have individual seats, upholstered in blue leather. The pews out of the old auditorium have been refinished and are now used in the balcony.

The burnished electric light fixtures, designed and built to conform with the interior of the auditorium, are objects of beauty.

Gothic mouldings form a framework around all windows and openings, and, with the beautifully panelled ceiling, add much dignity to the interior.

The windows of the main auditorium are in keeping with the English Gothic style. They are beautiful antiqued stained-glass art windows.

The chancel window, back of the choir arch, is perhaps one of the most artistic portant forward step and remodel the auditorium of the old church building. The last church service in the old auditorium was conducted on July 21st, 1929. However, the very last gathering in the old auditorium was the wedding that made Mr. Edwin Shuff and Miss Ruth Planck husband and wife—on Tuesday evening, July 23d.

Another exceedingly important step in our work was taken when the church decided to call Professor Alva J. McClain, Th. M., to our assistance, as Minister of Education. Professor McClain arrived and began his work on September 18th, 1929.

The membership of the church now stands at 706. 1269 different people have held membership here since our organization. About forty of our number have gone into some form of direct, definite service for Christ. It may be of interest to know that twelve young men have been ordained here to the Christian ministry, and that five others are now preaching as yet unordained, —just one young man for the Christian ministry for each year of our history. Three of our young women who prepared for Christian service are now the wives of ordained ministers in active service. Twelve of our number are now seeing service on our mission fields, either home or foreign. Two have died in missionary service in Africa. The church has contributed considerably more than $100,000.00 since her organization to missions and other benevolences.

Today, November 24th, 1929, we gather to rejoice in the fulfillment of what would led with over-lay lead, into a beautiful window of Gothic design, the center of which pictures an open Bible. This window is to be lighted by means of several spot lights, so that its beauty and message may be appreciated at all times.

All other windows in the building are of variously colored Cathedral glass.

The entire building is carpeted, except for a few class rooms and most of the basement.

The carpet of the main auditorium is velvet, of conventional design, and underlaid with Ozite. All the other auditoriums (except the Social Hall) and the halls of the Bible school building are carpeted with heather-colored velvet. Heather-colored velvet carpet also covers the floor of the Prayer Room and some of the class rooms. Rugs and carpets, selected by the classes occupying the various rooms, are to be found in others.

The draperies hung at the doors of the main auditorium, before the baptistry, and covering the posts and balcony panels, are of mulberry colored velour.

The baptistry, with its specially hand-decorated Gothic tile, is arranged in a very practical as well as artistic manner, at the left of the rostrum, balancing the stairway to the balcony on the right. The rear wall of the baptistry is completely covered by a large painting, representing the River Jordan.

The organ was built by Albert E. Kent and Sons, of Santa Monica, California. It is a two-manual, divided organ, with the great organ on one side and the swell on the other. It has fifteen stops, including chimes and harp (the latter being the gift of the organ builders)—and, eight augmentations. Everything in the organ is of the very highest grade material and workmanship. The artisans are men who have spent their lives in the organ-building business, specializing in church organ building.

The pastor's suite of rooms (Study, Secretary's room, Reception room and Associate Minister's office) is finished in mahogany, carpeted with Wilton velvet. The pastor's study contains built-in, open shelving for 1500 volumes; built-in filing cabinet; also a large closet, lavatory, etc. The Secretary's Room also has enclosed bookshelves, built-in safe, a stationery closet, and a lavatory finished in hand-decorated Gothic tile.

A church and Bible school office, well equipped, is on the first floor. Here a Bible school library of 700 or 800 volumes can be accommodated.

The main kitchen is large and roomy, and is equipped with modern conveniences. It contains one of the latest improved electric ranges, and also one of the latest improved electric ovens, beside a six-burner gas range. The electric range and oven alone have a capacity for serving 800 plates. There are two other equipped kitchens, with beautifully tiled sinks and built-in cabinets.—one on the second floor, and the other on the third floor of the new building.

All rooms are heated with either steam or gas. The class rooms are heated with a system of specially built-in, wall gas heaters.

The entire building is completely equipped with a signal bell system and telephones.

The exterior of the building has been developed in an English Gothic style of architecture, modified in such a way as to blend in with the former building, with many artistic features which lend much charm and beauty.

The high wainscoting of rough salmon-colored brick, the sand-colored stucco framed in a network of antiqued half timbers, make a very pleasing and mellowed color scheme.

The extensive roof of the building is asbestos,—a thing of beauty and one of the most distinctive in the city.

The garden court, north of the church, is typical of the English Gothic style of architecture; and, with its vine-covered pergola and its high brick walls, is well secluded from the street and is one of the many charming features of the building. The church garden contains a large variety of evergreen shrubs, practically all of which are of the flowering sort. There are some fifty varieties. Four large Phoenix Palms are in the parking on the Fifth Street side, while four Cocus Palms grace the parking on the Cherry Avenue front.

Dedicatory Services First Brethren Church of Long Beach, California

Because of the many interests of the church, and to give all the church's friends in Southern California an opportunity to attend, it was decided to hold a week of dedicatory services. These services began on Sunday morning, November 24th, 1929, with a special program for the Sunday school. At this time, the various classes and departments made offerings toward the new building, amounting to nearly $5,000.00.

The morning sermon was preached by the pastor, Dr. Louis S. Bauman, on the text, "Not Your Own." He pleaded for a rededication of lives as a preparation for an enlarged program of work. Quite a large number of people came to be received into the church.

The formal dedication of the new and remodeled building was held in the afternoon, at 2:30 o'clock. Professor Alva J. McClain preached the Sermon of Dedication, taking as texts II Chron. 8:1—"And the glory of Jehovah filled the house," and Haggai 2:9—

"The glory of this latter house shall be greater than of the former." Miss Iva Bauman sang the dedicatory solo, the words of which were written by Professor McClain. The pastor read the service of dedication and offered the dedicatory prayer. Pastors Charles W. Mayes, A. V. Kimmell and A. B. Cover assisted in the service. About 1200 people were present, and a very liberal offering was received.

The North Long Beach church, daughter of the First church, joined in a union service on Sunday evening. Rev. John Lienhard, pastor of the North Long Beach church, took as his subject, "The Church Which the Christ of God Founded." The service was preceded by a large Christian Endeavor Rally in charge of the officers of the Los Angeles county organizations.

Monday evening was given to the neighboring churches of Long Beach and their pastors. Ministers from Presbyterian, Methodist, Baptist and Evangelical churches were present and extended their good wishes.

On Tuesday evening, delegates from the Brethren churches of Southern California were present. The main address was delivered by Rev. A. L. Lynn, Pastor of the LaVerne church and Moderator of the District Conference. Messages of greeting and goodwill were spoken by the other pastors: A. V. Kimmell, of the Los Angeles Second Church; A. B. Cover, of the Los Angeles First church; W. A. Ogden, of the Fillmore church; John G. Lienhard, of the North Long Beach church; Charles W. Mayes of the Whittier church; and Leo Polman, of the new Southgate church.

Wednesday evening was given to the Sunday school. Addresses were delivered by Alva J. McClain and by Dr. W. C. Pearce, First Vice President of the World Sunday School Association and General Secretary of the California Council of Religious Education.

On Thursday morning, a Thanksgiving service was held, at which Alva J. McClain delivered the sermon. The evening was devoted to a recital on the new organ, and to its formal dedication. J. Raymond Strong, representing the organ builders, was at the organ. The dedication service was read by the pastor, and the dedicatory prayer was offered by Alva J. McClain. The attendance was so large that people were turned away.

Friday night was designated as Home Church Night. Nearly six hundred people sat down at six o'clock to a splendid banquet served in the new Social Hall, and provided by the church free of charge, according to its custom. Dr. Henry V. Wall presided over the meeting. N. C. Nielsen spoke on "The Birth of the Long Beach Church as I Recall It." D. E. Waller led a symposium on "Why I Joined the Brethren Church." Mrs. Louis S. Bauman spoke appropriately regarding "Those Who Have Gone On Before." H. V. Wall spoke on "Looking Into the Future." This wonderful evening of fellowship was closed by an address by the pastor, who spoke on "Reminiscences" and showed stereopticon pictures of interest in the early history of the denomination and local church.

The building has been kept open throughout the week and many hundreds of people have expressed their surprise at the completeness of the plant and its equipment. The daily newspapers have given the church much valuable publicity, all meetings being covered by a special writer.

Everybody is tired but happy over the completion of a great task well done. We pray that this consummation may be the beginning of a new and more glorious day for the Brethren church in Southern California.

Dedicatory Message by The Pastor, Louis S. Bauman, D.D.

We are dedicating this church very nearly on the exact day of the year, when, seventeen years ago, at the close of our meeting conducted in a tent on the southeast corner of Tenth Street and Walnut Avenue, we baptized the first Brethren in Long Beach. Looking back over these happy years, we are made to realize that our Heavenly Father has been exceedingly kind, and good, and merciful, and has blessed us exceedingly abundantly above all that we deserve. And now, that we are at last able to offer to him this beautiful house of worship, from the very depth of our being we feel led to exclaim with David of old:

"Thine, O Lord, is the greatness, and the power,
And the glory, and the victory, and the majesty;

For all that is in the heaven and in the earth is thine;

Thine is the kingdom, O Lord, and thou art exalted above all.

Now, therefore, our God, we thank thee, and praise thy glorious Name.

But who am I, and what is my people, that we should be able to offer so willingly after this sort?

For all things come of thee, and of thine own have we given thee."

If this house is beautiful, if we have broken the choicest of our alabaster boxes in order to build it, it is because we feel that nothing is too precious, too lovely, or too beautiful, to lay at the feet that were pierced for us. Bible students will recall that the inspiration, back of the building of the Temple of Solomon, came to King David because of a contrast between his own dwelling and the earthly House of God. His conscience awoke and he exclaimed to Nathan, the prophet: "See now, I dwell in an house of cedar, but the ark of God dwelleth within curtains!" (II Sam. 7:2). We believe that the same Spirit that moved King David into action also moved the children of God here at Fifth and Cherry to give unto him not only a building with sufficient rooms for his work here, but also to make the rooms of his House worthy of him,—as beautiful within and without as it was possible for us to make them!

If our Lord shall tarry, and if the pastor of this church and the people who are now gathered about him shall be gathered unto their fathers, to await with them the glorious "upcalling", we want our children, who shall worship here tomorrow in our stead, to know that this church was built and is now dedicated forever to God for certain specific purposes; and if this building shall ever be used for any other purposes, we shall feel that our children after us have betrayed our trust. These purposes are:

That here Jesus Christ, the incarnate God, shall be exalted, and given pre-eminence in all things;

That here the cross, whereon Jesus Christ shed his blood and died for the remission of our sins, shall be held up constantly before the eyes of sinful men, as the one and only means whereby they may get right with God and die in peace;

That here men shall learn of the risen Christ, who has ascended into the heavens, and who shall so come in like manner as he went away to re-establish and reign on David's throne,—the only hope of a war-torn, sinful, weary world;

That here the precious faith, that enabled our fathers to walk uprightly before God and fall asleep in peace and hope, shall be preached,—the Spirit-breathed Word of God in all its fullness, taught, practiced, and loved, as the perfect will of God concerning us;

That here our children and their children's children shall have the advantages of a genuine Christian education,—a boon which, it would appear, is fast dwindling from our public schools;

That here a people, eternally saved, shall ever think of those who sit without Christ in the gross night of the unevangelized world; and shall realize that only as the Spirit of Christ, the world's first and greatest foreign and home Missionary, shall live in our children—only so can the blessing of God rest upon this church and its future success before him be made sure;

That here the poorest of this world's poor shall always find a welcome and receive a helping hand, ever remembering that God hath chosen the poor of this world rich in faith;

That here a people shall worship humbly before him who alone is worthy; and, that here they shall walk separately from the world, the flesh, and the devil,—avoiding as much as possible the sinful follies of a doomed world,—a people in the world, but not of it;

That here a people may walk, not pleasing always to men, but pleasing always to God, reverent in worship, sincere in profession, chaste in conversation, modest in apparel, condescending in estate, faithful in relationships, loyal in friendships, true in fellowship, sympathetic in adversities, patient in tribulations, forgiving in difficulties, comforting in words, helpful in deeds, generous in hospitality, cheerful in giving, missionary in spirit, strong in faith, continuing in prayer, rejoicing in hope, "steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord."

"But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

THE SECOND CHURCH OF JOHNS-TOWN

Moxam is the beautiful residence section where our church is located. Rev. Dyoll Belote who is now pastor of our church at Ashland, was the faithful pastor here for four years. It was under his splendid leadership that this well equipped church was built. It is a brick structure, with adequate Sunday school equipment, and with heavy curtains dividing the Sunday school department from the main auditorium. One only has to go into the Moxam section to hear the good name of our Brother Belote highly spoken of.

As these Brethren are without a pastor and the writer is their district evangelist, I was asked to hold them a few days' meeting closing with communion service. Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Sunday of the third week of November was the time chosen. It so happened that our first snow and winter began with the meeting, and the crowds during the week were not large. But on Sunday morning we had a splendid audience, and I believe 55 at the communion tables on Sunday evening. The Reverends G. H. Jones and H. W. Hollabaugh were present and took part in the service Sunday evening. We trust our dear Lord has been duly exalted and much good accomplished. We had a splendid time together and the messages seemed to be highly appreciated. Our prayer is that this church may soon find another pastor who will continue to lead them on to greater victories. Surely God has a man somewhere for this church, as well as other pastorless churches. Let us pray for them.

J. S. COOK.

CLOSING FALL TERM CHURCH COLLEGE NIGHT

Last night marked the closing of fall term of Church College Night at the local Brethren church. In addition to the class work a special address was given by Rev. W. W. Blough, pastor of the Peck Church of the Brethren, and the pastor of the church gave special recognition to the teachers of the school.

Church College Night is a week day educational work of this church and two terms of six weeks each are given each year. In addition to four different classes a special address has been given each night. The classes given this term were: "The Plan of Redemption in Prophecy," "Religious Drama and Pageantry," A Junior Bible Study Group and a class in "Christian Doctrines." The teachers were Prof. J. G. Dodds, Dr. Cecil Johnston, Mrs. John Meyers, and Rev. H. H. Rowsey, pastor of the church.

The attendance at both the spring and fall terms has been large and it is expected that this educational work will be given a permanent place in the program of the church, according to the pastor of the church.—From Falls City Daily News, December 14, 1929.

MT. OLIVE, VIRGINIA

If you will pardon my past negligence, I will try and write a bit of news from this part of the Valley of Virginia. But do not interpret this neglect as evidence of nothing being done. The cry on every hand that the rural churches are dying, is true only in part. As yet Mt. Olive is not to be numbered with the dying. Our Sunday school continues to grow in interest and numbers under the leadership of Brother W. D. Koontz. Our aid societies are still on the record of doing things. Our church building is now furnished with new windows, giving it a beautiful appearance and supplying a long felt need. Our aid societies made this possible.

The attendance at the regular preaching services is splendid. A few weeks after the District Conference, in June, at Oak Hill, West Virginia, Brother H. E. Eppley of Roanoke, Virginia, answered the call of the Mount Olive church to lead us in an evangelistic effort. The time for the beginning was set for November 4th. Our first efforts were to bring our forces together in prayer. Our key text was Matthew 18:19, 20. To agree on the thing to be done and get at, was our slogan for the meeting. The thing we agreed on was the "Revival." The way we got at it was to call for special prayer each Sunday night. On each Wednesday night and Friday night wherever two or three could be together, or if any one saw that they could not meet, then at their home, at the above stated time, each member was requested to pray definitely for some unsaved one, and to hand their names in so they could be looked after. November 4th, Brother Eppley was on the job with us. Crowds were good from the very beginning and the interest fine. On Sunday morning of the 10th, was witnessed one of the most remarkable and interesting consecration services ever conducted at this place. The church was filled to its capacity, and not only the brethren, but members of other churches who were present were urged to take advantage of the opportunity. The anxious look, the trickling tear and the gripping hand were the signs of their true earnestness. This real earnestness and loyalty together with the strong sermons and searching appeals of Brother Eppley being directed by the Holy Spirit brought wonderful conviction. From this community where you can count seven other churches besides the Brethren in a distance of about 5 or 6 miles, and well gleaned, when 27 came confessing Christ, it gives cause for much rejoicing. We praise God who gave us an overflowing victory. "Oh that men would praise the Lord for his goodness and for his wonderful works to the children of men."

We earnestly beg for your prayers for the work at Mt. Olive.

G. W. CHAMBERS, Pastor.

THE MEETING AT MOUNT OLIVE, VIRGINIA

On Monday evening, November 4, I began a meeting in the Mount Olive church of which Brother Chambers has been the pastor for nearly ten years. This long pastorate and his standing in the community testify to his faithfulness in serving the spiritual needs of both. This was our first opportunity to become acquainted and our first meeting together. Our fellowship throughout the entire meeting was of the highest order and most delightful. We were on the road together every day and saw much of the beautiful country.

It was my privilege to share the home of the pastor while there. They proved themselves to be very considerate of the preacher and a most congenial atmosphere prevailed at all times. The thoughtfulness and kindness of Sister Chambers and daughter Bessie will not soon be forgotten. The boys also came in for their share in making my stay among them pleasant and delightful.

An effort was made to visit as many homes as possible. The "eats" served at the noon hour each day in these various homes were beyond description. It seemed to me each was trying to outdo the last one. Each meal was enjoyed and appreciated. We hope to try some of them again at the conference of this district meets in this church next June.

They have under advisement some improvements to the church before the conference is entertained. They are very much needed. They have an unusual opportunity to make these improvements now and it is the earnest hope of this preacher that they will not leave their day of opportunity slip by without taking advantage of it. Come on, men of Mt. Olive, the ladies are back of you and you will win.

The pastor will report the gains of the meeting. The blessings of the Lord be upon you and prosper you.

H. E. EPPLEY, Roanoke, Virginia.

REPORT OF RECEIPTS FOR HOME MISSIONS DURING SEPTEMBER, OCTOBER AND NOVEMBER

ANNOUNCEMENTS

A WAY TO FINANCIAL FREEDOM

The Layman Company's pamphlet, "Winning Financial Freedom" has proved so popular and effective that once more we offer it to any pastor without charge. On request we will send, postage paid, enough copies to supply all the lay officials of his church.

The pamphlet describes a simple method by which the pastor may carry on, quietly and steadily, the education of his people in the principles of Christian giving, without interfering with his other work, and at a cost purely nominal.

The Layman Company is a non-profit, inter-denominational Christian agency which puts its resources at the service of all the churches.

When you write please mention The Brethren Evangelist and give your denomination. THE LAYMAN COMPANY, 730 Rush St., Chicago.
